Despite this, the American government and business community apparently supports the Marcos regime, since U.S. military aid has increased more than 100 percent and World Bank loans have risen 1100 percent since martial law was imposed.

The Carter Administration actually lobbied against human rights stipulations in the FY 1978 Foreign Aid bill. Although Congress overrode the Administration's efforts, the White House was successful in influencing the World Bank to contribute more than $100 million in loans, to Argentina, Chile, Uraguay and Ethiopia, even though Congress suspended all direct military aid to these countries because of human rights violations. The U.S. business' 3.9 billion stake in South Africa undoubtedly had much to do with why Ambassador Andrew Young vetoed a United Nations resolution calling for economic sanctions against South Africa. Ironically, even though certain tyrannical governments may no longer receive American weapons, they still have their economics – and political systems – supported by loans and direct aid from the U.S. Why would a nation founded on the "inalienable rights" of "life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness" move so far to the opposite extreme in its present foreign policies? "In each case (country) we must balance a political concern for human rights against economic and security goals," Secretary of State Vance told Congress in July 1977. Vance's statement is noteworthy in several respects, the most obvious being the acknowledgement that "economic and security goals" can take precedence over basic human values. Historically, governments run by popular support have tended to ask higher wages and resource prices, thereby jeopardizing the American role as consummate global glutton. Clearly, the U.S. has weighed the potential for human rights against unforeseen economic pitfalls and opted for the status quo.

In this context, Vance's comment about balancing a "political concern for human rights" is pure hogwash. Indeed, the phrase reeks of 1984 style doublethink, on a par with the Nixonian disclaimer that "I didn't lie – I misspoke myself." There is no such thing as a political concern "for human rights;" they are fundamental to any free society. Can one express "political sympathy" for one million dead Indonesians and then continue to support the government responsible for their obliteration?

Although his rhetoric has done little more than elicit token but well-publicized changes in a few nations, one cannot fault Jimmy Carter for raising the issue of human rights. Certainly the subject needs to be discussed in detail on both a global and national scale (there are many human rights inadequacies in our own backyard), and citizen pressure brought to bear on the Congress and U.S. business institutions. Ultimately, before we can expect not to compromise ourselves in foreign policy, a massive revamping of the energy, capital and resource intensive nature of the American economy is necessary. If all this sounds like a lot of work, list it under the "hobbies" section of your resume and proceed accordingly. There is much to be done.

Letters Continued

Lacking Consideration

To the Editor:

As one of the first group of people who camped out for Springsteen tickets, I would like to express my complete disgust with a large number of fellow students who acted thoroughly childish, selfish, and just plain stupid. The establishment of "Camp Springsteen" began as a friendly, festive occasion that was overrun in the dawn hours of Friday morning by a collection of individuals with no consideration or respect for the persons who had set themselves up many hours earlier. With them they did bring an attitude of "well I want tickets and I don't care about anyone or anything in my way."

Hence, as many can attest, tents, sleeping bags and other personal belongings were trampled or ruined in the massive crush towards the door (and those 'golden' tickets). The S.A. securities' attempts to ease the situation were totally ineffective for quite some time as people were being cruelly and helplessly driven into the walls and ground. I for one am truly amazed that no one was seriously hurt.

For future concert ticket sales I recommend the following: (1) that the fencing, where ticket buyers are corraled, be just wide enough for a single file line, thereby reducing cutting in line and the type of charges to the door as witnessed last Friday. (2) the line should be broken into sections by concert security, alleviating the potential crush of bodies. (3) finally, and most importantly, those who are in line should conduct themselves and coerce others to act in the mature and considerate manner in which we students are hopefully capable of.

To those who instigated and perpetuated this dreadful scene, I would only like them to be in the shoes of one young woman during the crunch, who after being mercilessly shoved, arrived inside the gym bruised, trembling and sobbing after the assault.

With deep regret
Christopher Nobile

Ticket Sale Poorly Run

To the Editor:

We are writing in reference to the recent Bruce Springsteen ticket sales. We feel that this was handled extremely poorly. After waiting in line on Thursday at 10:30 a.m. and being approximately 25th and 26th in line, we were handed eight tickets way back in row fifteen. Realizing that the people ahead of us could not possibly have filled all 15 center rows we were understandably upset.

When we later found out that some people who waited in the general admission line for one hour received seats in row four (center) we were really angry. Why were we, as students, at a student funded event given poorer tickets than if we were in the general admission line? Even if the general public was to be rewarded for attending other concerts (Van Morrison and Little Feat), why were they given better seats than students? I'm sure they had the Bruce Springsteen concert in mind when they attended the other two concerts!

Granted, some seats should be reserved for general admission; however, it shouldn't have been some of the best seats in the house. Students should have had first chance at the best seats. We feel that the general admission seats should not have been picked randomly but with the students in mind.

By arriving at 10:30 a.m. on Thursday with close seats in mind, we will instead be relegated to attend on Nov. 4 with our binoculars in hand. Realizing that nothing can be done now, all we ask is that our own concert bureau consider the student in its next general admission ticket decision. Thanks a lot SA Concerts!

Sincerely,
Kim Lowell
Todd Laliberte

Jump On the Bandwagon With Jeff!

To the Editor:

If Jeff Beckerman wants to express his opinions as often as he does in the "Letters to the Editor" section of the Cynic, then why not sign him up as a regular sports columnist. The Cynic needs more humor, and his column could pave the way for a new Cynic comics section, or it might even replace the recently terminated "Science Fiction" column.

Jeff Beckerman is nothing new. He represents the typical New York fan: loud, obnoxious, illogical, and ignorant (Carl Yastrzemski is a great ballplayer). It seems that Mr. Beckerman's sole purpose in writing his letters was to inform everyone that he was rooting for a winning team. It seems that "rooting for the Yankees" has been the craze within the last four/five years. It makes me remember the "rooting for the New York Mets" craze that existed in the early 1970's. Have you recently asked a New Yorker what he thinks of the New York Rangers? He will probably tell you that he is an Islanders fan and that the Rangers are a lousy team. I am saying that the bulk of New Yorkers are "fair weather" fans who support which ever of their many professional teams happens to be winning.

I agree with Mr. Beckerman's point that the front page quote concerning Reggie Jackson was inappropriate. Jackson did not deserve the "Strike Three!" for he did have a "Nice Show" that night. What is hard to believe, however, is that the quote was conceived and approved by "devout" Yankee fans who were bummed that the Yankees had just suffered their second straight defeat to the Los Angeles Dodgers. In fact, almost every New York fan that I talked with after the Reggie quote appeared was amused by it. If a "Nice Show Yaz: Pop it up!" quote appeared on the cover of the Cynic, I would be outraged. Yes, I am a Boston Red Sox fan, and yes, the Sox choked the 1978 season away. But they are still my club; next season, they will pull their act together.

If the Cynic does not limit the number of Jeff Beckerman's opinions that appear weekly, then it should be prepared to face a dramatic decline in readership.

Ned Andrews

P.S. Have you noticed the recent upsurge in New York Giant fans this week? C'mon folks, jump on the bandwagon with Jeff!!!

The Worth of a University

To the Editor:

From "The Age of the Scholar" by Nathan M. Pusey

"The true worth of a university is finally to be measured not by the number of its campuses, the variety of its programs, the number of its students, or its ability to be of service to outside interests, but by the number and quality of its advanced scholars and by the vigor, imaginative boldness, and precision of their individual intellectual endeavors. What is really of consequence is their capacity as a community to take thought for the whole of what man has learned, to keep it known and extend it, to stimulate each other, and – here we come upon a very special educational function of the university – to train their own, a growing number of successors who will be no less committed to scholarship or less quick of intellect than themselves."

Submitted by:
Richard W. J. Scheer

Animal House At UVM: All in "Good Fun"?

To the Editor:

As a brother in Phi Gamma Delta (Fiji) I would like to express my opinion, based on observations, of the Greek System. I was introduced to and became associated with Fiji during my freshman year (1975). Joining the fraternity required readjustment, work, responsibility, and a little sacrifice in return for an intangible that I could not find in the dormitories – brotherhood. It holds different meanings for different people. My experience has been one of personal awareness and growth. I have been very active in Fiji; it means a great deal to me, and I am concerned for its welfare. I am also a member of the Greek System, comprised of nineteen fraternities and sororities that are unique and special in their own ways. I am concerned for its welfare also.

During the past two years I have observed varying degrees of organization and interest in the system. Some of its members were trying to improve the situation, but a negative attitude appeared to be the rule of daily action with a few good moments coming through once in a while as the exceptions. I questioned the effectiveness of the Greek Coordinating Council and the cooperation of its houses as they were making only sporadic attempts to revive this longstanding tradition at the university. Then last spring I sensed that there was a desire for Greek unity, interaction, and a total rush effort. There was talk and even some action that promoted good relations among the houses and with campus. I thought that the school year ended on a promising note – a G.C.C. with a lot of potential, evidence of renewed interest in cooperation, and the strong possibility of a Greek Adviser to greet us in the fall. During the summer I listened to ideas for the improvement of the system bouncing off the walls in Waterman and Billings. I was really looking forward to participating in it this fall.

Well it's late October now, and I've yet to see that surge for the improvement of the Greek System's reputation, membership, service, etc. Despite the efforts of many of the Greeks with the assistance of Bill Mahr (Assistant Director Student Activities and Greek Advisor) and others to build up the system, it has (in my opinion) been going downhill. Some of the houses have boosted their numbers due to their independent or sorority formal rush programs, but the system as a whole seems to be deteriorating.

I don't have to wonder what could be causing this situation; I have been told or I have witnessed the reasons. There has been a marked turnabout of and/or increase in behavior among some or all of the members of some of the Greek houses which is detrimental to the Greek System. Incidents such as: throwing water balloons and objects at pedestrians and vehicles passing by, throwing ice chunks to interrupt a fraternity party, ignoring the request of a university staff member to stop causing a disturbance, a fraternity damaging the newly redone interior of a sorority house, and causing public damage are some examples of what has occurred so far this semester.

The following incident really irritates me because it infringes on the rights of other students. Three fraternities started a planned food fight in Simpson dining hall a couple of weekends ago which resulted in damage and injury. To those students who were (are) bothered by what happened, I (as a member of the Greek System) can't apologize for that infantile stunt, but I will say that I share in your feeling towards those who had their fun at your expense, and I hope that you will not judge the rest of us by their actions. Negative aspects almost always stand out over our positive ones – Greek Games, Rotational Parties, community service, campus assistance, etc.

The reasons for those negative actions may not be as obvious. There are several possibilities, but I will comment on only one of them – the movie Animal House. It is the fictitious story about a college fraternity against the rules in which the rules lose. The movie attracted a lot of attention over the summer. It was so successful that one of its characters (Bluto) is pictured on the cover of the October 23rd issue of Newsweek magazine. Animal House has created such a stir for college humor that toga parties and screw up antics are now common on many college campuses – UVM is not an exception.

After seeing the movie a few times I arrived at the following conclusion. While this humorous exaggeration of the Greeks is unrealistic and unhealthy for application to a real-life Greek System, it has some value in showing a spirit of enthusiasm that motivated the Greeks to work, relax, participate, compete, etc. If people want to copy the movie, they should pick up on its spirit and express it in creative, constructive ways – not reperform the antics. Why would some of our Greeks play Animal House? I can only guess because no one has explained it to me: (1) they have a new insatiable appetite for anarchic humor, (2) they need the role to fill in for something that is lacking in themselves and/or their houses, (3) they are riding easy right now and want to experiment with a little selfishness, (4) they aren't ready or able to settle down in a university, (5) they are easily influenced by such ideas due to an undeveloped mentality, and so on.

If some of our Greeks are indeed playing Animal House here are some reasons why they should stop. First of all, they are really not imitating the humor and spirit of Animal House. If one reads the article on this movie in the October 23, 1978 issue of Newsweek, one will find tha basis for my statement: "John Landis, the film's 27-year-old director, calls it 'behavioral humor of outrage. It's definitely offensive. It's antagonistic. But it's all in good fun.'" I think that the words 'good fun' make the distinction between the movie and real life. The incidents mentioned earlier don't qualify as 'good fun.' Something done in 'good fun' doesn't cause injury or loss, it doesn't hurt feelings or reputations, and it is enjoyed by all. Second, if some of the Greeks continue to use Animal House as a front to satisfy whatever, they will lose the respect and trust of faculty, students, and others, which would almost certainly take a long time to regain. Third, the actions of a few Greeks are almost always reflected on the entire Greek System – everyone must deal with the consequences. And so on.

Whether the cause for negative activity is Animal House, other reasons, or a combination of reasons, they must be brought out, discussed, and the problem resolved. The Greek System has the potential to be a great asset to the university. Everyone must cooperate for better days ahead.

Thank you,
Michael A. Molander

Desire Under the Elms

Royall Tyler, Round One

Eben (Thomas Winslow) and Abbie (Julie Carmen)

By Judie Yuill

The Royall Tyler Theater's production of Desire Under the Elms featured some outstanding student performances on the opening night, Oct. 18. This difficult O'Neill play was presented with a great degree of professionalism under the direction of Judith Williams.

Desire is an intense tragedy, a tough and challenging play to perform. There are too many instances where melodrama could rule the stage, and the nature of the story itself requires that each character use a good deal of control in their respective roles. Fortunately, each of the performers did exhibit a measure of constraint and the play never became trite or overly melodramatic.

All of the play's action takes place in the house and yard of Ephraim Cabot's farm. The set was extremely well-constructed, and the props were strikingly authentic. Of special note were the two elm trees on either side of the stage. The stone wall in the front yard and the shavings on the stage added a great deal to the feeling of being on a farm.

The first act opened with an overview of melancholic music that foreshadowed the underlying tragic theme of the play. Although Eben Cabot is the first character that we see on stage, he is not the most impressive member of the first act. Thomas Winslow developed the character of Eben successfully, however, and as the play progressed, the viewer eventually became aware of Eben's many weaknesses and few real strengths. Ric Priem and Edward Lindsay were outstanding as the brothers Simeon and Peter Cabot. Their rowdy antics were a delight. They served to contrast well with Eben's civilized pretentions, and especially amusing was their laughing at Eben's visits to his girlfriend, Min, the well-worn village prostitute. Ric Priem was convincing in both his farmboy swagger and the sharp and cutting wit that was so much a part of Simeon's character. Ed Lindsay was equally hick, but the character of Peter often seemed to direct him to follow Simeon's lead. Lindsay managed this without weakening his character. Indeed, the two brothers were superb in both their unison and their individuality. Their final exit had all the rowdy enthusiasm of two little boys who had just been let out of school for a summer vacation, and their sheer vitality and humor could very well have been said to have carried the first act.

Duncan Stephens as Ephraim Cabot was by far the most convincing character in the entire play. Duncan's voice, carriage, and superb acting ability enabled him to portray the lonely old man to perfection. His obsession with his farm, his obvious hate for his sons, and his pitiful attempts to win Abbie's love made him a fascinating, if not endearing, character to watch. Duncan exuded presence and his performance alone could be viewed as one of the prime successes of the evening.

Duncan's wife, Abbie, was an interesting character to watch for another reason. Julie Carmen was a pleasant surprise as Ephraim's second wife and a new addition to the farm. With her hands on her hips and her voice booming out across the stage, there was no doubt that this lady knew what she wanted, and how to get it. The spunky and sexually tintillating Abbie, with her sensual body movements and facial expressions, added enormously to the success of Carmen's performance. She was able to develop her character impressively as the play progressed. Both Abbie's attraction to Eben and Eben's hatred of his father were well established by the end of the first act, when Eben was left at home with a woman he claimed to hate and a father he could not live with.

The second act began with Abbie and Eben spitting at each other like tom cats, both equally determined to inherit the rights to the farm. Eben's frequent trips to Min's were an obvious thorn in Abbie's side, and the evident disgust with which she reacted to her husband's touch emphasized her sexual need as well as her growing passion for Eben. It was here that Thomas Winslow took the opportunity to develop the character of Eben to its fullest. His hatred for his father, his inability to leave the farm and his mother's memory behind, and his growing attraction to Abbie were all contained within the second act. Especially memorable was the scene where Abbie tries her hardest to seduce Eben. Thomas' acting is particularly effective here because one is never quite sure whether or not Abbie will actually succeed in her attempts. Succeed she does, however, and their passionate love scene contained some of the most sensitive acting in the entire play.

Although the third act opened with Ephraim's ironic rejoicing over a newborn son, the destructive power of the love between Eben and Abbie was soon revealed. When Eben suspects that Abbie has tricked him in order to gain inheritance to the farm, he becomes weak and denounces her love, forcing her to make a crucial decision. The emotions in this scene became heightened so quickly that the scene could not reach its climax without becoming slightly melodramatic. If it were not for Julie Carmen's fine sense of control, Abbie's murder of her own son and her subsequent grief would never have been so effective. Julie was able to sustain her hysteria and also emerge as the stronger of the two lovers. Duncan Stephens, as Ephraim, was compelling in his bitter grief over Abbie's deception, and Thomas Winslow's portrayal of Eben's hysterical confusion served to heighten the joy of the eventual reunion of the two lovers.

Desire Under the Elms was an unqualified success, and everyone connected with the production should be proud. As evidence of Dr. Williams' talents as a director, it would seem that the patrons of the Royall Tyler Theater can look forward to many more good shows.

Ephraim Cabot (Duncan Stephens)

"The second act began with Abbie and Eben spitting at each other like tom cats, both equally determined to inherit the rights to the farm."

how to improve your hifi system for $34:

Replace your "original equipment" cartridge with an Audio-technica AT12XE. The AT12XE sounds markedly better than the decent but undistinguished cartridges most audio shops package with their systems.

Just bring in the head-shell from your turntable (or the whole turntable) and we'll mount an AT12XE for you; you may well be amazed at how much better your system will sound. Incidentally, we won't recommend an AT12XE to you if we don't honestly think it is better than your present cartridge.

tech hifi

Soundrooms you can play in.

150 Church S t. 862-2638

TPI EXPRESS

24 MAIN ST. WINOOSKI

655-3005 - 655-0977

★ free delivery ★

PIZZA AND SUBS PLUS MORE

SPECIAL !

In-House Pitchers of Draft only 50¢

with purchase of a large pizza

Fresh Whole Wheat Pizza upon request

| FREE | $1.00 off |
|---|---|
| Quart of Coke with any large one or more item pizza, with this coupon. | With purchase of a large one or more item pizza 50 cents off on a small one or more item pizza. |
| Cynic valid 10/26-11/2 | Cynic, valid 10/26-11/2 |

Caution, Oktoberfest

By Franklin Nesbit

From the moment I stepped onto the Coolidge – Redstone Hall Green last Saturday and was immediately accosted by some degenerate character dressed up in red tights and a white trashcan liner stuffed with old newspapers, I knew that Oktoberfest 1978 was going to be no ordinary festival.

"What are you supposed to be?" I queried.

"What do you mean what am I supposed to be?" the creature answered, bemazed at my ignorance. "A cuckoo, of course."

I couldn't help but agree with this title, particularly when he told me that, oblivious to the often disastrous consequences of blind charity, he had allowed a "friend" to sign him up for the job. Along with two other cuckoos, he had to strut around the festival all afternoon, telling inane jokes and announcing great irrelevancies in front of the Oktoberfest cuckoo clock.

"But we give away cookies too," one of the other cuckoos said and, as if to prove his benevolence, he thrust one into the face of an unsuspecting toddler. Staring at a hulking college student with teased hair, red and yellow make-up on, and a long paper beak strapped around his head with a rubber band, the child started to scream uncontrollably.

"The beer tent was strategically placed in front of Coolidge Hall..."

Joined by the third cuckoo and not knowing what else to do in such an awkward situation (the child's mother was by then glaring at the cuckoos with all the sympathy of a rabid doberman pincher), the trio glanced at each other knowingly and said in unison "Let's go to the beer tent." And off they strutted to drown their misfortunes, accosting unsuspecting alumni along the way.

The beer tent was strategically placed in front of Coolidge Hall, my associate observed, adding that "there is no better place on the UVM campus for forty kegs of free Busch beer." Although the line was long, the hard-core drinkers were phased not in the least. They just filled up their mugs, got back in line, and drank until they reached the front of the crowd again. My associate became obsessed with this cyclical technique, quickly faded and made no more intelligent observations that afternoon.

After imbibing sufficiently, we set off to investigate the SAGA food booths and were in the process of choosing between many evils when we ran into a friend who had acquired a slew of contraband food tickets. He insisted on buying us knockwursts and it was not until later, while inhaling the food, that we realized that he was feeding us this fine German cuisine only so he could reflect lasciviously on the nature and dimensions of large sausages.

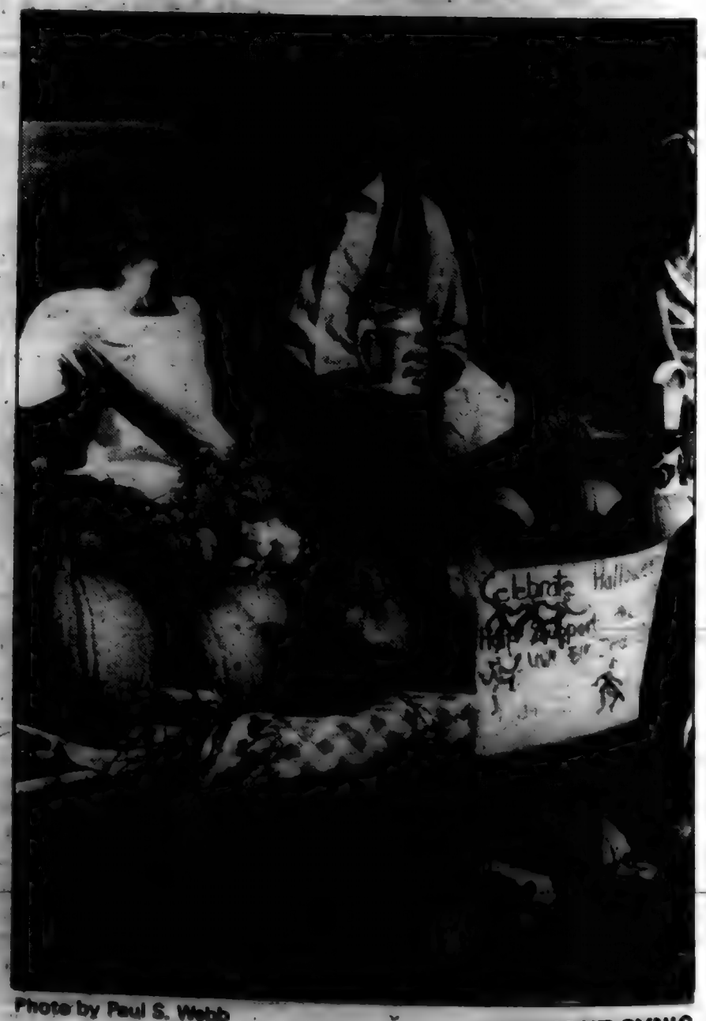
We escaped from this pervert, only to be confronted with the inevitable Oktoberfest ordeal.

"Hey Frank! Meet my mother."

"Well hello Mrs. Lambertson. It's nice to meet you," I said pleasantly while kicking my associate, hoping that he'd smile and flash the pearly results of four years of orthodontia – it was the only way the drunken expression on his face could

(continued on page 32)

Photos by Steve Larose and L/L Photo Suite



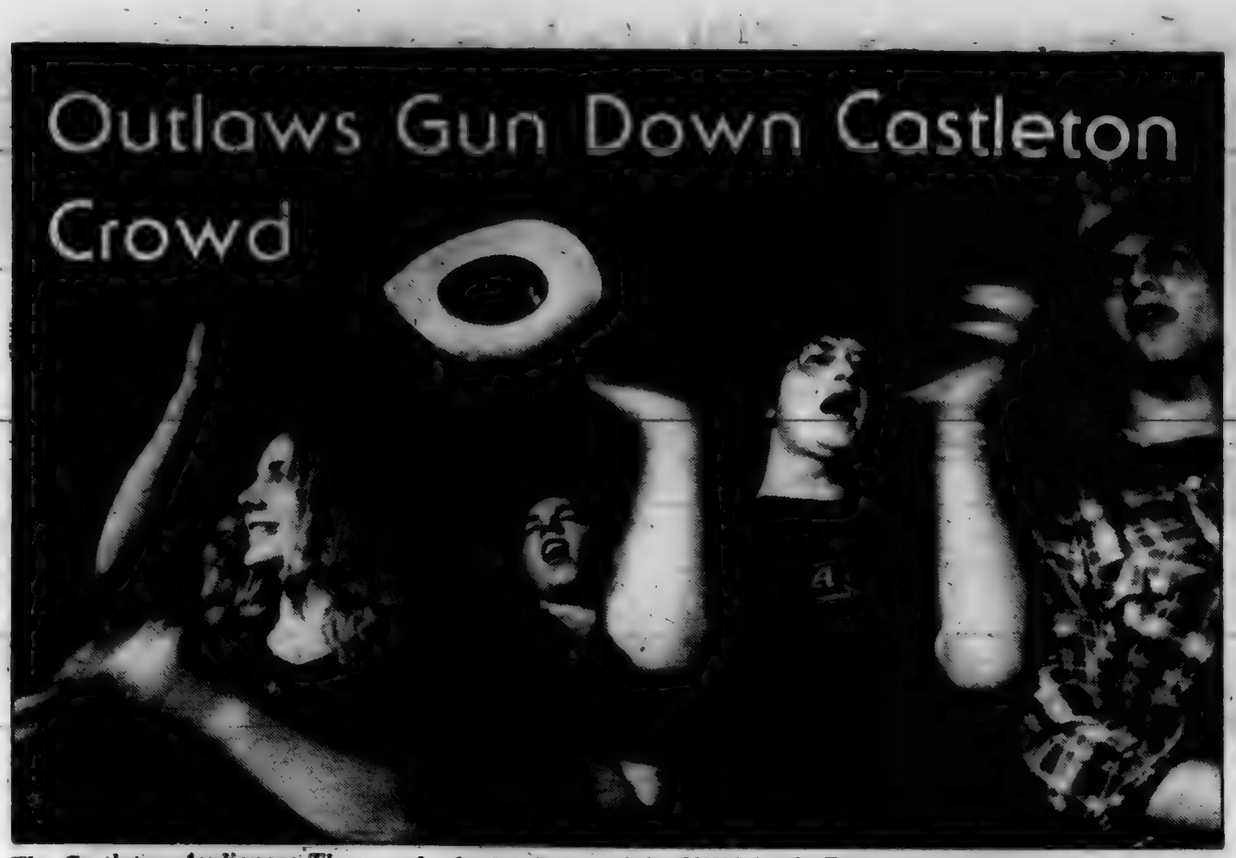


Photo by Paul S. Webb

The Castleton Audience: They made the behavior of the UVM Little Feat concert seem gentlemanly.

By Russell Flannery

There's no way of getting around it: the thought of the Outlaws performing in Castleton, Vermont can only be associated with someone's 'hitting the pits.'

Realistically, however, Castleton State College's Social Committee, willing to take a loss, paid the full fare for obtaining the Outlaws (roughly $11,500, according to one member) and a crowd of 1,500 were given an acceptable, yet comparatively mediocre performance by the band last Friday.

Opening a four stop tour, the Outlaws initially seemed willing to give the Castleton crowd an exceptional performance. Yet while the music was indeed satisfactory, the night's dominating factor was the crowd's unfamiliarity with the band's material. Consequently, from the perspective of a seasoned fan, the concert was abbreviated and not particularly memorable.

The Outlaws, like all successful Southern bands, are unarguably not "gimmicky," and, given a favorable atmosphere, will perform for two full hours and return for a number of encores afterwards. In Castleton, however, although the Social Committee members were professional and cordial, the audience not only applauded seemingly trite riffs, commonplace technical happenings, and lighter material, but made the behavior of the UVM Little Feat audience seem gentlemanly.

By the end of the opening two songs, inspired versions of both "Hurry Sundown" and "Lover Boy," the original front row was half existent, and the former seven yard gap between the stage and the crowd was reduced to several feet by 'enthusiastic' spectators. Complete with semi-sauna temperatures, the nostalgia of non-reserved seating at Patrick Gym certainly lingered in the minds of some throughout the evening.

Meanwhile, the Outlaws effortlessly continued to roll through "Cold and Lonesome" and "Holiday," but at least with respect to audience participation, ran into a wall with the evening's bonafide bomb, "Freeborn Man." Afterwards, in the concert's strangest event, the crowd didn't budge through the first half of the Outlaws' attempt at recovery, a relentlessly driving rendition of "Stick Around for Rock and Roll," but roared their approval when the stage lights flickered during a obviously meaningless musical moment. The Outlaws, justifiably surprised, looked around at each other, smiled, and awkwardly extended the same bars (and the lights) for another 15 seconds. The crowd simply roared.

Accordingly, the band turned to lighter material, including the Southern shitkicker "Waterhole" and the Top 40 hit "There Goes Another Love Song." The concert closed with a long, yet gradually captivating version of "Green Grass and High Tides."

Despite the obvious fact that another encore was theirs for the asking, the sponsors had the gym lights on and the apparently pleased students cleared from the stage area before the band had walked through the stage door. Let it not be said that Castleton did not receive its due.

The Outlaws Photos by Rob Swenson

To Those of High Plateaus

By Randy McFlannery

At the outset it wasn't clear if the trip to Castleton was worth it: not a joint could be found among the crowd, much less a bowl of hashish. But when the lights went down and the music began, even the most distinguished looking members of the social committee toked up and partied out. Yes, we definitely had a concert here.

The evening's event began Castleton's Oktoberfest weekend, and like any isolated state college students, the crowd enjoyed and partied throughout the social event of the semester.

After a few bowls, the opening act, Blend, sounded much better. Similar to the feeling of waking up in a freezing bedroom, though I was called away in the midst of a good song (and buzz) to interview the Outlaws. A few members of the rather formidable UVM delegation later said the band was surprisingly good. Whatever.

The Outlaws used to be like a cross between rice and soy beans, broccoli and cheese, or weed and bourbon: all great individually, but of incredibly higher satisfaction in sum. In the nearly two years since the departure of the more country-ish guitarist Henry Paul, the Outlaws have become more electric oriented. Not to say the band was ever mellow, but they certainly were less electrically inclined than the material on their most recent album, Bringing It Back Alive, indicated.

In the interview, they promised new versions of older songs, but not much new material. They kept their recent character and their word.

As the Jack Daniels freely flowed up front, the band looked down to find a relatively blown out crowd and accordingly 'blew them away.' The music stopped only once in the first 30 minutes, and the crowd didn't sit until the band played a really wasted song "Freeborn Man."

After a few typical Southern songs to close out the show, the Outlaws' encore was such an exceptionally long, long version of "Green Grass and High Tides" that it demanded a long, long joint. Despite the overdrawn middle minutes, though, the band successfully pulled the song off with a vicious climax, ending a vicious evening. The Outlaws simply wouldn't have left it any other way.

BECK ARNLEY

National Discount Club

Save Up to 20% Off on Selected Items.

Special!

Wiper Blades 20% off

All Oil-Filters $2.95

Sign Up Now at...

Imported Parts Center

3060 Williston Road

South Burlington, Vermont 05401

WE'RE WHERE YOU'RE AT!

ON WILLISTON ROAD

Monday-Thursday 8:30-5:00

Fridays til 6:00

Chittenden TRUST COMPANY

Member FDIC

ESSENTIAL ALTERNATIVES

THE FUTON MATTRESS

Made in Vermont

100% All Cotton, 6 inches thick, smooth and firm. Excellent support for the spine. Foldable. Transportable.

—Large floor pillows $17.50

—All cotton quilts — made thick for winter cold

38½ Center St. (3rd floor) Rutland, Vt. 773-8834

$46, $58, $70

Mon–Thurs 9:30 – 5:30

Fri. till 6

Sat. by Appt.

Dunham Duraflex Rejects

dunham

This is no imitation.
It's the genuine, original
Duraflex® waterproof boot.
There's nothing like it. Anywhere.
At any price!

Mens $39.95

Womens $36.95

dunham FACTORY OUTLET

161 Church St. Burlington 862-6089 Open Daily 9:30-9:00, Sunday Noon-6

Photo by Debra Wollk

American Buffalo Means Business

By Diana Greene

Like unemployment, ripped blue jeans, or even your boyfriend, the paradox of liking something and not understanding why is common in our culture. American Buffalo's excellence can bemuse you in this very same way. It is a cerebral play, but oddly enough the characters are not cerebral.

Second Stage, a small theatre company nearly one year old, performed David Mamet's American Buffalo last Thursday night in the esoterically exquisite Billings Apse. Under the direction of UVM senior Jonathan Bourne, American Buffalo was hilarious, depressing, absurd, upsetting, and truly provocative. The play itself has no action, no music, no dances, just words, which no matter how brilliant a production, will turn many theatre-buffs off as fast as the idea of eating ruffles for breakfast. But for those who were able to overlook these trivialities, the play was pure pleasure.

This two-act play, set in Chicago, is the tale of three small-time businessmen who, in an attempt to rob a coin collection, encounter ethical conflicts that reveal the hypocrisies and complexities of human behavior. The dilemma arises when Don, the owner of the junkshop, who claims never to mix business with friendship, has Bob, his preoccupied, cigarette-smoking, pepsi drinking, clean-up boy, assist him in the robbery. When "Teach," Don's loyal true-blue friend, finds out that he asked "the Kid" to help him, he is hurt and not afraid to say so. This triangle of second-rate thieves never actually leave the junkshop; they remain wallowing in their fears and feelings.

These three men entertain the tension of criminal life with vulgarity and emotion that makes you shake your head in disgrace and wrinkle your forehead in disbelief. The situation is ludicrous and the characters are outrageous which makes for some mildly funny moments as when Teach yells, "I'm calm. I'm just upset." Underneath the humorous facade is a deeper message: our ideals are completely out of line with the way we conduct our lives, and that is not funny, not funny at all.

Sam Pierson's performance of "Teach" was nothing less than great. He played this highly emotional, wildly impulsive, and painfully frank hoodlum with sophisticated style and command that made Pierson's talent and professionalism obvious. Teach is an animated man who is deeply concerned with right and wrong, with lines like "They treat me like I'm an asshole. I think they're assholes. I think they outta be shot." Teach knocks you out with his honesty.

Don Dubrow, played by Adam Zahler, had letter-perfect authenticity as a soft-spoken storeowner with a perfect Jewish accent, balding head, and squinting eyes. Zahler gave this warm-hearted storeowner the proper dose of composure and naivete that made him admirable yet susceptible to abuse. Aphorisms just spewed from his mouth from start to finish, as thoughts and beliefs governed by his strong paternal tendencies were revealed: "Things aren't what they seem to be. Never skip breakfast."

The no-good, confused adolescent Bob, performed by Kent Casella, had very few lines comparatively; however his body spoke for him. Casella gave the character of Bob credibility as he expressed his insecurity through evasive eyes, nervous pacing, and instant oral fixation. Technically, Castella demonstrated superior physical control in Act II when Teach and Bob got down to a convincing fight that made you wonder if anyone was really hurt.

The characters all gave superb performances which, when combined with a clever set design, excellent costuming, and the atmospheric quality of the Billings Apse, announced the presence of quality theatre in Burlington. American Buffalo is an interesting combination of East Side Comedy, Waiting for Godot, and Chico and the Man that is well worth seeing no matter what. It will be playing this Friday and Saturday night at 8:00 p.m. Tickets are $3.50 students $2.50

John Lincoln Wright # Crack Country-Swing

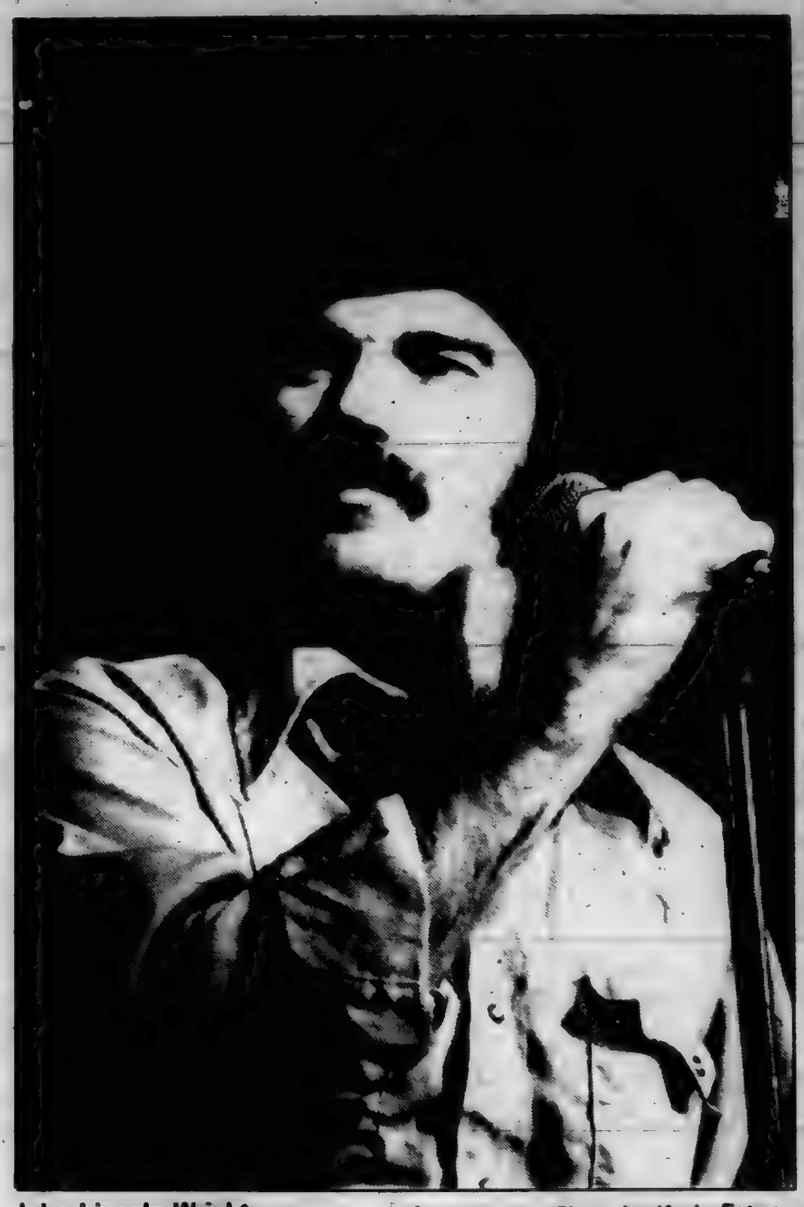
By Pablo Conrad

Not enough people showed up at John Lincoln Wright's dance/concert held last Saturday night at Mountain Greenery. It was too bad, for as they proved again, no one can really play quite like John Lincoln Wright and the Sour Mash Boys.

Playing in Burlington for the first time with his new line-up since last August's Champlain Ferry Cruiser, Wright was in fine form, strutting his unique brand of country music with a sharp New England flavor.

The new Sour Mash Boys (by now, the band's become a New England tradition) are a hot rhythm and blues combo, as well as the team of crack country-swing masters that fans have come to expect. With the addition of Doug McClaran on electric piano (formerly of Vermont's Road Apple) and Mark Kazanoff, a veteran of "Guitar Johnny" Nicholas and the Rhythm Rockers from Boston on tenor sax and harmonica, this band wails and jumps.



Originally from Maine, John Lincoln Wright got started twelve years ago with another Boston band called the Beacon Street Union. Six years later, Wright turned to his country roots, establishing what has become New England's best known, most authentic country swing band. The name of the Sour Mash Boys has become synonymous with quality, having included such regional talents as pedal steeler John Macey and harmonica wizard Mike Turk, in its earlier incarnations.

The emphasis is still on top-notch swing and honky-tonkin' music, but the Boys no longer feature typically country and western instrumentation like fiddles and pedal steel. At Mountain Greenery, John Lincoln Wright was backed by George Nelson on lead and rhythm guitar, Billy Mather on bass, and Mike Avery on drums, as well as pianist McClaran, and Kaz on horn.

Even after a month's time together, they were no less than hot. Although the turn-out was light, it had been billed as a dance (BYOB), and John Lincoln Wright quickly established the atmosphere of a Texas dance hall, combining what he terms "drinkin' music" with his own excellent songs. The repertoire included blues renditions on "Next Time You See Me" and "Forty Hour Workingman;" Wright has a good blues holler that's been honed to a keen edge on the old Hank Williams songs, and he cries it right out with McClaran's boogying piano and Kazanoff next to him, blowing on sax.

John Lincoln Wright's own songs were some of the most exciting of the evening. He writes real lyrics that stand out well in a genre that is famous for endless rehashings of old standby hits. Particularly notable were his "Boiled Dinner Boogie," a paean to New England's regional cuisines, that jumped like the best of Bob Wills' Texas swing, and the brand new "And When I Go."

Both Wright's own songs and works by Merle Haggard and Hank Williams provide the vehicle for his distinctive singing. Clean delivery with a good edge on it, and the sense that he takes his music seriously distinguish John Lincoln Wright as a country artist to be reckoned with. The genuine quality in Wright's singing and song-writing are what has put him onstage, opening for people like Jerry Jeff Walker, Dolly Parton, and Merle Haggard.

John Lincoln Wright — Photo by Kevin Eaton

At Mountain Greenery, it was clear that John Lincoln Wright's other big asset is the ability to put together working teams of the best people in New England to back him up. Not simply a loose conglomerate of soloists, the Sour Mash Boys operated as a unit, always conscious of their bandleader and of each other's playing.

"The new Sour Mash Boys (by now, the band's become a New England tradition) are a hot rythym and blues combo..."

Purists might balk at a country band that features tenor sax and electric piano, but the Sour Mash Boys are unimpeachable in their performance. Mark Kazanoff's sense of country/swing music is no less than his ability with the blues and boogie material from which he came. Also his clean strong harmonies provided necessary support for John Lincoln Wright on songs with dramatic refrains. One of these was the song "Accidentally, Like A Martyr," written by Warren Zevon. Complete with a whole-hearted treatment by Doug McClaran, the tune was a natural for Wright, who sang its wryly desperate refrain as if it were his own.

The only real disappointment on Saturday night was the lack of a large audience. With area fans spread out between the Lightning Ridge Festival in Montpelier and appearances by Coco and the Lonesome Road Band and Dealer's Choice elsewhere in Burlington, the spacious room at Mountain Greenery never quite filled up. Still, the Sour Mash Boys were cooking, and refused to let a sparse turn-out affect their performance.

Mountain Greenery, on the corner of College Street and South Champlain, is an ideal concert setting. The open, yet intimate atmosphere provides a refreshing change from the usual smoky rooms that offer quality entertainment in Burlington. Judging from future plans, area music lovers should look forward to more events at this new performance center.

If you missed the Sour Mash Boys last week, keep an eye out for their return. As Burlington continues to open up to good live music, you can bet that they'll be back.

Special

Lee Storm Rider Vest

Taffeta Nylon Shell

Hollowfill2 Insulation

Reg. $27.50

$19.95

Lee Storm Rider Jacket

Taffeta Nylon Shell

Hollowfill 2 Insulation

Reg. $50.00

$30.00

VISA

DAKIN'S MOUNTAIN SHOP

OPEN Mon.-Fri. 9-9 Sat. 9-6

863-5581
227 Main St.
Burlington, Vt.
FREE PARKING

For your education in the better things in life.

weck's
WINE & CHEESE
Burlington Square Mall 658-2070

FRANK COOPER, INC.

Precision Haircutting

After a summer of exposing your hair to sun, wind, salt water, and chlorine from pools, you've more than likely ended up with some dry broken ends.

Removing those ends need not require a drastic cut, but even the simplest hairstyle needs frequent shaping and conditioning to put bounce and shine into those tresses.

For the sake of your hair why not plan an end of the summer cut and treatment with the experts at Frank Cooper. They're into natural, healthy hair and they'll be happy to advise you on whatever you might need for hair that looks and feels great.

171 Battery St. 658-6563 Burlington

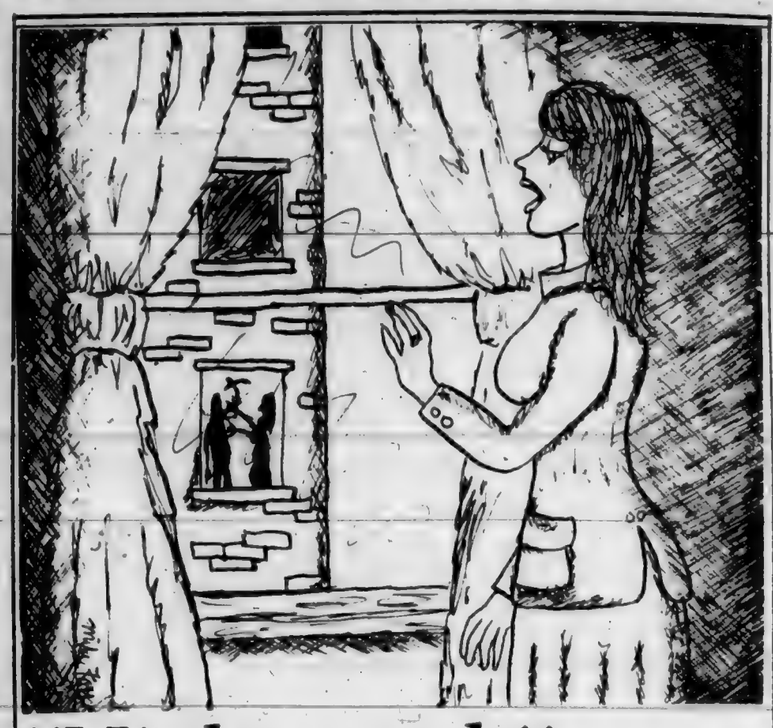
Tough Boots-
For Tough Trucking

These tough boots from walker are just what you need to help tackle the upcoming weather. They are 100% guaranteed waterproof—with a leather lining, cushioned insole, and a lug sole for the ultimate in long-lasting quality and comfort.

LOCUT
$51.90
Reg. $60.00

HICUT
$54.90
Reg. $63.00

walker
SHOE COMPANY



Jan's

90 CHURCH ST.
DOWNTOWN BURL.
864-4735

Vermont's Quality Shoe Store

Mon. & Fri. 'til 9:00
Mastercharge/VISA
Parking & Bus Tokens

Theatre Review

"Nightwatch" Yawning Darkness

By Pam Keeler

The Essex Community Players' production of Lucille Fletcher's Nightwatch, for the most part, did not work very well. The production had few builds, and little suspense. The timing was often slow, and many of the characters lacked believability. Carroll, who played a neurotic woman claiming to see dead bodies in the apartment across the street, was a leading factor to the slow pace of this play. Throughout Nightwatch, she remained on one level, with no builds and no transitions. Her lack of vocal control was annoying, as was her inability to remember lines.

Remembering lines, upstaging themselves, and their inability to use little pieces of business to enhance their characters were all consistent problems of the actors.

The acting of minor characters in this production varied from excellent to mediocre. On the mediocre end was officer Vanelli, played by Tanner Bent. Tanner came out of character at one point however, even in character. Tanner remained on one level. Bill Kneen, who played butcher Sam Hoke, spoke too fast to be understood.

Dr. Tracey Lake, played by Marjorie Devlin, was a sympathetic character. Devlin had little to work with; however, she did gain applause when she claimed the weather was "...raw, just like Vermont weather."

The excellent actor in this production, the only one memorable for his talent, was Bill Devlin. Devlin was very entertaining as Curtis Appleby, the Wheeler's nosy next-door neighbor who embellishes on horror stories. Devlin had energy and an excellent grasp of his character.

"The excellent actor in this production, the only one memorable for his talent, was Bill Devlin... Devlin had energy and an excellent grasp of his character."

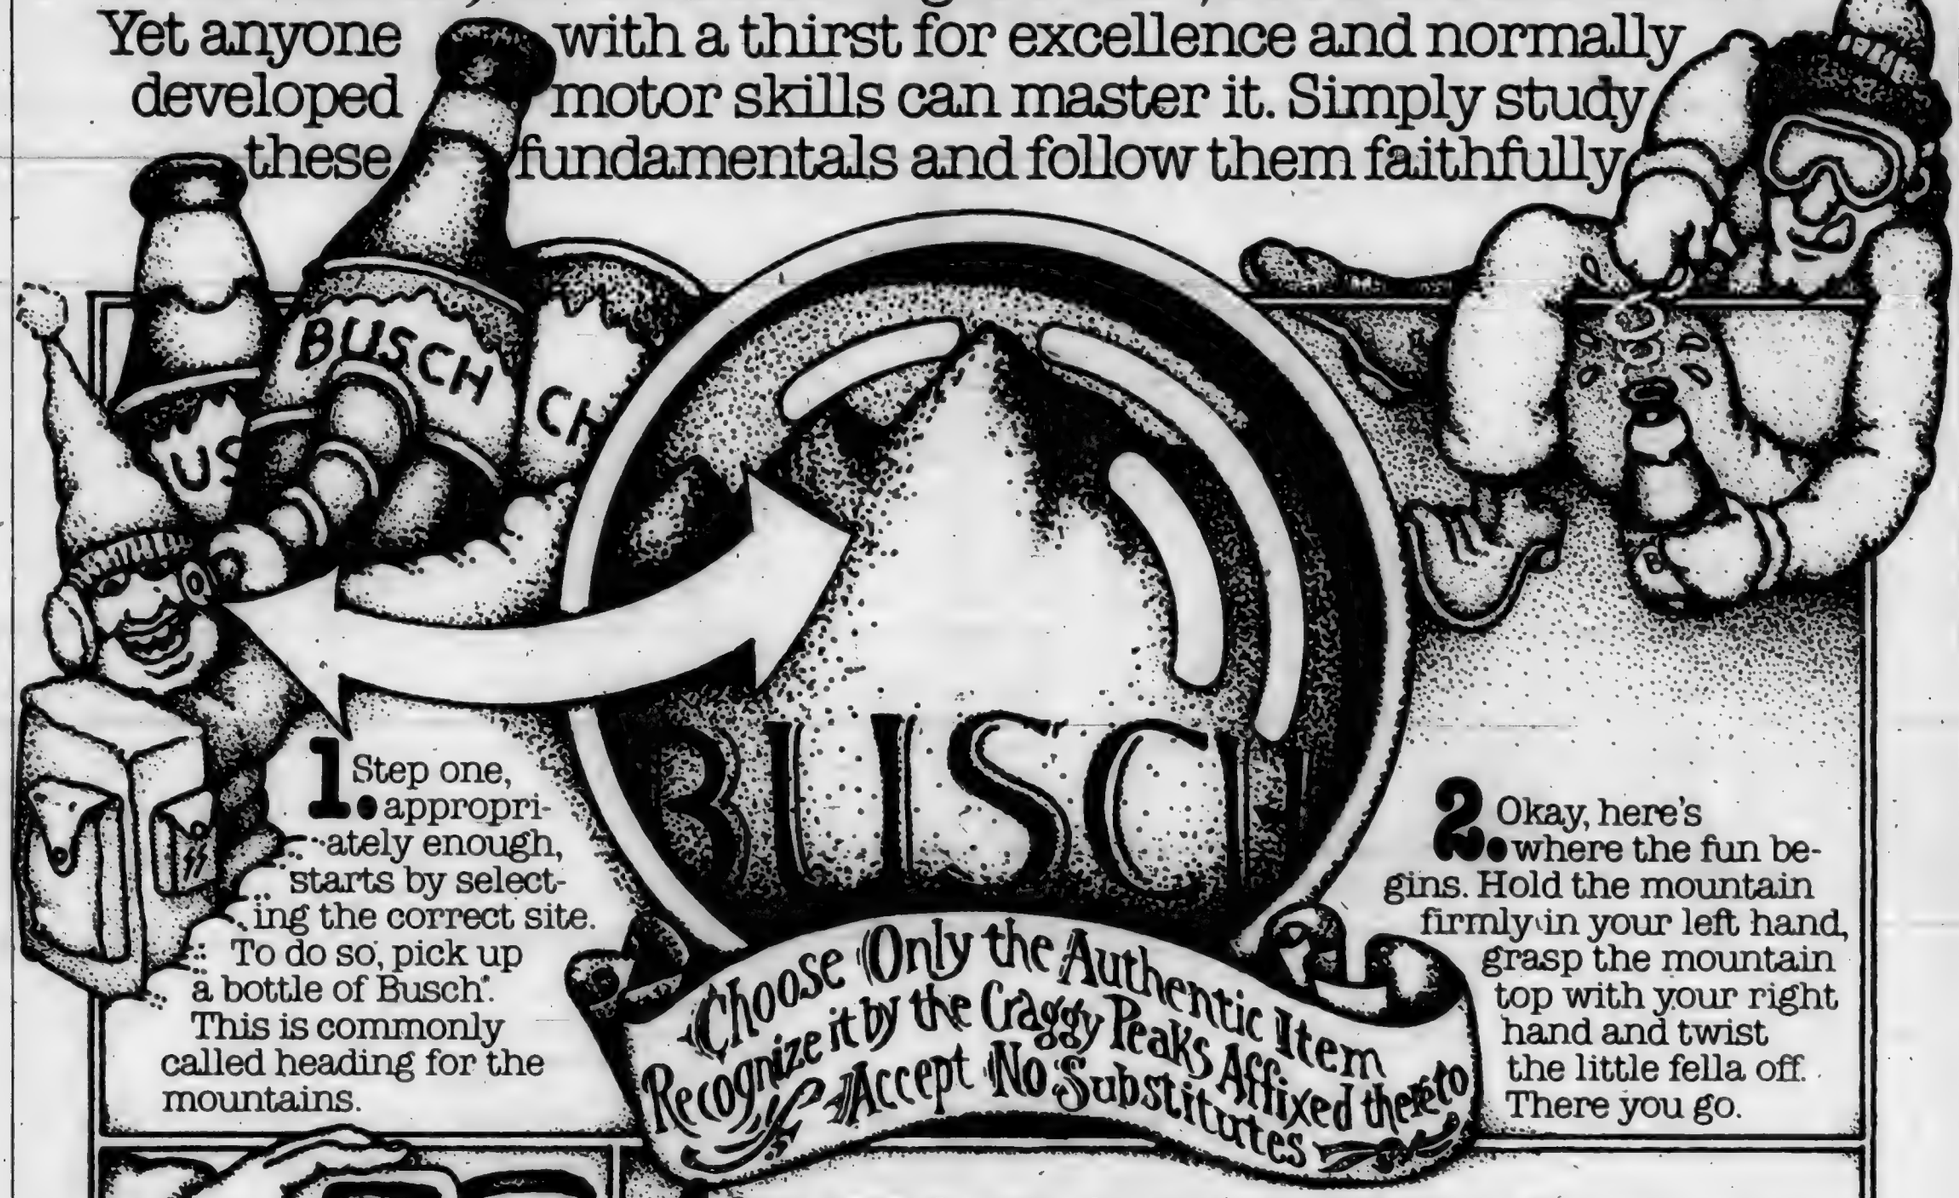
However, there were some nice moments in this production of Nightwatch. Nancy Specht, who played the Wheeler's German maid Helga, was quite good. She sustained a German accent throughout the play, while still being understandable. Specht had a lot of energy, and her facial expressions were big and bold.

Lois Wallace, as Blanche Cooke, was, for the most part, good. Although she groped for lines at one point, she did redeem herself through the rest of the play. She was believable as Elaine's best friend; however, as lover to Elaine's husband, Wallace lacked believability. The scene between Wallace and Frank Donath, who played John Wheeler, showed little passion. One failed to get a sense of their relationship.

Although not memorable, Donath was an adequate actor. His concentration was focused at all times and he varied his voice and emotions.

Also excellent was Bill Kneen's set design. The lighting was also good, except in the last scene. This last scene, the "surprise" ending, was not as shocking as it could have been. Carroll did not build up to this scene, and the audience was left looking at a dark stage for too long.



The final scene was Mary Claire Carroll's finest moment. Her voice was not whining and she was not talking too fast. However, the stage was at this point in semi-darkness. This was distracting because the audience could not see Carroll's expressions.

There were some nice moments in the Essex Community Players' production of Nightwatch, but the play was mostly an evening of yawning darkness for the audience.

Mountaineering #1.

FUNDAMENTALS OF MOUNTAINEERING

What is mountaineering all about? Funny you should ask. Because we just happen to have an answer. (Ah-h, life's little coincidences.) Mountaineering is a skill, a science and an art. Yet anyone with a thirst for excellence and normally developed motor skills can master it. Simply study these fundamentals and follow them faithfully.

1. Step one, appropriately enough, starts by selecting the correct site. To do so, pick up a bottle of Busch. This is commonly called heading for the mountains.

2. Okay, here's where the fun begins. Hold the mountain firmly in your left hand, grasp the mountain top with your right hand and twist the little fella off. There you go.

3. Now for the tricky part. Neophytes, listen up: the proper pour is straight down the center of the glass. Only in this way will the cold, invigorating taste of the mountain come to a head.

4. Once poured, pacing becomes paramount. As any seasoned mountaineer will tell you, the only way to down a mountain is slowly, smoothly and steadily – savoring every swallow of the brew that is Busch. If you're a bit awkward at first, don't be discouraged. Perfection takes practice. Soon enough, having emptied your glass and filled your soul, you too will be a mountaineer.

Fig.1 Before Mountaineering. Fig.2 During Mountaineering. Fig.3 After Mountaineering.

Don't just reach for a beer. BUSCH® Head for the mountains.

© 1978 Anheuser-Busch, Inc St Louis, Mo

THE Treaty
of YORKTOWN

Tuesday is LASAGNA Day!
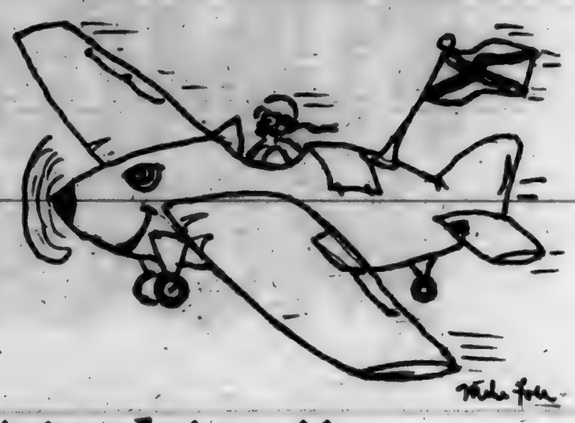
ALL YOU CAN EAT &
Salad Bar & Rolls
$3.95
NOON TIL
9PM



Thursday
CHILI FIASCO
$2.35
SALAD &
CORNBREAD
TOO!

ALL THE CHILI
YOU CAN EAT!

The Treaty of Yorktown
156 St. Paul Street
Burlington, Vermont

Books

"Airships"

Mississippi Madness

By Jim Oakes

Award-winning fictionist Barry Hannah's newest effort Airships (Knopf 1978), is like an ear-bending guided tour through a crowded flea market booth. Imagine pitched persuasive eulogies of every article you happen to linger over, all related in the same tireless inflection.. Some of the short stories are priceless, others are worthless, like the toaster he convinced you to buy that never worked.

Paradoxically, the first person, front-row-seat style which Hannah mainly employs is responsible for his successes and his failures. His technique breathes life and power into some of his short stories as easily as it murders others from behind. When Hannah writes about that which he knows, he is great. When he wanders into the future and the past he is poor.

Airships' excess baggage includes the science fiction scavenger hunt "Eating Wife and Friends," and the vicarious sports fantasy "Return to Return," which leaves the reader perplexed, wondering whether the whole point was really that small, or whether it was missed entirely?

To give Hannah's work that bona-fide southern twang, there are three stories about – you guessed it – the Civil War. Written in the first person, "Dragged Fighting from His Tomb" and "Knowing He Was Not My Kind Yet I Followed" both somehow lack that authenticity of scene which would make the use of the first person comfortably credible. Hannah's insistent, detailed action tries to draw the reader into the first person reality of rampaging with Col. Jeb Stuart's Rebel cavalry. He tries too hard. The third "southern" story is titled "Behold the Husband in his Perfect Agony" and is perhaps the most contrived in the whole book.

Where Barry Hannah is successful, his achievement is considerable. His urgent frankness is particularly suited to his bombthrowing, drum-playing childhood stories and his several short pieces of the heart. Here are two Barry Hannah gems from the story "Love Too Long:" "Maybe I need to go to Church, I said to myself. I can't stand this alone. I wished I was Jesus, somebody who never drank or wanted nooky. Or knew Jane," and "Nothing in the world matters but you and your woman. Friendship and politics go to hell. My friend Dan three doors down, who's also unemployed, comes over when he can make the price of a six-pack. It's not the same. I'm going to die from love."

Picking a story at random in Airships will yield one sure result – it will provoke. Like any good flea market display, Barry Hannah's collection of jewels and cut glass is an expression of that which runs deeper than the value of the product itself. A talented writer possessing a strong, if erratic voice, Hannah will be heard from again.

Caution, Oktoberfest

Continued From Page 26

possibly be overlooked.

"You're Frank," she said, almost as though she didn't believe me. "JoAnne has told me so much about you."

"Yes, JoAnne used to live with me – I mean upstairs from me – in Living/Learning last year," I added, my associate belching loudly in the background.

"Oh..."

"Well, Mom and I want to listen to the UVM Band now. I'll talk to you later," JoAnne interrupted, a murderous gleam in her eye, and quickly dragged her mother away.

But my safety was short-lived. In the distance, I spied another acquaintance tugging on his father's arm and pointing at me. Frantic, I pushed my associate towards the beer tent, ran across the green to the crafts tables, and struck up a conversation with one of the artisans regarding the merits and pitfalls of organic hallucinogens. But I soon forgot about my quest for the ultimate mushroom when I was joined by two tequila-toting friends. Nevertheless, before the afternoon slid into complete drunken oblivion, I did have one last coherent thought – that if I didn't take out life insurance, I might perhaps disguise myself as a cuckoo next year...

EXPONENTIAL, MY DEAR WATSON

If you have at least two years of graduate or undergraduate education ahead, and you keep getting clues that your money is running short, then a two-year Air Force ROTC scholarship may be the solution.

Currently we're seeking young men and women who would like to serve their nation as Air Force Officers. Consequently, if you're majoring in a selected technical/non-technical scientific, nursing, or pre-medical field, or can qualify for pilot, navigator, or missile training, then you may be eligible for a two-year Air Force ROTC scholarship. The scholarship pays your tuition, lab fees, (plus incidental fees), books, and $100 per month tax free. And even if you don't qualify for the two-year scholarship, you still receive the $100 a month while enrolled in the Air Force ROTC two-year program.

What do we ask in return? That you serve America at least four years as an Air Force officer. Your Air Force ROTC counselor has the details and qualification requirements. Check it out. It might even make your education finances seem elementary.

Contact St. Michael's/UVM Air Force ROTC, 655-2000, ext. 2551.

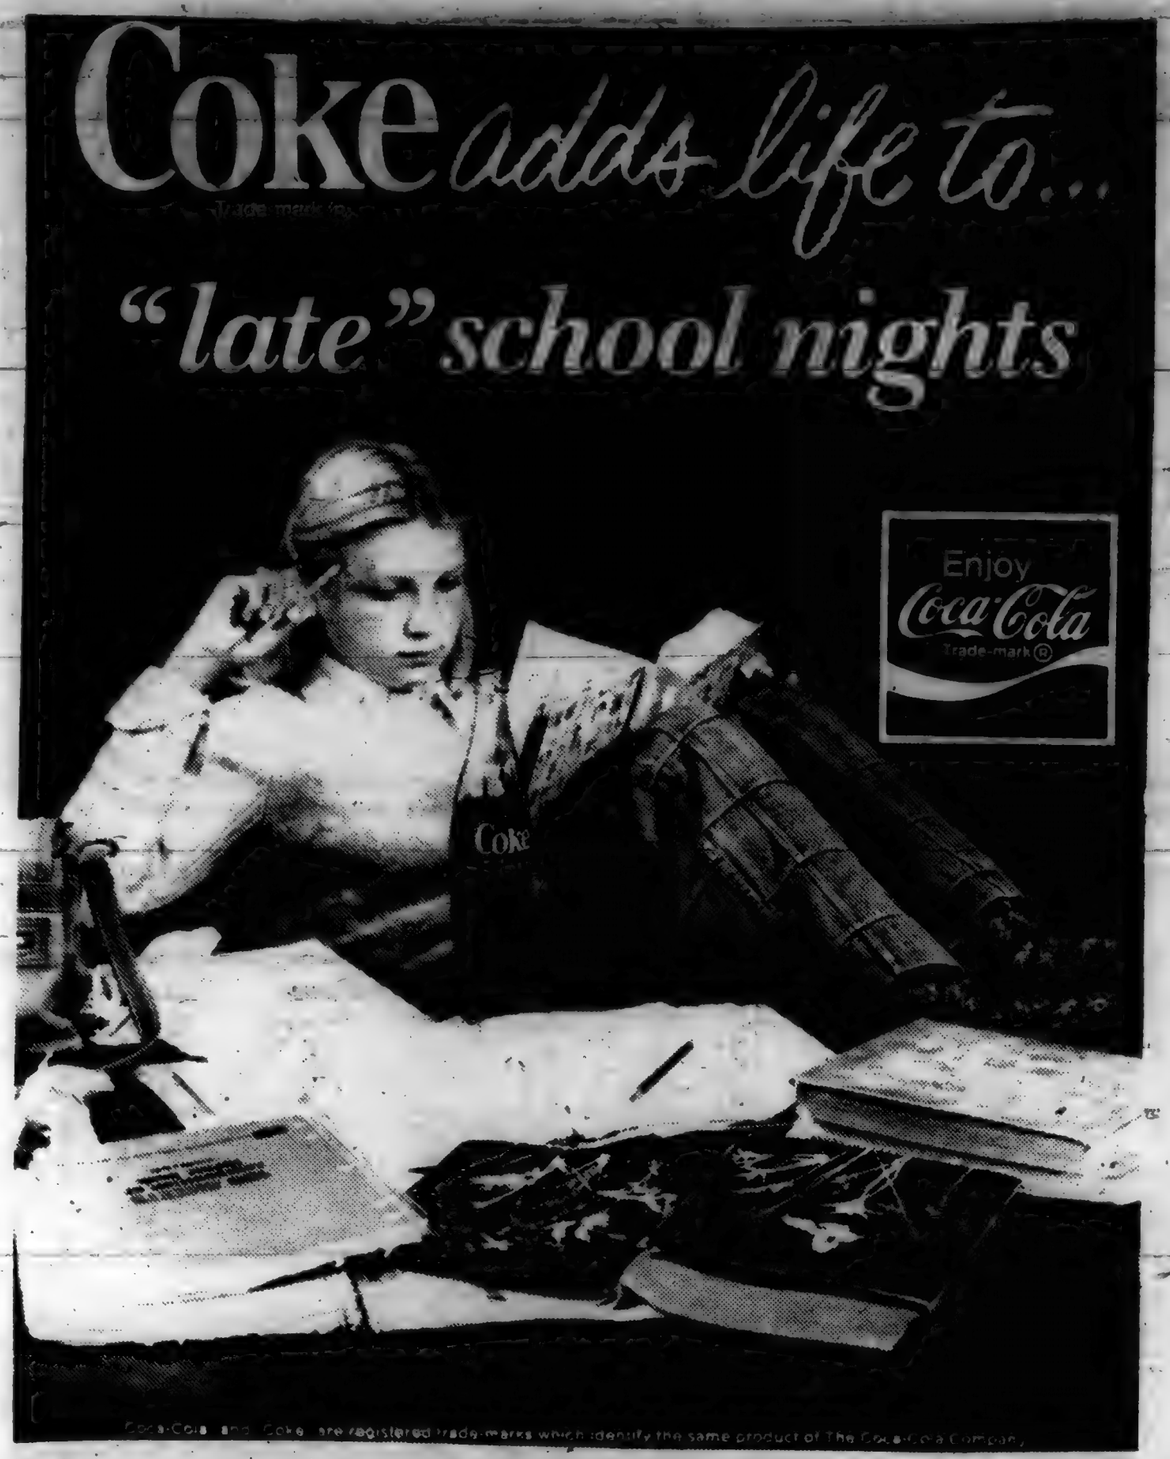
AIR FORCE ROTC
Gateway to a great way of life.

Walk into the incredible true experience of Billy Hayes.
And bring all the courage you can.



Midnight Express

COLUMBIA PICTURES Presents A CASABLANCA FILMWORKS Production of An ALAN PARKER Film MIDNIGHT EXPRESS Executive Producer PETER GUBER Screenplay by OLIVER STONE
Produced by ALAN MARSHALL and DAVID PUTTNAM Directed by ALAN PARKER Music Created by GIORGIO MORODER
Based on the true story of Billy Hayes from the book Midnight Express by BILLY HAYES and WILLIAM HOFFER

R

Original Soundtrack Album available from CASABLANCA RECORD And FILMWORKS

Starts Friday, 10/27, Showcase Theater

Forecast

Julian Bream

On November 2nd, the Lane Series will present, for the second time, the world's foremost lutenist and guitarist, Julian Bream, in a concert in Burlington's Memorial Auditorium at 8 p.m. Lauded by the New York Times as a "poised and cultivated guitarist," Bream will offer an evening of classical and contemporary composers. Included on the program will be Bach's "Surle in E Major," Frank Martin's "Quartre Rieces Brecas," and selections by Robert Johnson, Adrian Denss, and Isaac Albeniz. Tickets are $7.50 and $5 and may be purchased either at the Ticket Store or the Lane Series Box Office at Grasse Mount (656-3418).

Jimmy Cliff

Renowned reggae musician Jimmy Cliff will be coming to Burlington on November 20th. Although amazing just by himself, Cliff will be preceded by none other than "Zzebra." The concert should be excellent, not only because of the quality of the performers, but also because it is being held at the Flynn Theatre, where spaciousness, reserved seating, and fine acoustics should make it more comfortable than the normal Burlington rock show. Tickets may be purchased at Freemark Artists, 200 Main Street (on top of the Patisserie).

Weather Report

Weather Report, one of the most phenomenal fusion groups around, will appear in concert on November 2nd at Middlebury College. With Jaw Pastorius, Joe Zawrnol and Wayne Shorter at the helm, Weather Report has consistently recorded a number of excellent albums, particularly Heavy Weather, which won the Downbeat Critics' Poll of No. 1 album, and most recently Mr. Gone. General admission tickets are $6 in advance and $7 at the door and may be purchased at Bailey's Music Rooms.

McCaslin and Ringer

Philo artists Mary McCaslin and Jim Ringer will be performing at Hunt's on October 30th and 31st. Two singer/songwriters with the spirit of the old west, McCaslin and Ringer have recorded both together and separately. There will be two shows each night at 8 and 11 p.m. and tickets are $3. For further information call 863-9165.

Halloween

It's that time of year again for outright insanity one of the few days when it is legitimate for an adult to act like a child. In addition to a number of private parties and dormitory functions, there will be several opportunities for students to display their imagination this Halloween as both Rasputin's and the Last Chance are having costume parties on the 31st, complete with prizes and reduced rates of drinks. So catch the madness! (How about going as a pregnant nun?)

Recent Cuts

A Nightclub Virtuoso

Tom Waits, Blue Valentine (Elecktra-Asylum)

With Blue Valentine, Tom Waits has proven himself among the masters of this epoch's nightclub virtuosos, a cult figure who deserves his rapidly growing status. Building his reputation through live work, Waits is a cross between Lord Buckley and Jack Kerouac, synthesizing his lengthy humorous raps with the free verse of the fifties' beat generation.

Playing electric guitar as well as acoustic piano, Waits begins this latest with "Somewhere" from West Side Story, opening up with Mantovani-esque 101 Strings only to destroy it amusingly by gruffing out in his characteristic lisped sibilance of "a place for uth," sounding remarkably like the lovable Cookie Monster. Nevertheless, Waits alternates this with sheer romantic trilling.

Lil Caesar comes back to life in "Red Shoes by the Drugstore," where he tells his girl to wait for him with her cracked compact and a bottle of Evening in Paris perfume, until Caesar comes back with the goods. Life on the fringe is also portrayed in "Christmas Card from a Hooker in Minneapolis," a sad song about a whore who pretends she has gone straight but is only reminding her correspondant that she is eligible for parole in February. The most exciting tune, "Romeo is Bleeding," is a cool finger-snapper about a tough summer gang whose idol, Romeo, has just avenged his brother's murder by knifing the sheriff. Also wounded, Romeo is the classic Jimmy Dean who dies like a hero without a whimper. One great feature of this song is a merciless tenor sax solo by Frank Vicari. Whether it's preying on disadvantaged naivete, as on "$29.00" where a little black girl gets undone by a not-too-cool dude in a Cadillac (and thus loses her 29 bucks, an alligator purse, and a ½ pint of blood), a hobo flying into town on the wings of a magpie in "Whistling Past the Graveyard," or syphoning all the gas from your daddy's pick-up, calling off the hounds and going to Reno on the "Wrong Side of the Road" to spend someone else's money, Waits walks the bleak streets, throwing shadows on the dark side of a screwed-up American dream. However misguided, Waits' heroes are as real as his music. The villians, the cops, arrive too late because they stop and get a cup of coffee. They are cliched, like in the movies.

Joining Waits are Ray Crawford and Roland Bautista on electric guitars, Harold Battiste on piano, Scott Edwards and Jim Hughart on bass, Rick Lawson, Chip White, and Earl Palmer on drums.

Smokin'

Wishbone Ash, No Smoke Without Fire (MCA)

Some eighteen months since their last studio album, Wishbone Ash comes back into the current light with this new effort.

Their first song "You See Red," really rocks and evokes some beautiful harmonies. Also written by Laurie Wisefield is "The Way of the World," which shows the most versatility for Wishbone Ash and is the heaviest song on the album. The songs are strongly lyrical, and even with such a fresh arrangement a few dated riffs are obvious to isolate.

Nevertheless, this is definitive Ash material, their vocal ability having been polished up considerably. Retaining the same line-up since 1974 of Andy Powell and Laurie Wisefield on guitars and vocals, Martin Turner on bass and vocals, and Steve Upton on drums, Wishbone Ash illustrates here that they are an accomplished English-styled band.

Enter the Quintet

By Tom Nuccio

Woody Shaw, Stepping Stone

Woody Shaw continues to profess the "neo-bop" legacy on Stepping Stone, recorded live during his second summer stint at the Village Vanguard.

The disc marks the trumpeter's second Columbia and first quintet session. Unlike the concealing effects of his previous Concert Ensembles, the quintet enables Shaw to blow freely and powerfully. The remaining members of the group, Carter Jefferson (tenor and soprano saxes), Onaje Allan Gumbs (piano), Clint Houston (bass), and Victor Lewis (drums) all appear as underrated yet extremely talented musicians, destined for future success as solo artists. Shaw fuses their talents into a solid foundation over which he can improvise on artistically composed songs.

Each tune reflects a culmination of Shaw's previous influences and his own musical signatures. The title track is reminiscent of his work with the Horace Silver Quintet while "Capricornian Way" reveals a slight Dolphy influence. The latter tune features Shaw and Jefferson soloing above a tightly-knit rhythmic trio – a new freedom evolved directly from the quintetic atmosphere.

Much more praise can be offered to this tremendous musician but anything else I might interject could not possibly match the laurels placed upon him by a peer. When asked who was presently doing something in his field, jazz trumpet great Freddie Hubbard uttered not his own name – but instead humbly replied "Woody Shaw" – a statement of pure honesty, not modesty.

> "Each tune reflects a culmination of Shaw's previous influences and his own musical signatures."

Here to Stay

By Tom Nuccio

Dexter Gordon, Manhattan Symphonie

In 1977, after a lengthy tenure in Europe, tenor saxophonist Dexter Gordon returned to the American shores. An immediate collaboration with Columbia records produced two smashing successes in Homecoming and Sophisticated Giant. Manhattan Symphonie, the latest from Downbeat's number one tenorist inherits the beneficial qualities of its older brothers.

Gordon's "Hawkins influenced proud sound" is revealed at top from on the balladic "As Time Goes By" and "Body and Soul" and the swinging "Moments Notice" and LTD. On "Moments Notice" he does not imitate the song's author, John Coltrane, unlike many sax players. Instead he supplies a uniquely personal interpretation, blowing melodic lines with unsurpassable dynamism and intensity. Manhattan Symphonie in my opinion is the adhesive which will glue Gordon to the NYC jazz scene, giving us access to a world-renowned genius.

KEVIN EATON is the Winner of Both the color and black and white
Annual UVM
AMOEL
PHOTO CONTEST.

beer wine
THE ONLY BEVERAGE WAREHOUSE
IS IN WINOOSKI
Lowest Prices Largest Selection
kegs soda

BOLTON VALLEY SKI RESORT
JUST 22 MILES FROM CAMPUS!
10% DISCOUNT ON ALL SEASON PASSES
PURCHASES BY NOVEMBER 1, 1978

| | Regularly | with 10% Discount |
|---|---|---|
| STUDENT+ | 155.00 | 139.50 |
| MIDWEEK* | 125.00 | 112.50 |
| ADULT+ | 195.00 | 175.50 |
| JUNIOR (age 6–12)+ | 115.00 | 103.50 |

FAMILY PLAN: ADDITIONAL 10% DISCOUNT FOR THREE OR MORE PERSONS IN THE SAME FAMILY LIVING AT THE SAME ADDRESS.

+ Good for all lifts weekends, holidays, and for night skiing.

* Good for all lifts during the day Monday through Friday, including holidays. Does not include weekends or night skiing.

For information call 434-2131

Yes, please sign me (us) up.

Name
Address
City State Zip
Total number of Student Midweek Adult Junior Total cost
Plus 5% VT Sales Tax
Check enclosed for
Or, for an instant pass, see our rep Fridays 2-9 p.m. at the Dowhill Bar Saturdays 9-5 at the Alpine Shop.
Send to: Box 11, Bolton Valley Corp., Bolton, Vermont 05477.

CALENDAR

Wednesday, October 27 - November 2

27 Friday

EXHIBITIONS

Francis Colburn Gallery – Morris Simon: Wood Sculpture. 9 a.m. – 5 p.m.

Fleming Museum – "War!" a cross-cultural viewpoint.

LECTURES

"Differences in Structure Between Active and Inactive Chromatin," by Dr. Vincent Allfrey, E-214 Given, 12 noon.

"Bird Communities of the Green Mountains: The Importance of Habitat, Structure, and Competition," by Dr. Barry Noon, 12 noon, 105 Marsh Life Science.

"Biomedical Engineering Experiments in Reversible Sterility," by William Roth, 3 p.m., 224 Votey.

PERFORMING ARTS

American Buffalo by David Mamet, 8 p.m., Billings Apse. Tickets $2.50/ID, $3.50/general at Bailey's Music & the door.

FILMS

SA Film "Last American Hero," 7:30 p.m., B106 Angell, Free/ID, 50 cents/general.

SPORTS

Women's X-country vs. UNH and Massachusetts, 3:30 p.m., A. T. Post, BCC.

Men's JV soccer vs. Castleton, 3:30 p.m., Centennial Field.

SPECIAL ACTIVITIES

German Folksongs, C370 L/L, 4 p.m.

Coffeehouse at the Women's Referral Center 3rd floor Billings Balcony. Bring an instrument if you play one and food to share if you are so inspired.

OTHER

Mad River & Sugarbush Ski Pass Sales – 9 a.m. – 5 p.m., Billings lobby.

28 Saturday

EXHIBITIONS

Fleming Museum – "War!" a cross-cultural viewpoint. Tools and Technology.

PERFORMING ARTS

American Buffalo, by David Mamet, 8 p.m., Billings Apse. Tickets $2.50/ID, $3.50/general at Bailey's Music & the door.

FILMS

IRA Film "Psycho," 7 & 9:30 p.m., Southwick. Admission $1.

SPORTS

Women's swimming vs. Plattsburgh St., 1 p.m., Forbusch Pool, Patrick Gym.

WEEKLY EVENTS

Admissions Group Information Session – 10 a.m., North Lounge, Billings.

29 Sunday

EXHIBITIONS

Fleming Museum – "War!" a cross-cultural viewpoint. Tools and Technology.

PERFORMING ARTS

UVM Orchestra Concert, 3 p.m., Recital Hall, Music Building. $1/ID, $2/General.

FILMS

SA Film "Pat & Mike," 7:30 p.m., B106 Angell. Free/ID, 50 cents/general.

IRA film – "Psycho," 8 p.m., Southwick, Admission $1.

OTHER

Photography Program, E230/250 L/L, 6:30 p.m.

Hillel Deli Night, L/L Commons 216, 6 p.m. All you can eat for $2.00

30 Monday

EXHIBITIONS

Francis Colburn Gallery – Invitational Snap Shot Exhibition. 9 a.m. – 5 p.m.

Fleming Museum – "War!" a cross-cultural viewpoint. Tools and Technology.

LECTURES

"Early American Tools: An Historical Overview," Paul Kebabian, 8 p.m., Wilbur Room, Fleming Museum.

MEETINGS

VPIRG meeting, 5–6:30 p.m., Conference Room C, Billings.

Student Affairs Committee 7:30–9 p.m., North Lounge, Billings.

OTHER

Pi Beta Phi bake sale 9 a.m., Billings lobby.

Poetry reading workshop for women to share their poetry with other women. 4:00 at the Women's Referral Center, 3rd floor Billings Balcony. Men are invited but the focus will be on women's poetry.

31 Tuesday

EXHIBITIONS

Francis Colburn Gallery – Invitational Snap Shot Exhibition. 9 a.m. – 5 p.m.

Fleming Museum – "War!" a cross-cultural viewpoint. Tools and Technology.

LECTURES

"Revolution and Response in Uganda," by Bishop (in exile) Festo Kivengere, a lecture and discussion, 3 p.m., Christ Church Presbyterian.

"System Dynamics Simulation of Alcohol Addition," Dr. Wm. Roth, 3:10 p.m., B106 Angell.

"Curriculum & Careers Available in Computer Science," Dr. Hill, 3:15 p.m., Votey Reading Room.

"Grand Rounds," Dr. Donald Hillman, UVM Depts. of Education and Psychology, 4 p.m., 103 Rowell.

WORKSHOPS

"Expressing your sexuality," 3 p.m., Counseling & Testing Center.

"Total Well-being/A Holistic Approach," 3:30 p.m., Counseling & Testing.

SPECIAL ACTIVITIES

Scottish Country Dancing – for beginners, 7:30 p.m., 104 Old Mill. For advanced, 8 p.m., 104 Old Mill. Questions: 863-4107 or 862-2428.

FILMS

SA Film "M" 7:30 p.m. B106 Angell, Free/ID, 50 cents/general.

MEETINGS

Christian Science Organization, 4:30 p.m., B102 L/L.

Wildlife Society, 7 p.m., Marsh Lounge, Billings.

The International Club will be having weekly coffee hours for international students and Americans interested in meeting foreign students. 4–5:30 p.m. in Living/Learning D-140.

OTHER

Sugarbush, Smugglers, & Mad River ski pass sales 9–5 Billings lobby.

Israeli Folk Dancing, L/L Commons 115, 8 p.m.

Tokyo String Quartet, First Congregational Church, Burlington 8 p.m. Tickets $6.00, $4.50 students with ID.

1 Wednesday

EXHIBITIONS

Francis Colburn Gallery – Invitational Snap Shot Exhibition, 9 a.m. – 5 p.m.

Fleming Museum – "War!" a cross-cultural viewpoint. Tools and Technology.

LECTURES

Director's Night with Toni Trombley of Advising & Referral, 5 p.m., Links Office, 337 Waterman.

"Impact of goal-setting on curriculum planning and development in Vt. public schools," Prof. Robert Larson, 7:30 p.m., Fireplace Lounge, L/L.

Vermont Seminars Holocaust Series "Evian & Kristallnact," with C. Brooks Peters, Berlin correspondent for the N.Y. Times. 8 p.m., 101 Votey. Reception at 9 p.m., North Lounge, Billings.

WORKSHOPS

"Career Awareness Group," 2 p.m. For sign-up and meeting place call 656-3450.

"Finding Out About Graduate School," 3 p.m. For sign-up and meeting place call 656-3450.

"Self-Appreciation," 3:30 p.m., Counseling & Testing Center.

OTHER

Open House at Dharmadhatu, 31 Elmwood Ave., the Burlington center for Buddhist meditation and study. 7:30 p.m. Meditation instruction and talks on Buddhist practice as taught by the Ven. Chogyam Trungpa, Rinpoche. For more information call 658-6795.

MEETINGS

UVM Outing Club 7–9 p.m., North Lounge, Billings.

2 Thursday

EXHIBITIONS

Francis Colburn Gallery – Invitational Snap Shot Exhibition, 9 a.m. – 5 p.m.

Fleming Museum – "War!" a cross-cultural viewpoint. Tools & Technology.

LECTURES

"The Cromatogram: A Method Used in Bio-dynamic Agriculture," Ron Krupp, 12:15 p.m., 107 Agriculture/Engineering Bldg.

"The Use of Hypnosis in the Treatment of Behavioral Problems," Dr. Ronald Steffenhagen, 7:30 p.m., 111 Rowell.

Dr. Oppenlander will be speaking on curriculum and career options in Civil Engineering at 3:15 p.m. in the Votey Reading Room.

WORKSHOPS

"Curriculum and Career Options in Civil Engineering," Votey Reading Room, 3:15 p.m.

PERFORMING ARTS

Lane Series "Julian Bream: guitarist," 8 p.m., Memorial Auditorium.

FILMS

SA Film "Bridge Over the River Kwai," 7:30 p.m., B106 Angell. Free/ID, 50 cents/general.

OTHER

Sugarbush, Smuggler's, & Mad River ski pass sales 9 a.m. – 5 p.m., Billings lobby.

Sports

Soccer Cats Zonked by Bridgeport

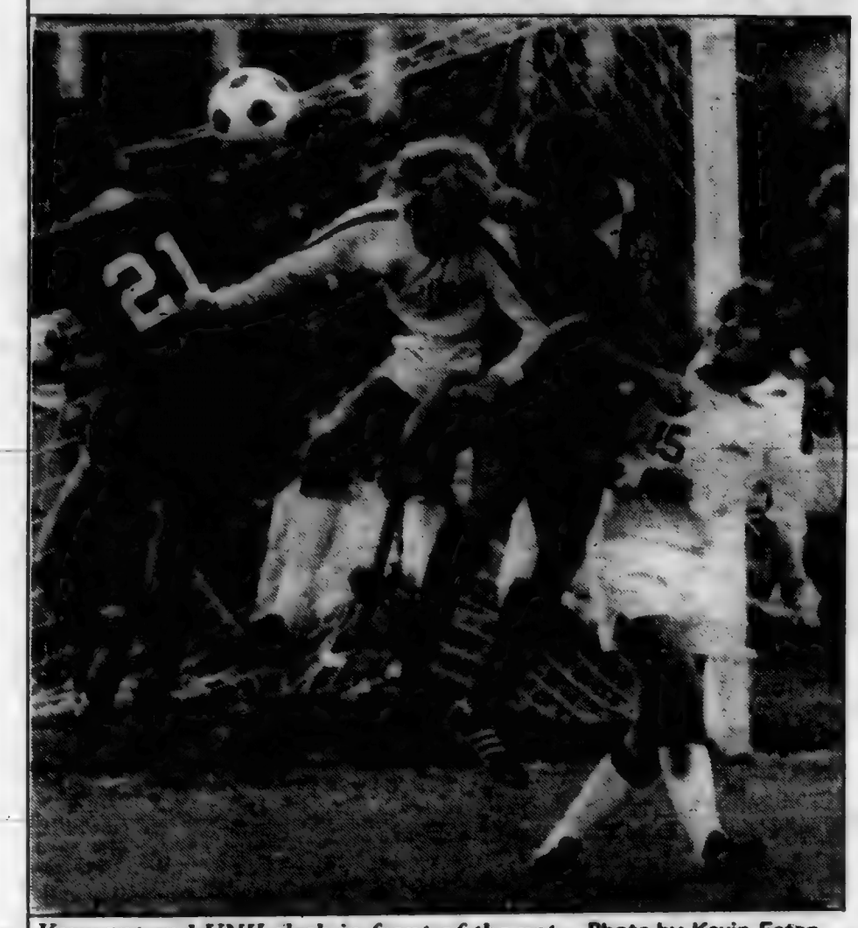
By Steven Larose

On a wet and cold afternoon, the University of Vermont men's soccer team failed to take advantage of numerous scoring opportunities and were shot down by the University of Bridgeport 3-2 in overtime during the Catamount's last home game of the season last Monday.

Vermont went into the contest supporting a 7-1-2 record and had just been ranked fifth in New England behind Dartmouth, UConn, Brown and URI. However, the flying high Cats were quickly brought back down to earth after they blew a one-goal lead twice, had to play with only 10 men for most of the contest, and watched several sure goals bounce off the posts. Bridgeport, on the other hand, used a skilled and persistent front line to chop through Vermont's sluggish defense and send the Cats to the lockerroom as losers for only the second time this year.

The Purple Knights might have cost Vermont a playoff bid in the post-season NCAA tournament, but what is certain is that Vermont will surely feel the sting and irony of the contest for the rest of the season.

Zareh Avakian started things out on the right foot for the hapless Catamounts when he took a headpass from Jett Collins at 36:24 of the first half. Avakian neatly trapped the ball, dribbled through two Bridgeport defenders and beat out the goalie with a curving shot into the right hand corner. After Avakian's sweet goal, things started to go sour for the Catamounts.



Barry Ryan was ejected from the game with 6:12 left in the first half after bumping referee Jim McWilliams while protesting a call. Vermont had to play the remaining regulation time and the ensuing two 10-minute overtime periods with a man down, and Bridgeport acting like a bomb that might explode at any minute.

Bridgeport was awarded a penalty kick, but Vermont managed to stave off all Purple Knight attempts for the first half. The Cats missed a golden opportunity to buy a little insurance when Brian Fleming's rebound shot caromed off the goal post.

Vermont's luck ran out in the second half when Bridgeport shifted its attack to a 4-2-4 formation to take advantage of the Catamount deficiency. Previous to Monday's ill-fated effort, Vermont had never allowed more than one goal per game this season, but Bridgeport was able to break through the Cat barricade and score three times before the final horn

Jeff Merrill recovers after a UNH tackle. Photo by Kevin Eaton

Vermont and UNH clash in front of the net Photo by Kevin Eaton

Stone's Goal Boosts Vermont Soccer Over New Hampshire

By Randy Briggs

Sophomore Larry Stone's first half goal lifted the University of Vermont men's soccer team to a 1-0 victory over the University of New Hampshire in the traditional Homecoming soccer game, Saturday afternoon.

Playing before a sun-drenched crowd, the Cats opened the scoring very early and protected a 1-0 lead throughout the remainder of the primarily defensive contest.

Vermont applied early pressure that resulted in the only goal of the contest. At 7:24 of the first half Stone headed a Jeff Merrill throw in from the sidelines into the right corner of the net for the game winner.

Vermont continued to press the UNH defense and Stone nearly came away with two more quick goals. His head shot off a Brad Parker corner kick went wide. Moments later Stone outraced a UNH defender to a Bart Farley punt. His ensuing shot missed the right post by inches.

Vermont's passing was extremely crisp as they controlled the midfield area during much of the first half, denying New Hampshire a chance to test goalie Farley.

Vermont's offense applied so much pressure during the first half that without the fine play of UNH Nigerian fullback Patrick Udeh, the Wildcat's defense would have collapsed and Vermont might have salted away the contest by halftime.

The large number of tripping calls assessed to UNH were an indication of Vermont's ability to consistently beat New Hampshire to the ball.

Vermont outshot UNH 15-4, while also compiling a huge 8-0 edge in corner kicks. Despite the huge statistical advantage, the Cats carried a slim 1-0 lead into the lockerroom at halftime.

The second half was a much different story as New Hampshire came out and took territorial control of the game. Led by their commanding forward Saied Miremade, the Wildcats began to pressure the Vermont defense.

Regardless, UNH only seriously tested UVM goalie Farley once. The threat came midway through the second half when Wildcat halfback Dick Kiernan was robbed of a goal by Farley within twenty feet of the net. Farley had been down on the ground near the far post after stopping a previous shot. He quickly recovered and swatted Kiernan's bid away to preserve the 1-0 Catamount lead.

Cat Cross Country Women Snare N.E. Title

By Tom Phillips

Placing four runners in the top 13, the University of Vermont women's cross country team relied on their substantial depth to power past Harvard and take top honors in the women's New England Cross Country Championships at Holy Cross College Sunday.

The tallies had Vermont first with 55 points, Harvard second with 65, New Hampshire, UMass, and Middlebury in third, fourth and fifth positions with respective point totals of 109, 122, 153.

The Catamount depth was the main factor in the victory as UVM runners claimed two of the top six places. Harvard, in seizing two spots in the first ten, was the only other school who dared to match the Vermont feat. But, even the strong team effort by runner-up Harvard was dwarfed by UVM bunching.

Judi St. Hilaire led the Vermont forces, as she recorded a swift 5,000-meter (3.1 miles) time of 18:11 in finishing fifth overall, just 47 seconds behind the winner. St. Hilaire no sooner crossed the line when teammate Donna Raymond came in, recording a sixth place time of 18:15.

But the St. Hilaire–Raymond tandem was only part of a double-barreled attack Vermont employed in taking top honors. The depth which has carried the UVM women all season came through in a big way in the persons of Amy Bouchard, Anne Schiavone, and Robin Snyder. In placing 11th, 13th, and 20th respectively, Bouchard, Schiavone, and Snyder spoiled the afternoon for all the other schools entered.

Vermont coach Perry Bland analyzed his team's effort by saying, "For the first time this year, we had everybody available without injuries. We've almost come to expect Judi (St. Hilaire) and Donna (Raymond) to be up in front. But if either of them has a bad day, we have to be able to rely on the runners in third through seventh positions. Today, the runners behind Judi and Donna came through, but so did Judi and Donna. So, in the end we came away with a good team race. If everybody pulls through again in the Easterns, we could place pretty high."

The Eastern States championship meet to which Bland alluded is set to occur on Friday – Saturday, November 3-4 at UVM. This meet will feature such stars as Kathy Mills of Penn State and Lynn Jennings of Princeton, along with locally famous runners from Harvard, Hampshire College, and Middlebury. Noteworthy from the Middlebury squad is Karin VonBerg, who raced to the individual crown in the New England Cross-Country Championships. VonBerg, though having won the New Englands handily, retains a watchful eye on UVM's own Judi St. Hilaire. St. Hilaire outsprinted VonBerg once already this season at the Vermont State Meet run just weeks ago.

But before the Catamounts enter the mammoth Eastern Regionals, they will run their final regular season contest of the year. This race, a tri-meet with UMass and UNH, will take place Friday, Oct. 27 at home on Post field.

Judi St. Hilaire leads the pack earlier this year Photo by Huse/IDC

EYE GLASSES

10% OFF WITH STUDENT I.D.

No Appointment Necessary

Eyeglasses Expertly Fitted

Adjusted - Repaired

Sunglasses

OPTICAL CENTER

107 Church Street Burlington 864-7146

PHYSICS/CHEMISTRY/MATH ENGINEERING MAJORS

In the field of energy generation, Nuclear Power is potentially the best alternative to our nation's future needs. If you are a recent college graduate or just approaching graduation in a technical major and have maintained a degree of academic excellence, you may qualify for a rewarding and challenging career in Nuclear Power with unlimited advancement opportunity and unusually attractive benefits including:

- Scholarship of $650/month during senior year
- Starting salary of $15,500, increases to $24,000 in 4 years
- Free medical, dental care
- 30 days paid vacation annually
- 1 year graduate level training in nuclear engineering
- Excellent retirement plan

Ask your Placement Officer to set up an interview with a Navy representative when he visits the campus on:

November 7 & 8, 1978

or contact your Navy representative at (617)223-6216 Collect.

NUCLEAR POWER MANAGER

NAVY OFFICER PROGRAMS

575 Technology Square Cambridge, MA 02139

Make Your Move To A Very Special Backgammon Sale

10% Discount with this Ad

Ebenezer Allen

Gift Shop

Burlington Square Mall 863-4215

The Harlem Globe trotters brought their special brand of basketball magic to Vermont's Patrick Gym on Thursday, Oct. 19th.

To the delight of thousands of area youngsters, showman Geese Osbie clowned with the crowd while his team mates racked up another win to add to their collection of 13,000 plus victories.

Photos by Kevin Eaton and Huse/IDC

Men's Soccer Blanks UNH

Cont. from page 37

At this point of the game the action turned into a sloppy passing and slow-paced affair. The Cats were playing very cautiously in the final stanza and this style of play almost led to their downfall. If not for the consistent defensive play of the fullback Danny Bryant, the Wildcats may have tallied the equilizer in the second half.

UNH's last scoring opportunity came with ten minutes left in the contest. Wildcat halfback Dave Douglas split between two Vermont defensemen and went in alone on Farley. By this time Douglas was too far to the left of the goal to get off a decent shot. Farley came out of the net to cut down the open area and thus denied Douglas the opportunity.

The solid effort of the Vermont defense was the key to victory. Time and time again a UNH offensive thrust was broken up by a Vermont fullback.

Coach Paul Reinhardt was very pleased with the victory. "It's always nice to win at Homecoming." When asked about Vermont's second half showing, Reinhardt added, "Our coverage wasn't tight enough in the second half. This allowed UNH more room to operate."

The shutout posted by Farley was his fourth of the year. It allowed him to lower his goals against average to .50. The win improved Vermont's record to 6-1-3, while Vermont's Yankee Conference tally rose to 2-0-2.

Harvey Captures Win in Racquetball Tourney

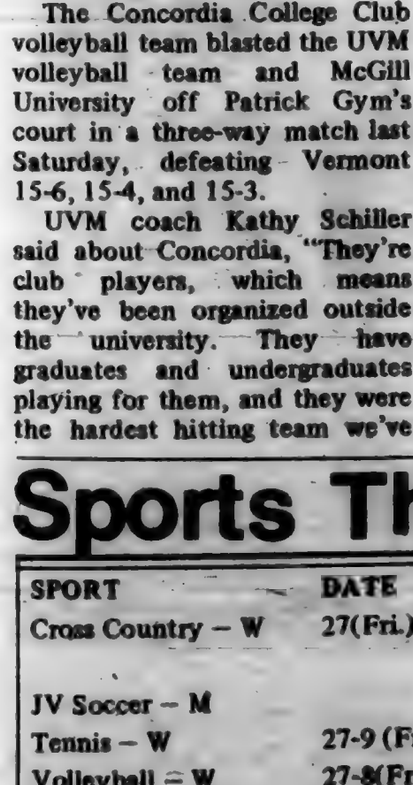
Russ Harvey slugged his way through both a tough semi-final match and the finals to win the open class championships in the second annual Oktoberfest racquetball tourney held at the Court Club last weekend.

Harvey had to battle New Jersey champ Ray Capitanelli in the semi-finals before finally winning with a 11-10 tiebreaker. Harvey then went on to defeat Ron Merik, the Canadian Open champion in the finals, 21-19, 18-21 and 11-9 to take the title and the $250 first place prize.

Bruce Christensen of Manchester, NH finished third and Capitanelli finished in fourth. Harvey, the Canadian junior champion, teamed with Christensen to win the doubles title before a capacity crowd at the Court Club in South Burlington.

In Class B, Lucien Champagne of Worcester, MA defeated Mark McCarthy 21-15, 21-8 and Earl Schneidman beat Richard Chibok for the Class C crowd, 21-5, 11-21, 11-4.

Cindy Alba of Framingham, MA defeated Janet Simon for the women's open division championship. Jennifer Orpen was third, and Jovi Larsen finished fourth. Orpen earned the women's B title with a 21-11, 21-7 win over Nancy Beaudoin. Chick Bigelow of Burlington claimed the senior class title with a 21-1, 21-1 win over Phil Panarella. Phil Panarella, Jr. defeated 11-year-old Todd O'Neil of Burlington for the junior title.



NHL Preview

Who Will Drink from the '79 Cup?

By Nick Witte

The pro hockey season got under way Oct. 11 in what might prove to be a rejuvenated National Hockey League. In recent years the Montreal Canadiens have owned the sport and its prize, the Stanley Cup. However, five months ago, the Boston Bruins gave Montreal a run for their money in the final series, proving that the seemingly invincible Canadiens were at least human. No one could be foolish enough to say that the Canadiens won't be as strong as ever, but other teams should give them a run for the money. There were many personnel changes over the summer and only time can judge whether these deals will pay off. Following is a rundown of the teams and this writer's predictions of how they size up as the NHL enters its 62nd season.

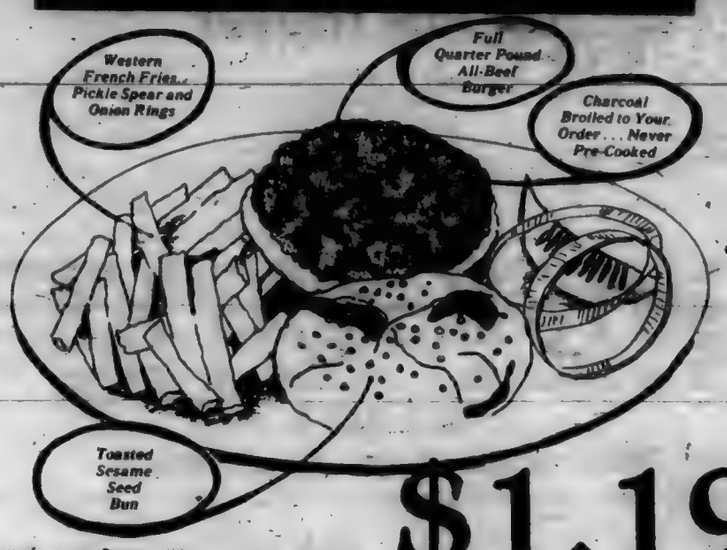
The Smythe Division has the unsavory honor of being the weakest collection of teams in the league, leaving its championship up for grabs each year, this one being no exception. However, the Chicago Black Hawks should win the division with or without Bobby Orr, who will see if his knees can hold up for another season. The St. Louis Blues should take second place despite a lacking offense whose only bright light is ironman Gary Unger. The Colorado Rockies should improve on their last place ranking in '78 with strong goaltending from Doug Farell and Michel Plasse. That leaves Vancouver Canucks who will most likely inhabit the cellar. They have a new coach, Harry Neale from the WHA, but he has been handed young and inexperienced personnel.

Gary Cheevers

In last year's pre-season predictions, everyone picked the New York Islanders to be in the finals with Montreal. This year, the Isles once again look strong, with a tough young team that should win the Patrock Division. Their roster boasts names such as Chico Resch, Bryan Trottier, Mike Bossy, Denis Potvin and Clark Gilles. Even though the Philadelphia Flyers lost their coach and many regulars this summer, they will be an aggressive squad led, as always, by Bobby Clarke. Philly will be right behind the Islanders. Over the summer, the New York Rangers spent a lot of money in gambling that Swedes Ulf Nilsson, Anders Hedberg and new coach Fred Shero will improve their last season's poor showing. Despite this influx of talent, the Rangers should finish third with the Atlanta Flames rounding out the field in fourth. Names like Jean Provsnost and Willi Plett probably won't help an inexperienced Atlanta from finishing last.

The Boston Bruins have been top dog in the Adams Division for two years and despite strong opposition from Buffalo and Toronto, they should remain so. The Bruins' style is teamwork; and with Terry O'Reilly, Jean Ratelle, Brad Park and Gerry Cheevers, it's no wonder they can work together. The Toronto Maple Leafs should place second if they can avoid injury and get the usual outstanding play from Darryl Sittler and Borje Salming. The Buffalo Sabres should be a close third thanks to the always strong French Connection: Gil Perrault, Rene Robert and Richard Martin. The Minnesota North Stars merged this summer with the floundering Cleveland

Brad Park



Barons and together in Minnesota the new franchise will probably finish last. The Stars have a long row to hoe before they take on the top three.

If none of the other predictions prove true, here's one that's foolproof — the Montreal Canadiens will win the Norris Division. Their roster is like an all-star team — Dryden, Lafleur, Robinson, Shutt, Lemaire, Savard, etc. The Detroit Red Wings are an improved team thanks to goalie Rogie Vachon, but should be no threat to Les Habitants. The Los Angeles Kings and the Pittsburgh Penguins share common traits. L.A. has strength offensively, led by Marcel Dionne, but no goaltending since Vachon left. Pittsburgh acquired much talent in Kindrachuk, Bladon and Lonsberry from Philly and an AWOL Gregg Sheppard from Boston. But they too have no goal-tending to speak of and should finish fourth after L.A. The hapless Washington Capitols have no reason for excitement, especially since the resignation of their coach last week.

Put simply, in my view, the four division champions of this year will be the same as last. If you don't agree with this, then you won't like my Stanley Cup opinions either. Montreal will beat Boston again and, like last year, it won't be a sweep. If Boston isn't in the finals, it will be the Islanders. Philadelphia and Toronto are outside chances, but it doesn't really matter, since, come May, Montreal will be drinking from the Cup. Again.

The Biggest Burger Buy In Town...

BONANZA-BURGER

$1.19

So much more at Bonanza. When you order your favorite soft drink or coffee, we'll give you a free refill. You'll dine in a relaxed atmosphere with your order served on a platter, not in a paper bag. We don't like waiting in long lines so if things are really humming, you can place your order, select your table and we'll serve you. Those who wish may enjoy beer or wine with their meal. You always have options at Bonanza, you may prefer a succulent char-broiled steak for as little as $2.69 and don't forget to visit our famous Check Wagon Salad Bar.

Beer and Wine served

Discover

Shelburne Rd.
So. Burlington

BONANZA

Attention Students
Interested in MBA Programs

A representative of the Syracuse University School of Management MBA Program will be on Campus on:

Monday, November 6, 1978
9:00, 9:45, 10:30, 11:15 AM

For further information, and an appointment, please contact your Placement/Career Services office..

Concordia Spikes UVM Volleyball

By Molly McRoberts

The Concordia College Club volleyball team blasted the UVM volleyball team and McGill University off Patrick Gym's court in a three-way match last Saturday, defeating Vermont 15-6, 15-4, and 15-3.

UVM coach Kathy Schiller said about Concordia, "They're club players, which means they've been organized outside the university. They have graduates and undergraduates playing for them, and they were the hardest hitting team we've seen this season."

McGill slipped by Vermont prior to the Concordia—UVM match, defeating the Cats 15-8 in the first game. Vermont blew a 14-7 lead in the second game, McGill taking advantage of a few defensive lapses and poor service, to take the match 16-14. In the third game, UVM lost to McGill 15-12. According to coach Schiller, Chris Bua and co-captain Connie Rockefeller were rocks on the court, making many spectacular net recoveries.

"We've now been playing a month competitively, and our court movement and positional adjustments were much stronger on Saturday. We're at the midpoint of the season, and finally we're playing a steadier, more confident game," coach Schiller added.

Bates hosts the New England Invitational this weekend, which includes UVM, Boston University, Wheaton, Salem, UMaine—Farmington, and Bates. UVM won the tournament last year, and coach Schiller projects a third place finish for Vermont

Does America need more government regulation? Or less?

Your informed opinion is important. That's why we're offering a free booklet that explains the American Economic System. It is interesting and easy to read. Every American ought to know what it says. For a free copy, write: "Economics," Pueblo, Coloredo 81009.

The American Economic System.
It's one of your basic freedoms.

A public service message of The Advertising Council and U.S. Department of Commerce presented by this newspaper.

Sports This Week

| SPORT | DATE | OPPONENT | PLACE – TIME |
|---|---|---|---|
| Cross Country – W | 27(Fri.) | NEW HAMPSHIRE & MASSACHUSETTS | A.T. Post Field BCC – 3:30 p.m. |
| JV Soccer – M | | CASTLETON ST. | Centennial Field – 3:30 p.m. |
| Tennis – W | 27-9 (Fri–Sun) | at EAIAW Regionals | TBA – TBA |
| Volleyball – W | 27-8(Fri-Sat) | at New England Tourney | Lewiston, ME – 7 p.m. |
| Soccer – M | 28(Sat) | at Maine | Orono, ME – 10 a.m. |
| Soccer – W | | at Dartmouth | Hanover, NH – 2 p.m. |
| Swim – W | | PLATTSBURGH ST. | Forbush Pool – 1 p.m. |
| Field Hockey | 28-9(Sat–Sun) | at NECFHA Tournament | Northampton, MA – TBA |
| Soccer – M | Nov 1(Wed) | at Dartmouth | Hanover, NH – 2 p.m. |
| Cross-Country – W | 3-4(Fri-Sat) | EAIAW REGIONALS | A.T. Post Field BCC – TBA |

The Star Thrower

LOREN EISELEY

20% OFF (12.50 – 10.00)

October 27 – Nov. 3 only.

BOOKSTACKS

Pine Street between Main & College

862-8513

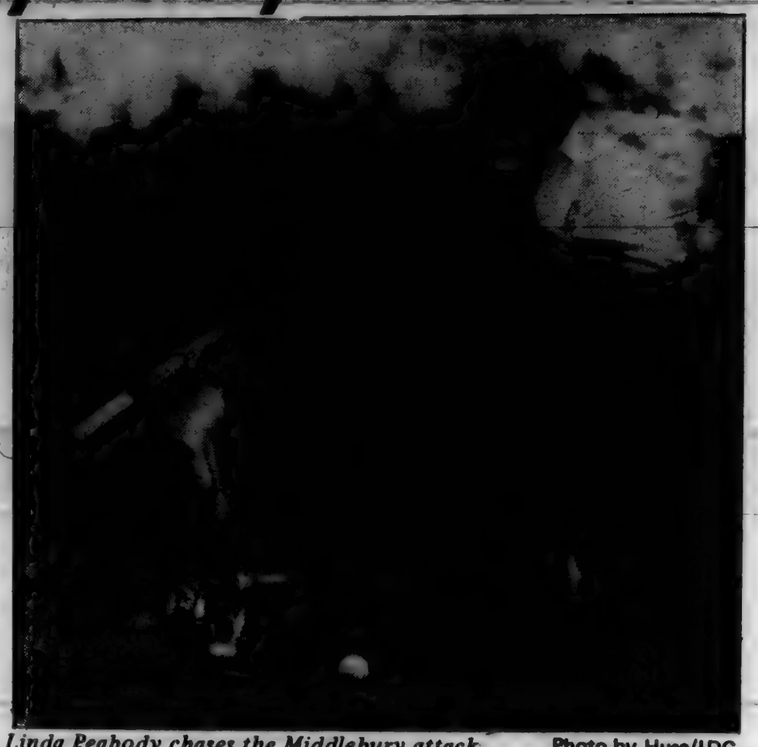
Open Weeknights 9pm. (fri.-9)

Peabody & Perkins Spearhead Field Hockey Victory Vs. Panthers

By Steven Larose

Linda Peabody and Amy Perkins combined for three goals to spearhead the University of Vermont field hockey team's offensive attack that handed Middlebury a 3-0 defeat Friday.

Perkins started the Vermont scoring in the first half as Libby Sharp centered a shot from the right wing and Perkins deflected it in from the left wing. The score remained 1-0 until the second stanza when Jeanne Gaudreau had taken a shot from the circle and Peabody rushed in from her left inner position and poled the ball in.



Gaudreau iced the victory for Vermont late in the second half when Peabody took a shot and Gaudreau rushed in and deflected it.

Vermont had 11 shots on goal to Middlebury's six, while goalie Linda Schiffler had three saves for Vermont. Vermont coach Janice Lange later remarked, "Middlebury was shooting and they weren't pushovers, but they might have been a little tired. The game was pretty close, considering that we were shuffling players around. All of our regular forwards were injured, but the substitutes did an excellent job. I'm surprised it wasn't closer, but we've been able to do a lot of scoring this year."

Plagued by several injuries, Vermont lost to Johnson State 5-2 earlier in the week. "A lot of people were out of position. Johnson was able to score two unanswered goals even though we had control of the ball for most of the game," Coach Lange said. Peabody scored both of Vermont's two goals.

Vermont is now 9-1-3 on the season, with seven shutouts and five games with only one goal scored against them. Vermont now enters the Northampton, Mass. game this weekend.

The Vermont J.V. field hockey team tied Middlebury 1-1 last week, with Debbie Allen scoring for Vermont in the second half. On Saturday, the J.V. team defeated Champlain College 2-0, upping their record to 8-1-2.

Linda Peabody chases the Middlebury attack Photo by Huse/IDC

How would Einstein theorize about O'Keefe?

Although the O'Keefe formula is secret, certain factors in the equation are well known:
1. O'Keefe has a hearty, full-bodied flavor.
2. It is smooth and easy going down.
3. Its head commands respect.

Our theory is that Einstein would have concluded: It's too good to gulp. Relatively speaking, of course.

Imported from Canada by Century Importers, Inc., New York, NY

Racketwomen Grab 16th in N.E.'s

By Rich Chalmers

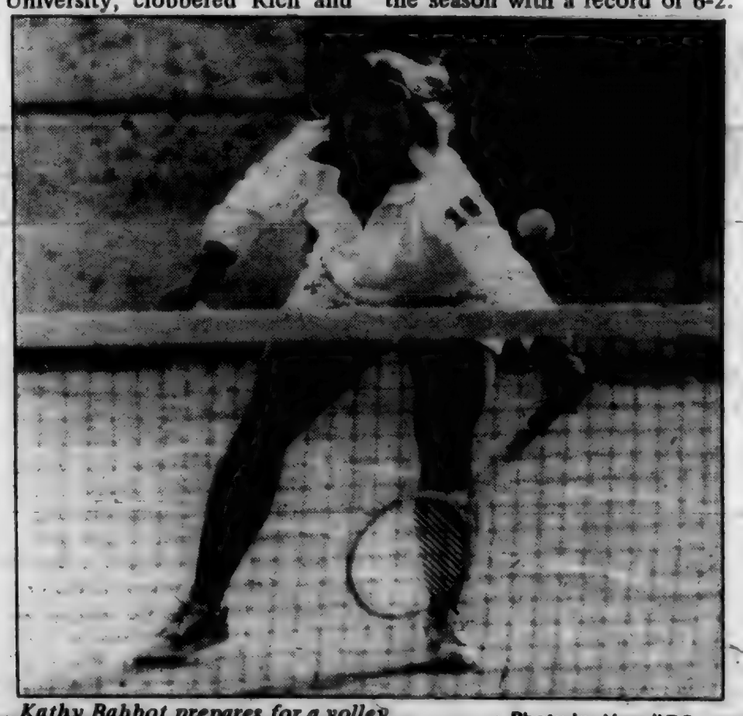
The University of Vermont was forced to send only three instead of four representatives from its women's tennis team to the New England Women's Tennis Tournament, held last weekend and came away in 16th place out of a field of 47 colleges.

The key lay in Carol Khachian's absence because of the flu. "Carol got a pretty good draw," commented Coach Marilyn Chase. "If she had won her first two matches, which she probably would have done, it would have given us four more points. These extra points would have put us in ninth place and if Carol had won more, we would have been even closer to the top teams."

Dartmouth won the tournament with 40 points. Trinity placed second with 36 and Harvard and Tufts tied for third. UVM tallied a total of 12 points.

Pam Hensel defeated Patty O'Conner of Fitchburg 6-3, 4-6, 7-6 in first round singles action. The doubles team of Co-Captains Becky Rich and Kathy Stanton squashed Smith and Phillips from Western N.E. College 6-0, 6-1. Jean Dunbar and Kathy Borda were given byes to the second round.

In the second round tournament third seed Muffy Rodgers from Trinity knocked Hensel out of the running with a powerful 6-1, 6-0 win. Rich and Stanton downed Langley and Regan from Fitchburg 7-5, 6-3. Dunbar and Borda won 4-6, 6-0, 7-5 over a strong team from UMaine at Orono.



Rich and Stanton went on to win in the third round 6-4, 6-2 over Jill Schraeber and Gail Kleiman of Brown in what Coach Chase termed the UVM doubles team's best match of the weekend. Northeastern's Tilly-Grano ended Dunbar-Borda's winning streak 6-2, 2-6, 7-5 to knock them out of the tournament.

Meg Meyer and Katie Ditzer, second seed's from Harvard University, clobbered Rich and Stanton 6-1, 6-1 to end UVM's involvement in the fourth round.

"I'm very pleased," Chase said. "The girls did well considering Carol couldn't play."

On the whole, coach Chase has been very satisfied with this season. "It's the best balanced team we've had in the last three or four years. We'll be losing Rich and Stanton, but we have some excellent freshmen prospects for next year, so we should be in good shape next season."

The Vermont women finished the season with a record of 6-2.

Kathy Babbot prepares for a volley Photo by Huse/IDC

Women's Soccer Squad Blanks Champlain

By Molly McRoberts

Jeanne Hunter set up a corner kick to left wing Tori Ryder who posted a 1-0 lead for the Cats at half-time as the University of Vermont women's soccer team notched another victory, toppling Champlain Regional of Montreal 2-0 at Centennial Field last Saturday.

Andrea Kamerow bounced a pass off a Champlain defender's leg to score the second goal and seal the win for Vermont.

UVM's goalie, Anne Bartlett was called upon to make 10 saves while Champlain's goalie stopped 15 of Vermont's attempts on goal.

The last game of the season will be at Dartmouth on Saturday, Oct. 28th. It has been the best season ever for the women's soccer team and the girls look forward to making next season an undefeated one. There are 10 freshmen on the team and the Cats are only losing two seniors, so next year looks like the perfect opportunity for an outstanding record.

For your education in the better things in life.

weck's

WINE & CHEESE

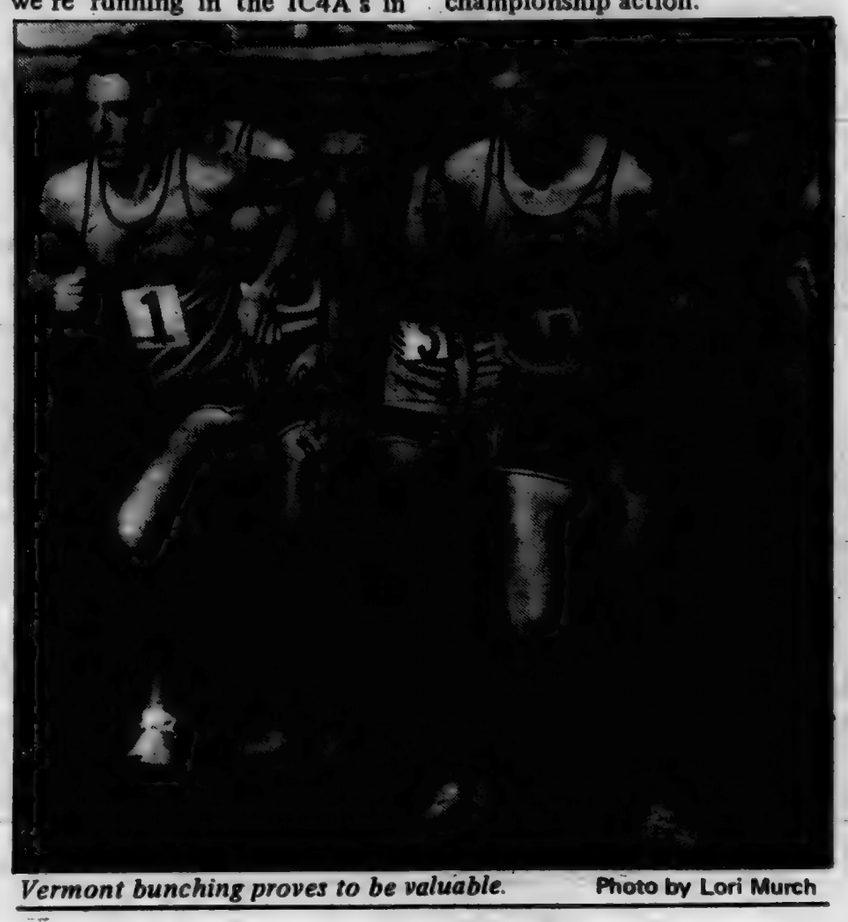
Burlington Square Mall 658-2070

UMass Wins Yankees As Vermont Runningmen Place Fifth

By Tom Phillips

Despite the ominous presence of powerhouse University of Massachusetts, the Vermont men's cross country squad used some improved times and good bunching to defeat both URI and Boston University and finish a respectable fifth in Saturday's Yankee Conference Cross-Country Championships.

Though the Cats were no match for Massachusetts – who was busy wrapping up its ninth straight conference crown with the amazingly low point total of 18 – they gave URI and BU headaches galore. By unveiling a tightly-knit attack that saw only 31 seconds elapse between its first and sixth runners, Vermont bumped off those two teams and even came exceedingly close to nipping UNH. But a surprise victory over UNH – a team that manhandled UVM in an early season meet – was not in the cards on this day. The final team totals for the meet were: UMass – 18, UConn – 48, Maine – 108, UNH – 110, Vermont – 138, URI – 147, and BU – 179.



The winning time of 24:42 was posted by UMass' senior harrier Mike Quinn. Quinn's effort, which was just five seconds short of the five-year-old course record, made him the first runner in fifteen years to win the individual YanCon title in three consecutive seasons. Quinn won the championship race in 1976, '77, and '78.

Kent Karns, in 24th place overall with a 5.0 mile time of 26:21, was the first UVMer to cross the line. Karns' performance, which for him represented a marked improvement over earlier races this season, was the fastest Catamount time (by some 37 seconds) on the home course this season.

Karns' improvement proved to be exemplary of the Vermont runners" efforts, as all of the Cats dropped seconds off their times. Dave Elliott (26th in 26:27), Tom Beatini (28th in 26:35), Lasse Myers (29th in 26:37), Randy "Arkansas" Sightler (31st in 26:42), and Mike Landman (34th in 26:52) all outdid themselves on the rolling Burlington Country Club course.

Coach Bill Nedde was pleased with the improvement in the Catamount times, but he reiterated his desire for the team to improve still more, saying, "We ran reasonably well. But we're running in the IC4A's in New York City this Friday where the competition is much keener. That meet will be a test of whether or not we really can improve. Our bunching is excellent right now. But we still need to move the whole bunch up maybe a half minute or more per mile."

The IC4A meet, which will be run on Friday Oct. 27th in Van Cortlandt Park (Bronx, N.Y.) will be by far the most prestigious meet the Cats will compete in all season. Nationally-ranked teams from Villanova, Providence, UMass, Georgetown, and Harvard usually attend, but it has been rumored that some of these powers will pass up this meet in favor of training for NCAA championship action.

Vermont bunching proves to be valuable. Photo by Lori Murch

Rugby Cats Clobber Clarkson

By Dale Gates

Pete Christman's 80-yard scoring run lifted the University of Vermont rugby team over Clarkson 20-4 last Saturday as Vermont broke a three-game losing streak.

Pete Cataldo opened the scoring effort for the Cats by kicking a penalty kick for three points, as Vermont dominated the game from the beginning to end.

Clarkson penetrated deep into Vermont territory several times but the tough defense held tight to prevent any scoring.

Mike Everett broke away from Clarkson tacklers and handed Christman a slick pass that started his 80-yard scoring run. Pete Cataldo made the extra point kick to raise the score to 9-0.

The UVM scrum took the ball deep into Clarkson territory and Kevin O'Rouke pounded over for another penalty kick to give UVM a 18-0 lead at half-time.

Clarkson put themselves on the scoreboard early in the second half by driving in for four points. UVM dominated the rest of the game, winning most of the scrums and lineouts.

The final score came with one minute remaining as Dale Gates took a pass from Al Park and ran in for four more points.

The victory raises Vermont's record to 3-3. This Saturday UVM plays McGill University at home. Game time is at 1:00 p.m. at Archie Post Field next to Gutterson.

OT Loss to Bridgeport

Cont. from page 37

sounded.

Bridgeport tied the score at 14:36 of the second half when Bruce Brennan fired a shot that hit the crossbar and bounced in over the head of goalie Bart Farley. Vermont's Greg Bowering blocked a Bridgeport shot on an open net, but Dan Bryant was called for holding on a corner kick and Bridgeport was awarded a penalty kick. Farley blocked the ensuing shot with a diving save and the score remained tied at 1-1.

Bridgeport applied offensive thrust and turned Centennial field into a soggy pressure cooker. However, Vermont was able to hold off the Knights and capitalized on one of their few breaks of the afternoon. With 20:33 left in regulation, Bryant slammed a penalty kick into the lower right hand corner of the net to boost the Cats to a 2-1 lead.

It only took Bridgeport three minutes to find the break it needed, when Brennan popped in a rebound shot past Farley, who was caught out of position. Avakian and Bowering both missed scoring chances in the closing minutes of regulation time, as Avakian's head shot went wide and Bowering's indirect kick bounced off the crossbar and was cleared by Bridgeport.

The Catamount's luck did not improve in the overtime portion of the contest. Bryant once again was able to square off one on one with the UB goalie on a penalty shot, but this time Bryant's effort was blocked by the Bridgeport goalie, amidst the protests of the Vermont coaches who argued that the goalie had moved too soon.

The Knights broke the tie and clinched the game with 6:09 left in the second overtime period on an unassisted goal by Egien Scotland. The UB forward raced downfield on a breakaway and Farley, caught with no defensive shield, came out of the net to block the shot. The ball popped up, and Scotland headed it into an open net.

The officiating again came under fire from coaches, players and fans alike as McWilliams handed out yellow card warnings to the Vermont bench and several individual players. Adding to the gloomy outlook was the number of missed opportunities and the fact that Vermont had played for 71 minutes with a man missing, which is a herculean feat for any soccer team. Several players indicated that Bridgeport couldn't help but win; if you give a team long enough they'll score.

Vermont now takes their 7-2-2 record on the road for the last four games of the season. Vermont challenges Maine this Saturday at Orono and then makes stops at Dartmouth, Hartwick and Connecticut. If Vermont's playoff hopes are to stay alive, the Cats need to beat Dartmouth and UConn, the two New England leaders and formidable opponents.

Contributing Staff

NEWS: Sarah Bailey, Stacey Cushner, Mary Dixon, Morris Earle, Jr., Rich Hyland, Brooke Laffan
FEATURES: Barry Gustin, Nelson Hockert-Lotz
SPORTS: Randy Briggs, Rob Smith, Hart VanDerburg, Molly McRoberts, Tom Phillips, Lori Murch, Tom Cianciolo, Josh Reynolds, Dale Gates
ARTS: Diana Greene, Tom Nuccio, Peter Wentworth, Judie Yuill, Ardith Denzer, Thomas Campbell, Scott Hammer, Pablo Conrad, Tom Daniels
ADVERTISING: Nat Foote, Dinah Minot, Anne Stires
PHOTOGRAPHY: Rick Ames, Debbie Wolk, Don Cunningham, Jim Otto, Bill Menning, Joe Curcio, Carolyn Holahan, Phil Nanas, Liz Dunn, Rob Swanson, Karen E. Salzman, Mitch Sprung, Mike Simays
LAYOUT & GRAPHICS: Jim Otto, Lauren-Glen Davitian, Becky Gale, Brooke Freeman, Rachael Love, Art Gorr, Sally Hand, Laura Benjamin, Sarah Paily, Lisa Eaton, Carol Hills, Amy Lowry, Mellisa Ionta, Robert Giles, Mike Foss, Josh Reynolds, Jean Goldstein, Angelo Segarra, Liz Hemingway.
TYPIST: Libbet Cox, Karen Salzman
TYPESETTER: Sue Ball
PMT's: Jose Morelli

Vermont Cynic
University of Vermont
Burlington, VT 05401

Printed by
Upper Valley Press
Bradford, Vermont

MAD RIVER GLEN

SEASON SKI PASS for VERMONT STUDENTS

NOW $115

The VERMONT STUDENT PASS is good for unlimited skiing from Monday to Friday except Dec. 25 to 29, 1978 & Feb. 19, 1979.

ADDITIONALLY, holders of the Vermont Pass may purchase a daily Weekend or Holiday ticket for $10.00 if they want to ski on those days as well.

PASS IS NOT REFUNDABLE!

4 Chair Lifts • Trails of all Categories
Cafeteria • General Stark's Pub
Snowmaking

Rates incl. 3% Vt. Sales Tax

DAILY RATES:

| | ADULTS |
|---|---|
| Weekdays | 12.00 |
| Reg. Weekends | 15.00 |
| Holidays & Holiday Weeks | 16.00 |

Subject to change without notice

MAD RIVER GLEN
Waitsfield, Vt. 05673
Tel: 496-3551

SNOW'S A COMING

SKI SALE

At both Alpine Shops

Downhill Ski Package

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Rossignol Challenger Skis | $130.00 | $149.95 Package Price |
| Salomon 222 Binding with Brake | $59.95 | |
| Barrecrafter Poles | $8.00 | |
| Mounting | $10.00 | |
| Engraving | $5.00 | reg. $212.95 |

Cross Country Ski Package

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Trak Fishcale Skis | $75.00 | $99.95 Package Price |
| Trak Sierra Boots | $28.75 | |
| Trak Tonkin Poles | $7.95 | |
| Trak Delrin Binding | $6.95 | |
| Mounting | $5.00 | reg. $123.65 |

SALE EQUIPMENT

Skis by : Rossignol, Kneissl, Head, K2, Volkl, Fischer, Yamaha, Olin, Hexcel

Cross Country : Trak, Fischer, Latu, Jarvinen

Boots by : Nordica, Hanson, Dolomite, Lange, Raichle, Technica, Garmont

Up to 40% OFF

Groups of : Ski Parkas Ski Suits Warm-up PANTS

Up to 50% OFF

Trade-ins

We accept your used skis and boots in trade towards new equipment at regular prices and our allowances are generous. Smuggler's Notch and Bolton Valley Season Passes and Bash Badges are available at the Alpine Shops every Saturday.

ALPINE SHOP

Williston Road So. Burlington

OPEN DAILY 9 A.M. — 9 P.M.

Corner of So. Winooski and Cherry Downtown Burlington

Sports Scene

The Snap! Crackle! Pop! Of Football Brutality

By Rob Smith

This lazy, fall Sunday after a busy Oktoberfest weekend finds me in my typical Sunday afternoon position: beer in hand, feet on the table and eyes glued to the tube hoping that my N.Y. Giants can continue their superlative football of recent weeks. As the Giants fight to an early half-time lead, the second game begins. It's called who's going to make the star-studded injured reserve list this week. Crack! Giant safety Beadsley Reese crashes into three pulling linemen and breaks his leg. Snap! Redskin cornerback Lamar Parrish gets trampled on by both New York and Washington linemen while helping to gang tackle Giant back Doug Kotar. The result — a broken left arm.

Reese and Parrish thus become two more names on the injured reserve (those players who are out of action indefinitely because of injuries) which numbers over 130 players so far this year. If the trend continues, over 300 players could be on the injured reserve by the end of the season. This would represent the largest number of seriously injured players ever in an NFL season.

This increase in football injuries comes at a time when players, coaches, and league officials are finally realizing that professional football has reached the point where sheer brutality is often over-shadowing the physical skills, speed and finesse exhibited by the athletes each Sunday. High priced players, especially quarterbacks, are dropping each week like autumn leaves in an October rain and little is being done to alleviate the situation. Simply stated, the problem is that no one knows how to determine what types of physical contact are both legal and necessary to keep the game both healthy for those playing and enjoyable for those patrons who pay to see the players. To prevent pro football from becoming a sport where physical survival, not execution and talent, determines who makes the playoffs, the following problems must be addressed:

Helmets — A defender's helmet, when bored into an opponent's body, becomes a dangerous battering ram capable of smashing ribs, knees, backs and shoulders beyond repair. The need for a helmet which adequately protects its owner, while at the same time cushioning the impact it has on those getting hit is desperately needed.

Gang Tackling — Football's coaches are the ones to put the blame on here. For years they've used the euphemism "pursuit" for what really is unnecessary gang tackling, by encouraging their players to be overly aggressive, and get into the act at all times. Now, aggressiveness in football is fine, but do teams always need three or four 250 pound linemen to bring down one 205 pound back? Advocating this type of play represents a lack of responsibility towards athletes on the part of coaches.

Late Hits, Forearm Blows and Assorted Cheap Shots — Even though officials have made a concerned effort at penalizing players for late hits, far too much of it still goes on without notice from the officials. Once again, the coaches are to blame for this unnecessary roughness, since many players have it instilled in them that this additional hit is a sign of "good second effort."

Forearm blows to the head and neck continue to be one of the most dangerous weapons linemen shell out as ammunition to "waste" their opponents. When taped up with thick pads or fiberglass protectors, a lineman's forearms turn into mini-clubs which when used on opposing linemen result in one of the more violent forms of blocking. Pro football players like to call this "intimidation" which they say is a part of the game. Assault is a more appropriate term for such malicious behavior.

Clothesline tackling, blindside hits and chop blocks are three other unnecessary methods of contact vividly present in the NFL today. Of the three, chop blocking or cutting down a player by hitting him low and around the knees and ankles, a frequent cause of damaging leg injuries, has shortened the careers of many fine players (e.g. Gayle Sayers, Larry Brown, Calvin Hill), and continues to be the one injury most feared by players and coaches alike. Elimination of the chop block, along with all downfield blocking below the waist, would most likely reduce the number of serious knee injuries.

Davey Nelson, secretary of the NCAA Rules Committee, stated in a recent article in Sports Illustrated on football brutality, "The basic problem of football today is not to see if you can win within the rules, but to see how much you can get away with to help win." Only with an improvement in player responsibility towards each other, changes in coaching philosophy to discourage intentional violence, and a complete rewriting of the rules so as to strictly penalize against unnecessary physical abuse, will the brutality present in the NFL today be replaced by the clean physical hitting football's founders desired. Until this happens, don't be surprised if you hear of more players falling in the shadow of Darryl Stingley.

Sports Profile

Tori Ryder:
Spirit & Skill on the Women's Soccer Squad

By Rich Chalmers

Quickness, spirit and a strong left foot have given Tori Ryder an important place on the University of Vermont women's very successful soccer team this season.

Tallying a total of eight goals and seven assists, Ryder, along with teammate Debbie O'Connor, leads the team's offensive punch.

Ryder started her soccer career six years ago at the Taft School in Watertown, Conn. Taft was, at the time, putting out characteristically well-skilled and effective squads and the ones Ryder played on were no exception. Ryder attributes much of her present skill to the talented coaching of Tafts women's soccer coach Rusty Davis as well as UVM's women's coach Mary Ellen Rathbone.

Ryder has watched her soccer skills improving steadily since she began as a sophomore in high school. "My first year was pretty basic, but I've been improving a lot. Last year I wasn't satisfied. Things weren't going too well for me on the field, but this year I feel much better. My left foot is a lot stronger now; before, I couldn't use it as well. Coach Rathbone has done a lot for me. She really knows what she's doing."

"Her skill in ball handling has improved a lot," added coach Rathbone. "Her crosses and positioning have really gotten better."

"Tori's one of the leaders on the team. She's a good athlete, a good person and is looked up to by everyone on the team."

— Coach Mary Ellen Rathbone

Both Ryder and Rathbone stressed the importance of a strong left foot in the left wing position. "Not many people are strong on that side," explained Ryder, "so that gives me an advantage." "It definitely makes a difference," Rathbone added. "Good crosses have to be done with the left foot. Tori has really disciplined herself on how to approach the ball. That's hard to do."

Ryder commented about the team, saying that she was very satisfied with this year's squad. "We're doing pretty well. We have a lot of depth and the subs are really playing well out there."

When asked what her personal and the team's best performances were this season, Ryder named UVM's game against Brown on Oct. 14th as one of the squad's best. "They beat us last year in double overtime," said Ryder. "But we have gotten a lot better since then and we won this year 2-0, in drenching rain. It was a well-played game."

Ryder said her best performance came against Castleton on Oct. 2nd at home. During that game she tallied two goals and two assists. "I was really up for that game," Ryder reflected.

De-emphasis of women's sports is a serious problem just beginning to head in the right direction. "It's getting better," Ryder answered when asked if the problem affected her and her ability to play well. "We just got brand new uniforms and the whole works. We played at Centennial Field last Saturday and it was a real psych with the stands there. We're getting more attention, but there is still a long way to go."

Ryder was on the injured list for ten days earlier this season after suffering a sprained left ankle and a bad bone bruise. She didn't start against Champlain Regional last Saturday but played during the second half and scored two goals. "Before my sprain," Ryder related, "I was playing the best that I have all season. The 10 day rest made me want to get out there and play. I really missed it."

Ryder plans to stay at UVM for her last two years of college and will probably be on the women's soccer roster each season.

Next year looks to be a good one for the Catamount women. The combination of a young, talented squad this year with the addition of new recruits should create another strong team for 1979.

Ryder's importance is obvious to anyone who has watched the team in action. "Tori's one of the leaders on the team," said Rathbone. "She takes what she does very seriously and responds to coaching well. She's a good athlete, a good person, and is looked up to by everyone on the team."

HANNIBUL'S.
A lot of things...
to a lot of people.

OCTOBER
SPECIALS

Sunday
3-Closing
25c Off ALL Drinks

Monday
3-1
25c Beers

WEDNESDAY
LADIES NIGHT 60c All Drinks

Friday
4-7
4 Drafts for $1.00

Saturday
3-Closing
25c Off ALL Drinks

EVERYDAY
3-7 25c Off ALL Drinks

HANNIBUL'S
152 CHURCH ST.

"On Top Of Church Street"

Hawks Point

Never A Cover Charge

68 Church St.

"Just Jazz" Quintet
Featuring songs by Sam Armstrong
Fri. & Sat. Night

Mon. night football on the 8-foot screen

Walk into our store . . .
and you'll know what we're all about

FRYE

LEATHER

FRYE boots & clogs, vests, belts, handbags, wallets and more. . . all handcrafted and of the finest quality available in Burlington

SUNDANCE
a heritage of American Crafts
Church St.

The Airmaster

INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT
SOUTH BURLINGTON, VERMONT 05401
PHONE (802) 862-2247
(802) 862-4186

DISCOVER YOURSELF IN THE SKY...

LEARN TO FLY !

DON'T MISS THESE OPPO[illegible]TIES:

[illegible]son ONLY $10

Scenic Flights [illegible] Flights Charter Flights

National Sports Briefs

Pete Rose a Yankee???

Pete Rose has listed eight teams to which he would consider being a player for the 1979 season. Rose, whose relations with the Reds are in a dismal state, commented "there are only certain teams on which my full worth would be realized." He added that he hoped to play on an offensive-minded, contending team.

The Yankees, Dodgers, Phillies, Padres, Red Sox, Angels, Royals and Rangers were mentioned as possibilities by Rose. He listed them in alphabetical order. With respect to Cincinnati, Rose stated it would take "a miracle" for him to go back to the Reds for the 1979 season.

Waitz Sets World Record in N.Y.

Bill Rodgers won his third consecutive New York Marathon Sunday with little competition during the final 11 miles of the race, capturing the title in 2:12.11.6 over second place Ian Thompson (2:14.11.0). It was Rodgers' 50th win in 55 races.

Grete Waitz stole the show, shocking the spectators and 11,218 entries with a world record time of 2:32.30 for the 26-mile course. Waitz, a 25-year-old school teacher from Oslo, had never run a race longer than 10 miles. "I wanted to try to run a marathon," she explained. "So many women are doing it. It's my first time in this country. I think it's fantastic."

Wadkinses Take Tournies

Bobby Wadkins collected $36,000 Sunday as he sank a three-foot birdie putt on the first playoff hole against Gil Morgan and Bernard Gallacher to win first place honors in the European Open Golf Championship. "It's the biggest win of my career," admitted Wadkins.

Lanny Wadkins won the $57,000 Garden State PGA title at Melbourne Australia yesterday with a three-under-par 69 in his final round. Australian Bob Shearer landed in second with a 73. Tournament boss Doug Mason had complained that Wadkins didn't put out in the first round (Wadkins shot a 75). This upset Wadkins to the extent that, battling hay fever, he scorched off rounds of 68, 69 and 69 to take the title. "To me, what Mr. Mason did was an insult to my integrity," Wadkins explained after the tournament.

McGee Gets a Cigar

The New England Patriots tackled the Miami Dolphins 33-24 last Sunday as Patriot defensive end Tony McGee and the rest of the New England defensive unit put out key performances.

After the game, Miami offensive tackle Mike Current went into the Patriot dressing room and gave McGee a cigar. "I was saving this for myself after the game," said Current, "but you're the guy who deserves it. You had a great game." It was Current's job as right tackle to stop McGee's powerful pass rushes. McGee sacked Miami quarterback Bob Griese twice at crucial times in the second half.

Saints Buck Rams 10-3

The New Orleans Saints stunned the undefeated Los Angeles Rams with a touchdown late in the fourth quarter to win the game 10-3 and shove the Rams from the ranks of the unbeaten. Saints quarterback Archie Manning connected on a pass to Tony Galbreath who ran into the end zone for the 19-yard T.D. play with 2:28 remaining in the game. The Saints scored the game's only touchdown on a 69-yard drive started by an Eric Felton interception of a yazzle-dazzle pass attempt by Ram's punter Glen Walker. New Orleans, now 4-4, was dominated most of the game by the now 7-1 Rams. Both teams scored their field goals in the second quarter.

Tiant to join Free Agent List

Boston Red Sox pitching great Louis Tiant wants his name placed on the free agent list for the Major League baseball draft which begins November 3rd.

Tiant, 37, considers himself still a valuable pitcher and will await the highest bidder, come November. The former Red Sox pitcher has a 204–148 lifetime record with a 122–81 record on the Boston roster. Tiant would like the security of a multi-season contract.

L.A. to Host '84 Olympic Games

Los Angeles was officially signed as the site for the 1984 Olympic games last Friday. The signing ended a year-long period of strain and doubt as to whether Los Angeles and the International Olympic Committee could protect the city from the characteristic huge debts acquired by Olympic hosts. This will be the first time since 1932 that the Olympics have been in the U.S. L.A. played host to the international sports event at that time as well. Mayor Tom Bradley hoped L.A. "will be able to put on games that are a matter of pride to the Olympic movement and to the people of our city and country." The Mayor hopes, "The games are going to make money" and save Los Angeles from the huge debts other hosts have had to deal with in the past.

"BACK WHEN I WAS IN SCHOOL, I COULD'VE USED A LESS FILLING BEER. ON WEEKDAYS I CARRIED 21 CREDITS. ON WEEKENDS I CARRIED DEFENSIVE TACKLES, LINEBACKERS AND WEAK STRONG SAFETIES."

Matt Snell
Former All-Pro Fullback

ROM MILLER.
ALWAYS WANTED
R AND LESS.

©1978 Miller Brewing Co., Milwaukee, Wis.

RANDOM NOTES

No Smoking

Interested in working on a campus-wide no-smoking campaign? There will be a planning and learning meeting Thursday Oct. 26, 7:30 p.m. in the Robinson Hall Lounge. Call Ellen Greenberg at ext. 3086 for information.

Boxer Shorts

The Student Activities Committee of the Newman Center invites everyone in UVM community to a BoxerShorts Halloween Party. It will be held on Sunday, Oct. 29 from 8:30 – 12:00 in the lobby. Beer, wine and other refreshments will be served.

Gay Switch-board

The UVM Gay Student Union has announced the hours for the Gay Switchboard. The switchboard will operate Monday through Friday from 7–9 p.m. while UVM is in session. The switchboard exists to provide the community an opportunity to air feelings, vent emotions and/or frustrations, ask questions, arrange Speaker's Bureaus, referrals, support base for gay people or just to chat. All calls are confidential. The GSU welcomes all calls.

Ski Swap

WDW Complex is sponsoring a Ski Swap Saturday, November 4, 1978 from 12 p.m. to 5 p.m. Bring your old skis, boots, poles, skates, winter apparel, etc. to be sold by WDW in its main lounge. Items may be brought to be sold from 8 a.m. to 11 a.m. on November 4th only. A 10% commission charge will be taken off all items sold by us for you.

Local ski shops may also become involved, so come on over just to take a look and browse for awhile.

For further information call WDW main desk after 4 p.m. (656-2520).

Housing Contracts

Requests for unqualified contract release for the spring semester will be accepted beginning November 7. The number of students released from their contracts will be limited. Requests will be taken on a first-come basis. All requests must be directed in person to Mrs. Shirley Fortier in the Office of Residential Life, 25 Colchester Avenue (Mansfield House). No requests will be accepted prior to November 7. Students released from contracts will be charged a $50 penalty fee.

Students with legitimate reasons for contract breakage as identified in the housing contract (withdrawal from the University, completion of a degree program, marriage, leaves of absence, or medical reasons) may request to be released from their contracts without penalty, with the permission of their Area Coordinator.

Basketball Managers

We still need people. If you qualify, work-study is available. If you don't, we still need managers. Meet new people, get involved with good division I basketball. For details, call Gordon Smith, 863-9881.

Career Hunting?

Employment "On-Campus" Interviews – Week of November 6-10. Sign-up for these interviews on Oct. 30, 31, Nov. 1.

Combustion Engineering, Inc., Windsor, CT. Seeks BS/MS, all engineering majors. Positions in Design, Research & Development, Analysis & Field Serv., Construction & Sales Engineering.

Lord & Taylor, New York City. Seeks graduating students with a strong interest in a retailing career. L.A., Bus. areas. Offers an Executive Training Program.

Syracuse University, School of Management.

Anthro-pology Presents

The UVM Anthropology Club will present "The Winooski Site: A Prehistoric Habitation Site of the Middle Woodland Era," a slide-lecture presentation on Sunday, October 29 at 8:00 p.m. in Williams Hall, room 301. Jim Petersen will speak on excavations conducted at the Winooski site by the UVM Department of Anthropology over the 1978 field season. The public is cordially invited to attend this free program.

Women's Squash

There will be an organizational meeting of the Women's Squash Club on Monday, October 30th at 4:00 p.m. in Rm 118 of Patrick Gym. We urge experienced and beginning players alike to come to learn and to play squash. This meeting is very important – so plan to be there!

Law Oppor-tunities

Students interested in a career in law will have an opportunity on Friday, October 27, to meet with several persons who have first hand knowledge of what lawyers do, what happens in law school, and how one enters law school.

On Friday afternoon, from 3:00 until 5:00, there will be a panel discussion at the North Lounge of the Billings Student Center. Among those participating on the panel will be Dean Thomas Debovois of the Vermont Law School, Assistant Dean Ann Lukingbeal of Cornell University's Law School, and UVM Counsel Paul Sutherland.

For juniors, seniors, and alumni who are applying for admission to law school this year or next, the members of the panel will be available for conversation and discussion at the Fireplace Lounge of the Living Learning Center at 7:30 on Friday evening, October 27. Also present at that time will be Judge Thomas Hayes of the Vermont Superior Court.

Logo Contest

The Billings Center Governing Board is sponsoring a logo contest. There will be a $20 first prize. Please leave all entries with name and address at the Billings Center Governing Board Desk, 3rd Floor Billings.

Women's Poetry

Any woman who is interested in reading her own poetry, or poetry by another woman, is invited to attend a Poetry Reading Workshop on Monday, October 30 at 4:00 at the Women's Referral Center, 3rd floor Billings Balcony. Men are also invited but the focus will be on women's poetry. It will be a very informal time for women to share their poetry.

Truman Scholarship

The Harry S. Truman Scholarship Foundation is seeking nominations for scholarship awards. These scholarships are awarded on the basis of merit to students who will be juniors in the 1979-80 academic year and who have outstanding potential for leadership in government. One scholarship is awarded yearly to a nominee in each of the fifty states and covers expenses for tuition, fees, books, and room and board, up to a maximum of $5,000 annually. This is renewable for up to four years. To be eligible, a student must: (1) be enrolled as a matriculated student; (2) be a junior pursuing a bachelor's degree as a full-time student during the 1979-80 academic year; (3) have a grade point average of at least 3.0 and be in the upper fourth of his/her class; (4) be a U.S. citizen; (5) have selected an undergraduate field of study that will permit admission to a graduate program leading to a career in government.

To be considered, a student must be nominated by the University. The University is permitted two nominations provided the two nominees do not reside in the same state. Nominees need not be residents of Vermont. The procedures leading to nomination involve a considerable amount of time and effort on the part of the student. For further information and nominating materials, contact one of the below before October 25, 1978: Samuel Hand, Weeza Matthias, History Department; James Pacy, Helen Stephenson, Political Science Department.

Comic Opera Overtures

Comic Opera Overtures, Arias and Duets from Rossini's "The Barber of Seville" and Donizetti's "Don Pasquale" will be presented in English, with staging by Vermont Recital Associates at the Four Winds Gallery in Ferrisburgh on Sunday, October 29 at 3 p.m. Performers will include Donna Grey, soprano; John Baird, baritone; Catherine Baird, pianist; with guest pianist Joyce Flanagan. Admission $3.50, $2.50 seniors and students.

Mail/ Marketing

The third major advertising method, direct mail, will be introduced to 30 college senior marketing and advertising students at the 1978 Senior Collegiate Institute on Direct Response Marketing to be held in Northbrook, IL on Dec. 3-8, 1978.

The Institute is conducted twice a year by the Direct Mail/Marketing Educational Foundation, Inc. who presents full-tuition scholarships to 30 students selected from a field of several hundred in a highly competitive process.

Applicants must be nominated and/or recommended by their college or university professors who are asked by the Foundation to select only top students with outstanding academic achievements in advertising, marketing and/or related courses.

Deadline for receipt of applications for this Institute by the Direct Mail/Marketing Educational Foundation, Inc. (DMEF) is Nov. 2. The next Institute will be held in April, 1979, at a site to be determined. Interested students should ask their professors for application forms or telephone or write DMEF at 6 East 43rd Street, N.Y. 10017 (212) 689-4977.

Stimulation

For stimulating lectures on current topics, updates on research at the University, and just plain fun, join Chittenden County Alumni and Parents and UVM community members for the fall edition of the Chittenden County Lecture Series.

Dr. Ronald Steffenhagen, Associate Professor of Sociology at the University of Vermont, will speak on Thursday, November 2, at 7:30 p.m. in the Rowell Hall, Room 111. He will discuss the therapeutic effects of hypnosis in a lecture entitled The Use of Hypnosis in the Treatment of Behavioral Problems.

All alumni, parents, students, and community members are welcome. For more information, please contact the Alumni Office, 86 South Williams Street, 656-2010.

---

Random Note Deadline is Monday at noon prior to publication.

CLASSIFIED ADS

(THEY'RE FREE!)

PEOPLE WANTED

Bass player & drummer needed. Into Steely Dan, Little Feat, Wonder, Dead, blues/funk/rock. Call 864-6530 evenings or 655-0691 anytime.

Attractive lady would like to marry a man 25-35. Call Donna at 863-9803 Friday, Saturday, or Sunday 3:00–3:30 p.m. only.

Wanted: Interested, concerned students to sit on the Academic Honesty Panel. This involves a limited time commitment, acting as an impartial juror-type person in cases involving academic honesty. To apply pick up a form in the S.A. office, and have it filled out and turned in by October 27.

Shipping clerk needed, $2.85/hr. Flexible 5-10 hours per week. Experience preferred. This is more interesting than it appears – call & check it out! 863-3548 (within walking distance from Waterman).

Alpine racing coach: experienced coach or ex-racer wanted weekends and holidays to work with 11 to 13 yr. old junior racers. Salary, season's pass, expenses. Contact Dave Galusha, Jay Peak, VT 05859, 988-2611.

OUTDOOR EQUIPMENT

Small Fryes – Ladies size 4, good condition, $25. Call Mahvin at 864-6530 evenings.

Dolomite GTS boots size 9, 1977 model used only a few times $100, list $155. Lange pro boots size 9 perfect condition, $25. Call Ken 863-5966.

Skis – pair of Rossignol 185 cm. Solomon 404 bindings, good condition, $100. Call Susan, 863-2864.

10-speed bike – Japanese Lug construction frame, Sun Tour VG derailleur, diacompe brakes, bookrack, light, lock. Excellent condition, Call 658-4960 after 5 p.m. Keep trying!

For sale – 1 pr. women's vibran sole hiking boots, worn only one season. Size 8½–9 fairly wide. Make an offer. Call Debbie A., 863-4060.

For sale – Lange Bansher size 7½ 77 model. Used a handful of times. Also I lost a green Climb High (I think) pack with my transcript and other papers in it. If you found it, please look me up. Pat 864-5556.

Skis for sale – Kniessl blue stars, 190 cm, never used. Call 862-4275.

For sale – Soloman 555 (gold) bindings, $50. Call Jack, 863-5219.

MUSIC

For sale: bass amp, ampeg B15-N in excellent condition. $200. Call Ken, 863-5966.

For sale – Technics SA-300, newest model, 35 watt stereo receiver. Factory unpacked, barely used condition. Price negotiable. Call Ken 317 Christie, x2194.

Got a used musical instrument gathering dust? We pay cash for used instruments (guitars, amps, drums, drum sets, band instruments). Just give us a call, Presto Music Co., Guptil Rd., Waterbury, Vt. Convenient Burlington phone 864-0767.

Used musical instruments needed: we buy, sell, trade guitars, amps, drum kits, drum sets, band instruments (saxophones, trombones, flutes, clarinets, etc.) Bring your instrument to Presto Music Co., Guptil Road, Waterbury, Vt. for cash, trade-in or repair. Looking for a new guitar, amp, drum, band instrument or piano? – we give a 30% discount. Use our convenient Burlington phone – call 864-0767.

Guitars and amps for sale – new, used. Good bargains. Sell, trade, buy. Consignment sales. Acoustic & electric guitars. Stay awhile, play awhile in our unique guitar parlor. This week's special: Fender Telecaster, $225. Green Mountain Guitars, 65 George St. (near post office). 864-9232. Weekdays 4-8. Saturdays 10-4. Or by appointment.

For sale: reasonably priced. Marantz 240 power amp, 125 watts rms/channel. Realistic 23 channel CB radio with slide mount and antennae. Call 655-1400 after 5:00.

For sale – Gemeinhardt flute solid silver head joint, closed hole, $150. Call 862-0769.

MISCELLANEOUS

The George Bishop Lane Series has openings for work-study students as stage crew for its presentations. There are openings for skilled backstage people, as well as un-skilled positions for which the only requirement is a strong back and a willing mind. Flexibility of work schedule is assumed for this interesting work. Contact Andrew Mack, Production Manager, at 656-4455.

Found: hand knit wool hat by 235 Marsh Life Science. If it is yours, contact 863-4535.

Tan polyguard jacket, very warm, men's small size, worn once. Fifty dollars or best offer. Call Wendy x4084.

ROOMMATES/APARTMENTS

Female roommate wanted for a 2-bedroom apt. The place is nice, already furnished and between school and downtown. Should be less than $150. Call 862-4219.

Ruth & Jeanie have a room for rent on Brookes Ave, 863-3306.

Broadening our horizens: looking for 2 bedroom apartment, walking distance from UVM campus. Starting December or January. Call Marcy 864-5856 or Cathy 656-3084. Preferably after 9 p.m. Keep trying, be persistant.

Room for rent. Available Jan. 1, very close to campus, $85/month includes all utilities. Females only. Please call Nina, 862-7362.

Female roommate needed for sunny furnished apartment for January or as soon as possible. One block from campus. Call 863-6652.

100-year-old 9 room house with modern appliances & 2 wood stoves. 15 miles away from campus in Underhill. Pets welcome. Available now, rent starts Nov. 1. Call 899-3128 after 6 or 656-3823. Ask for Jan.

WHEELS

For sale – 1971 Toyota Corolla in good condition. $300. Call 863-1478. Ask for Elizabeth.

1969 Chevy Malibu, 6 cylinder, automatic 2-door. Runs well, but needs some body work. $300. Call 863-3102.

For sale – 1969 Volvo 144S, 4-door, 4-cyl, 4-speed. New shocks, brakes, water pump. 6 radial tires, 2 snows. Excellent condition. Call 864-4234. Keep trying, $1100.

Looking for jeep 4 or 6 cyl. Std. 4-wheel drive. No plow. Willing to spend $2500 or less. Call 864-4234. Keep trying.

For sale – 1973 Vega station wagon, 4-speed. Ready for winter with snowtires. New front tires, 63,000 miles, $400. Phone 878-5605 after 5:30 p.m. or anytime weekends.

CHEESE SPECIALS

Our own garlic herb special . . . . . $2.99/lb.
Compare with "Boursin" at $7.00/lb.

Jewish Rye Bread $.79/lb.
Jarlsberg . . . $2.89/lb.

plus many more cheeses, cheesecake "seconds," homemade quiche, yogurt in bulk, wine, crackers and mustards

CHEESE OUTLET
398 PINE ST.

Advertising Salesperson

The Vermont Cynic is now taking interviews for the advertising sales positions for next semester. No experience is necessary but a car is required. Commission on sales is paid as compensation.

Contact: Peter Voll
Ad. Mgr.
Vermont Cynic
656-4412

SAGA DINING HALL MENU

MENU #4

| Oct 26, 1978 THURSDAY | Oct. 27, 1978 FRIDAY | Oct. 28, 1978 SATURDAY | Oct. 29, 1978 SUNDAY | Oct. 30, 1978 MONDAY | Oct. 31, 1978 TUESDAY | Nov. 1, 1978 WEDNESDAY | November 2, 1978 THURSDAY |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| BREAKFAST | | | | | | | |
| 1)Scrambled Eggs2)Hard Boiled Eggs3)Poached EggsHash BrownsCottage CheesePastry of Muffins | 1)Fritters2)Poached Eggs3)Soft Boiled EggsHome FriesCottage CheesePastry or Muffins | 1)French Toast2)Easy Riser3)Hard Boiled EggsHash BrownsCottage CheesePastry or Muffins | 1)Apple Pancakes2)Fried Eggs3)Soft Boiled EggsHome FriesCottage CheesePastry or Muffins | 1)Orange French Toast2)Omelets3)Hard Boiled EggsHash BrownsCottage CheesePastry or Muffins | 1)Griddle Cakes2)Fried Eggs3)Soft Boiled EggsHome FriesCottage CheesePastry or Muffins | 1)Blueberry Pancakes2)Scrambled Eggs3)Hard Boiled EggsHash BrownsCottage CheesePastry or Muffins | 1)Waffles2)Scrambled Eggs3)Soft Boiled EggsHome FriesCottage cheesePastry or Muffins |
| LUNCH | | | | | | | |
| 1)Sandwich Bar2)Tuna Noodle Casserole K-243)Polenta Pie K-20 | 1)B.L.T.2)Spanish Macaroni L-313)Meat Roll Up Salad Plate P-3 | - B R U N C H -1)Scrambled Eggs2)Pancakes3)Corned Beef | - B R U N C H -1)Scrambled Eggs2)Waffles3)Sloppy Joe's Frizzled Ham | 1)Pizza2)Corned Beef Hash3)Vegetarian Sandwich Delight | 1)Hamburgers on a Bun2)Baked Macaroni and Cheese3)Spinach Quiche | 1)Hot Dogs w/Baked Beans and Chips2)Spanish Rice3)Julienne Salad4)Souffle w/Tomato Sauce | 1)Hot Beef Sandwich w/potatoe and gravy2)Spanish Rice3)Vegetable Cold Plate P-81 |
| DINNER | | | | | | | |
| 1)Veal Parmesan2)Meatloaf with gravy3)Cheese or Mushroom Omelet - your choice - | 1)Roast Turkey w/Giblet Gravy2)Taco Bar3)Broccoli and Cheese Casserole | 1)Roast Beef aujus2)Shrimpos3)Sukiyaki w/Brown Rice UVM-8 | 1)Pork Chops2)Beef Stew with Biscuit3)Vegetable Quiche L-67 | 1)Grilled Chopped Steak w/Gravy2)Baked Fish Fillet3)Stir Fry Vegetables French Fries | Halloween Party in your Dining Hall at Harris-Millis Waterman, Marsh Simpson Dining Halls | 1)Baked Chicken2)Lasagna - Meat and Meatless3)Batter Dipped Waffles | 1)Veal Parmesan2)Beef Stew with Biscuit*3)Curried Vegetables in Casserole - Green Beans, Soy Beans, Wax Beans, Onion, Celery, stir fried w/ sesame seeds*Vegetarian Specialty |
| Watch for Halloween Special Posters | Redstone StationSpecial - 30 or more people will be able to make reservations in advance - call Dan Dunne at ext. 2189 | | | | | | |

SATURDAY, OCT. 28
10 AM-5 PM ONLY

DOOR PRIZES ...

- Kastle Newstyle Champion Skis
- Look G.T. Binding
- Garmont-Omnilite Boot (men's or women's)
- Rossignol Snobird 2 Skis
- Hexcel Team Bag
- Besser Binding
- Olin Ski Care Kit
- Salomon Ski Bags (2)
- CB Jacket
- Beconta Vest
- Marker Bindings
- Nordica Mistral or Elite

SATURDAY, OCT. 28
10 AM-5 PM ONLY

Cider & Doughnuts,
Live Bluegrass Music,
Manufacturer's Reps.

PLUS VEST SPECIALS

- CB Vests reg. $49 Now $44.00
- Powderhorn Vests reg. $43 Now $40.00
- Hot Gear Vests $4 off selected styles

- Final price slashes on Sale Equipment
- Last years demo's now available at great prices!

The Downhill Edge

65 Main St., Burlington

Now open nites 'til 9 except Sat.
Free parking in rear.

862-2282

VERMONT CYNIC

VOLUME XCV NUMBER 7 "We hear you knocking, but you can't come in." NOVEMBER 2, 1978

Theft In Burlington:

Beyond The Misconceptions

See Page 13

"I think a lot of the thefts we have here are because of the carelessness or lack of awareness on the part of the students"

–Dean Keith Miser

"I think the awareness (of crime) is there; it's for the people to take the initiative to accept it"

—Det. Richard Garrow

DESIGNS ON YOU
YSL—BILL BLASS—
BOTANY 500

The New Face of Designer Suitings. For you. On you. From country tweed to elegant stripes.

YSL stressing the three piece suit revampe[illegible]mmed down are lapels, p[illegible]aps and pant widths. Softened are shoulders and vents. Eased are waists.

Bill Blass... going back to the two piece suit. With cardigan or V-neck sweater. Rather than a vest. Lapels up. Scarf under. You'll love the classic black and white tweed.

From the Cartier Collection... the finely-striped Botany 500 three piece suit. Sporting a double-vented jacket. With slimmed lapels. Classic vest. The new, easy pant. For you... the fashion-minded man who wants to look elegant. And uncontrived.

We at Magrams have designs on you — compliments of YSL — Bill Blass — Botany 500. Priced from $175.00 to $220.00. All in wools or wool blends. Because the natural man chooses natural fibers. Of course.

—MEN'S SHOP ON MAIN —

It's an experience
MAGRAMS
DOWNTOWN BURLINGTON

Krinstina Berster Convicted on Five Counts of Passport Violations

Acquitted of Conspiracy Charges

By John Letteri

Kristina Berster was found guilty of five counts of violating passport laws last Friday after the Burlington federal court jury deliberated the verdict for five days.

The counts, including three felonies and two misdemeanors, accused Miss Berster of concealing her identity, making false statements, and using forged documents when she crossed the U.S. border in Alburg, Vt. on July 16.

Each of the felonies carries a maximum sentence of five years in prison and a $10,000 fine. Miss Berster's defense team, headed by William Kunstler and Dennis Schlenker, feel they have significant grounds for appeal.

Miss Berster was found not guilty on the conspiracy charge her defense team had worked throughout the trial to defeat. It resulted from FBI allegations, later denied, that Miss Berster was a member of West Germany's Baader-Meinhoff terrorist group.

Kristina Berster: Extradition her "greatest threat"

Ray Kajmir, Miss Berster's co-defendent, was found not guilty on five counts of aiding and abetting Miss Berster's illegal entry.

Miss Berster and her defense team contended throughout the three week long trial that she was seeking political asylum in the U.S. out of fear of an increasingly oppressive West German government. She is wanted in West Germany on charges of associating with suspected terrorists.

The possibility of being extradited to West Germany to face these accusations still exists for Miss Berster. Her defense team has said it is the "greatest threat" facing her now.

The FBI's erroneous labelling of Miss Berster as a member of Baader-Meinhoff and the intense media coverage of her trial made it difficult selecting jurors. Her defense team argued she could not receive a fair trial, and asked for a dismissal of the case on those grounds. U.S. District Court Judge Albert Coffin denied this request and another one asking for the testimony of FBI agents responsible for Miss Berster's "terrorist" label.

Coffrin also called evidence about the political situation in West Germany "irrelevant" to the trial and consistently asserted the trial was for passport violations and nothing else.

Coffrin has set no date for sentencing, which he said would follow a pre-sentence investigation.

"Coffrin also called evidence about the political situation in West Germany 'irrelevant' to the trial and consistently asserted the trial was for passport violations and nothing else."

Burlington Aldermen Seek To Quiet Unruly Students

By John Letteri

Burlington aldermen warned representatives of the University of Vermont, Trinity and Champlain College Monday that if late night noise is not controlled, an ordinance specifically aimed at the students may be enacted.

The warning comes as yet another aspect of the recent accelerated effort by the aldermen and the city to control student impact on the Burlington community. Other aspects of the program include stricter enforcement of parking violations and bar occupancy ordinances. The study committee looking into late-night disturbances was requested by Alderwomen Jean Stackpole, Joyce Desautels and Alderman Richard Wadhams, Jr.

Alderwoman Joyce Desautels said she has received numerous calls from neighbors complaining about the students' noise who said they were "sick and tired of having to pay tax dollars to have police baby-sit," according to an article in the Burlington Free Press.

Keith Miser, dean of students at UVM, said the university's authority over students extends only to the boundaries of campus. Thus, the 4,000 UVM students living off-campus and in Greek houses are not in UVM's jurisdiction. In previous years, colleges were able to conduct legal proceedings against students.

Burlington Chief of Police Robert Abare has received an increasing number of complaints as well. Recently at a Brookes Avenue residence, police sent two cruisers and three policemen between the hours of 11:30 p.m. and 3 p.m. Three citations were issued at the party to students, and over 250 were in attendance, according to Burlington police.

Abare said complaints about student noise should be called into the police department, which is currently working up a flow chart to determine where the most frequent complaints are levelled. One of the problems with the issue of late-night noise, is what constitutes a disturbance, said Abare. Yet, he said if the violation warrants a citation, he will issue one. "Most of these college students are not fighters, they're lovers and drinkers," Abare said in an article in the Burlington Free Press.

"Most of these college students are not fighters, they're lovers and drinkers."
Burlington Police Chief Robert Abare

Chittenden County State's Attorney Mark Keller said student cases referred to his office will be treated like any other. Keller said he has written to school deans telling them students would no longer be given breaks as in previous years.

The President of the Burlington Tenants Association, Clark Hinsdale, said he gives students three chances before he asks them to leave. "We may have a problem we can't solve, but it's not because we aren't trying," said Hinsdale, landlord to about 100 students. He charged that part of the problem was that the police were too patient with students, according to an article in the Burlington Free Press.

Student representatives present at the meeting agreed that a problem exists and the way to eliminate it would be to get the warning out around campuses.

We're Playing Your Song...

Whether your taste runs from Classical to Disco- or from Jazz to Rock, we've got it all.

Bailey's

Bailey's Music Rooms —
Check our prices, check our service.
SOUTH ROBERT BURLINGTON

4

Johnson Calls for End to Anti-Soviet Hysteria

By Morris Earle, Jr.

The danger and cost of the world-wide military build-up is frightening, and most of the responsibility belongs to the U.S., said Russell Johnson of the American Friends' Service Committee in his talk at St. Paul's Cathedral last Wednesday night.

Speaking on "anti-Soviet hysteria," Johnson called the Soviet threat to the U.S. a myth, and said the Russian military build-up results from a legitimate fear of the West. He felt Russia has more reason to fear the U.S. than visa versa, and supported this with historical examples. In 1919, just after the Bolshevik revolution, U.S. troops fought in the Russian civil war, and killed Russians on their own soil trying to defeat the Bolsheviks. Winston Churchill, later British prime minister, said of the new communist regime: "We must strangle the baby in its cradle."

In the mid-thirties, Johnson said, the U.S. supported Hitler and Mussolini as bulwarks against communism. In World War II, the Second Front against Hitler launched at Normandy was delayed to let Hitler weaken Russia, according to Johnson. At the time of the Cuban missile crisis, he observed, America had missiles along the Russian border already, in Greece, Turkey, and Iran. He also said abhorrance of war is great in the Soviet Union; 20 million Russians died in the last war, and two-thirds of western Russia laid to waste.

Johnson argued against the notion that the Soviets are trying to ferment world revolution. He cited examples such as the Phillipines, where an active communist guerrilla movement is fighting the dictator Marcos. Marcos is supported by U.S. advisers and weapons, but the communist guerrillas have nothing to do with Russia, said Johnson. Phillipine communism is a vehicle of promoting nationalism and economic equality in that country and not Soviet expansionism, he continued. He said communism there is more of a threat to Exxon, to IT&T, to Del Monte, and to all the multi-national corporations which take advantage of countries like the Phillipines. Such military dictatorships help to provide social stability and cheap labor to these corporations. When the U.S. supports these regimes, it is helping to create the conditions which cause the guerrilla movements, Johnson said.

Russell Johnson — Photo by Trish McGerald

Johnson warned that the danger of nuclear war is increasing. Both the U.S. and the U.S.S.R. are striving towards "First Strike" capability (the ability to destroy the enemy's missiles before they get off the ground, and thus "win"). He further stated that the world is becoming increasingly militarized and nuclear technology is spreading. A number of new countries, including Brazil, Israel, and India, may have nuclear weapons soon. Johnson expressed disappointment in the failure of the current SALT (Strategic Arms Limitation Treaty) talks to produce results.

The real — and much needed — end to the Cold War, according to Johnson, will depend on our understanding the Russian viewpoint, as well as our own motives. Johnson has worked for the American Friends' Service Committee since 1949, and was labelled "un-American" during the McCarthy era, for his anti-war stance.

Photo by Bob Gale

Burlington Square Improving Operations

By John Letteri

"The internal problems were squared away six months ago and things are operating in Burlington Square Mall in a satisfactory way," said Project Director Nicholas Wylie.

He said occupancy at the Radisson Hotel was "good," use of the garage had improved, office space occupancy stood at 97.9 percent, and retail occupancy at 87.9%. Burlington Square includes the Radisson, the mall, the garage, and a suite of office buildings behind the mall.

Pending city approval, the Fidelity Insurance Co. of Philadelphia will obtain the controlling interest of the project. Previously, Fidelity has been partners with Mondev Corp. of Montreal. Wylie said Fidelity had been effectively controlling the project for about three months. He said no physical changes will occur within the project, and operating personnel will remain the same. The only difference is Burlington will be dealing with one party instead of two when issues arise concerning the project.

While Mondev was controlling the development of the project, they were beset with an array of problems. Dimeo Construction Co. of Providence, Rhode Island, the major contractor for the project, took Mondev to court claiming the corporation owed them more than $1.75 million. At the same time, 14 subcontractors under Dimeo brought suits against Mondev totalling nearly a quarter of a million dollars.

In addition, in January 1977, the tenants of the mall sent the officials of Mondev "a strongly worded document complaining about 21 different aspects of the mall." They described the project manager at the time and the members of his staff as "arrogant, contradictory and misleading."

In August of 1977, Mondev Corp. made an initial payment of $680,000 to Dimeo as part of a multi-million dollar settlement of the suit. This money, including a $320,000 deposit by Mondev into an escrow account, was used to pay the sub-contractors, who subsequently dropped their suits. The amount Mondev owes Dimeo was not released.

Wylie said these problems are part of the "tough" process associated with a development on the order of magnitude of the Burlington Square project. Bad press and initial citizen dislike of the mall were also contributing factors to the early problems the project experienced.

The development has not stopped. As a condition to allowing Fidelity and their principals to control the project, the city required them to lure a major department store downtown, and to build some apartments as part of the city's urban renewal plan. Wylie said feasibility studies are being done to determine where a store could be placed, and what chain of

(continued on page 9)

Kresge Grant of $100,000 Announced for University of Vermont Library

The goal of raising $1 million in private funds for the construction of the David W. Howe addition to the Bailey Library on the UVM campus was reached recently, according to the UVM Public Relations office.

"Our campaign to raise the final $1 million for the library addition has moved swiftly through the summer months, stimulated by the recent announcement of a $100,000 challenge grant from the Kresge Foundation of Troy, MI," said Dr. Lattie F. Coor, UVM president.

The $4.3 million cost of the addition was met by a bond issue of $2.3 million secured by student library fees, a capital appropriation of $1 million from the State of Vermont and the private funding of $1 million.

The funding campaign began early this summer with a major gift of $500,000 on a matching basis from J. Warren and Lois H. McClure of Charlotte and Florida in memory of David W. Howe, father of Mrs. McClure and a 1914 UVM alumnus. Mr. Howe, who died in 1969, was the publisher of the Burlington Free Press.

The Library Fund Committee was chaired by Frank A. Balch, UVM trustee and president-general managerr of Vermont Broadcasting Corporation, WJOY and WQCR-FM. He coordinated his efforts with Barbara W. Snelling, UVM's vice president of development and external affairs. Over 30 other Burlington-area civic and business leaders were active on the committee which was organized earlier this year.

The Kresge Foundation announced that grant commitments totaling $27.4 million went to 203 organizations in 43 states and three foreign countries, including 84 colleges and universities in 30 states and Puerto Rico.

A total of 1,229 groups submitted "qualified proposals" during the foundation's January through March application period this year. "Responding solely to needs expressed by the applicants, consistent with the foundation's stated interests and policies, the grants (such as the $100,000 awarded to UVM) were made to institutions operating in the fields of higher education, health, welfare, humanities, science and religion," said William H. Baldwin, chairman of the Kresge Foundation.

The Bailey Library, at the time it was completed in 1961, was planned to accommodate a projected enrollment of 4,400. The new addition, together with the existing library, will serve nearly 11,000 students, seat 1,700 users and house over one million volumes.

VPIRG NEWS

THE VERMONT PUBLIC INTEREST RESEARCH GROUP

By Ann Seidenberg

The majority of Vermont legislative candidates responding to a survey by VPIRG last month oppose granting requests by utilities to charge their customers for construction work in progress (WIP).

In the survey of the 248 candidates running for the House, 128 responded, while 26 of the 56 senatorial candidates answered the questionnaire.

Traditionally, utilities have not been allowed to charge customers for the cost of generating plants until they are actually on line and producing electricity. But now, as they seek to build larger and more expensive plants, they are asking public utilities commissions to allow them to put construction costs (CWIP) in their rate bases.

A CWIP ban was supported by 79 percent of those responding that are running for the Vermont House, and by 92 percent of the Senatorial candidates. In addition, an earlier survey showed eight of the nine candidates running for governor, lt. governor, and attorney general were in favor of the ban.

CWIP became an issue in Vermont when the Central Vermont Public Service Corporation requested the Public Service Board to allow it to place 14.5 million dollars in CWIP charges in its rate base. VPIRG director Barry Steinhardt expressed concern that if the PSB grants Central Vermont's request, other utilities will quickly follow behind. "The Central Vermont case is the first real test of CWIP in Vermont," said Steinhardt. "If the PSB allows CWIP, I think we can expect other Vermont utilities to request their own CWIP-based rate increases," he added.

Opponents of CWIP claim that adding the controversial charge to a utility's rate base means consumers would be forced to pay for plants they may never use. They claim the plants may never be built, or today's ratepayers may not be the same ratepayers when and if a plant comes on line and produces electricity.

A further breakdown of the results of the questionnaire circulated by VPIRG showed that among incumbents running for re-election in the House, 69, or 82 percent of those responding, agreed with the CWIP ban. Of the twelve responding Senate incumbents, ten or 83 percent would support legislation banning CWIP.

Governor Richard Snelling was the only one among candidates for governor, lt. governor, and attorney general who refused to give his whole-hearted support to the idea. He said he did not believe in approaching the issue of CWIP "from an all or nothing 'blunderbuss' point-of-view."

VPIRG Director Steinhardt said he was "pleased" with the overall results of the survey. "The results of this survey reflect widespread opposition to CWIP," he said. "Vermont voters are tired of unjustified rate increases and that message has obviously been getting to the candidates," he added.

warm
warm
warm

ben & jerry's homemade

HOT HOMEMADE SOUPS!
LOTS OF HOT DRINKS!

CORNER of ST. PAUL & COLLEGE STREETS • BURLINGTON • 862-9620

PROGRAM FAIR

SATURDAY, NOV. 4, 1978
LIVING/LEARNING CENTER
FIREPLACE LOUNGE

L/LC PROGRAM DEMONSTRATIONS, EXCITEMENT, EXHIBITS, FOOD, MUSIC

11:00 - 3:00

SKIERS

- For new skiers — let us help you choose from over a dozen packages at every price range. Discover for yourself our fast and efficient service.
- Serious skiers and fitness enthusiasts — look to the Ski Rack for high performance selection.
- We know how important boot fit is — best selection means best fit for you.
- Choose your Cross-Country clothing for function, style, freedom and comfort from our wide variety.

ROSSIGNOL ELAN ASNES tonsil

- 27 Different X-C Packages for Adults & Children
- Free X-C Clinic Every Thursday Nite at 7:00 PM
  - Waxing fiberglass & wooden X-C skis
  - Base preparation for all skis
  - Exciting Movie shown
  - Hints on Best places to ski

Open Mon.-Thurs. 9-6
Fri. 9-9; Sat. 9-5
85 Main St. 658-3313

SKI RACK

Ariel

1978 is here !

The 1978 Yearbook is on sale NOW at the Ariel office in downstairs Billings.

The 1978 Ariel is bigger and better than ever; it captures a year.

cost - $5.00

Also - orders are now being taken for the 1979 Ariel which will be available in May 1979.

Lectures on Holocaust, Rural Options, and Indian Philosophy

Four distinguished speakers will present their opinions and philosophies on three different topics next week at the University of Vermont.

Two authors, Terrence Des Pres and Lawrence L. Langer, who have opposing viewpoints on the Holocaust, meet head-on in a special Vermont Seminars' presentation Nov. 8 at 8 p.m. in the Benedict Auditorium of the Marsh Life Sciences Bldg.

Their speeches at UVM will offer insight into their individual expertise as well as exhibiting the conflicting schools of thought on the Holocaust.

Lawrence Langer

Des Pres, an English professor at Colgate University, was a fellow in the National Humanities Institute at Yale University last year. He will speak on "The Holocaust as Ultimate Event." Langer, a professor of English at Simmons College, who is currently a fellow at Yale's National Humanities Institute, will address "The Holocaust Experience in Language and Fact." After their presentations, the audience will be invited to query the two scholars.

Des Pres, in his book, The Survivor, defines a survivor as "anyone who manages to stay alive in body and spirit, enduring dread and hopelessness without the loss of the will to carry on in human ways." The nature of that struggle and the "humanness" of the survivor are the twin themes of the book. The Survivor presents accounts of concentration and death camp experiences by eyewitness participants and is a penetrating analysis of the psychological, emotional and biological responses to the atrocities of camp life. Des Pres is now at work on a second book concerning the nature of the Holocaust as an event, demonic, ultimate, and beyond the reach of stock responses to a catastrophe.

Langer, whose The Holocaust and the Literary Imagination (Yale University Press, 1975) was a finalist in the Arts and Letters category of the National Book Award, has recently had his second book, The Age of Atrocity: Death in Modern Literature, published by Beacon Press. Langer, a Fulbright Professor of American Literature at the University of Graz in Graz, Austria, did his undergraduate work at the City College of New York and his post-graduate work at Harvard University. He is the author of numerous magazine articles and is considered a scholar on the work of Elie Wiesel, who delivered the emotional and eloquent keynote address at the September opening of the "Holocaust" program of the 1978-79 Vermont Seminars.

As part of the "Man's Use of Water: Conflicts and Issues" section of the University of Vermont's "Rural Option in Urban America" program of the Vermont Seminars, Joan Kovalic, a staff member of the U.S. House of Representatives' Committee on Public Works and Transportation, will speak on "Water Quality in the United States: Conflicts, Their Resolution and Federal Policy." Her speech will take place on Monday, November 6 at 7 p.m. in the Memorial Lounge of UVM's Waterman Building.

Kovalic joined the Committee in 1973 and is responsible for the day to day monitoring of the Water Pollution Control Program as well as advising the Chairman of the full committee and the chairman of the subcommittee on Water Resources on all matters relating to the implementation of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act including the recommendation and development of legislative proposals.

Swami Nisreyasanada

On Wednesday evening, Nov. 8, Swami Nisreyasananda will deliver a public lecture entitled "The Perfect Life" at the Living Learning Center. The talk will focus on the Swami's views of a complete and rewarding life in the present age of turmoil and change.

Born in 1899, in Kerala Province of South India, Swami Nisreyasanada has devoted his life to service in the Ramakrishna Order. The Ramakrishna Order is a world-wide organization of monks and lay people dedicated to peace and understanding among all religions. It is named after Sri Ramakrishna (1836-1886), one of India's great modern saints. Shrines in societies which follow Ramakrishna's teachings feature symbols of all faiths in accordance with Ramakrishna's belief that all religions are pathways to God.

For the past twenty years, Swami Nisreyasananda has served as a representative of the Ramakrishna order in Africa. He operates youth hostels and missions in Rodesia, Zambia, and South Africa. He is presently at UVM in conjunction with the Asian Religions program at the Living Learning Center. This innovative program is sponsored by the religion department and directed by Professor Michael McKnight. The object of the program is to bring students together with a teacher from the East in order to gain a fuller understanding of Hinduism. Next semester the same program will be bringing two Buddhist monks to the Center.

Genocide Perpetrated While Modern Society Looked On

By Sarah Bailey

"We could not believe that 20th century genocide could exist," said Irving Greenberg, reflecting on the Jewish disillusionment with modern society in the aftermath of the Holocaust.

The dominant force in Jewish life for the past 200 years has been to overcome their status as outcasts and to become an integral part of it, said Greenberg. Their conviction of the existence of modernity and belief in the human power of all faiths was destroyed by the Nazis, he continued.

In addition, Greenberg said that the universal incomprehension of the Holocaust prolonged its continuance. Not only were the Jews unaware of their impending deaths, but bystanders "did not see" what was occurring.

For example, when the Jewish population asked FDR for bombing runs on Auschwitz and were denied, they accepted the decision because they believed strongly in modern society and its leaders.

Greenberg said, "F.D.R. will be permanently stained with this immoral apathy on this issue – millions of Jews would be alive today if he had acted."

Judaism is resurfacing now with the demands of American Jewry concerning the Middle East situation. Thirty years ago, according to Greenberg, fear of dual loyalty created the schism of Jews concerning Zionism and the re-birth of Israel. Greenberg feels that it is the very same dual loyalty that creates the balance of power necessary today. It allows one to examine each viewpoint and critique it.

Discussing the religious implications of the Holocaust, Greenberg stated that it "shattered both the modern and traditional paradigm of religion." He went on to explain that towards the end of the war, Germans no longer gassed small children before they were cremated. They stopped using both room and gas, according to the Germans. "In the summer of 1944, a Jewish child's life was not worth the 2/5 of a cent that it cost to gas them." He went on to say that religious statements could not be made in the same vein after the Holocaust, if one remembered the children. "No statement should be made," he stated, "that isn't credible in front of burning children."

Irving Greenberg

Some have said the Holocaust was the punishment of God for committing one of many "ultimate sins" – either the process of modernization or for the death of Christ. While he states that he cannot disprove this logically, evidence disproves it. "If the Jews were punished for lack of faith, then how come the Hasidic Jews, the most religious, were the hardest hit? It is an insult to those burning children."

The re-creation of life was the ultimate statement of faith after the Holocaust. It was the ultimate conviction that life had to continue. "To have a child after the Holocaust was to have the religious faith of Abraham," according to Greenberg. The birth of the state of Israel was a conviction of the Jewish people that God was not dead – as some felt he must be to allow the Holocaust – and that they should go on.

"The only hint of the existence of God is the presence of the Jewish people today," he said. "Even the atheist Israeli who becomes a soldier and dies for Israel re-affirms the existence of God."

This causes one to look at the meaning of religion and atheism, said Greenberg. One who shows a reverence for life is religious, no matter what his stated convictions are. Likewise, one who is "religious," yet allows such death to occur, must re-examine themselves. In May 1967, atheist Jean Paul Sartre gave support to Israel despite his "non-religion," yet Pope Paul VI did not speak out against the war except to plead that holy places not be shelled. This, according to Greenberg, should be observed and reflected upon.

In the same vein, Greenberg sees the concept of Zero Population Growth as an interesting paradox. On one level, it gives the affirmation of a high level of human existence, yet on another it is the waning of the will to be.

In discussing the role of Christianity in the Holocaust, Greenberg stated that the question was one of responsibility that Christians must accept. He cited Christian caricaturization of Jews, ridicule, and the creation of scapegoats. "To what extent," he asked, "were Christian teachings so powerful that they influenced the Holocaust? And how did they create the silence of Christians to what was happening?" He cited statistics directly correlating the higher death rates of Jews to countries where fundamentalist Christianity was present.

"Christianity cannot come out of this event without a critique of its most sacred documents," he said.

The Holocaust shows us that overwhelming concentrations of power applied to humans is disastrous. "It not only corrupts the killers, but the victims."

"The Holocaust was the end of a tradition. To renounce power is the ultimate morality now. A genuine exercise of power includes compromise, or else ultimate power will result in something like the Holocaust. Living with power is a challenge that will re-define models and morals all over, said Greenberg.

"There is no faith as whole as a broken faith," he concluded. "Broken and fused together in the ashes of Auschwitz."

Gordon Patterson Defends UVM's South African Holdings

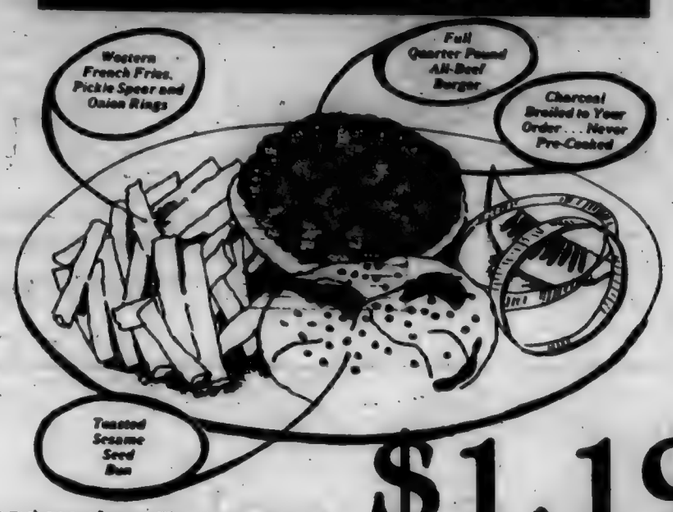
By Rich Hyland

UVM Treasurer Gordon Patterson defended UVM's position as a stockholder in companies operating in South Africa during a presentation on this controversial topic sponsored by the Student Association, the Minority Student Organization, and the Center for Cultural Pluralism, last Wednesday.

"As far as South Africa is concerned," Patterson said, "the investment committee can do more for the condition of South Africa as stockholder, by pressuring these companies to help change the apartheid situation."

Patterson said he first learned of the investments when Appleton King, a writer for the defunct Vermont Eclipse, brought them to his attention in August, 1977. Since that time, the office of the president and the board of trustees have conducted research on the issue. Among the firms which constitute the $2.5 million UVM investments are Exxon, Ford, IBM, and Caterpillar Tractor.

In June of 1978, Patterson reported, the board of trustees decided the university would use the Sullivan principles as their basic guidelines. These principles are found in a document signed by 103 American firms in South Africa, ensuring the equal rights of their black South African employees on the job. As Patterson explained, the investment committee then utilized the resources of the Investment Responsibility Research Group to study wage scales, benefits, etc. in order to verify that all companies in which UVM invested abided by the Sullivan principles. Treasurer Patterson welcomed from the public any additional information on the activities of South African companies.



Patterson admitted the investment council controlled by the trustees maintained the "buy-value" of a dollar as its basic investment philosophy. "But this isn't walking away from human issues or social values," he argued. "A good deal of effort can be made with stockholder's clout. These corporations are tough institutions, but I don't feel that this is futile, not at all."

Following the presentation, there was a meeting of the Student Committee Against Racism, an ad-hoc committee supporting divestiture of the UVM investment in firms with South African holdings. At this time, plans were being made for a rally on the UVM green, on Nov. 1st. It will feature speakers from the Education and Sociology Departments and a spokesman for the Student Committee Against Racism. Petitions calling for UVM divestiture, to be presented before the Dec. 6th meeting of the Board of Trustees, were put into circulation.

The Student Association is planning to have a second informational presentation on the issue featuring a debate between prominent speakers on the subject.

The Biggest Burger Buy In Town...

BONANZA-BURGER

$1.19

So much more at Bonanza. When you order your favorite soft drink or coffee, we'll give you a free refill. You'll dine in a relaxed atmosphere with your order served on a platter, not in a paper bag. We don't like waiting in long lines so all things are really humming, you can place your order, select your table and we'll serve you. Those who wish may enjoy beer or wine with their meal. You always have options at Bonanza, you may prefer a succulent char-broiled steak for as little as $2.49 and don't forget to visit our famous Chuck Wagon Salad Bar.

Beer and Wine served

Discover

Shelburne Rd.
So. Burlington

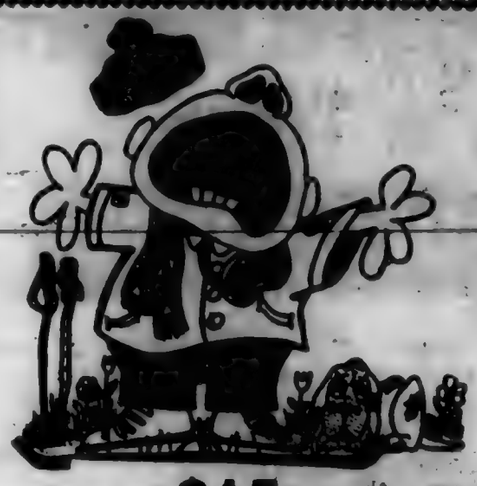
BONANZA

BECK ARNLEY

National Discount Club

Save Up to 20% Off on Selected Items.

Special!
Wiper Blades 20% off
All Oil-Filters $2.95



Sign Up Now at...
Imported Parts Center
3060 Williston Road
South Burlington, Vermont 05401

R.W. Hunt's Presents
in Concert
AZTEC
TWO-STEP

Nov. 13 & 14 at 7:30 & 10:30

Tickets $5
on Sale Now at HUNTS
101 Main St. 863-9850

Anniversary celebration at

Odd Steen Ski Shop

(Downstairs in the Ski Shop)

Wed., Thurs., Fri., Sat., Sun.

FREE

$15 Gift Certificate with every $100 purchase

Door Prizes; Come in and sign up!

| | Value |
|---|---|
| Rossignol Sunbird Alpine Ski | $170.00 |
| Rossignol Daypack | 18.00 |
| Rossignol Hippack | 13.00 |
| Rossignol Hat (3 a/$12) | 36.00 |
| Rossignol T Shirt (6 a/$5) | 30 00 |
| Nordica Boot Bag | 20.00 |
| Garmont Hiking Boot | 40.00 |
| Salomon Turtleneck | 15.00 |
| Salomon Fanny Pack | 13.00 |
| Salomon Ski Bag | 30.00 |
| Besser Comp Binding | 90.00 |
| Look Binding | 59.95 |
| Ski tuneup given away to 5 lucky winners | 40.00 |
| 1 pair of Barrecrafter ski poles | 12.00 |
| Trak Cross Country Ski Boot | 30.00 |
| | $616.95 |

FREE

Binding Installation on any pair of skis purchased during Anniversary Days

Odd Steen Ski Shop, Inc.

388 Shelburne Rd.

Burlington, Vermont 05401

Open 9-9 — Mon.-Fri.
Open 9-5 — Sat.

Now Open Sun. 1-5 !

(802) 862-5552

S.A. Corner

150 Member Vermont Council Coming to UVM

By Peter Vanderbilt

Vermont Council Needs Hosts

A group of one hundred and fifty Vermonters from throughout the state, known as the Vermont Council, will be arriving on campus next Thursday, November 9th. This group includes members from all walks of life, and was organized in order to advise the university of the needs and wants of Vermont citizens, and how the university can better serve them. Any in-state students who may be interested in being hosts to the Council should contact the Student Association office at 656-2053.

Student Trustee Seminar Tonight

The first Student Trustee seminar is being held tonight, November 2nd, at 7:30 p.m. in the Marsh Lounge of the Billings Student Center. This is the first of four required seminars taking place on Thursdays throughout November.

The student trustee position is a two-year commitment open to all students at UVM. All interested students should attend these seminars.

On Thursday, November 2nd, at 9:00 p.m. four candidates for the two seats in the State House of Representatives from Burlington District 4-9 will debate in the Wing-Davis-Wilks Lounge on the Redstone campus. This District includes the area between South Prospect St. and Saint Paul St. from Main St. south to the city limits, as well as the Redstone Campus.

Accreditation Team to Visit UVM.

The New England Association of Schools and Colleges will be on campus from November 5th to the 8th in order to evaluate the university for accreditation. This process occurs roughly every ten years.

South African Question Considered

Last Wednesday, the Student Association, Minority Student Organization, and the Center for Cultural Pluralism sponsored an informational program on the question of divestiture of holdings in companies with South African interests. The program featured a presentation by UVM treasurer Gordon Patterson, a South African government film on the gold mining industry, and an anti-apartheid film shot in South Africa and smuggled out of the country.

A second program is being planned and will feature a debate with pro-divestiture, pro-Sullivan principles, and anti-divestiture representatives.

Students Raising a Ruckus?

Student Association President Charlie Clark, Dean of Students Keith Miser, Assistant Director of Student Activities Bill Mahr and other student representatives have discussed the problem of increased complaints of noise and damage by students with the Aldermen, Police Chief and local legislators. At this writing we don't know the results of the meeting, but will have the scoop in next week's Cynic.

Among Other Things...

The Billings Center Governing Board, which is responsible for the day to day running of the center, as well as directly responsible for much of the programming which goes on in Billings, is sponsoring a logo contest. All entries should be brought to the BCGB desk on the third floor balcony in Billings. There is a $20 first prize, so this needn't be simply art for art's sake.

Club News

The UVM Horse Club will be sponsoring a riding clinic for non-horse owners, free of charge, November 18-19. A definite schedule will be made and posted at the Spear St. Barn and at the Horse Sense Suite, L/L 380E. For further information, call Jan Hoover at 656-3841.

There are presently two empty stalls at the barn. Anyone interested in bringing their horse to UVM should contact Sue Clickner at the S.A. office, 656-2053 or at 301 Redstone Hall, 656-4380.

There will be a 20% off sale at Eastern Mountain Sports for all Outing Club members on Thursday, November 16th. In order to qualify for the discount, you must have your Outing Club card and UVM ID. For further information, you can call the Outing Club at 656-3439.

Anyone having information on the following clubs and wishing to preserve them should get in touch with the S.A. office as soon as possible.

These clubs are: Alpha Lambda Delta, Anthropology Club, American Society of Civil Engineers, Baptist Student Union, Catalina Club, Chi Epsilon Beta, East Asian Cultural Exchange, El Club Hispanico, Environmental Club, Ethan Allen Rifles, Forestry Club, Friends of Geology, Geographic Forum, Green and Gold, Inter-Varsity Christian Fellowship, John Dewey Philosophy, L'Amicale Francaise, Lawrence Forensic Union, L' Chaim Club of UVM, Meeting of the Ways, Modern Dance Workshop, News and Weather, Physical Education Majors and Minors, Pre-Vet Club, the International Club, Thinking and Drinking Club, UVM Table Tennis, UVM Volleyball, Warren-Austin Model United Nations, Recreation Management Society, German Club.

The Race for Congress

Relatively Uknown Democrat Challenges Popular Incumbent

By John Letteri

The race for Vermont's lone congressional seat has largely been characterized by the attempt of S. Marie Dietz, the democratic candidate, to circulate her name and ideas around the state, and the republican incumbent James Jeffords' virtual assurance of victory.

Mrs. Dietz, a retired housewife from Woodstock, defeated veteran Democrat Wynn Kernstock for the nomination in September mainly on her anti-abortion stance. She has continued to rely on this issue throughout her campaign not only to gain votes, but because the controversial issue also attracts attention which her campaign badly needs.

Jeffords, on the other hand, has done very little campaigning in the state, letting his well-known reputation speak for itself. He discounts Dietz's credibility as a viable alternative to himself.

Yet, Ms. Dietz has waged a campaign which began recently to question Jeffords' actions in Congress. She stands for reduced government spending, and a slowdown of its growth. She points to the fact Jeffords got only a 28% rating from the National Taxpayers' Union, since he voted 72% of the time for increases in federal spending.

In addition, Ms. Dietz cites Jeffords' vote in favor of allowing states to rescine their approval of the Equal Rights Amendment. Mrs. Dietz strongly supports ratification of the ERA. Her strongest objection to Jeffords' congressional voting record is that he voted at least 13 times for federal funding for abortions.

She claims Jeffords voted in opposition to the feeling of Vermonters when he cast a yes vote for the construction of a nuclear aircraft carrier. Jeffords has said he is opposed to nuclear power, but the carrier was necessary, in Jeffords' words, to reduce the Navy's dependence on foreign oil. Because Carter vetoed the aircraft carrier, Jeffords said the Navy will have to build two conventional carriers instead. Ms. Dietz has called for a moratorium on the construction of anything nuclear powered.

Dietz further charged Jeffords did not represent Vermonters when he voted for the "Panama Canal giveaways" and the continuing exemption of federal employees from Social Security taxes.

Jeffords' voting record includes approval of aid for New York City, the cutting back on the number and wages of CETA employees, and the Carter administration's energy package.

Jeffords called for a U.S. boycott of the 1980 Olympic games in Moscow as a protest to Soviet treatment of dissidents. When Andrew Young said "thousands of political prisoners" are present in the U.S., Jeffords said, "if he can't find a filter between his mouth and his mind, he should go."

He supports the release of Patty Hearst, saying her 18 months in prison are already adequate punishment.

Jeffords is a strong advocate of solar energy and is a member of the solar energy coalition in Congress. The organization is dedicated to the research and development of solar power as a viable energy source for the future.

Burlington Square ...

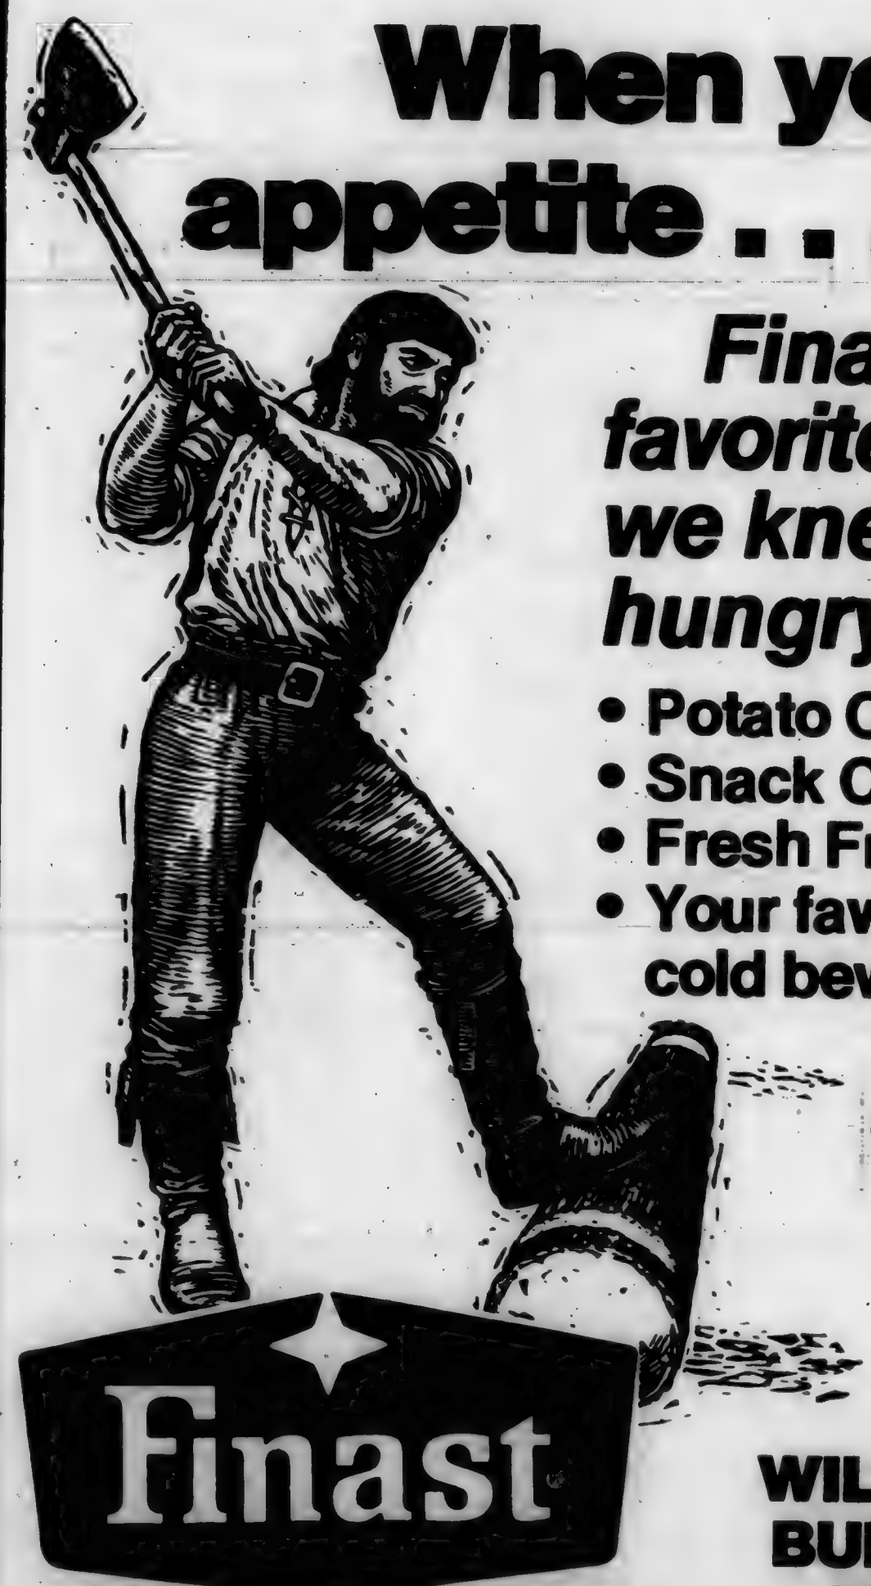
continued from page four

McCepps, a small restaurant, has recently moved out of the mall for reasons Wylie described as "not seeing eye to eye on some matters." A new restaurant, scheduled to open the 15th of November, will occupy McCepps' old space. According to Wylie, they will feature steak, seafood and a dessert tray that's "out of this world."



stores might be interested in coming to Burlington.

The apartment part of the plan appears to be satisfied by the proposed $22 million lakefront development project. Triad Corp. of Montreal will do the work, and be completely separate from Fidelity Insurance, said Wylie. "We welcome the development," he said.

Burlington Square Mall under construction Photo by Bob Gale

When you work up an appetite . . . Come to Finast!

Finast has all your favorite snacks ready . . . we knew you would be hungry!

- Potato Chips
- Snack Crackers
- Fresh Fruits
- Your favorite cold beverages

and just about everything you can think of!

Visit

Mr. Deli

You'll find a world of Eating Pleasure at our own Mr. Deli Counter. You'll find Fresh Cold Cuts, Domestic and Imported Cheeses, Fresh Made Salads and Baked Goods. Our Mr. Deli experts are Ready to Serve you. Ask about our Delicious Party Platters available for your next get-together.

Finast SUPERMARKETS

825 WILLISTON ST. BURLINGTON, VERMONT

World And National News Briefs

Compiled By Dave Rocchio

Cubans Acquire Sophisticated Soviet Jets

The Soviet Union has supplied Cubans with advanced high speed MIG-23 jet fighters, according to U.S. intelligence sources.

In the past, the Soviets have supplied Cuba with the less sophisticated MIG-21's and other, older MIG's. The Cuban Air Defense is tremendously upgraded by the MIG-23's.

The MIG-23 "flaggers" are capable of firing tactical nuclear weapons as well as conventional weapons. There is no way of determining if the new jets are designed for ground attack as well as air-to-air mission.

The planes arrived by freighter, in wooden crates earlier this month. The 18-20 jets were not noticed by U.S. Intelligence until they were sited on flying missions. It is unknown whether Cuban or Russian pilots are flying the jets.

The MIG-23 is one of several new airplanes in the Soviet Union, according to Defense Secretary Harold Brown. Brown said the planes have "substantially better ranges and payloads than their predecessors."

Since the Cuban troops entered Angola in 1975, Soviet Aid has increased. The aid has included deliveries to Cuba of T-62 tanks, SA-3 low altitude defense missiles, radar patrol boats, landing craft, short hall transport planes, MIG's, ammunition, communications equipment, and military tricks.

Spying Does Not Pay

Two Russian spies were convicted of attempting to steal U.S. defense secrets on Monday. They were each sentenced to 50 years in prison. The judge said there was no doubt that the Soviet Union was "fully and completely behind the whole thing."

The defendants are free without bail in the custody of the Soviet ambassador pending appeals. U.S. District Judge Fredrick B. Lacy restricted their movements, "to secure the nation against the danger to the community these people pose at large."

The Soviets have been restricted to a section of the Bronx, in New York City, where the Soviet residential complex is located. Judge Lacy also required them to surrender their drivers' licenses.

The decision to allow the Russians to remain out of jail during the appeals was based on the interest of foreign policy. The decision was made by U.S. Attorney General Griffin Bell.

Valdik A. Enger, 39, and Rodolf P. Chern-Yayeu, 43, obviously were acting on orders coming from "a very high level" official when they were arrested on May 20, according to Judge Lacy. They could have been sentenced to life imprisonment.

The Judge stressed "that the Soviet Union is fully and completely behind what occurred here is beyond doubt." Lacy said the New Jersey caper was part of a larger national network and that the stiff penalty should be a deterrent to others.

Arguments by defense attorneys that the FBI was morally wrong to use double agents were rejected by the judge. The FBI is using double agents to crack the Soviet spy ring in the U.S.

The sentence of 50 years was for conspiring to transmit defense secrets to the Soviet Union. A 10-year sentence was given to be served concurrently as two other counts of conspiracy to obtain defense secrets, and actually obtaining the secrets.

Stock Market Suffers Massacre

In a period of just over two weeks, the paper value of stocks was slashed by well over $100 billion dollars. It is being called the 'October massacre on Wall Street.'

On Monday, the crisis was being considered along the same lines as President Kennedy's showdown with the steel industry and the fall of France in W.W.II. Some even compared it to the crash of 1929, where stock prices dropped over 80%.

Even though the sell hasn't reached crash proportions, it is close. The Dow-Jones industrial average fell over 11% in the past two week period, from 897 to below 800.

While Monday afternoon showed the average on some big-name stocks were increasing, broad tallies showed that three stocks declined for every one that went up.

Analysts agree that the cause of the slide is worsening inflation, and the fear that a bad recession is approaching.

Like other forecasters, the market experts have a checkered record. In 1973 and 1974 market experts rightly predicted the worst recession in post-war history. Still, many predictions in the '60's turned out to be false alarms.

The severity of the market's decline has been attributed in part to margin calls. A margin call forced selling by investors who bought with loans from brokers.

In order to keep these stocks, the investors must maintain them at a minimum price. If the stock falls below that price, the investor is forced to sell.

Two weeks ago margin debt had hit a record level – NYSE showed $12.4 billion in loans outstanding for 990,000 investor accounts.

The federal reserve regulates margin buying by setting up limits to the amount you may borrow. The current limit is 50% of any stock value.

Before 1929, there had been no regulation. According to noted economist Paul Samuelson, "one could borrow 70, 80, even 90% of the value of any stock he bought. The last time margin leans played an important role in the stock exchange was before the crash, 49 years ago."

Rises in Gold Prices Parallels Steady Decline of Dollar

The once strong U.S. dollar plumeted to new lows, while gold prices hit new highs, last Monday.

The distance the dollar will fall has not been predicted. Still, some foreign exchange dealers said that only massive help in the form of an International Monetary Fund will be able to rescue the dollar now.

Gold prices rose by $11 an ounce, closing at $245.25. A year ago this month, gold sold for $162.07 an ounce.

The trading in dollars was totally one-sided, selling led to more selling, bringing the price down. Few investors were buying dollars.

The day was termed "disasterous" by one Frankfurt dealer. "I haven't heard anyone talking about a recovery in the wind."

Sceptical reaction to President Carter's inflation program was attributed to the slide this week. Inflation is considered the most pressing issue in the U.S., according to foreign observers.

The dealers' severe lack of confidence in U.S. economic policy has led to their conversion of dollars to yen, marks, francs, or precious metals.

This means Americans living or traveling abroad pay higher prices for necessities, while American goods overseas became cheaper for locals. An influx of European tourists has also occurred because of the low cost of goods here.

The only Americans benefitting from the situation are those who purchased gold at $169.50 an ounce at the beginning of the year. Gold has risen 45% in value since then.

Speculation on measures the Carter Administration could take to stop the dollar's drive range from curbing oil imports, to the U.S. Federal Reserve buying dollars no one else wants. This could only be done with billions of dollars worth of credit from the International Monetary Fund, experts said.

Dayan: Optimistic Attitude Towards Mideast Peace Treaty

"Considerable progress" is being made towards a peace treaty with Egypt," said Israeli Foreign Minister Moshe Dayan this week.

After meeting with Secretary of State Cyrus Vance for 90 minutes Tuesday, Dayan said, "As far as we're concerned, I see no reason, no obstacle for reaching an agreement." The meeting was to decide on a treaty text.

The negotiations are apparently back on course, so Vance has scheduled a meeting with the Egyptian delegation headed by Defense Minister Kanal Hassan Ali. Also, legal experts from America and Israel are meeting to discuss treaty language.

Egyptian Foreign Minister Boutrous Ghali stated that after the Egyptian/U.S. meetings are complete, the stage would be set for a three-way meeting between the U.S., Egyptian, and Israeli delegations. This would be the first top-level meeting in 10 days.

Before declining to take questions from reporters, and making a hasty exit from the State Dept., Ghali called the session with Vance, "very constructive and positive."

Dayan defended the Israeli decision to "thicken" settlements on the west bank of the Jordan River. This move has drawn severe criticism from the Carter administration.

Talking to reporters, Dayan said, "We don't think the settlements are illegal. We don't think the settlements are an obstacle to peace."

"And I myself think that whenever we see Jews settling on the ground without driving away a single Arab, bringing prosperity to the area, becoming farmers, producing agricultural products, I think it is a great blessing."

Although the issue was not discussed with U.S. officials, it was discussed with the Egyptians at a two-hour, face to face meeting, according to Dayan.

When asked about the treaty, Dayan responded, "On the really tough issues, I think we are near solution."

"After listening to the Egyptians very carefully, and trying to understand their position, I still think it is advisable and attainable that we can reach an agreement in a short time."

Canadian Leader Wants New Constitution

On Monday, in a meeting with the 10 provincial premiers, Canadian Prime Minister Trudeau said a new Canadian constitution is needed to restore national pride, economic stability, and unity.

Trudeau opened a three-day nationally televised constitutional convention with the words, "the ball is in your court, gentlemen..." Writing a completely Canadian constitution will be given to them to do. Trudeau spoke for forty minutes, being sarcastic, conciliatory, and blunt.

Quebec Premier Rene Levesque was asked to agree that the time was right for Canada to end her legal status as a British Colony.

N O W Boycott Is Successful

A women's organization boycott damaged Missouri's economy, said an attorney for the state Monday. He made the statement as an antitrust suit against National Organization for Women (NOW) went to trial.

"Economic pressure comes as a result of a trade boycott," said Roger Bern, Missouri attorney general. The boycott was organized by NOW against states that had not yet ratified the equal rights amendment.

Ratification must come by June 30, 1982 if the amendment, which outlaws discrimination by sex, would become part of the constitution. ERA has to be ratified by 38 states. 35 have already done so, while attempts to reserve by four states are being contested in the courts.

Commentary

The Political Killing of Ed Brooke

By Jesse Gadson

As the November election approaches, Senator Edward W. Brooke of Massachusetts finds his chances for re-election in the hands of the press. The senator is being investigated by the Senate Ethics Committee for possible improprieties surrounding his recent divorce. Ironically, Brooke helped draft the legislation which created the Ethics Committee.

Resulting from derogatory newspaper reports about the handling of his divorce, Senator Brooke requested that the committee investigate the situation. The Boston Globe reported that Brooke misrepresented a $49,000 loan on his financial statement. The senator claims that the money in question wasn't his, but rather belonged to his mother-in-law.

Allegations by Boston newspapers have led to a continuous barrage of politically embarrassing headlines. Many prominent politicians and public figures have begun voicing their opposition to the apparent mishandling of the case by the press and the Ethics Committee itself. The committee leaked a damaging document it was analyzing as part of the Brooke investigation.

All information was supposed to remain, initially at least, within the committee. After the leak, the chief counsel for the Ethics Committee resigned. He then accused Brooke and his lawyers, Charles H. Morin and Barry Levine, of delaying the committee by withholding some documents, while altering others.

Senator Robert Morgan, a Democrat from North Carolina and a member of the Ethics Committee, maintains that all questions regarding documents have been satisfactorily resolved. Sen. Morgan, who is overseeing the committee investigations, has been involved in heated debates with the Ethics Committee chairman, Adlai Stevenson.

Stevenson sides with former counsel Wertheimer in believing that Brooke and his lawyers have tried to frustrate the investigation by the withholding and alteration of certain documents. It is true that Brooke's lawyers, at the beginning, were hesitant to supply the committee with all the documents it requested. But they felt that the scope of the investigation had gone too far. Regardless, after discussing the matter with Brooke, the lawyers decided to hand over all the information requested.

Presently, there is no reason for any further investigation, as no criminal charges are contemplated by the Ethics Committee at this time. Now that Senator Morgan is overseeing committee activity, and because he thinks all assertions of Brooke's criminal guilt in the financial dealings of this divorce are unwarranted, Chairman Stevenson is applying pressure to keep the investigation going.

Now that he is politically damaged by the negative press, Sen. Brooke and his aides want Sen. Morgan and the rest of the Ethics Committee to go public and clear his name. As early as June, Sen. Brooke requested to meet with the committee to clear up the matter. His request was effectively blocked by former Chief Counsel Wertheimer for three months. During that time, the political mud began to fly. Only after an emotional speech to his colleagues in the U.S. Senate was Brooke's request granted.

After Brooke's rare and emotional speech to the Senate, many outstanding senators spoke in his behalf; among them were Republican leader Howard Baker of Tennessee, Joseph Biden from Delaware and Ethics Committee member Democrat Abraham Ribicoff.

All the political rhetoric surrounding Senator Brooke has cost him severely in the polls. Brooke, a 12-year senator who doesn't usually face serious opposition for reelection, is trailing by 15 percentage points. And most political experts claim that opponent Rep. Paul Tsongas' success in the polls is due to Brooke's personal problems, rather than effective campaigning. Brooke has an impressive record in the Senate, and is understandably irritated. He clearly has a right to be upset; why should a newspaper and one lawyer be able to destroy a senator's political career with unproven allegations? Wertheimer and the Boston Globe are short on facts, but long on charges. Brooke, the only black senator, doesn't want "to be run out of office by allegations, mis-statements and misconceptions." All Senator Edward W. Brooke wants is to meet with the Ethics Committee and publicly clear up the matter. He wants to be able to give time to his Massachusetts campaign. While Brooke is in Washington defending his personal integrity, most senators are no longer in Washington, but rather in their home state campaigning.

Brooke's slip in the polls has caused many reputable politicials and public figures to come and campaign for the senator's re-election. Clarence Mitchell, who has been the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People's (NAACP) chief Washington official since 1940, has said, "Brooke is a fine senator with a good record on civil rights issues." Former Secretary of State Henry Kissinger calls Brooke "a national asset," and Joseph L. Raul, Jr., a vice-president and former national chairman of Americans for Democratic Action, said, "Under ordinary circumstances I would be cheering for Paul Tsongsas, who has a very good voting record. But comparison between the two men is impossible. Paul Tsongsa is a beginner... He can't carry water in the senate compared to Brooke."

Brooke's chances for re-election are slim. He has a solid voting record in the Senate and is the sad victim of an over-zealous newspaper and lawyer. Losing Brooke in the Senate will hurt. The Senate is already moving toward the right. Surely, a conservative, all white, male senate is not representative of the U.S.

Who Will We See Next?

By Henry Chamberlain

Television, that modern luxury continually being charged with the mental regression of Americans, has reached maturity. As an electronic medium, it is the most influential factor affecting the results of elections. Beginning with its mass acceptance following the Second World War, television has enjoyed a gradual evolution to the forefront of the public conscience.

Presidents are the easiest to evaluate with regard to the influence of television. In 1948, the first election that television had a role, it was Harry Truman fighting for his political life against the over-confident governor of New York, Republican Thomas Dewey. As Truman's popularity in the beginning of 1948 was the lowest on record, Dewey was seen as a virtual shoe-in to defeat the incumbent President.

Why should the popular Republican nominee raise a finger to campaign in a race he had obviously won? All the polls, including the Gallup, projected an easy Dewey victory. What they overlooked was that Truman was an incumbent, always an advantage, and that the media needed a moving target to create audience interest across the country. You could see Truman stumping around the nation; Dewey was not visible.

Result, Truman began a "whistle-stop" campaign across the country aboard a Presidential train. What copy! The President of the United States training it around the country for all of America to see him on local news. The media followed him as he went; he was news. Nothing like that kind of political assault on the electorate had taken place since Woodrow Wilson fought for the League of Nations in 1919. With all the coverage Truman received compared to the dormant Dewey, he won by two million votes.

The year 1952 gave us the slogan "I Like Ike." Who didn't? General Dwight Eisenhower had saved Europe and perhaps the world with his masterful direction of the European Theatre of World War II. Ike was the star of the Movietone war segments in the local theatres.

His opponent, Adlai Stevenson, was brilliant, interesting, and might have won during some other political era. But Americans loved Ike, and so did the press. Ike was news, Stevenson was an anomaly. Unfortunately for Stevenson, Ike ran for re-election in 1956.

Then came the first televised debates of 1960. Vice-President Nixon was out to continue Republican domination of the top spot. His challenger was the young, dynamic and rich Democratic newcomer from Massachusetts, Sen. John F. Kennedy.

With the November election closing, and the gap between them remaining constant, underdog Kennedy challenged Nixon to a series of televised debates. Nixon agreed, and why shouldn't he? His famous televised "Checkers" speech in 1952 had saved his political career. With his experience, what did he have to fear from the Democratic upstart. However, Kennedy was young, charismatic, and smooth, oh so smooth, on television. To the contrary, Nixon was older, more restrained, and his nose ran to complement his 5 o'clock shadow.

Kennedy won in 1960 because he presented himself better at a time when television began scrutinizing the man; Nixon wasn't prepared for that. Then the television followed Kennedy's fatal drive through Dallas, and we saw Lyndon Johnson take the oath of office aboard Air Force I at a most difficult time. It was time to rally around another man, LBJ.

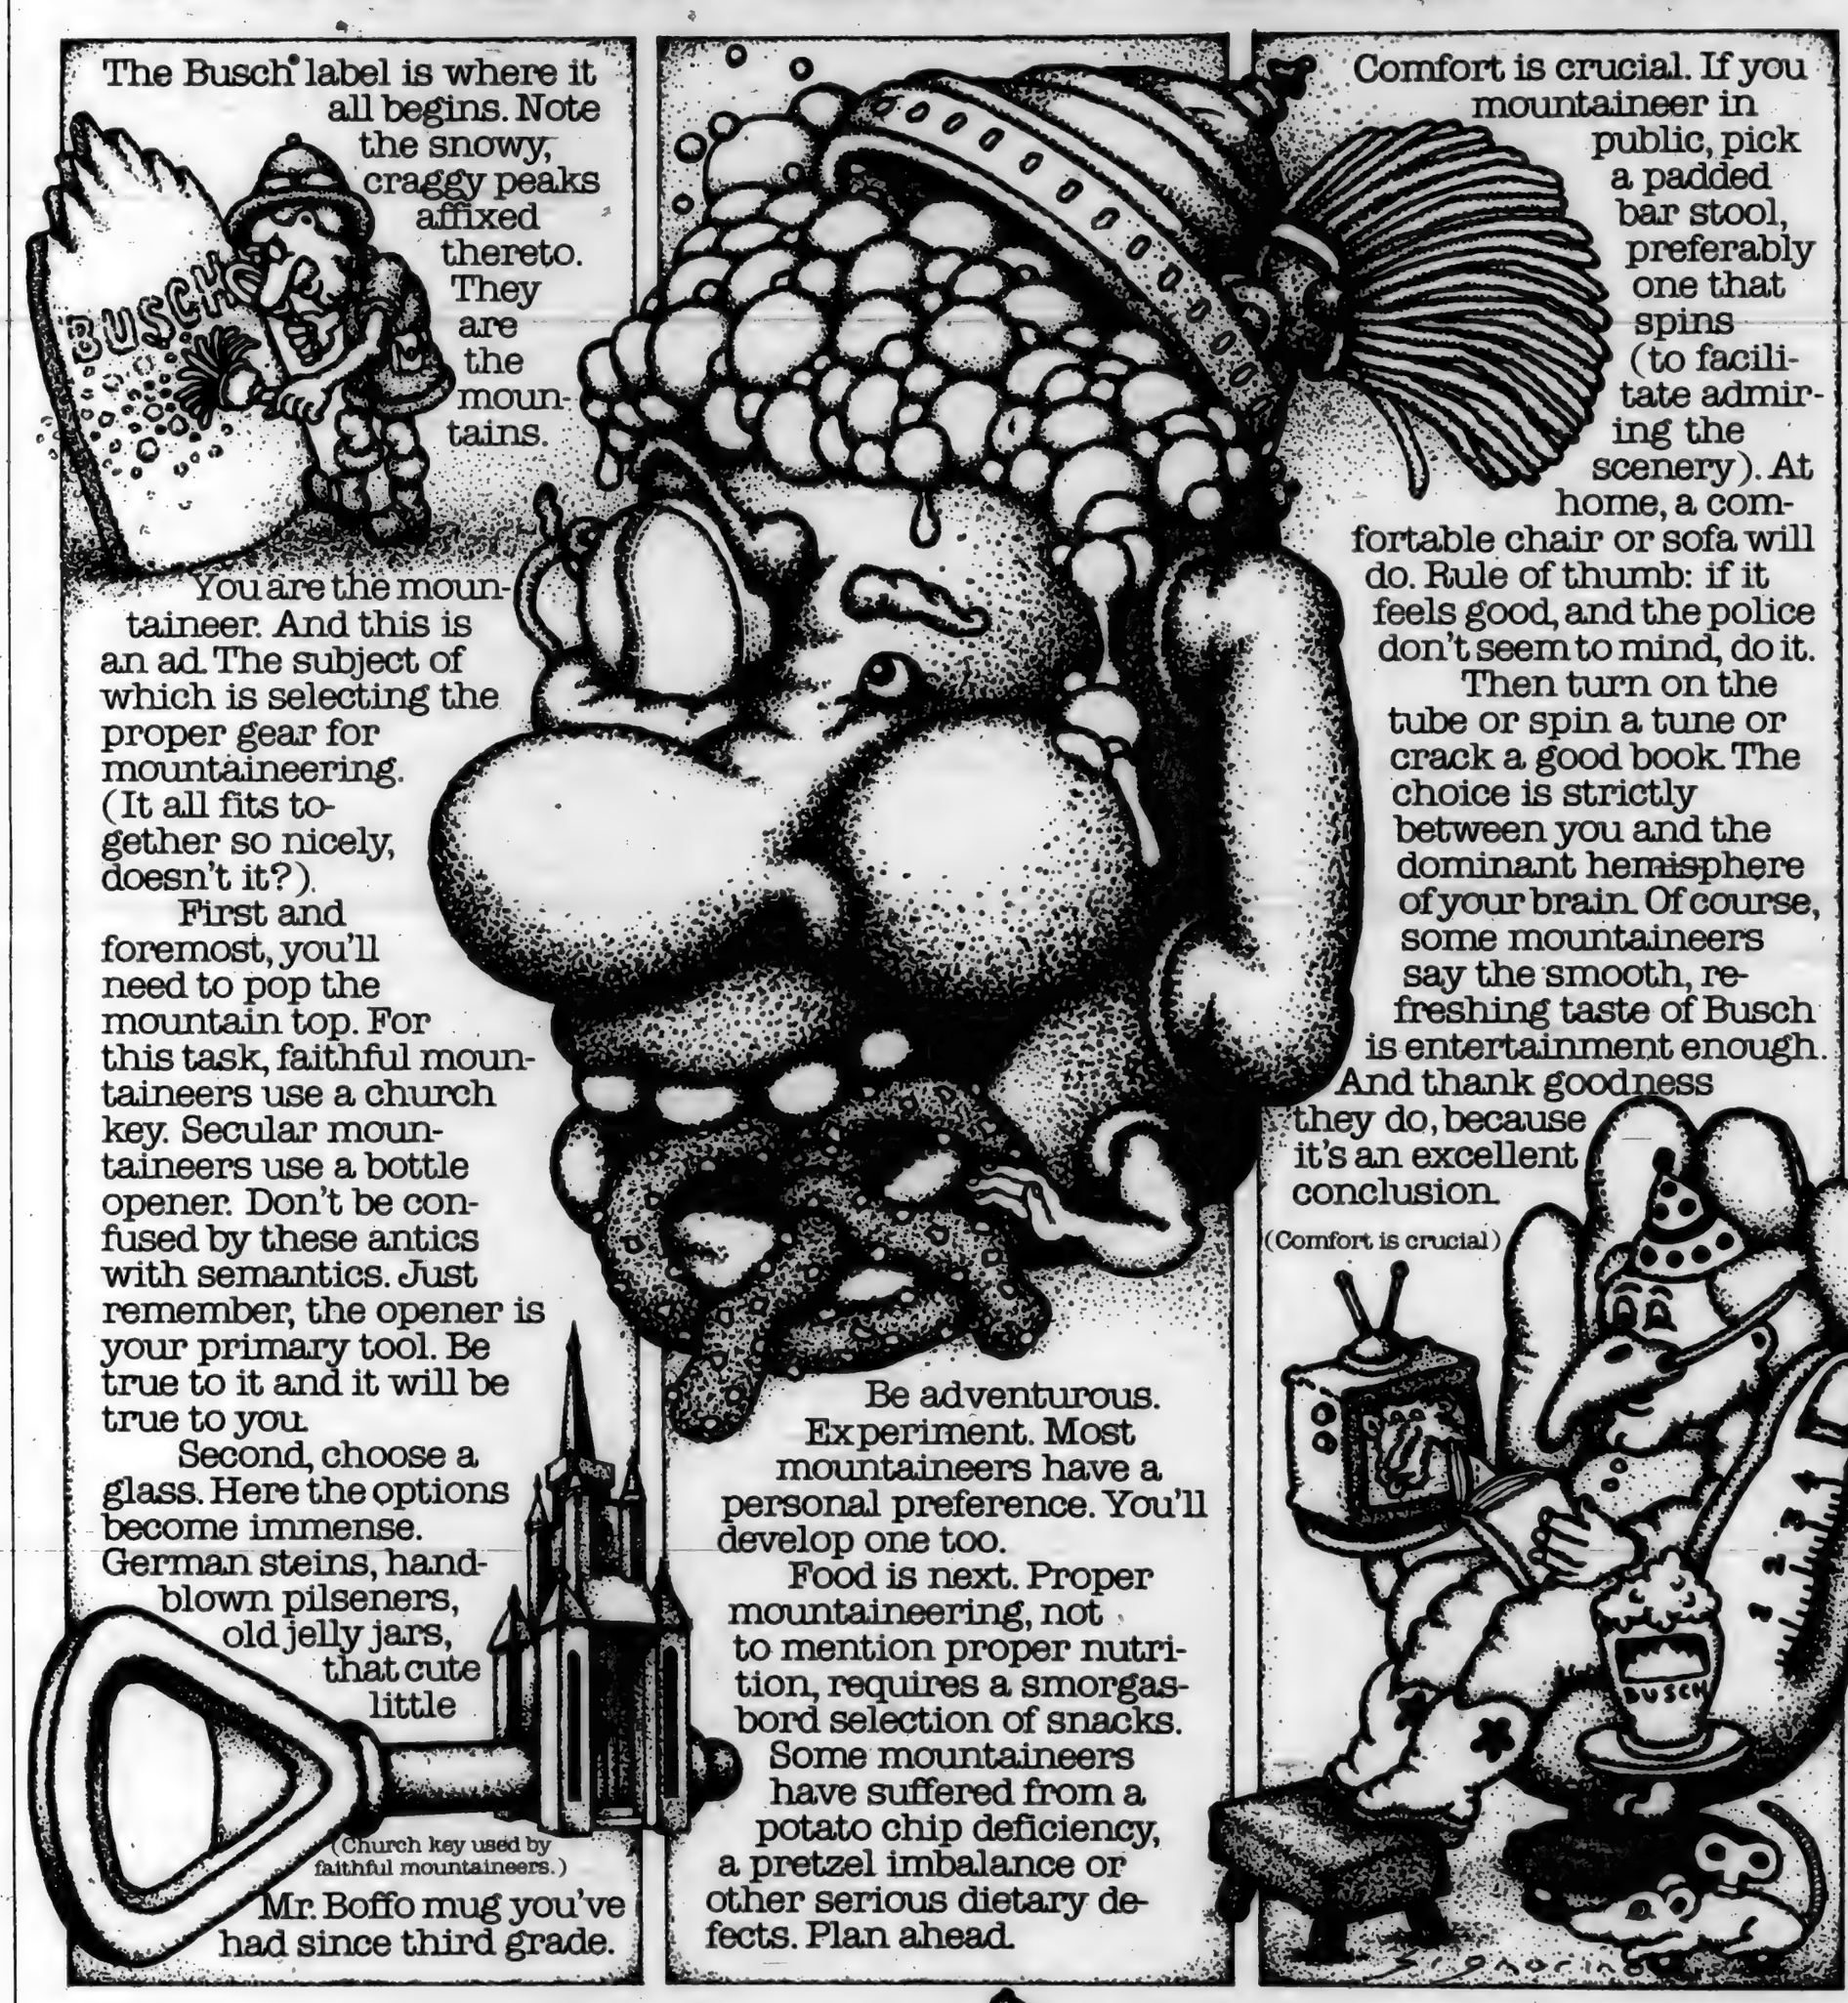
Johnson won in 1964 against his Republican challenger Barry Goldwater. One Johnson ad depicted a little girl in a daisy field with an atomic bomb exploding in the background. You see, Goldwater was going to get us involved in a war in Indo-China. The era of the televised political blitz by candidates had begun.

Johnson won in 1964 by the biggest margin ever, only to take this "mandate" to destroy the Vietcong threat in a contrived war in Vietnam. After tens of thousands of deaths, and unheard of destruction, all shown in living color on the evening news, Johnson did not run for re-election in 1968. Vice-President Hubert Humphrey was the Democratic nominee against – why yes – Richard Milhouse Nixon.

Unfortunately for the always popular HHH, those war scenes from Vietnam, and the televised riots in Chicago, did not preclude victory. Added, Nixon was not about to engage the always verbose Humphrey in any televised debates. That great slogan, "Nixon's the One" ruled the day, and the Republicans returned to the White House.

In 1972, Nixon dominated all screens with spectacular trips to China and the Soviet Union. Meanwhile, the press was chuckling at the "political maverick" from South Dakota, George McGovern. The moderate McGovern became a liberal hero through the media, as they showed him surrounded by hordes of young people. As a result, McGovern was a conservative nightmare. Voters were not ready for George, and "Re-elect the President" ruled the day.

Watergate's abundant national television coverage effectively dampened Republican hopes for 1976. To add salt to the wound, Ronald Reagan caused a conservative split in the party by projecting his charisma to the audience at home. After all, Reagan had been a popular actor.



In 1976, the always divided Democratic Party fielded its usual army of politicians including Morris Udall, Scoop Jackson, and Jimmy Carter. This was a competition to win that first primary in New Hampshire, as the television audience had been geared to see the front-runner. Morris Udall finished second to Carter, whose famous smile shone across the nation through our sets. So the media had its favorite, the obscure one-term governor of Georgia.

Ford almost came back from the Republican purgatory. However, Carter was to control the oval office. Presently, the televised media have relegated Carter to the Truman role of the late 1940's, that of being uncommonly unpopular. Carter is constantly being shown on the screen with nothing new to say. Consequently, the media are already setting up the next election.

The exciting, young, and single Jerry Brown, despite his two-sided nature, will challenge the President. Kennedy should run, for he is the most visible politician in the country as he fulfills an endless appearance schedule, but he's going to wait for 1984. For the Republicans, Howard Baker is relatively young and dependable, while both Ford and Reagan are political has-beens. However, stay tuned for the possibility of another dark-horse as the televised media presents the 1980 Presidential elections in vivid living color.

Mountaineering #2.

SELECTING THE PROPER GEAR

The Busch® label is where it all begins. Note the snowy, craggy peaks affixed thereto. They are the mountains.

You are the mountaineer. And this is an ad. The subject of which is selecting the proper gear for mountaineering. (It all fits together so nicely, doesn't it?).

First and foremost, you'll need to pop the mountain top. For this task, faithful mountaineers use a church key. Secular mountaineers use a bottle opener. Don't be confused by these antics with semantics. Just remember, the opener is your primary tool. Be true to it and it will be true to you.

Second, choose a glass. Here the options become immense. German steins, hand-blown pilseners, old jelly jars, that cute little Mr. Boffo mug you've had since third grade.

(Church key used by faithful mountaineers.)

Be adventurous. Experiment. Most mountaineers have a personal preference. You'll develop one too.

Food is next. Proper mountaineering, not to mention proper nutrition, requires a smorgasbord selection of snacks. Some mountaineers have suffered from a potato chip deficiency, a pretzel imbalance or other serious dietary defects. Plan ahead.

Comfort is crucial. If you mountaineer in public, pick a padded bar stool, preferably one that spins (to facilitate admiring the scenery). At home, a comfortable chair or sofa will do. Rule of thumb: if it feels good, and the police don't seem to mind, do it.

Then turn on the tube or spin a tune or crack a good book. The choice is strictly between you and the dominant hemisphere of your brain. Of course, some mountaineers say the smooth, refreshing taste of Busch is entertainment enough. And thank goodness they do, because it's an excellent conclusion.

(Comfort is crucial)

Don't just reach for a beer. BUSCH® Head for the mountains.

Anheuser-Busch, Inc St Louis, Mo

Theft In Burlington

Beyond All Misconceptions

The Cynic would like to thank S.A. senators Helen Pelzman and Bill Short of the Student Action Committee for initiating this article and doing much of the research involved.

By Diana Greene

"I think many people come to Vermont, especially to the city of Burlington, with blinders on, and after they arrive here they don't want to believe what they're seeing."

corporal Michael Simpson,
Burlington Police Force

"...a great deal of the increase in theft occuring on campus has been from people living off campus."

The National Average: Are We Behind?

While there is no overt evidence that the mafia, murderers, or organized street gangs exist in Burlington, there have been 287 thefts committed on campus and 104 off campus since September. Even if Burlington is low in crime compared with cities like Detroit, Washington, D.C., and N.Y., it is not utopia. Like it or not, everyone is a potential victim of theft.

The myth that Burlington is not marred by the evils of crime and that UVM is one happy family, are beliefs held by many innocent parties who, as of yet, have not been struck down or invaded by the terrorism of a thief. Several misconceptions underlying the causes of theft exist, many of which can cause misfortune and loss of property. Ultimately, these misconceptions will lead to the improvement of crime protection in the city. Three of the most common misconceptions that have ended in disaster are:

(1) The idea that "it won't happen to me." This is only true until it does. Recently, a 21-year-old woman moved to Burlington from a small town in southern Vermont. She had never lived in a city before, hence she had yet to ever lock her 10-speed bike. Her friend from NYC warned her that if she did not lock the bike, it would soon be gone. She dismissed this advice saying, "nothing will happen." One day while walking through Battery Park, her bike was stolen and she was shocked. She locks her new bike.

(2) The notion that leaving your door or car unlocked "for only a minute" means nothing will happen. This has as much validity as Vermont had palm trees. A UVM student went to visit her friend on South Willard Street last Thursday night at 6:30 p.m. thinking she would only stay a few minutes. She didn't bother locking her car. When she returned to her car 20 minutes later, she noticed her pocketbook that had been on the front seat was missing. She now locks her car at all times.

(3) The idea that even though you can break into your own home, nobody else can. On more than one occasion a man locked himself out of his home. Each time he had to climb through the bedroom window because the hinge was busted. One day he came home and found his entire house ransacked and $60 missing. The thief did not break down the door, but instead climbed in through the window. Do not believe that thieves don't know what to look for; they are opportunists and know a steal when they find one.

PREVENTION IS SIMPLE

The reasons for crime are many and complex. However, the preventative measures are simple. The Burlington Police Force and UVM security have said repeatedly: always lock your doors, chain your bicycles, lock your cars, have your mail collected during vacation. Nevertheless, crime has not decreased; in fact, theft is increasing. People need to become aware that crime does indeed go on behind the picturesque setting of the Green Mountains and Lake Champlain. More importantly, students and residents alike need to take responsibility, because, as Patrolman Jose Fernandez said, "There's only so much we can do."

Since September at UVM there have been 279 thefts. Thefts in the dorms can happen anytime. No one specific item is stolen consistently, but the small marketable items like calculators, pot, money, jewels, tape decks are the most common items reported missing.

Who is stealing from the dorms? UVM security chief Scott-Smith says, "No question about it, they are the students." However, Keith Miser, dean of students, had this to say, "It's my feeling that a great deal of the increase in theft occurring on campus has been from

(Continued on page 17)

"It's sort of a balancing act, between an awareness and a panic."
-- Dave Nestor,
Student Activities

THE
LAST CHANCE
SALOON

1st Annual Backgammon
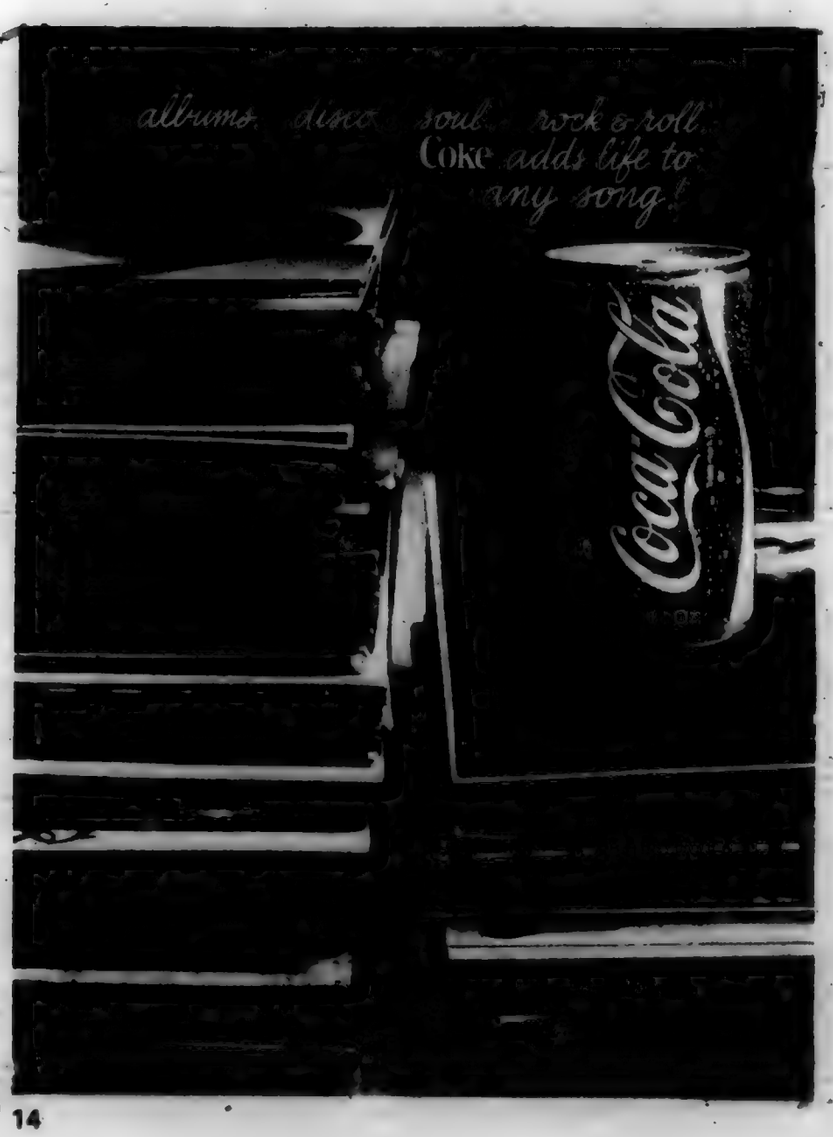
Tournament

Saturday Nov. 11
Starting at Noon

Two Divisions
Beginners with consolation round
Intermediate with double elimination



Prizes
Engraved trophies, gift certificates

Entry Fee
$3.00

Lunch Served

Sign up in Advance
at the Chance

147 Main St.

The End Of The Political Line

Inflation, unemployment, and a seperatist movement may soon put the skids on Pierre Trudeau's rule in Canada.

By Henry Chamberlain

In 1968, a political phenomenon materialized in Canada: Pierre Elliott Trudeau. He was the young, exciting leader of the Liberal Party who assumed the duties of prime minister. After a 10 year rule, Trudeau's Canada has soaring inflation and unemployment, a weak currency, and a separatist movement in Quebec. Politically speaking, Trudeau could well be finished.

Recently, there were fifteen by-election contests, of which the ruling Liberal Party won only two races, those in the province of Quebec. Their major rival, the Progressive Conservatives led by Joe Clark, won 10 seats, all in English Canada while losing only one in Quebec. Perhaps the conservative party with Clark at its head will represent the new face of the country.

Traditionally, by-election contests allow voters to show either pleasure or displeasure with government policy. The Liberal Party and Mr. Trudeau took a drubbing, most believe, because of the depressed economy. Indeed, with consumer prices rising, a high unemployment rate, and a weak currency, it seems time for a change.

THE MANY WOES

The government forecast for 1978 calls for a modest real growth rate, weaker corporate profits, lower housing market activity, a higher rate of unemployment, and a booming rate of increase in the Consumer Price Index, a very pessimistic report for a western nation that should be well on its way down the road to recovery from a recession in the mid-1970's.

For the year 1978, the federal government in Ottawa is expecting an inflationary rate of better than eight percent. That in comparison to its major trading partner to the south, the United States, which is looking at an inflationary rate of six percent. While you might be pleased with the figure's relative parity with the U.S., both of those figures are depressingly high.

That eight percent figure is for the overall consumer price index. Much worse is the projected rise in the food index this year of fifteen percent, compared with a nine percent figure in the United States. Hamburger costs over $2 a pound, as beef prices have soared 70% over the last year. Fresh produce is up over 40%, leading to a quick expansion in community farms.

These fantastic price increases have all been justified by supermarket owners who keep claiming a lean two percent profit. Given the magnitude of the increases, it is extremely hard to believe that those markets are not taking the consumers. The government has done nothing to investigate the situation except to state that the need for a federal food policy might exist. An added irritant is that a few chains control most of the markets, many of them being American subsidiaries.

LET 'EM EAT CAKE

In response to the supermarket's figures, one prominent government economist, Gordon Framst states: "Can you believe that? Neither do I." A consumer rebellion is a distinct possibility if the future does not improve. Also, the Liberal Party has adopted the let-them-eat-cake policy with such statements as "if cabbage is too high, buy something else," by Finance Minister Jean Chretien.

Unemployment is also high projected for about 8.3 percent, and this figure will not decrease soon, as the government is holding back on direct spending to stimulate the economy. As a further cut in spending, the federal government is trimming its payroll, adding more to the ranks of the unemployed.

"Hamburger costs over $2 per pound, as beef prices have soared 70% over the last year."

If those three areas aren't weak enough, the Canadian dollar is currently worth only 84 cents as compared to the American dollar, down from $1.03 in 1974. Against the strong major European currencies, the Canadian dollar shows even less: it is down forty eight percent against the Swiss franc, thirty-five percent against the Japanese yen, and twenty-eight percent against the German mark. An exchange rate affects an entire nation's cost structure, its commodity and asset prices, and its inflation rate — all necessary components of a healthy economy.

THE MUFFLED COMEBACK

To improve the economic picture, Prime Minister Trudeau went before the Canadian people with an economic program on August 1 of this year. His "new strategy" was a compilation of Conservative and New Democratic proposals. He promised to cut spending by $4 billion while reducing the bureaucracy by five thousand people. Further, he said, unemployment insurance should be cut by five hundred and eighty million dollars, with the money redirected toward the creation of new jobs. To aid the household, tax credits of up to two hundred dollars should be created per child for low-income families. Finally, there should be a freeze in the domestic price of oil (which was to increase by $1 per barrel on January 1, 1979).

This fairly aggressive program is meeting with relative contempt, as was illustrated through the by-election results. In the first place, such "megabuck" programs are tossed out regularly with few working details and little actual relief. Secondly, since the proposals are taken from the Liberal's rivals, it seems probable that they do not possess the leadership necessary to make them work. Finally, Prime Minister Trudeau has been in power for a decade, and the press has gradually turned against him, puncturing his credibility.

WELL, IT ISN'T ALL BAD

To his credit, Canada now has strong ties with the two

(continued on page 20)

Singing In The Red Tape

A UVM student takes on a Burlington City Odinance

By Peter Lind

Parking along University Place is considered by many students as a luxury since it is centrally located on campus. But many have also discovered the parking along the street is strictly monitored by the Burlington Police Department. In the following article, I hope students will become aware of one of the problems they face when parking along this street.

As I returned to my parked car on University Place, in front of Williams Hall at noon, on Wednesday October 11, 1978, I found a pink ticket under my windshield wiper. The Burlington Police Department ticket informed me that my car was illegally parked too close to a fire hydrant. According to the officer who had issued the ticket, my car was parked 9.4 feet away from the hydrant. Since there were no signs which specified the distance, no yellow paint on the curb, or no marked parking spaces on the street – there was no way for me, as well as countless other victims, to know what the city ordinance for Burlington specified as the proper distance to park away from a fire hydrant.

I decided to talk with UVM security and obtain their opinion. I explained that I had parked my car on University Place at 7:00 a.m. that morning according to the six-foot distance as explained in the Vermont Driver's Manual, and that there were no signs or markings specified to the contrary. Sergeant Robert Gonyeau advised me to talk to the Burlington City Police, since he felt I had a legitimate complaint.

Once at the Burlington Police Station, I requested to speak with the officer in charge. I asked him why I had received a ticket for parking 9.4 feet away from a fire hydrant. He told me that the City Ordinance required 15 feet and that there was no excuse for ignorance of the law. I informed him that I was not ignorant of the law, that since there were no signs to indicate anything different, I parked according to the six-foot distance specified in the Vermont Driver's Manual. He again referred me to the City Ordinance and said that I had to pay the fine of five dollars. I asked where one could obtain a copy of the ordinance and he referred me to City Hall.

A clerk at City Hall took just over five minutes to find the City Ordinance stating 15 feet as the proper distance to park from a fire hydrant in the city of Burlington.

Photo by Debbie Walsh

The point of controversy: how close can we park?

Again I spoke with Sgt. Gonyeau, who suggested that I contact Jackie Gribbons, assistant to the vice-president for administration. Gribbons patiently listened to the situation and advised me to do more in-depth research into the problem to be sure that I had my facts straight. She also suggested that I speak with Richard Scott-Smith, chief of UVM campus security. As Chief Scott-Smith was occupied for the day, I made an appointment to see him early Thursday morning.

Upon leaving Jackie Gribbons, I went to the office of one of Burlington's city attorneys, Bill Sorrell. He too was occupied for the day, so I made an appointment to see him Monday afternoon.

Later I explained the entire problem to Scott-Smith, and to be sure that I had a legitimate complaint, he looked up the Vermont State Law pertaining to parking near fire hydrants and found it indeed to be six feet. He then agreed that I had a very good complaint and encouraged me to pursue the problem. He suggested that I speak with Captain Richard Beaulieu of the Burlington City Police and see if he could help resolve the problem.

Again I found myself down at the Burlington Police Station, but this time in the office of Captain Richard Beaulieu. I handed him my ticket and explained the contradiction between state and city regulations, and that there were no signs, no painted curb, and no painted parking spaces on the street which informed drivers of the proper distance. After a discussion of the problem, Beaulieu admitted that there was a conflict between the state law and the city ordinance of Burlington. He then took out a pen and offered to void my parking ticket, but I declined it. I explained to him it was not just a matter of my five dollars, but a matter which affected any UVM faculty or student who parked their vehicle on University Place. I told him that I wanted to have the curb painted yellow or for signs to be put up the same as other fire hydrants in the city which are properly marked. Captain Beaulieu said he could be of no further assistance and advised me to talk with City Attorney Bill Sorrell.

To my surprise, after returning from classes that afternoon, Mr. Sorrell called me at my apartment. He asked me to explain the problem and I proceeded to tell him of the situation. He said he understood Captain Beaulieu offered to void my ticket and wondered why I didn't let him do so. I explained that I wanted to see the curb painted yellow or for signs to be put up so other drivers would not have the same problem as myself. Mr. Sorrell informed me he could be of no further help and bid me a good day.

Again I spoke with Chief Scott-Smith to inform him that the City Attorney could not help me and to see if he had any further ideas or comments about the matter. He suggested I get some legal advice from Paul

(continued on page 20)

Interview With The Muse

Seventeen remarkable women speak on creativity and power, aural history with photos.

BOOKSTACKS
Pine Street between Main & College
862-8513
Open Weeknights 8pm. (fri-9)

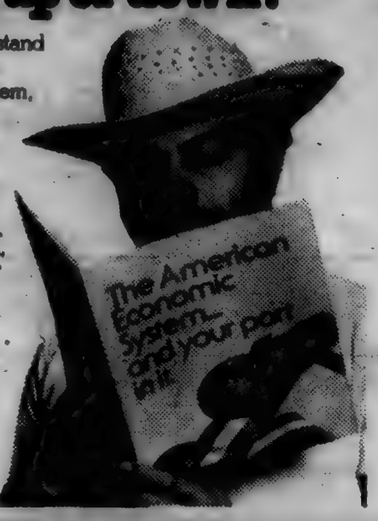
THE ROCKY HORROR PICTURE SHOW
R
FRIDAY & SATURDAY AT 11:30
Those with costumes will be admitted for $2.00

AGATHA CHRISTIE'S DEATH ON THE NILE
From the creators of "Murder on the Orient Express"
7:00 9:40
PG

Richard Dreyfuss
the Big Fix
7:05 9:15
PG

CINEMA 1 & 2
BURLINGTON PLAZA
RT 7 AT I 189 SO BURLINGTON
PHONE 862-5070 ANYTIME

TPI EXPRESS
24 MAIN ST. WINOOSKI
655-3005 655-0977



...FAST, FREE DELIVERY!
also 23 Park St. Essex Jct. 879-6333

In-House Pitchers of Draft only 50¢
with purchase of a large pizza
Fresh Whole Wheat Pizza upon request

Do you really know what happens when business profits go up or down?

If we citizens don't understand the basic workings of our American Economic System, how can we make intelligent decisions about it? Every American ought to know what this booklet says. It's easy to read, interesting—and free. For a copy, write "Economics," Pueblo, Colorado 81009.

The American Economic System.

A public service message of The Advertising Council and U.S. Department of Commerce presented by this Newspaper.

NATURAL.

CRISPIN LEATHER offers the finest in leather outerwear from FRYE and Timberland boots to coats and parkas.
Our selection of jackets and coats ranges from Sheepskin Lined
Leather Flight Jackets to Jungle Ranch Hide
Sheepskin Parkas.
We also carry
Leather Handbags,
Vests and Elkskin
Mocassins.

CRISPIN
Leather

160 College St.

Good Health

America: The Best Fed Nation?

By Barry Gustin

People who eat brown rice and whole wheat bread are called food faddists, while people who gobble Fruity Pebbles and Count Dracula are considered normal, red-blooded Americans. At a time when the character of our food supply is changing swifter than ever before, it is vital that every consumer understand the nature of this change.

The food industry has become one of America's most profitable enterprises. Each year, hundreds of new products are developed and competitively marketed. Unfortunately, the trend is towards less wholesome, less nourishing food. Because of refining which removes most nutrients, and adulturation which adds back a mile-long list of chemical additives as well as an abundance of fat, sugar, and salt, today's food has become merely the shadow of its former self. On the whole, it has become downright inferior. Nowhere in this new technology of food fabrication can one find an appreciation for the intricacies of human nourishment.

America has gained the title "the best fed nation in the world." In some respects, this may be true. Certainly there is plenty to go around although the residents of some impoverished sections of the country would argue otherwise. Furthermore, the food is probably the safest. There is little risk of infectious disease from food purchased in grocery stores. But what about the quality? Does the food we eat allow us to maintain the best possible health?

Several studies conducted over the past few years have responded negatively to this question. There no longer seems to be any doubt that problems exist. Virtually all the surveys dealing with the nutritional status of Americans have pointed to one or more nutritional problems in the segment of the population that was examined. In the most extensive of the studies, conducted between 1968 and 1970 and called the Ten-State Nutrition Survey, the diet of thousands of people – poor and rich alike – were assessed. The Survey indicated that "a significant proportion of the population surveyed was malnourished or was at a high risk of developing nutritional problems."

Two more recent surveys were conducted with teenagers in Kentucky and with coal miners in Southern Illinois. Of the teenagers surveyed, there was a highly significant number whose diet was less than two-thirds of the Recommended Daily Allowance (RDA) for calcium, iron, and vitamin A. As an aside, Dr. P. Murray of the Canadian Food and Drug Administration has estimated that approximately 26% of the American populace consumes substantially below the RDA for vitamin A. In the coal miner survey, a similarly shocking number of individuals were procuring food that provided far below the RDA for vitamin C, and calcium.

These surveys have added impact when one considers the meaning of the RDA's. The RDA is purposely set a fixed percentage above what is normally thought of as being an adequate intake for most people. This errs on at least five counts:

...First, the RDAs are not necessarily adequate to meet the additional requirements of persons depleted by disease, traumatic stresses, prior dietary inadequacies, or various medications including such stand-bys as aspirin or the oral contraceptive.

...Second, the RDAs are measured as they are only to prevent the obvious deficiency diseases such as scurvy (vitamin C deficiency), pellagra (niacin deficiency), and beri-beri (thiamine deficiency). Many studies have been conducted on several species of animals including monkeys, and have determined that the amounts of some nutrients needed for optimum cellular nutrition and thus, optimum health, are anywhere from four to 250 times the RDA, calculated on a corresponding weight to weight basis. It is reasonable to assume that this increased need applies to man also.

...Third, the RDA list in 1968 underwent 55 changes in values from the 1964 list, with variations from 20% to 700%. The 1974 list involved similar see-sawing. Senator William Proxmire has stated that the Food and Nutrition Board of the National Research Council, which sets the standard, "is both the creature of the food industry and heavily financed by the food industry." The lower the RDA's, Proxmire contends, the more nutritious the products of the food industry will appear.

...Fourth, Dr. Roger Williams in his keenly perceptive book, Biochemical Individuality, clearly demonstrates the wide variation in body structure, function, and nutritional need amongst individuals. Most of the variations far exceed the RDA's "allowance for safety" designated by the Food and Nutrition Board.

...Fifth, the RDA assumes that the average American diet which more often than not consists of a hamburger or two, french fries, and a cake, will supply all the necessary nutritional elements in adequate amounts. As nutritional surveys have indicated, it doesn't. The American preference for convenience foods which are usually processed and refined, and the technological sophistication which has caused the depletion of the nutritional content of soils and has favored the harvesting of produce long before it has ripened, have insured the lack of nutrients in much of our food supply. Moreover, the popularity of severe weight loss programs and the tendency to eat irregularly (such as skipping breakfast) have added fuel to the fire. To sum up, the prevailing trend of food production and consumption in the U.S. is such that undernutrition malnourishment has become a preponderant and ever-increasing health dilemma.

While Americans are increasingly consuming foods inferior in nutritive quality, they are at the same time consuming food which leads to another kind of malnutrition: overnutrition – which leads to obesity. Dr. Ogden Johnson, the former director of nutrition of the Food and Drug Administration, has estimated that 40 million Americans are overweight. In our sedentary society, this is no wonder. Even more startling is that statistical tables of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company indicate that more than half the people in certain age groups are overweight.

(continued on page 18)

Barry Gustin is the Good Health columnist for the Cynic.

Beyond All Misconceptions

Continued on page 13

people living off campus."

Miser agree that students who steal from other students are not stealing for need; they actually have plenty of money. As evidence, Miser added that, "it usually has been very difficult for students caught stealing to articulate the question of why."

Most thefts on campus occur during the daytime or early morning hours when students are in classes or asleep. At the beginning of the semester when the students are moving in, the theft rate is particularly high. With all the unfamiliar faces and activities going on, thieves are neither easily recognized nor appear suspicious carrying boxes. Another popular time for theft is during vacations. At these times, UVM security works the same hours as when school is in session; however, since there are no people in the buildings, there are bigger problems. When asked whether UVM should tighten their security system, Dean Miser had this to say, "I am opposed to making UVM a high security campus. I think a lot of the thefts we have here are because of carelessness or lack of awareness on the part of the students. I would rather combat it by trying to get students to lock their doors, chain their bikes, to do those kinds of things to take away the temptation of theft. I think the environment most people want and like to live in is one of low security."

In Burlington from July 1977 – June 1978 there were 943 burglaries, 1868 larcenies and 244 car thefts. Since September 10 there have been approximately 105 burglaries, 75 theft of vehicles, and 45 bicycles stolen. The majority of these crimes occur in the north end, although theft hits all neighborhoods.

Theft follows certain seasonal patterns in Burlington. The months of October, November, April, May and June are the peak months (October and November are known as "pre-Christmas" months). The majority of the thieves are male juveniles.

The awareness factor among the community is very low. "I've been to numerous thefts, burglaries, and so forth where the people say 'I didn't know this would happen in Burlington'," said patrolman Jose Fernandez. It appears that cautionary measures are only initiated as a reaction to a theft or break-in which happens close-by.

Some common facts known about burglaries are the following:

–Well over 50% of burglaries occur in the daylight hours because of decreased suspicion and lower risk of encountering an inhabitant or patroling cruiser.

–Any burglar with minimum competency can get into a house within four minutes; if not, he'll get discouraged and probably leave.

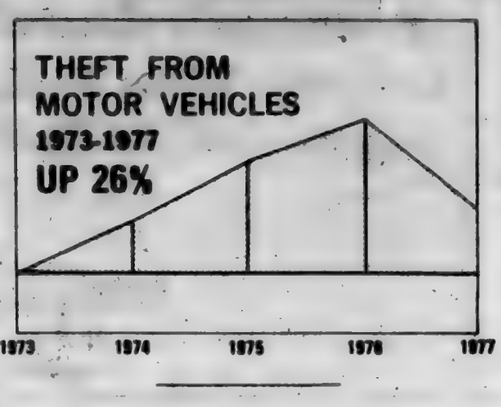
–Most burglars are opportunists who have no idea of their target when they leave their home.

Detective Richard Garrow of the Burlington Police Dept. discussed some of the factors which encourage or discourage thieves to operate. He described a triangle labelled "desire" and "ability" at the foot and "opportunity" at the tip of the narrow apex. He said that while preventative measures can't limit the desire factor because it is so complexly derived, the factors of ability and opportunity can be limited through low-cost tools and techniques. Limiting the latter two factors in turn decreases desire because the likelihood of success decreases.

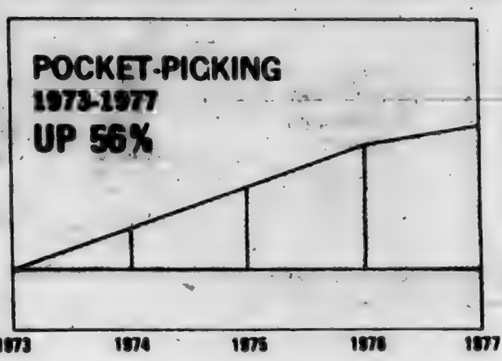
A general awareness of one's neighbors and surroundings is a good policy of preventing thefts. A course of action that modifies the environment can ward off the possibilities of theft. "I think awareness is there; it's for the people to take the initiative to accept it. We (BPD) can't go into somebody's house and say 'Hey we're here to increase prevention and to tell you what you should do," said Garrow. The initiative is up to the individual. The preventative measures that can be taken against theft are simple and they have been said – yet one more time cannot hurt, especially since Thanksgiving is just around the corner:

Double lock doors.

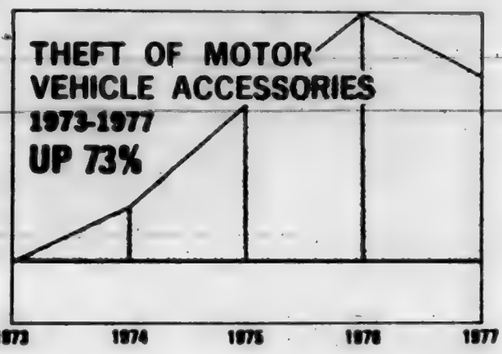
Install lighting systems.



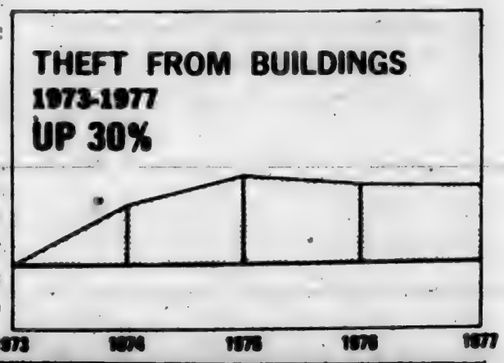
Keep bikes indoors.



Etch a symbol or serial number on items such as stereos, tape players, typewriters.



Tell neighbors when you leave town.



*Call the police or security anytime you see something suspicious.

One last fact: About 63% of all burglaries, or nearly 2,000,000, are committed in houses or apartments yearly. Whether or not you consider Burlington's theft problem a serious one is up to you; however the need to recognize theft as a reality is certain.

Creative Sound offers carefully selected stereo systems We'd like to introduce you to our new matched SYSTEM $379

Our stereo systems have become known for the high quality and value that they present. It's taken over 12 months to find just the right products to achieve such a fine system, priced under $400, and yet worthy of your ears. System $379 will bring years of high fidelity performance to you, with the same high standards of performance that you might have paid twice as much for several years ago. In this sense, System $379 is truely a value breakthrough.

System $379 consists of the new Technics SA80 receiver, it features a powerful 30 watt RMS output, and an FM tuner that is as sensitive as many receivers costing more. And it has many of the same high performance characteristics that are found in even the most expensive Technics receivers, such as: flat group delay IF, phase-lock-loop FM, 90dB phono S/N radio.

We've coupled this first class receiver to the Fisher MS 135 passive radiator speaker system. These very efficient speakers will surprise even the most critical ear, for their high clarity and accurate base handling response are very good. When you listen to System $379, you'll agree that these speakers are far from ordinary.

Last, but not least, we've included the BSR2260 automatic turntable. It comes equipped with the QLM 30 MDIII stereo cartridge. The BSR2260 is a very reliable performer. It features cue control as well as auto eject at the end of a record. It can also be operated manual as many audiophiles prefer.

Upon credit approval System $379 may be purchased for as little as $37 down with $17.10 a month for 24 months (A.P.R. 18.11%)

Lafayette radio electronics Creative Sound

• 137 Pearl St., Essex Jct. • Barre-Montpelier Rd., Barre • "In the Mall between Kmart & Martin's," South Burlington

Tough Boots- For Tough Trucking

These tough boots from walker are just what you need to help tackle the upcoming weather. They are 100% guaranteed waterproof with a leather lining, cushioned insole, and a lug sole for the ultimate in long-lasting quality and comfort.

LOCUT
$51.90
Reg. $60.00

HICUT
$54.90
Reg. $63.00

walker
SHOE COMPANY

Jan's

90 CHURCH ST.
DOWNTOWN BURL.
864-4735

Vermont's Quality Shoe Store

Mon. & Fri. 'til 9:00
Mastercharge/VISA
Parking & Bus Tokens

Lane Series
1978·79 Season
University of Vermont

The Sunny Caribbean comes to Burlington with

THE TRINIDAD FOLK FESTIVAL

40 singer-dancers, steel drums, a mini-carnaval, a folk choir and more.

NEW DATE!!
Saturday November 4, 1978
8:00PM
Memorial Auditorium

Remember:

UVM Students receive a dollar discount on all Lane Series tickets.

BOX OFFICE: The Ticket Store, Park Centre Building, 131 Main Street, Burlington, Vermont 05401 — Lane Campus Box Office, Grasse Mount, University of Vermont, Burlington, Vermont 05405
CALL: (802) 863-0466 — (802) 656-3410
HOURS: 10:00 A.M.-4:00 P.M. Monday-Saturday — 10:00 A.M.-4:00 P.M. Monday-Friday
TICKETS: $7.50 and $6.50; $6.50 and $4.00 (with UVM student ID)
RESERVATIONS: Held 72 hours. Mail Orders accepted with payment

The Best Fed Nation?

continued from page 16

People who are overweight have a greater than average likelihood of having a heart attack, developing high blood pressure, or suffering from diabetes. The foods which lead to obesity and which minimize the intake of minerals, vitamins, and fiber are: high sugar products, refined white flour, alcohol, and high-fat items. Overeating is a major health problem, but it is important to remember that the type of food may be implicated as a contributor to disease. An example of this would be the connection of dietary meat to cancer of the colon. Most people assume that these serious illnesses are a natural and inescapable part of life — the consequence of growing old. Yet, they are virtually unknown in some cultures. In short, these may be considered unnecessary diseases. With proper eating, exercise, and the avoidance of smoking, we would probably witness a marked reduction in most of these conditions.

"People who are overweight have a greater than average likelihood of having a heart attack."

Nutrition education is vital. If health considerations are not impressive enough to cause most people to learn nutrition and change their diets, soaring food prices may be. Fortunately, the diet that is best for our health is substantially less expensive than what most of us indulge in. Red meat is by far the most expensive item in our food budget — and, of course, we obtain some protein at the expense of eating large amounts of saturated fat and cholesterol. Beans, lentils, and brown rice are economical compared with the meat or cheese for which they can substitute. Have you tried a soy or lentil burger? Maybe you should. Coca Cola and potato chips are low in nutrition and high in cost. Unsweetened fruit juices and whole potatoes are much better buys.

One final note about nutrition education. The present system has not been able to keep up with the swiftly changing character of the food supply. The old advice about choosing foods every day from the four basic food groups has become outmoded. It is no help for making wise choices. Vegetables are processed and are sugared and salted, dairy products are manipulated (artificial cheese containing no dairy whatsoever has recently been produced), and breads are made from refined flours. Most of the information that we get about foods and nutrition comes from either the food industry which aggressively advertises the wholesome nature of their products so as to increase profitable returns, or the numerous popular nutrition books which either wallow in the nostalgia of old concepts or purport a dogma which has little basis in scientific fact. The onslaught of this propaganda can only be dealt with objectively if we learn the facts for ourselves. Otherwise, we remain gullible and accepting.

Reasonably unbiased information is hard to come by. But it is available. It's just that it has been wrapped in bureaucratic red tape by special interest groups in industry, science, and politics and is not being adequately communicated to the public. Agreed, there is still much to learn — contemporary nutrition is in its infancy. The present model based on a handful of minerals, vitamins, protein, fat, and carbohydrates does not do justice to the complex interaction between these and other substances (many of which are undefined) in living tissue. However, enough is known about nutrition and health to advocate general recommendations to the public.

The most worthy publication to date dealing with what comprises a healthful and cost-efficient diet is the Dietary Goals for the U.S., published in 1977 by the Senate Select Committee on Nutrition and Human Needs. As expected, the report has been attacked by vested interests from nutritional science and the food industry, but in spite of some obvious shortcomings, it remains a truly positive step in the right direction. I urge my readers to purchase a copy. There are some available in the campus bookstore. Otherwise, send $2.30 to: U.S. Government Printing Office, Washington D.C. 20402. Include stock no. 052-070-04376-8.

Sources available upon request.

Don't Forget The Lattie Coor Short Story Contest

Stories Due Nov. 20

Don't Fail our Leader

collegiate crossword

© Edward Julius, 1977 Collegiate CW77-24

ACROSS

1 "The Dark at the Top of the ——"
7 Like blood fluid
13 —— fever
14 Like a rosebush
16 Rubberneck (2 wds.)
18 Sports-minded (abbr.)
19 Water ——
20 Dutch commune
21 Map abbreviation
22 See —— eye
23 Trucks, for short
25 Tavern brew
26 Writer Anais
27 Records
28 European capital
32 Dessert item
33 Rogers and Clark
34 Dark red
35 Connive
38 Hockey seating area
42 "Poppycock!"
43 Suffix for child
44 Opposite of pos.
45 Platoons
46 School, in Paris
49 Prefix: height
50 Baseball positions (abbr.)
51 Horse used in racing
52 You: Ger.
53 Stage-door crowd (2 wds.)
58 Record players
59 Young girls
60 Wandering
61 Puts up

DOWN

1 Sink a ship
2 Native of North Carolina
3 Onassis, for short
4 Two of three little words
5 Iterate
6 Periodic payments
7 Author of "Confessions of Nat Turner"
8 Inquisitive interjections
9 Deer
10 Pay dirt
11 Slovenly
12 More shabby
13 Ancient Egyptian symbol
15 Stylish
17 Miss Fields
23 Blow one's —— 24 Comforts
29 Accost
30 Actress Schneider, et al.
31 Sailor's assent
32 Equivoque
34 Card game
35 NFL coach Don, and family
36 Disprove
37 Lifting machine
38 Summarize
39 Peeved (3 wds.)
40 Acts as judge
41 Exit
43 Meal
47 Hungarian composer
48 Uneven
54 Hockey superstar
55 Suffix: land area
56 Mr. Hessen
57 L.A. campus

The Controversial Vitamin C

Editor's Note – This article, the final segment of last week's Good Health Column, is being printed here as it was unable to appear in last week's Cynic.

allowances" set at specific figures becomes open to question. We know the level of each nutrient necessary to prevent the gross symptoms of deficiencies in most people, but we do not know the levels necessary for optimum cellular nutrition and thus, optimum health. Perhaps the common cold is entirely or in part one of the results of a continually low intake of vitamin C. Research is urgently needed to discover the nutritional requirements of representative human populations over the full range of both health and disease.

In view of the fact that individual needs for each nutrient varies tremendously as well as the fact that the Food and Nutrition Board of the National Academy of Sciences is perpetually changing the RDAs, it would be wise when reading the labels on your favorite foods to take those nutrient percentages with a grain of salt – we may find, one day, that they are indeed ridiculous, dangerous, and arbitrary.

All bases of estimation lead to the conclusion that for young guinea pigs and young humans alike, the needs of vitamin C for healthy development may be much higher than has been accepted. It would appear that young people need vitamin C in the order of one to four grams per day for best health, the actual level being dependent upon the variable requirements of each person as determined by nutritional and biochemical individuality. It is probable that adult needs are comparable especially when stress factors are taken into account. Research on monkeys has tended to corroborate these conclusions since they too need much higher levels for best health over what is required to prevent scurvy.

The implication of these findings goes much further. If this gross uncertainty in human requirements for vitamin C prevails in nutritional science, can there not be comparable uncertainty with respect to other nutrients? The whole concept of "recommended daily

SORRY!

Last week's article, "Down in Jungleland," was written by Lauren-Glenn Davitian, whose name did not appear with the article.

Stuft Shirt
A Beef & Seafood House
at
135 PEARL ST. • BURLINGTON
featuring an extensive Lunch & Dinner Menu

• WEEKDAY SPECIAL •
Fresh Swordfish $4.95
• WEEKENDS •
Prime Rib $5.95
• SUNDAY SPECIAL •
Buffet Brunch $4.95
"with seconds on us" — featuring Eggs Benedict

OPEN
MONDAY-SATURDAY 11 AM-10 PM
SUNDAY 11 AM-3 PM
Master Charge & VISA Accepted

FOR RESERVATIONS & INFORMATION — 864-9544

Go Home By Bus This Weekend!

| Typical Destinations | Departures From Burlington | Regular Round Trip | 7 Day Excursion |
|---|---|---|---|
| ALBANY | 7:45 AM – 11:30 AM2:30 PM – 5:00 PM11:30 PM | $26.55 | $20.95 |
| BARRE | 8:05 AM – 11:30 AM2:00 PM – 5:45 PM | 7.35 | 5.80 |
| BENNINGTON | 7:45 AM – 11:30 AM5:00 PM – 11:30 PM | 16.95 | 13.35 |
| BOSTON | 8:05 AM – 12:01 PM2:00 PM – 5:45 PM1:00 AM | 36.60 | 28.90 |
| BRATTLEBORO | 8:05 AM – 11:30 AM2:00 PM | 24.25 | 19.15 |
| CONCORD, N.H. | 8:05 AM – 11:30 AM2:00 PM – 1:00 AM | 26.25 | 20.70 |
| HARTFORD, CONN. | 8:05 AM – 11:30 AM2:00 PM | 39.05 | 39.05 |
| MONTPELIER | 8:05 AM – 11:30 AM2:00 PM – 5:45 PM1:00 AM | 6.85 | 5.40 |
| MONTREAL | 8:15 AM – 3:15 PM6:30 PM – 8:30 PM | 17.60 | 13.90 |
| NEW YORK CITY | 7:45 AM – 11:30 AM2:30 PM – 5:00 PM11:30 PM | 51.15 | 51.15 |
| NORTHAMPTON, MA. | 8:05 AM – 11:30 AM2:00 PM | 31.20 | 24.60 |
| PARAMUS, N.J. | 7:45 AM – 11:30 AM2:30 PM – 5:00 PM11:30 PM | 51.05 | 51.05 |
| RANDOLPH | 8:05 AM – 11:30 AM2:00 PM – 5:45 PM1:00 AM | 10.00 | 7.90 |
| RUTLAND | 7:45 AM – 11:30 AM2:30 PM – 5:00 PM11:30 PM | 10.40 | 8.20 |
| ST. JOHNSBURY | 2:00 PM | 13.60 | 10.85 |
| SPRINGFIELD, MA. | 8:05 AM – 11:30 AM2:00 PM | 33.75 | 26.65 |
| WHITE RIVER JCT. | 8:05 AM – 12:01 PM2:00 PM – 5:45 PM1:00 AM | 13.25 | 10.55 |

For information to points not indicated, please call 864-6811

VERMONT TRANSIT LINES

Make Your Move...

to this special Backgammon and Chess set SALE

10%
Discount with this Ad

Ebenezer Allen
Gift Shop
Burlington Square Mall 863-4215

Trudeau . . .

continued from page 14

communist world powers, China and the Soviet Union. He has given his nation a more independent international stance by removing the ten thousand Canadian troops involved with the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. Further, in 1971 the Parliament increased federal aid to economically depressed regions of Canada, and they extended unemployment insurance benefits to cover nearly all workers.

Finally, as a direct consequence of the French Separatist movement in Quebec, the Parliament passed the Official Languages Act in 1969. This piece of legislation states that French must be used in districts where at least 10 percent of the people speak French, with the converse true for the English language. Unfortunately for Trudeau, instead of appeasing the French Canadians, the legislation just intensified their desire for a separate French state.

VIVA LA PARTI QUEBECOIS

By the mid-1970's, Rene Levesque and le Pai Quebecois were in full control of local government in the province of Quebec. They were also pushing for a referendum to establish their independence from the rest of Canada. Presently, the French separatists are talking of a "sovereignty-association," meaning political independence but continued economic links, including a common currency with Canada. Also, Mr. Levesque says he has ruled out unilateral independence without first negotiating a deal with the federal government in Ottawa. However, separation of some sort seems inevitable given the scenario and the variables.

"The Canadian dollar is currently worth only 84 cents compared to the American dollar."

After 10 years at the reins of Canadian government, the Liberal Party is about to give way to new leadership. Trudeau and his party have been unable to put together a sound economic policy, or to passify the French Canadians and keep the nation intact. The recent by-elections were a sign of the political demise of Trudeau. If he can establish another figure at the head of the Liberal Party, perhaps the party can maintain its control in next spring's general elections. However, Trudeaumania has faded and so has its inspiration.

UVM DANCE-A-THON

TO BENEFIT THE
VERMONT LUNG ASSOCIATION
SPONSORED BY EAST CAMPUS RESIDENTS
OPEN TO UVM STUDENTS — FACULTY — STAFF ONLY
*(AT LEAST ONE PARTNER MUST BE UNIVERSITY AFFILIATED)
NOVEMBER 10-11-12, 1978 (7 PM FRIDAY-1 AM SUNDAY)

GRAND PRIZE
$500 CASH SCHOLARSHIP
$250 TO EACH TEAM MEMBER FOR MOST MONEY RAISED FOR THE LUNG ASSOCIATION.
NUMBER OF HRS. DANCED X PLEDGES = TOTAL

MARATHON PRIZE
$300 CASH SCHOLARSHIP
$150 TO EACH TEAM MEMBER FOR THE MOST MONEY RAISED BY THE TEAM DANCING THE ENTIRE 30 HOURS!
(GRAND PRIZE WINNERS EXCLUDED)

THIRD PRIZE
$100 IN SAVINGS BONDS
A $50 SAVINGS BOND FOR EACH TEAM MEMBER FOR THE THIRD LARGEST AMOUNT OF MONEY RAISED.

!! WITH SPECIAL PRIZE DANCE CONTESTS !!
DANCE THE NIGHT AWAY AT
M.A.T. DINING HALL
Get Information and Registration Packets at the following:
HARRIS-MILLIS Front Desk

Contact Jeff Hansen: 656-4207, Joe Snee: 656-3848, Joyce Wagoner: 656-2955

Red Tape . . .

continued from page 15

Sutherland, the university attorney. Chief Scott-Smith explained that the university attorney is involved only in matters that are directly related to UVM, and if Mr. Sutherland didn't consider this a campus matter then I would have to find legal help elsewhere.

Tuesday morning I explained the problem to Mr. Sutherland and also informed him about whom I had spoken with over the past week to have this problem dealt with. To my delight, he agreed that it was a campus problem and offered his assistance. He first suggested that I get my five dollar parking ticket voided since I had to pay the fine within the seven days after it was issued or let the Burlington Police Department know that I wasn't going to pay it. He also suggested I let him make a few phone calls to see what he could have done about having the fire hydrants properly marked.

Promptly after leaving Sutherland's office, I again went to the Burlington Police Station and had Beaulieu void my five dollar parking ticket.

Several days later, Sutherland informed me that he contacted City Attorney Bill Sorrell and that Mr. Sorrell suggested he first speak with Don Morley, City Traffic Engineer. When contacted by Mr. Sutherland, Mr. Morley maintained that it was not up to him to mark the fire hydrants on University Place. Sutherland talked further with Sorrell, who suggested that he write a letter to the Burlington Traffic Commission and explain the problem to them. Mr. Sutherland promptly wrote the letter and now he and I are waiting for a response from the Traffic Commission.

...it would have been a lot easier to pay the fine...

Looking back at what has happened over the last three weeks, I admit that it would have been a lot easier to have paid the fine and not to have questioned the ticket. But when a person is aware of the state law and sees no signs to the contrary, and still receives a parking ticket, then he needs to make the problem known. Now that the city is aware of the conflict between the state law and the city ordinance, I hope they will promptly solve the problem.

VERMONT CYNIC

HELP YOURSELF

Help yourself to a better understanding of Editing, Graphic Design, Journalism, Copywriting, Layout, Communication, Photography, and the English Language.

---

Help Yourself to an experience you'll always remember.

---

Help Yourself to working with a group of people just like yourself–interested, involved, motivated.

---

Help Yourself to a better job.

The Vermont Cynic is not a magical phenomenon that occurs every Thursday afternoon. The staff of the Cynic invites you to Help Yourself to anyone of the following positions (as of Spring semester, of course — we like our jobs):

Editor-in-chief, Managing Editor, Copy Editor, News Editor, Arts Editor, Features Editor, Sports Editor.

VERMONT CYNIC

Credit Is Available

VERMONT CYNIC

EDITORIAL BOARD

Editor-in-Chief: David C. Greeff
Managing Editor: Jerome E. Andrews
Copy Editor: James Oakes

News: John Letteri
Arts: Vaune Davis
Features: Randy McMullen
Sports: Rich Chalmers
Steve Larose

Advertising Manager: Peter Voll
Business Manager: Jim Wade
Photo Editor: Robert Gale
Contributing Editors: Henry Chamberlain
Russell Flannery
Diana Greene
Eric Kilburn

The Vermont Cynic is published weekly during the school year except vacations by students at UVM. Opinions expressed herein do not necessarily reflect those of the University administration, faculty, staff, or the State of Vermont.

Editorial

Make Your Election Selection

The Congessional Race

On the humorous side of this year's election campaigning, we have the congressional race between incumbent Jim Jeffords and challenger Marie Dietz.

Dietz, an avid right-to-lifer on the abortion issue, lacks the depth or requisite experience imperative to effectively represent the state in Washington. Nor does she offer any substantive platform. Her campaign has consisted of forays into the issues of "right to work" legislation on which she had not yet made up her mind; and coming out against forced busing, which Jeffords evidently has voted for.

Easily three-quarters of her campaign has been spent denying that she is a one-issue candidate, after pointing out yet again that Jeffords has voted for federally subsidized abortions for the poor, which we support.

Dietz has not mentioned Jeffords' stands on any of the important issues facing Vermont and the nation, such as our continuing dependence on rapidly depleting energy resources. Jeffords has rightly spent much of his time in the House lobbying for solar energy legislation.

Jeffords, in contrast to Dietz, has run a non-campaign, reminiscent of former senator Aiken's lauded re-election non-campaigns.

Indeed Jeffords seems to have become the same sort of free-thinking, free-voting Republican that Aiken made Vermont famous for. We cannot help but believe that he constitutes an island of sanity in Washington's political machinations.

There is a third alternative in the ballot box Tuesday. It is the candidacy of Peter Diamondstone, the moving force behind the Liberty Union party. Diamondstone is important, not because he aspires to the House, but because he is a focal point for dissent in the election. His candidacy provides an alternative to the two-party system and to the status quo. His views, like those of other candidates, should be listened to and taken seriously. Unfortunately, Diamondstone has yet to prove himself capable of providing effective leadership. Vote for Jeffords for U.S. Congress.

Lieutenant Governor

While it would be tempting to throw our support behind the refreshing idealism of Liberty Union candidate Dashiell Barney and forget the quibbling of the other two candidates, reality prevents us from doing so. With reservations, the Cynic endorses the candidacy of Democrat Madeline Kunin for lieutenant governor.

Unfortunately for students, Kunin is not much of a UVM fan and she is not committed to the 2.18 million dollar budget increase, calling it "unrealistic." Nor does she support the de-criminalization of marijuana; a stand we feel is ridiculous and compromising to her candidacy.

In spite of these two drawbacks, Madeline Kunin is level-headed and a realist, which is a definite asset, especially when compared to the pretentiousness and evasive visions of Republican supernova Peter Smith.

Kunin is a fiscal conservative and has served three years on the House Appropriations Committee. She is against nuclear power until the waste problems are solved. Kunin's pragmatic realism prevents her from being politically adventurous, so for those voters who are tired of double-talkers, Kunin should be quite predictable in government.

Guest's Accomplishments vs. Gibson's Attacks

Incumbent Secretary of State James Guest has made his office work well for the consumer. He has provided more services, in the form of consumer information brochures, than any secretary before him. He has cut the cost of printing ballots for statewide elections from over $90,000 to just over $40,000. He initiated legislation, later signed into law, that requires all state licensing boards to undergo a thorough review before they are funded again by the state. He plans legislation to do the same with state statutes, thereby eliminating outdated and unused regulations.

His two opponents, Republican Robert Gibson and Liberty Unionist Edward Craven both have unproven ability and little in the way of specific new programs. During his campaign Gibson has relied mainly on personal attacks on Guest's style, while offering no specific alternatives of his own. Mr. Craven has agreed with much of what Mr. Guest has done, but also offers little in the way of specificity of change.

Attorney General

In this year's race for attorney general it seems incumbent Democrat Jerome Diamond is the only candidate who can be taken seriously. Republican candidate Dennis Bradley has been justifiably shunned by the local press as well as his own party, and Liberty Union candidate Guido Condosta seems to lack experience as well as concrete plans and expectations.

Diamond's major concerns are with the taxpayers, whom he feels are not well represented by the state's fiscal policy. He is proud of his own "tight-fisted" administration, which has been able to return part of their funding back to the state in each of the past three years. His pet project is the Consumer Protection Division which he calls the "centerpiece of our efforts to assist citizens." Diamond is critical of the Public Service Board, saying that he would like to see it not so "pro-utility."

Dennis Bradley waltzed into the Republican nomination, taking advantage of the fact that almost no other Republicans seemed interested in running. He won the September primary virtually without spending money and without campaigning. His major claim is that Vermonters are tired of lawyers being in political office. In addition, Bradley feels that he can make the judicial system more efficient with the following radical proposals: having the jury decide if each case merits attention, and fining the prosecution $10,000 if they don't; having the prosecution pay the defendant's court expenses should they be acquitted; and having capital punishment made a more expedient process.

Condosta is a 66-year-old retired gas station operator, who, despite having no previous experience, feels that the attorney general should be an administrator, and not a lawyer. His plans are vague ones, backed by the optimism that if Vermonters are tired of being deceived by Republicans and Democrats, then he has a "goddamned good change of being elected." Vote Jerome Diamond for attorney general.

Race for Legislature in UVM's District

With deep concern over the prospects of having to raise in-state tuition, without a substantial increase in the state appropriation to UVM, the candidates for the legislature from UVM's districts 4-3 and 4-9 should be in favor of such an increase.

In district 4-3, J. Daniel Mahoney has said he will vote for an increase in the state appropriation only if the university makes a payment to the city of Burlington in lieu of taxes. In a survey conducted by the American Association of University Professors, Mahoney voted "no" to support increases in UVM's appropriation for the purpose of helping keep in-state tuition down, or helping professors catch up with lost buying power. His opponent, Dorothy Stein, has indicated she would vote for a substantial increase in UVM's appropriation. Vote for Stein.

In district 4-9, Torrey C. Carpenter has indicated he would support a substantial increase in the state's appropriation to the university. Carpenter said he wants to see the university's professors catch up with lost buying power and in-state tuition stable. His opponent, David Mitiguy, is largely undecided and indicated he would vote "no" to an increase simply to help keep in-state tuition down. Vote for Carpenter.

Thomas L. Daniels and Theodore M. Riehle III have both indicated they would vote "yes" for a substantial increase in the UVM state appropriation. Yet, Mr. Daniels holds a masters degree in agricultural economics, and he understands the needs of the small farmer in Vermont. He has specified land use programs to benefit the farmer, in addition to promoting building up existing urban centers as opposed to creating new ones. These qualities show not only a sense for the UVM student and university community, but also for the needs of the people of Vermont. Vote for Daniels.

Choosing A Governor

In assessing the Gubernatorial race, the options can be easily pared down to either incumbent governor Richard Snelling or his Democratic challenger Ed Granai.

Liberty Union candidate Earl Gardner of Newfane, has proposed thought-provoking and radical changes including the complete elimination of taxes for incomes under $12,500, and a 50% reduction in property taxes. Both are appealing ideas, but, like the entire platform of the Liberty Union party, are unrealistic near term solutions to Vermont's problems.

The number one issue in Vermont — and throughout the nation — is taxation. Here, we find no critical differences between Snelling and Granai. Both obviously support tax cuts, as we do, but the ability to deliver on this issue will depend on economic factors beyond either's control.

One fundamental difference between the two — and we believe an important one — is the reason why they are running for governor. In a recent Free Press interview Snelling said he was a candidate because he was a competent manager who could make government productive towards the proper social goals. Clearly, effective management capability is essential to be a good governor, but such a response, we believe, actually evaded the question.

Granai, on the other hand, said that he was running because Vermont was at a "critical point of development" and he felt this development should be directed in such a way as to benefit native Vermonters more than it has in the past.

In the broad view, we believe Granai is absolutely right in saying that growth is the key issue facing the Green Mountain State.

In light of this, it should be noted that Snelling avoided the issue of whether the proposed Pyramid Mall should be built until it was politically popular to do so. Granai was ardently opposed to construction from the start.

Another key difference between the two is on the issue of UVM's state appropriation. Granai has expressed interest in keeping the in-state tuition level. Snelling has already proven his indifference to UVM's financial woes when he recommended only $300,000 of last year's trimmed down 1.2 million increase request by the university.

Neither candidate is particularly appealing, but, for the above reasons, the Cynic supports Ed Granai for governor.

Animal House at Sigma Nu

Last Thursday night, a little bit of Animal House was reenacted at the Sigma Nu fraternity house. Unfortunately, it was not quite so funny in real life as it was on the screen.

The event was a Halloween Party, during which a small pumpkin skirmish erupted. The pumpkins were thrown all around the fraternity and South Williams Street. Regrettably, many students involved deemed it acceptable to use a parked car as a target. The end result was a totally irresponsible act of vandalism: the car's right-rear window was shattered; there were three sets of dents along the side; and the back seat was literally stuffed with 12-15 pumpkins. Even more unreasonable is the fact that the event was witnessed by many, yet discouraged by none.

Halloween parties are expected to be spirited and festive, not destructive. The senseless damaging of another's automobile is inexcusable, and regardless of who instigated the incident, all who were present are partially to blame for not preventing it. We hope that Sigma Nu fraternity will accept responsibility and see that the car's owner is paid for all damages.

Towards Radical Environmentalism

By Eric Kilburn

Picking up where past political movements left off, environmental activists of the 1970's have been successful in eliciting widespread citizen action for a plethora of causes. Unlike the anti-war and civil rights struggles however, efforts to save the earth's ecosystem have tended to focus primarily on specific reforms, rather than examining the problem in the context of a broader economic and social system. While this approach has produced many glowing examples of righteousness in action, most of the larger questions remain unsolved.

Clearly, a new emphasis is needed, and by examining certain past ecological causes and the evolution in consciousness of individuals connected with these efforts, a case for radical environmentalism can be built.

"Save the porpoises," "Stop the dam," "Recycle your newspapers" are common phrases in an eco-freak's vocabulary, and unquestionably noble in their intent. For short term gains, causes like the above have proven quite effective in reaching the populace. In Vermont, opposition to the Williston Mall united the unlikely allies of octogenarian Republicans, Burlington businessmen and local left-wingers, and the proposal was defeated. Often the success or failure of a political effort is related to the diversity of people the issue affects, and similarly strange bedfellows can be found rallying around other environmental flags.

However, once specific issues have been favorably resolved, many people feel appeased and return to their daily routines, forgetting their causal role in the original problem. Hydroelectric and nuclear power plants are often built on the pretense of satisfying increased electrical demands, and reducing dependence on imported energy sources. Supermarkets and large malls exist because their owners can make a profit, based partially on demand, for the goods and services they provide. Without a demand for more energy and conveniences, like "fast, one-stop shopping," many pet causes of environmentalists would be obsolete.

In increasing numbers, environmentalists are having to face raw economic realities, and often their analysis of an issue has changed in the process. Barry Commoner, in his early work The Closing Circle, focused on individual ecological disasters and speculated that if something were not done, a greater global catastrophe would result. In recent books Commoner has analyzed environmental issues more from an economic standpoint, concluding that a basic restructuring of societal priorities is in order. As long as it is profitable for businesses and governments to destroy the earth's life support systems, he reasons, we will continue on our present pathological course.

"As long as it is profitable for businesses and governments to destroy the earth's life support systems, we will continue on our present pathological course."

Frances Moore Lappe, whose book Diet for a Small Planet became a bible for millions of vegetarian neophytes, has undergone a similar radicalization in outlook. Diet for a Small Planet dealt with the world hunger problem, partly blaming the carnivorous American palate, and offered the theory and practice of vegetarianism as an individual solution. In the years following Diet, Lappe began to view vegetarianism as an insufficient mode for ensuring equitable food distribution, since grain not fed to animals does not necessarily end up in the mouths of hungry people. Lappe realized that global food inequities are primarily due to political and economic factors, and cannot be solved by even a nation of vegetarians. Her latest book, Food First, examines some of these societal realities and offers far-reaching proposals for change.

Although their approaches and fields of expertise differ, both Lappe and Commoner argue for the creation of a base level below which no human being would go. This minimum includes adequate food, shelter, clothing and a clean ecosystem, all indisputable prerequisites to a healthy life. From the polluted air and waterways of the western world to the starving millions of the developing countries, it is clear that the existing system has not shown itself capable of meeting these fundamental needs. Clearly, more profound socio-economic alternatives must be considered.

Ironically, those who propose such societal changes are often branded "radicals." Certainly their words and deeds represent a threat to the status quo, but to propose that every person has a right to clean air, water, food, etc. is actually an extremely conservative viewpoint. However, in a world where most countries place a greater premium on wealth and power than on the health of the earth and its people, the "radical" characterization is not surprising.

In the same sense that one cannot cure cancer with bandaids and bactine, any reform-oriented action not accompanied by an understanding of a greater societal illness is doomed to superficiality. Yet, all people need what Russell Johnson calls "handles;" a means of action by which they can move toward a goal. Thus, one cannot criticize the many environmental-political reform efforts of the past, but only hope that the movements of the future are based on broad concerns, not mere instances of fact. The price just may be survival.

LETTERS

From the S. A. Concert Bureau

To the Editor:

This letter is in regard to the "Letter to the Editor," written by Kim Lowell and Todd Lalibert in last week's Cynic (10/26), concerning Bruce Springsteen ticket sales. The Concert Bureau recognizes and can appreciate the concerns of these two students and other students who feel their rights as ticket buyers were compromised in the selling of Bruce Springsteen tickets. In fact, students are rightly given the highest seating priority for all S.A. concerts. The easiest way to explain the confusion surrounding those first few rows is to outline the Concert Bureau's ticket procedures.

Initially, all promoters, be it S.A. concert or any other, are subject to comply with various requests concerning all aspects of a show made formally by the Artist in binding contracts. Certain aspects of tickets and ticket sales are no exception, and although specifics vary from group to group, all artists require that the same basic guidelines be met. One of their major stipulations is the number of complementary tickets to be "pulled." The contract also indicates the location and distribution of those seats. In the case of Bruce Springsteen, we were required to pull three and one half rows for the artist and his company; we were limited to two rows for all press, and in addition, we had to "pull" one more row for the co-promoter. The contract also stated that none of the "comps" should be more than fifteen rows back. It becomes quite apparent that with over six rows to "pull," we are very limited in our choice of locating those seats. In all cases, however, we keep the student in mind by trying to provide as many of the front rows as possible for sale.

In response to our handling of the public sale tickets, we can tell you that only two rows were pulled for public sale in the first twenty rows of the floor area. In the interest of fairness and keeping in mind that we wanted to achieve a random selection of five hundred seats for public sale, we do not feel that our methods were unfair, nor do we feel they were compromising the rights of the supporting student body, of which, we might remind readers, we are a part.

We hope that some of the confusion about those front rows will be dispelled by this article. We would also like to say that we try to be as receptive as we can to all student needs and ideas. In addition, we are constantly searching for new ways to make the ticket sales and the concerts themselves fair, efficient, and enjoyable for all the people involved.

In closing, we would like to extend an invitation to any student who still has doubts concerning ticket sales, or maybe some suggestions for the future, to drop by the Bureau office in Billings and talk with us. We thank you for all your support!

Sincerely,
S.A. Concert Bureau

Thanks For the Hard Work

To the Editor:

As an individual who played a part in organizing and implementing Oktoberfest 78, I would like to make a few observations. The spirit of cooperation between different groups within the university is the essential factor which enables Oktoberfest to be a viable, successful event.

Witness: SAGA was gracious enough to provide a refrigerated truck free of charge. The Forestry and Natural Resources Departments provided a cattle truck, which was invaluable, at a minimal charge. The grounds crew was there at 7:00 in the morning to set up. In the beer tent alone, over 80 students donated their time to serve beer. Other students helped to set up craft tables and perform other functions. Residential Life also was instrumental in organizing the whole affair, as well as making it work.

The thing that makes Oktoberfest great is this cooperation and effort from myriad people and groups within and around the university. I, for one, think they all deserve a pat on the back.

Sincerely,
Peter A. Riegelman

On Cuckoos At Ocktoberfest

To the Editor:

We are writing in response to Frank Nesbits' Oktoberfest article and in particular the activities of the cuckoo birds.

Obviously, Frank knew very little about the activities occurring at Oktoberfest. He stated that the cuckoo birds announced "great irrelevencies" at the cuckoo clock. The cuckoo clock was set up to inform parents and students of events occurring throughout the afternoon. Had Frank listened, he might have heard one of these many exciting events. Sure, some humor was added into these announcements, but this was supposed to be a festival, not a funeral.

Secondly, Frank stated that our only other responsibility was to "thrust cookies into unsuspecting children's faces." Come on Frank! We gave out cookies to hundreds of thrilled children. Many even asked to have their pictures taken with us. This somehow seems to contradict your picture of an "uncontrollably screaming child."

Had Frank actually talked to us (funny he quoted us but never spoke to one of us) he would have learned that we also sold over $150 worth of raffle tickets which helped pay for Oktoberfest.

Finally, we would like to say that Oktoberfest 1978 was a complete success. We heard many comments from parents congratulating us, and others, on the fantastic job that went into putting on Oktoberfest. Much effort was put into it by many people and we would like to thank them all. I'm sorry, Frank, you had such a miserable time. Possibly next year you could go as a cuckoo, I'm sure you would enjoy yourself.

Sincerely,
Bill Floyd
Phil Spillane
Vance Dean

Erratum

To the Editor:

We'd like to clear up an error that occurred in last week's article "The Question of UVM's South African Investments." The October 25th presentation on the issue of investments in South Africa, which included a talk by UVM Treasurer Gordon Patterson and two movies, was sponsored by the Student Association, the Minority Students Organization, and the Center for Cultural Pluralism.

We are currently planning a forum with speakers who will represent different points of view on the subject. Details will be forthcoming.

Sincerely,
Charles H. Clark
S.A. President
Jesse Gadson
President, Minority Student Organization
Hardin Coleman
Center for Cultural Pluralism

LETTERS Continued on Page 24

Letters Continued

"On Money and Morality": The Economics of Foreign Relations

To the Editor:

I am writing in response to the Cynic's editorial, entitled "Money and Morality." Your stand is one to be admired by moralists and idealists alike, for apartheid is certainly wrong, and the South African government should be changed. But the world of foreign affairs and foreign investment (which can be considered as one) is not as simple as the Cynic presents it to be.

International relations is economics. Especially when one is discussing the United States. If the editors of the Cynic were students of history, they would realize this. For instance, economic sanctions imposed against Japan indirectly contributed to the ultimate Japanese response — Pearl Harbor. In 1965, marines were sent into the Dominican Republic because United States corporate investments were threatened with nationalization. And in 1971, the United States government supported Pakistan in the India-Pakistan War. Although this last case is not related to economics specifically, it is presented here because it exemplifies how moralism is not practiced in the international realm with any consistency. The people of Bangladesh (then East Pakistan) were suffering, due to the policies of West Pakistan. So, the East Pakistan people revolted, with the help of India and Russia. As you may remember, we supported the status quo government because the Chinese did. It was decided that establishing relations with China after almost twenty-five years of strained coexistence, was more important than taking the moral side.

More recently, with President Carter and human rights leading the way, the United States has taken the moral side. Specifically, a trade embargo has been imposed against Uganda, causing the country to lose one-third of its exporting coffee market, and one hundred million dollars. Why was the embargo imposed? Because of the immoral actions of Idi Amin. However, although Amin is a ruthless tyrant, should the people of Uganda suffer even more? I think not. There are other ways to deal with the situation, just as there are other ways to deal with South Africa.

What the Cynic is proposing is that UVM and all other interests practice divestiture in order to get the South African government to change. As I have pointed out, this idea is too simplistic, and too dangerous.

Where is the line drawn regarding morals? Should the United States encourage investing organizations such as UVM to withdraw their capital from Mexico because of the way Americans are treated in prisons there? Perhaps capital should be withdrawn from the Philippines, because martial law is not an American principle. The point is that there is not a country where immoralism does not exist in internal affairs, it is just a matter of degree. And when the bounds are broken, any sort of pressure is better than economic, even military, to a certain extent. History has shown us this.

I don't claim to be an expert in international affairs. But as I read last week's editorial, I realized that I know more about the field than the editors of the Cynic. Let's stop being fair weather liberals, and let's become responsible journalists.

Sincerely,
Ted Lindgren

Are All Whites Racist

To the Editor:

Michael Davis contends (Cynic October 26) that all white people in our society are racists because we "receive benefits distributed by a white racist society through its institutions." Presumably, I am automatically a racist for having gone to school and for paying taxes.

Mr. Davis failed to distinguish between "racism" and "discrimination." Racism is any feeling, belief, or preconception a person has regarding the racial characteristics of another group of people. A person who contributes to or benefits from a society which discriminates against black people — or yellow, red, old, young, or handicapped people — is guilty of discrimination, but not necessarily of racism.

If divesting investments in South Africa will lead to constructive change, and an end to discrimination, it is the right thing to do. The same is true in our own country. Meanwhile, let's examine our own thoughts about racism. I accept the accusation that all white people are indirectly involved in and responsible for discrimination in this country. But I am insulted, hurt, and degraded by Mr. Davis' false accusation that I am a racist just because I have white skin.

At the risk of making this sincere response sound a little glib, I must ask Mr. Davis whose foot is the shoe on?

Jeff Marshall
UVM '78

Defining Racism

To the Editor:

I am writing in regard to Michael Davis' letter which appeared in the Oct. 26 issue of the Cynic. If all whites are racists, as Davis asserts, then by definition all non-whites are equally racist. I am deeply concerned by this. After decades of struggle against racism we have accomplished... nothing? Because nothing can be accomplished by your definition?

If so, we may as well forget about fighting racism, because the battle cannot be won — mankind is hopeless! Why struggle against an unbeatable foe?

Fortunately (for my soul), I disagree with Davis. There are too many good people, white and non-white, to lump them together with South African and other racists and brand them all as hopeless. It is easy to lump people together. It is difficult to separate them into categories. Mr. Davis, you are in the right element — keep studying.

Sincerely,
Soloman White

Searching for a Place to Study

To the Editor:

In trying to study for an all-too-quickly approaching exam recently, I decided to opt for the cozy, rustic setting of the Billings "Round Room," as it is fondly known.

In recent weeks, I had all but abandoned the thought of studying in the hallowed edifice for reasons I shall soon enumerate. However, being the staunch believer in human change that I am, I figured I'd give Billings another chance.

In briefly comparing the suitable places to study on campus, the library has always struck me as being oppressively stuffy and too institutional to permit more than an hour's work before getting the heebie-jeebies. Simpson and Harris-Millis dining halls are now open at night and aren't bad if you don't mind studying with 25 people at the same table as well as that distinct odor of Saga's gourmet cooking in the air.

Which brings me back to trying to do any real studying at Billings at night. I say, at night, because I think everyone takes it for granted that Billings during the day is great in terms of keeping your social calendar up to date, but it really doesn't encourage academic work beyond a quick check of one's notes before a test or the copying of someone else's homework problems for chemistry or math.

At night, however, I don't think it's too much to ask to be able to get in a few hours serious work without the ever-present interruptions I've so learned to expect.

With a little consideration on everyone's part, I'm sure this problem could be alleviated. On this particular night, I had the choice of studying in the North end but found the 45 degree temperature and the sounds of chattering teeth were a little much. So, on to the round room, except that to get to one of the cubicles I had to risk loss of life or limb in surmounting the chairs and scaffolding left over from American Buffalo. Therefore, I headed up to the walkway above the round room and managed to get quite comfy, had ample light, and thought I'd surely be able to run through my notes a few times without a problem. No such luck.

The lovely young lady working at the desk quickly got into some heavy-duty typing, which sounded more like gun-fire due to the echo effect. When this would stop for five minutes, I was treated to five great minutes of WDOT radio, and then it was back to her rat-tat-tat. Her typing lasted slightly less than an hour, so I asked her to then turn the radio down a little, she did, and I figured I could get to work. Wrong again. I discovered some troubador had started playing his guitar somewhere and apparently thought we all deserved to hear. With people stopping off to gossip at the desk every few minutes, I decided to bag it and seek what would surely be refuge in the library.

Billings is easily the most bucolic setting on campus, but I defy anyone to try to study here on a regular basis without the aid of ear plugs or a pea-shooter which might silence those intent on gabbing. The real problem is the way sound is amplified due to the structure, so why not everyone try and remember that as you run your mouth in the desk and fireplace area, don't think that nobody else can hear you.

From the Library (ugh!)
Pete Larkworthy

A Low Blow

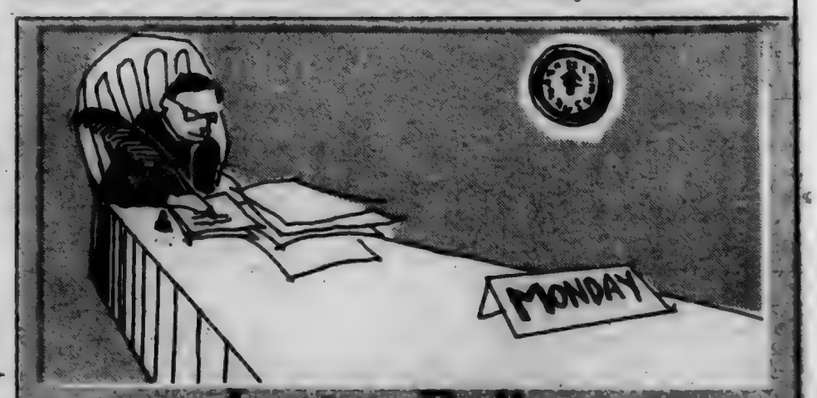
To the Editor:

After my last letter appeared in the Cynic two weeks ago, I swore that I would never write another pro-Yankee letter this season. And I won't! But in last week's issue, a letter by Mr. Ned Andrews appeared which, to say the least, was blatantly offensive to this writer.



Many people have commented on the obnoxious language used by Andrews to describe me. The fact that I wrote these letters to protest a biased attitude in the Cynic in no way permits Andrews to call me "loud, obnoxious, illogical and ignorant."

Since when has the Cynic allowed personal character references to be printed in our paper (emphasis is on our). I would assume that letters characterizing people in a certain unfavorable light would be regarded with some discretion.

As for the content of the letter, Andrews should spend more time verifying his facts. Most Yankee fans are not "fair-weather fans." I would expect a letter from Andrews complaining about my letters, but not based on false information, nor worded in such a derogatory manner.

Sincerely,
Jeff Beckerman

P.S. Mr. Andrews is misinformed with regard to the New York Giants, because they are no longer around. The new team is the New Jersey Giants!

Considering the Non Smoker

To the Editor:

Although University policy does not ban smoking during class, many rooms have signs requesting that there be no smoking during class. Recently, in one of my classes, the issue of whether or not smoking should be allowed during class was raised.

There were some of us who were bothered by the smoke-filled classroom. I have had to put up with the unpleasantness of breathing the air in a train car full of smokers. I have sat in restaurants and had people blow thier smoke in my face. I would like to think that with the pro-environmental attitudes so popular on campus that students would be more aware of how annoying breathing someone else's smoke can be. Unfortunately, this isn't the case.

What annoyed me most was that the smokers in this class showed such a lack of consideration. They acted as though the request was ridiculour and unfair. Is it too much to ask those that smoke to refrain from it for 60 or 70 minutes?

Sharon Cherry

Letter Policy

The Cynic welcomes letters to the Editor from all its readers. The deadline for letters is the Monday at noon prior to [illegible]

Things That Go Chug in the Night

Downtown Burlington is invaded by hordes of overaged trick or treaters

By Vaune Davis

Darth Vader, a pregnant girlscout, a human gastank and countless other deranged characters transformed downtown Burlington into more of a fantacyland than it already is Tuesday night, as hundreds of overaged trick or treaters invaded the bars to celebrate Halloween.

By 10:00 p.m., it looked like the preliminary tryouts for the Mardi Gras were being held on Main Street. Everyone (everything?) from Al Capone to Richard Nixon, from an oversized package of cigarettes to the Hunchback of Notre Dame were creeping and slithering, bumbling and lurching up and down the sidewalk. Such insanity, in fact, has not been witnessed downtown since last spring after finals when several ambitious citizens climbed lampposts at the corner of Church and Maine, hanging brilliant moons for the mobs of appreciative college students below.

The atmosphere in most of the bars was much like the macabre nightclub scene in Star Wars. At the Sheik, for example, bizarre creatures were lined up along the bar while manager Patrick Simoeau, dressed as "the Sheik" himself, served drinks with all the speed and efficiency of an Arab at a productive oil field. On one side of the bar, a grotesque Frankenstein was winking at a buxom, platinum blond hooker, while on the other side, two mouseketeers looked on, beaming and giggling.

At the Chickenbone, however, there were no particularly odd looking characters — at least nothing out of the ordinary — except for three men in black bow ties and white dinner jackets. Whether this was because it was bourbon night and the customers were strictly hard-core drinkers, or because the Chickenbone is already the most offbeat bar in town and has no need to create such a reputation is debatable, but I soon left for greener pastures.

Finbar's probably had the most conservative, but most carefully done costumes. Instead of the usual array of pimps, hookers and transvestites, there were enough clergymen, devoutly downing drafts and chasing women, to start a new religious sect. Pope John Paul XXXX... dressed in long red and white robes and a tall crown, and carrying a large, white cross, drifted around the bar blessing everyone, while a brown-robed monk wandered around, smiling benevolently. Representative of the latent characteristics of Finbar's regular customers was a skier, a dirty old man, a playboy bunny, and an entire table full of coneheads. Amused at first, I decided it was time to leave when a faceless man in a long, black robe silently walked up and handed me a note saying "Your presence is required, April 13th, 1979. Sincerely, Death."

Despite people dressed as Arabs, airplanes, pumpkinheads, and flashers, the most original costume I saw was a shower stall. Complete with a curtain on rings, soap, and a bottle of Flex shampoo, one man in Doolin's was wearing a towel around his waist and a shower stall rigged around him.

Nevertheless, the strangest event of the evening, and perhaps the strangest stunt that has ever been pulled in downtown Burlington, occurred at midnight. A group of men pulled a black coffin out of a van in front of the Treaty of Yorktown and, acting as pallbearers, carried it around the corner and up Main Street. Soon followed by a parade of about fifty costumed mourners, moaning and screaming for the deceased, the pallbearers slowly paced up the street to City Hall, climbed the steps, and placed the coffin in front of the door while the mourners, by then in the hundreds, wailed below.

As the clock struck midnight, the crowd screamed "My God, It's twelve o'clock!" and the lid of the coffin slowly opened. First an arm, then a black leg appeared and finally, with a flourish of his black cape, Dracula jumped out and glared at the crowd. Then, as if transfixed, a beautiful woman dressed in orange chiffon slowly drifted up the steps towards the fiend, who immediately pounced on her, biting her neck. She fell into his arms and was carried away down the other side of the steps and around the corner into city hall park, never to be seen again. Flabergasted, the crowd just stood there while a group of jovial monks in identical white robes bounced up the steps to wave and bless everybody.

The most amazing aspect of Halloween, however, was how friendly and outgoing everybody was. No one was afraid to make a fool of themselves, staging a mock gang war or growling at some pretty girls. Behavior that would at other times seem childish was not only acceptable, but admirable. As one student, dressed as an old lady, said, "Halloween is the only time of year I get to act the way I really want to."

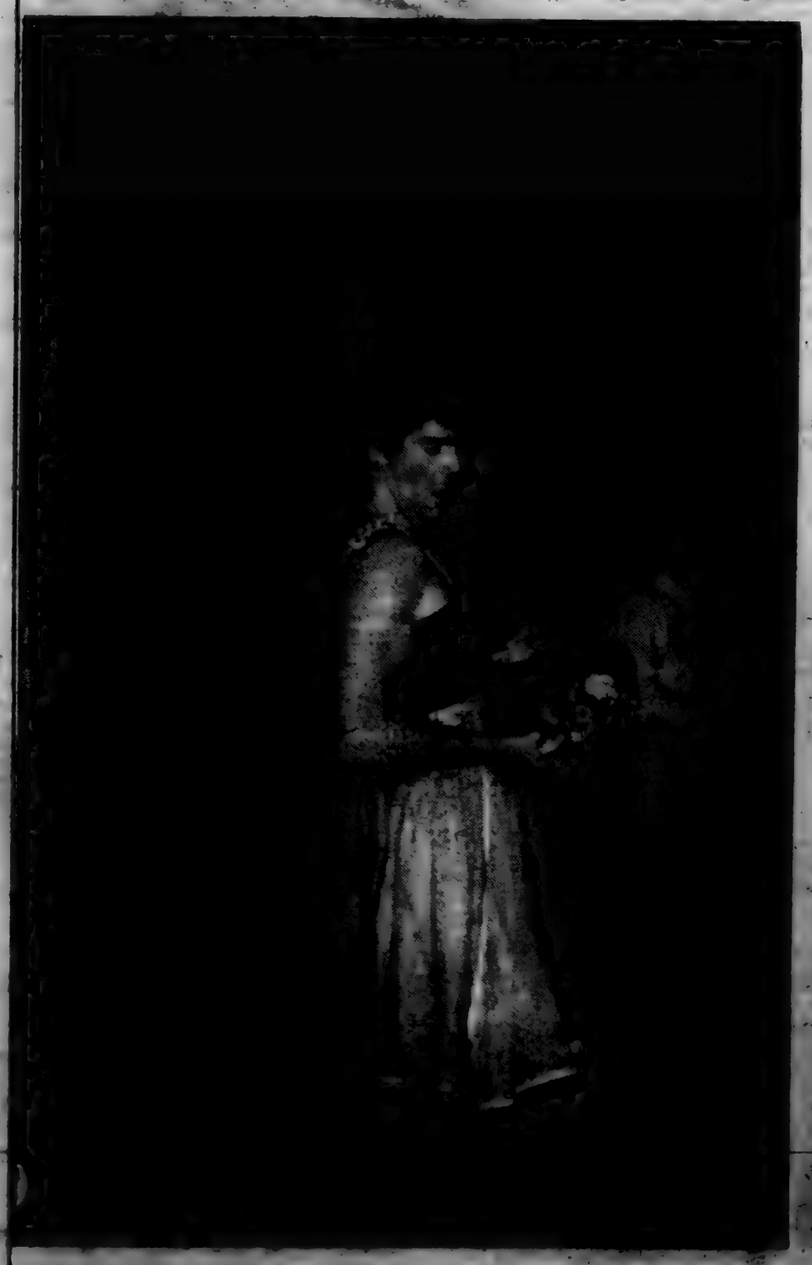

Photo by Tom Albertson

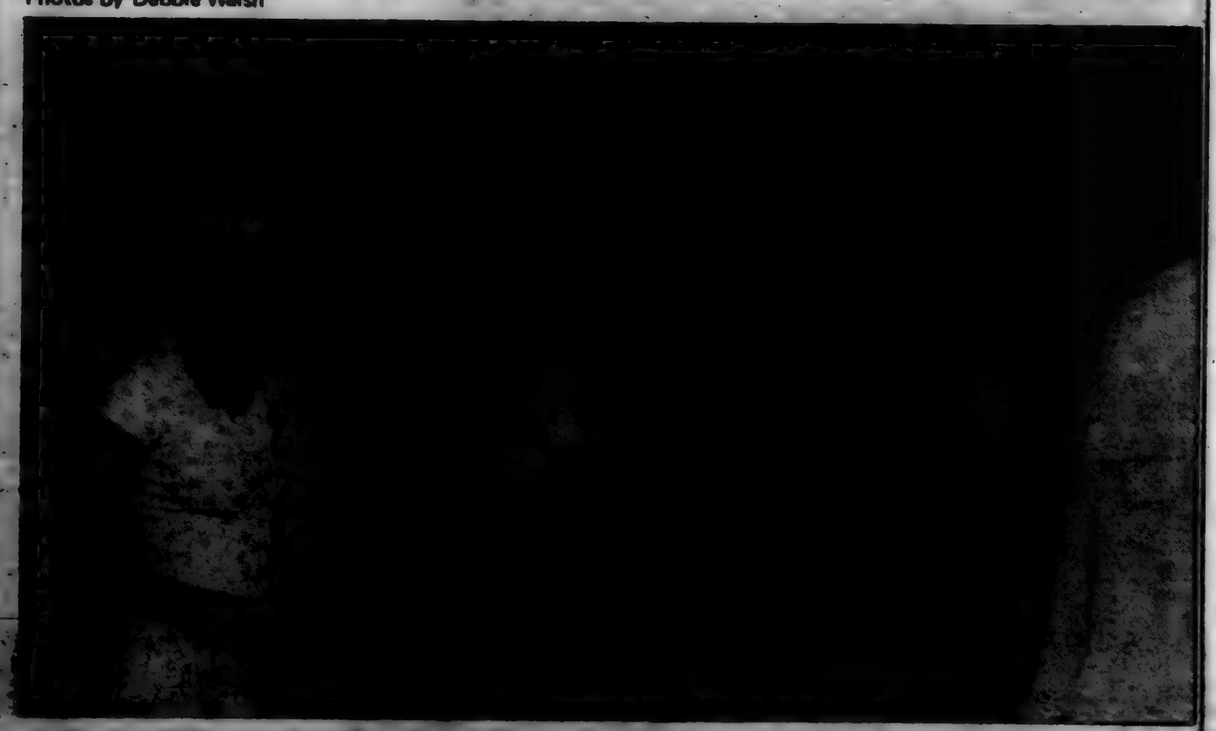

Photos by Debbie Walsh

(Counterclockwise from bottom) Decadent soliciting in front of Finber's; contestants for Rasputin's costume contest; a ghoulish pinball player; one of the less dirty old men.

CLIP

by FRANK COOPER

PRECISION HAIRCUTTING
FOR MEN

115 COLLEGE ST.
BURLINGTON
658-6563

STAVRINOS

After returning to school from summer holidays, the boys meet in the gym and singing "Summer Nights," tell all about their romances during the vacation.

'Grease' A Blast From the Past

By Pete Wentworth

The summer of 1978 brought Hollywood's latest stab at nostalgia, the film version of Grease. Last Tuesday night, in turn, the original stage production was performed by a Broadway touring company in Memorial Auditorium.

Grease was a good performance, accented by many effective dance routines and a number of catchy song presentations. The acting itself was adequate, although overly stereotyped to the point of being cliche. Its original success was partially due to its use of cuteness through stereotypes, however the entire nostalgia kick has made this feature redundant.

The most impressive part of the performance was the improvisational ability of the lead performer. Accidentally, he put a deep gash in his forehead, but continued to perform without paying too much notice to the blood covering his face. His ability to keep his composure as the audience watched, aghast, was an example of true professionalism. The remaining actors filled their parts adequately but there were no show-stopping performances.

The dancing was the highlight of the show. Hours of rehearsing were visible at this point, as the performers created many difficult routines and executed them with ease and flow. In particular, a spectacular high school dance contest yielded impressive choreography.

The set was a collection of photographs from the mythical 1959 Rydell High School yearbook. Pictures of the class members surrounded the actors and a collage of the great rock and rollers covered the background. The opening scene was a typical high school hallway with beat-up lockers and a dozen students mouring summer's end. The fifties were not a time of staying still for long and this atmosphere was effectively conveyed through the rapid stage changes made by the actors. The sets, traversed from nights in the park to afternoons at the burger joint, to mornings at school. Scene changes were effectively made by diverting the audience by random action while the actors rolled the prop changes off and on the stage. The result was a non-static scene change which flowed with the tempo of the performance.

The show included a rock and roll orchestra featuring two guitarists, a drummer, and a combination conductor/keyboardist. The music was not entirely the same as that found on the movie soundtrack. This is largely due to RSO's desire to expose the film via the top 40 charts, thus calling for a disco beat in the film's musical score. Because of this, more songs were written to accommodate the movie version of Grease. The music itself is simple enough. It just uses well-known rock and roll beats and creates a new set of lyrics around an already familiar melody. The traditional monologue found in the middle of the teeny bopper message songs is also employed into the score of the film. The result was an almost deja-vu feeling towards the seemingly original soundtrack which quickly placed tha audience among old ideas. The actual sound at Memorial was severely hindered by an obnoxious feedback hum amplified through the entire sound system. The only points of the performance that weren't accompanied by an electrical chorus were the sections that could generate enough strength to drown it out.

The audience was receptive to the company, approving every song with a round of applause. The auditorium was nearly filled, with just a few balcony seats empty before the opening.

It was not uncommon to find the entire audience, young and old, swaying to the music and snapping their fingers in time. The show was well-paced and the intermission seemed almost unnecessary for a show less than two hours in length.

Grease was a great way to spend a Halloween evening, as it was sheer entertainment. If not for the technical and acoustical problems of the auditorium, the show would have been a truly professional presentation.

VERMONT CYNIC

Bluegrass and Country
Entertainment Wed. & Thurs. Nights

Monday — $.25 draft + $.75 pitchers
Tuesday — $.50 Molsons
Sunday — Ladies night $.25 off drinks

Happy Hour 3–7 daily
Football Specials — Sunday
Pitch Tournaments

sullivan's
4 NO. WINOOSKI AVENUE

Next to Domino's Pizza

AVIATION

Are you ready to take on challenge and adventure??

If you seek to explore the limits of time and space, then Naval Aviation could be the means to launch your journey. By the time you qualify to wear Naval Aviator's wings, you will have faced and conquered challenges that come only once in a lifetime for a few, very special people. The Navy has vacancies designed for those who believe themselves capable of the extraordinary with unlimited advancement opportunity and unusually attractive benefits including:

- Starting salary to $13,500; increases to $22,000 in 4 years
- Finest flight training in the world
- Free medical, dental care
- Opportunity for travel
- Guaranteed flight training (Sophomore-Senior Years)

Ask your Placement Officer to set up an interview with a Navy representative when he visits the campus on: November 7 & 8, 1978

or contact your Navy representative at (617)223-6216 Collect.

NAVY OFFICER PROGRAMS
575 Technology Square, Cambridge, MA 02139

Who Killed Agatha Christie?

By Fred Perley

Two things can be said about Death on the Nile. The movie takes too long to get started and doesn't end quickly enough. Sadly, the film brings an end to the winning streak of Agatha Christie movies.

A love story of sorts, Death on the Nile is a tale of the fabulously wealthy Linnet Ridgeway (Lois Chiles), her husband, Simon Doyle (Simon MacCorkindale), her murder, a boat, super-sleuth Hercule Poirot (Peter Ustinov), and a slew of boatmates who all, coincidentally, have reason to want her dead. Poirot, as always, solves the mystery of Ridgeway's murder and other subsequent deaths, compassionately letting the audience off the hook.

The end comes far too late for those unfortunate enough to have paid three dollars to yawn for two and a half hours. Had the movie started with Miss Ridgeway's death, some semblance of suspence might have been saved and the audience would have been spared the agony of suffering through Lois Chiles' lackluster acting.

The only suspense involved in this prolonged pseudo-mystery is that of waiting forty-five minutes for the first murder to occur and the waiting involved while preying for some relief from boredom. At one point in the film Jackie (Mia Farrow), Simon's former lover, asks Simon, "Are we insane?" This appears to be the question the producers of Death on the Nile should have asked each other after first viewing the film. Simon's reply to Jackie seems like a likely answer to the producer's question, "I don't know, but we can't stop now."

Despite all its pitfalls, Death on the Nile still has a number of satisfying acting performances. Ustinov's presence as Poirot greatly enhances any scene. Successfully shaking his Walt Disney image, Ustinov portrays Poirot equally as well as his Orient Express predecessor, Albert Finney. Angela Lansbury's portrayal of an overaged, oversexed lush, adds humor to a movie which drastically needs it. Bette Davis' performance as an aged matron is equally as humorous. Indeed, Davis captures one of the best scenes in the movie when she smiles on the deck of a riverboat while four Egyptian boys "moon" her.

It would almost seem merciful to reveal the identity of the murderer. Such a disclosure would surely save everyone the time and money involved in finding it out on their own, but the ending is the only worthwhile aspect in this movie and should be preserved for that reason alone. With so many other excellent movies showing in the Burlington area, don't bother yourself with seeking out the identity of Linnet Ridgeway's murderer; it is not worth the effort. If you happen to enjoy bad Ellery Queen T.V. mysteries, boredom, or Romeo and Juliet endings, then see Death on the Nile. But catch an early show — you'll fall asleep otherwise.

Goin' South:

A Comedy That Goes to Pieces

By Tom Campbell

Although Goin' South is a comedy that at times includes some of the funniest material seen in films this year, it is still somewhat of a failure. Although there are a lot of strong ideas in this movie, Jack Nicholson, who is both director and star, never totally manages to pull them together. It is too bad, because this could have been a memorable effort.

The strongest aspect of Goin' South is that Nicholson has the leading role. Most familiar to the audience for his supporting role in Easy Rider and his stunning portrayal as a sane man trying to feign insanity in One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest, he casts himself here as an affectionate horse thief who is saved from the noose at the last moment by an old town ordinance that states that a condemned man can be reprieved by accepting an offer of marriage. Finally being chosen by a timid young lady who is much respected within the community, the bulk of the film deals with them trying to cope with the problems that arise from this rather odd relationship. Mary Steenburgen, starring in her first movie, is the timid young wife. However, because of the one-sided nature of her role, we never get a chance to see what kind of an actress she actually is.

The style of humour that Nicholson infuses into this film becomes so absurd at times that it tends to recall the farcical work of Mel Brooks' Blazing Saddles. Before he is saved from hanging by the woman who is to become his wife, Nicholson is chosen by a woman who, though at least seventy years old, believes that she can still "show him a good time." Before she gets the chance, however, she dies of excitement, and he is immediately hustled back to the gallows. In a later scene, while hiding behind a fence separating him from a deputy who is exceedingly jealous about his wife, he slips a bucket beneath a urinating horse and then pours it on his pursuer's head.

The major problem with Goin' South is that, unlike Blazing Saddles, it is not completely a comedy. Unlike Blazing Saddles, Nicholson seems to be quite unsure about the direction that he wants to take. Beneath the layers of humor there is a serious side that is apparent just enough to lead the film into an often distracting state of ambivalence. Most distressing is the fact that, although the characters are quite shallow in their attitudes and perceptions of emotion (as is often the case in comedy situations), Nicholson still seems to expect an empathetic understanding from the audience when things take a serious turn. But it is not possible for us to feel this way when we never really have any idea of what is going on inside the characters' heads. The relationship between Nicholson and Steenburgen, for example, is peppered with misunderstandings and arguments that, in themselves, are funny, but when they try to come to grips with their problems, there is no substance within either of them for us to base any kind of an emotional response upon. Instead of becoming more understanding and sympathetic toward them at each dilemma they face, we are instead almost as emotionally distant when we see them walk away from us at the end as we were at the beginning of the film.

Compounding this sense of incompleteness are a number of introduced plot concepts that are never satisfactorily resolved. After the two main characters are married, we discover that Miss Steenburgen is a virgin ("That's why you're so grumpy," says Nicholson. "Virgins are always grumpy because they know that it's wrong to be so unnatural."). Although it is a potentially dynamic situation — a wild and reckless "hombre" who thinks that sex is completely second-nature and a prim young girl who's never given thought to a man before — it is only casually exploited and never drawn to an acceptable conclusion. To deal with such an enticing subject is to preclude at least a little indulgence, but Nicholson hardly ever gets past the stage of a quick kiss followed by a rapid cut to a following scene.

At this point, after losing patience with his teasing bride, he ties her to the bed as if to forcibly make love to her. "You wouldn't dare," she taunts him when he begins to back down, and he then begins to pull his clothes off in a fit of renewed enthusiasm. But the scene is so abruptly cut off that when it is mentioned later, we have almost completely forgotten about it. I don't believe that a filmmaker can expect an audience that is

(continued on page 32)

LIVE ENTERTAINMENT!!!
Sunday, Monday and Tuesday.

Rasputins
163 Church St.

beer wine
THE ONLY
BEVERAGE WAREHOUSE
IS IN WINOOSKI
Lowest Prices Largest Selection
kegs soda

the SKI shop
Now Open
Sundays 1-5
Special Discounts !
388 Shelburne Rd., S. Burlington
862-5488

The Precision Haircut Explained Precisely.

Precision haircutting is our method of cutting your hair in harmony with the way it grows. Sure, your hair eventually grows out but it doesn't lose it's shape with a precision haircut. No more fussing, that's what it's all about.

At Command Performance, we shampoo, precision cut and blow dry your hair for just $12.00 whether you're a guy or a gal. And no appointments are ever necessary.

Permanent waves, coloring, frosting and conditioning, we do it all, but we really shine with the precision haircut, and so will you.

Command Performance®

1978 First International Services Corp

BURLINGTON SQUARE MALL
Downtown Burlington 863-3664
Mon.-Fri. 9 am-9 pm; Sat. 9-6

What would Socrates think of O'Keefe?

If you question long enough and deep enough, certain truths about O'Keefe become evident.
It has a hearty, full-bodied flavor. It is smooth and easy going down. And, the quality of its head is fact rather than philosophical conjecture.
We think there's one truth about O'Keefe that Socrates would not question: It's too good to gulp. As any rational man can taste.

Imported from Canada by Century Importers, Inc., New York, NY

The CoEvolution Quarterly

West Coast Wisdom and Culture

By Chris Mercer

"Co-Evolution Quarterly readers have been seeking each other out as eagerly as oppositely sexed whopping cranes."
Henry Allen *The Washington Post

California of the late 1960's was renowned for its counter-cultures, alternative lifestyles, and sharp controversies. Where else could you find Berkeley, Dick Nixon, Haight-Ashbury, Ronald Reagan, Hollywood, and the Grateful Dead? Since the late 1960s, California and the rest of America has taken a conservative turn in the face of shrinking individual control, an energy crisis, urban decay, and personal selfishness. But the once fashionable West Coast philosophy of "Hang loose and go with the flow" is giving way to a spirit of community, involvement, and personal commitment. As yet, no publication monitors or spreads this renewed hope more persuasively than Co-Evolution Quarterly.

Begun in 1974, by the staff of the popular Whole Earth Catalog, Co-Evolution Quarterly presents a remarkable mix of articles, book reviews, stories, ads, and cartoons which add up to one of the most refreshing experiments in magazine publishing. Unlike Time or Newsweek which give 52 annual reports of "what's happening," Co-Ev in four yearly issues takes a more sensitive, philosophic, and personally practical view of the world.

Begun...by the staff of the popular Whole Earth Catalog, Co-Evolution Quarterly... ads up to one of the most refreshing experiments in magazine publishing.

Designed for people who think for themselves, Co-Ev offers a welcome contrast to the mass media which molds the vast majority of opinion in this country. Subjects regularly covered include: Land Use, Soft Technology, Politics, Communications, Crafts, and Psychology. There is something here to interest everyone, and as one reviewer wrote, "When you find something you like, you can be sure you never would have found it anywhere else."

Each issue features articles or interviews with leading intellectuals: ecologist Paul Ehrlich, Nobel Prize winner James Watson, critic Malcolm Cowley, Ken Kesey of Cuckoo's Nest fame, National Book Award winner Carl Sagan, musician Taj Mahal, Joni Mitchell, radical Huey Newton, and others. Co-Ev editor Stewart Brand is a good friend of California governor Jerry Brown and there's often a rap session between Brown and some leading mind; Brown hashes out the role of television with medium guru Marshall McLuhan; and debates mental institutions with psychiatrist Thomas Szasz.

Co-Ev repeatedly challenges the reader to consider "Where are we going? Why are we going there? And what is my role?" One example is a fascinating discussion between former Agriculture Secretary and corporate farm advocate Earl Butz and small farm and community champion Wendell Berry. Or there is useful information that may help you survive, such as a piece on "Environmental mutagens and carginogens."

Co-Ev features the cartoons of R. Crumb

Co-Ev espouses learning through controversy; reader feedback and participation are valued above ad revenue. The message is clear: solutions are possible if people keep looking for new and better ways of living – there are no passengers on spaceship Earth; everyone is crew. The magazine is virtually devoid of despair, except for an appeal to aid cartoonist Robert Crumb in his attempt to pay off the IRS!

Co-Ev boasts a high quality of writing and has been called "something akin to a West Coast New Yorker." Beyond the variety of stories, Co-Ev displays the works of California's two great cartoonists: Robert Crumb and Dan O'Neill. Crumb, the creator of Fritz the Cat, Mr. Natural, and Zap Comics, is ever unpredictable and incisive. O'Neill, best known for Odds Bodkins, wryly comments on our society. This and other humor and imagination abound throughout Co-Ev.

At $3.50 a copy or $12 a year subscription, Co-Ev may seem a little steep. But you will get months of entertainment as well as thought provoking information. If Co-Ev has a fault, it is that there is so much being presented at once, your mind gets stretched in hundreds of different directions (strangely enough, thinking can be painful!)

Co-Ev is full of surprises; on one page down to earth and technically precise, on the next you're zooming across the galaxy in a story about Astro-pollution. Staff writers for Co-Ev not only report on the latest happenings in wind, water, and solar power but are also involved in the pioneering process. Here is a rewarding journal of experience sharing with an invitation to act. Objectivity can't improve on that.

Co-Evolution Quarterly is available at Bookstacks on Pine St., Burlington, or you can write the office at Box 428, Sausalito, Cal. 94965.

(Left to Right) Koichiro Harada, Kikuci Ikeda, Kazuhide Isomura, Sadao Harada.

Tokyo String Quartet Gives Impeccable Performance

By Elizabeth Thompson

Using 300 year old instruments to perform the music of Mozart, Bartok, and Mendelssohn, the Tokyo String Quartet played brilliantly to a capacity crowd at the First Congregational Church in Burlington Tuesday night.

The Quartet appeared in Burlington as the first in the International String Quartet Series presented by the Vermont Mozart Festival. Violinist Koichiro Harada and Kikvei Ikeda, violist Kazuhide Isomira and cellist Sadar Harada performed with ease the demanding scores of the three composers.

The musicians' instruments were all constructed between 1656 and 1677 by the Italian master Nicolo Amati and loaned to the Quartet courtesy of the Corcoran Gallery in Washington, D.C.

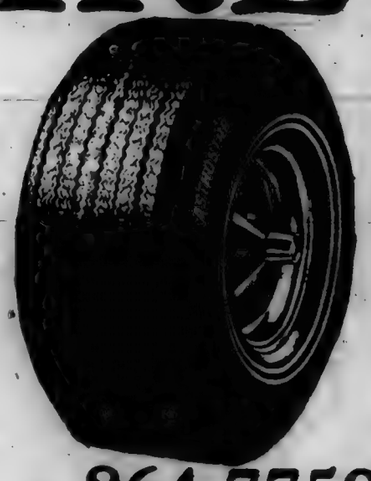
The four members of the Quartet all attended the highly acclaimed Julliard School of Music in New York. They recently garnered top honors at the Munich Chamber Music Competition. The Burlington audience seemed overwhelmed by the caliber of the performance with some giving a strong, prolonged ovation at the intermission break. At the end of the evening, the whole church demanded an encore which the Quartet gracefully acknowledged.

Tuesday night's performance was opened with Mozart's Quartet No. 17 in B Flat Major. Titled "The Hunt," this piece was composed by Mozart in 1784 and dedicated to Haydn. Mozart used Vienna's fashionable hunting horn motif for the opening movement. The second movement, Minuet opened with a serious passage and then proceeded into lyrical melodies. The arrangement became progressively more light-hearted and cheerful as the musicians executed a number of appealing exchanges.

The Quartet returned to a more serious note with the second offering of the evening, Bartok's Quartet No. 1, Opus 2. This piece featured the subtle interweaving of folk dance rhythms in a complex arrangement that exuded vitality and an insistent driving force.

After the intermission, the musicians returned to present Mendelssohn's Quartet No. 2 in A Minor, Opus 3. This composition of Mendelssohn's shows the influence of Beethoven, who was greatly admired by Mendelssohn. The first movement was full of restless energy, while the second was considerably more subdued and rhythmically intense. Mendelssohn's preoccupation with the fairy scherzo idiom was apparent in the main section of this piece. This freely expressive score was perhaps the most satisfying of the evening.

The Tokyo String Quartet's stunning performance was punctuated by their encore presentation of Haydn's light and vivacious Opus 3. Throughout the evening, the musicians showed a cohesiveness that enhanced and unified their individual performances. It was possible to see the individual identities of each player within the almost magical union of the Quartet. Their synchronization, which goes far beyond timing and tone, was something that developed only after years of experiencing together the complexity of exchange which this type of music demands.



The appreciative audience consisted mostly of the aged and educated ears of the regular concert goers. The Vermont Mozart Festival will present the Guarneri String Quartet on December 4, the Emerson String Quartet on February 28, and the Borodim Quartet on the second of May.

E&E TIRE

with extra effort
service

152 Riverside Ave. 864-7759

Lane Series
1978-79 Season
University of Vermont

Don't Miss
Guitarist and Lutenist
JULIAN BREAM
In Concert
Thursday November 2, 1978
8:00 PM Memorial Auditorium

Music by:
Bach, Sweelinck,
Dowland and Albeniz

Remember:
UVM Students receive a Dollar discount on all tickets with their I.D.

BOX OFFICE: The Ticket Store, Park Centre Building, 131 Main Street, Burlington, Vermont 05401 — Lane Campus Box Office, Grasse Mount, University of Vermont, Burlington, Vermont 05405
CALL: (802) 863-0466 — (802) 656-3418
HOURS: 10:00 A.M.-4:00 P.M. Monday-Saturday — 10:00 A.M.-4:00 P.M. Monday-Friday
TICKETS: $7.50 and $5.00; $6.50 and $4.00 (with UVM student ID)
RESERVATIONS: Held 72 hours— Mail Orders accepted with payment

GET NEW UNIROYAL SNOW TIRES

UNIROYAL

Before Old Man Winter Gets You!

SNOWPLOW II
BIAS-PLY POLYESTER M/S WHITEWALLS

$23.99

A78-13 whitewall, tubeless, plus $1.64 F.E.T. No trade-in needed.

| SIZE | PRICE | F.E.T. |
|---|---|---|
| E78-14 | $31.57 | $2.13 |
| F78-14 | 33.68 | 2.26 |
| G78-14 | 35.78 | 2.42 |
| H78-14 | 37.89 | 2.60 |
| H78-15 | 37.89 | 2.65 |
| L78-15 | 41.05 | 2.93 |

All prices plus F.E.T.

FOR THE NEW, 1977 1978 & 1979 CARS

UNIROYAL SNOWPLOW M/S PLUS
STEEL BELTED RADIAL WHITEWALLS

$59.95

DR78-14 or 205/70R14 whitewall tubeless, plus $2.32 F.E.T. No trade-in needed.

| SIZE | PRICE | F.E.T. |
|---|---|---|
| ER78-14 or P195/75 R14 | $58.94 | $2.32 |
| FR78-14 | 63.15 | 2.74 |
| GR70-15 P225/70 R15 | 68.42 | 3.15 |

UNIROYAL

UNIROYAL SNOWPLOW M&S PLUS
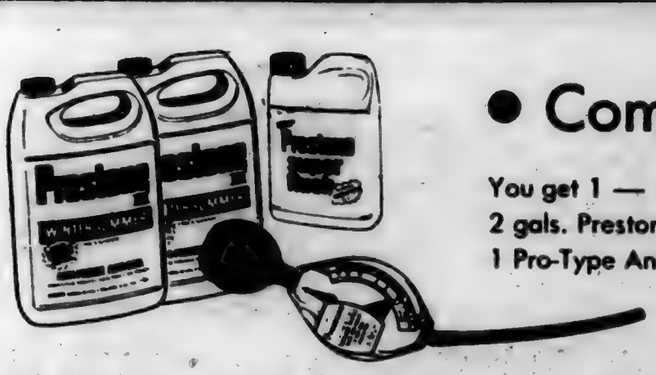
DOUBLE STEEL/GLAS BELTED RADIAL WHITEWALLS



$42.95

BR78-13 whitewall, tubeless, plus $2.11 F.E.T. No trade-in needed.

| SIZE | PRICE | F.E.T. |
|---|---|---|
| ER78-14 | $52.63 | $2.51 |
| FR78-14 | 56.84 | 2.71 |
| GR78-14 | 58.94 | 2.92 |
| GR78-15 | 60.00 | 2.99 |
| HR78-14 | 63.15 | 3.12 |
| HR78-15 | 65.26 | 3.19 |
| LR78-15 | 70.52 | 3.47 |

All prices plus FET

UNIROYAL

• Complete Prestone II Radiator Care Package

You get 1 — 22 oz. container Prestone flushing fluid
2 gals. Prestone Antifreeze
1 Pro-Type Antifreeze Tester

Reg. $2.49
Reg. 3.99 gal.
Reg. 4.49 ea.
Total Value = $14.96

All Yours For $8.95

Plus $2.00 rebate when you mail coupon to Preston.

*Includes mounting — Dealer Inquiries Invited

• All Parts & Accessories on Display •

NORCO AUTO SUPPLY

OPEN
8 AM to 8 PM
Sat.
8 AM-5 PM

FOREIGN & DOMESTIC CAR & TRUCK PARTS — AUTO PAINT • BATTERIES • TIRES

Phone — VT. TOLL FREE — 800-642-3146 LOCAL 864-4283 — 864-7871

1776 Williston Road, So. Burl., Vt.

Recent Cuts

Elton John: Single But Successful

By Lori Goodman

Elton John, A Single Man (MCA)

Produced along with Clive Franks, Elton's first studio album in two years, Blue Moves, is playful, mostly upbeat, and tongue-in-cheek. Gone is Gus Dudgeon, Elton's long-time producer, and without detracting from his great influence, the record hardly suffers.

Elton's first song, "Shine On Through," is a mellow love ballad reminiscent of those on his first album. The instrumental highlight here is undoubtedly Elton's piano, which needs no elaboration. Another one of his sly tunes is "Return to Paradise," about Englishmen on vacation who expect everything to be impeccably British. "Big Dipper" is a humorous and bouncy song, laden with sexual overtones. The choral effects are attributed to Elton's Watford soccer team and the South Adley Street Girl's Choir. Tom Renwich on guitar and horns vamps and sweetens this song, and all these contributions render this a superbly full-bodied track.

One striking aspect of A Single Man is the absence of Bernie Taupin for the first time in Elton's career. Replacing Taupin as lyric writer is Gary Osborne, a jingle writer and author of the CBS presentation of "The War of the Worlds." Again, it is possible to avoid invidious comparisons at this juncture – one simply cannot compare Osborne to Taupin's poetry through eighteen albums. Perhaps if Osborne remains as Elton's permanent lyricist, comparisons may be justified.

"Another first for Elton is his move toward politically conscious lyrics."

Another first for Elton is his move toward politically conscious lyrics. "Madness" is perhaps the ultimate lyrical statement for Elton. It's a depressing tale of the strife in Northern Ireland, about innocent people dying as a result of letter bombs irrationally placed in cars, shops, and packages. Elton's vocal delivery on "Madness" is intensified by skillful arranger Paul Buckminster, and it is evident that Elton views this situation as not only chaotic and ludicrous, but mad, as "walls collapse and timbers flare." "Georgia" is Elton's tribute to the South, with an upbeat, zesty arrangement also enhanced by the soccer team and girl's choir.

Perhaps the best track on the album contains few lyrics: "Song For Guy," which is similar in texture to Elton's classic "Funeral for a Friend." Dedicated to Guy Burchett, the Rocket Records messenger boy killed at seventeen in a motorcycle accident, it is an optimistic song about death. This song is highlighted by Elton's brilliance on melotron, polymoog, and string synthesizer. Wind drums and percussion induce spine-tingling reactions as Elton's keyboards cascade up and down, building to the conclusion of "life isn't everything." An electric guitar intro leads off "It Ain't Gonna Be Easy," a subtle bluesy tune that is strong on vocals, colorful imagery, weaving in and out of chord changes. The single "Part-time Love" is a catchy song reminiscent of Elton and Kiki Dee's "Don't Go Breaking My Heart." Whenever perceptible through the multiple background vocalists, the lead guitar is well-handled by Davey Johnstone.

A Single Man gives the impression that Elton is about to make up for lost time. And with the quality of this new release, it's good to have him back.

Toshiko-Tabackin Equals Success

By Tom Nuccio

Toshiko Akiyoshi, Finesse

The performing career of pianist/composer/arranger Toshiko Akiyoshi has undergone several major transitions. In the early 60's, she co-led a quartet with her since-divorced husband, altoist Charlie Mariano. October 1967 marked Toshiko's emergence into the big band spectrum – unleashing a 16-piece unit at a Town Hall, N.Y.C. concert. Since 1972 she and present husband Lew Tabackin have been actively involved with the contemporary Toshiko-Tabackin big band, a successful group that recently toured the United States and Europe. Finesse, her latest and premier release on Concord Jazz, exhibits a temporary and pleasant vacation from the big band setting.

"... the album stands independently as a tremendous accomplishment..."

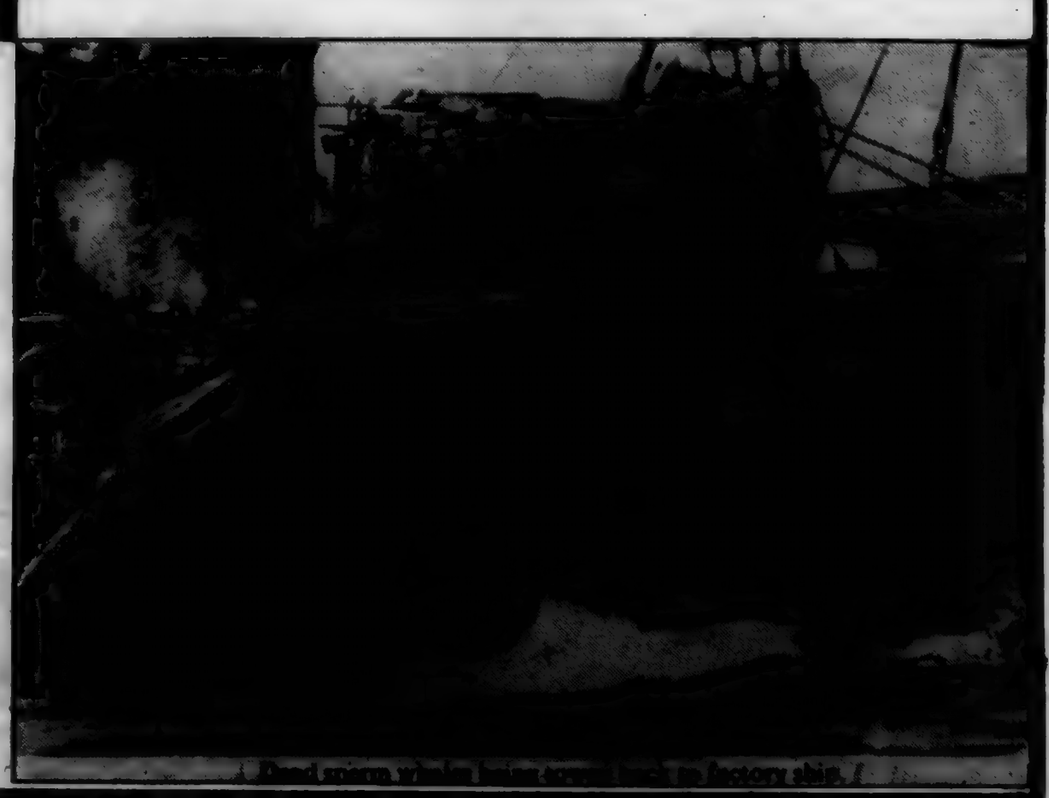
Recording within a small group context for the first time in a decade, Akiyoshi exposes a quality previously inaudible in the midst of the big band's multi-decibel, instrumental blare – her keyboard virtuosity. This trio session also features illustrious sidemen Jake Hanna (drums) and Monty Budwig (bass) who act as complementary agents to Akiyoshi's piano. Finesse covers a full gamut of jazz from Jelly Roll Morton's "Mr. Jelly Lord" to Toshiko's own "Warning! Success May Be Hazardous...," thus providing an interestingly varied selection of tunes. Her solos are sensitively creative improvisations, incorporating melodic melody with subtle, harmonic foundations.

Finesse might possibly be a cornerstone in the constantly evolving career of Toshiko Akiyoshi. Successful sales and artistic satisfaction might possibly induce her to continue experimenting in the trio setting. Regardless, the album stands independently as a tremendous accomplishment by the world's foremost female jazz pianist.

Greenpeace Zodiac approached Soviet whaling fleet, factory ship and two 'killer' boats. Photo by Rex Weyler



S.A. Speakers Presents

Greenpeace: Saving The Whale

November 9, 8:00pm

Ira Allen Chapel U.V.M.

The Greenpeace volunteers risk their lives throwing their bodies protectively over helpless baby seals and sailing in rubber rafts between whale and harpoons. Their goal is to save these species from extinction and preserve our natural environment.

GREENPEACE: SAVING THE WHALE is a multi-media program presented by John Frizell, research director for the non-profit, Canadian-based Greenpeace International Foundation. "Save the Seals" and "Voyages to the Whales" are films documenting Greenpeace's confrontations with Russian and Japanese whalers in the Eastern Pacific and Norwegian sealing ships in Labrador.

The program will be presented free as part of the SA Speakers Bureau, November 9 at 8:00 p.m. in the University of Vermont's Ira Allen Chapel.

WINDJAMMER
·Steaks·Seafood·Prime Rib·

DINNER MENU

Soups
Baked Onion Soup 1.50 (with melted cheese) — Clam Chowder 1.00 — Soup of the Day .9

Beef
Sirloin (top sirloin steak, cut here daily) 6.95
Petite Sirloin (small top sirloin steak) 5.45
Steak Teriyaki (marinated top sirloin steak) 7.25
Beef Kabob (served on bed of rice pilaf) 5.95
Prime Rib (while it lasts) 7.95
Extra Hearty Cut (one dollar extra)
Chopped Steak 4.25

Seafood
Crab Alaska (steamed King Crab legs) 8.95
Broiled Scallops (tender and delicately seasoned) 5.95
Baked Stuffed Shrimp (choice shrimp with seafood stuffing) 6.95
Broiled Boston Scrod (haddock) 5.75
Swordfish Steak (seasonal-when available)
Seafood Newburg (served on bed of rice pilaf) 5.95
Broiled Seafood Platter (scrod, scallops, shrimp) 6.95

Chicken and Combinations
Chicken Teriyaki (marinated boneless breasts) 5.85
Sirloin n' Shrimp (small sirloin and choice shrimp) 7.95
Chicken n' Sirloin (boneless chicken and small sirloin) 6.85
Crab n' Sirloin (King Crab legs and small sirloin) 8.75
Mixed Grill (shrimp, chicken, small steak kabob) 6.95

Our Salad Bar, Baked Potato or Rice Pilaf, and fresh warm Breads Included

Extras:
Fresh Sauteed Mushrooms (serves 2) 1.50
Coffee, Tea, Milk, Soda .40

Desserts:
Cheesecake (plain or with strawberries) 1.25
Carrot Cake (try it you'll like it) .95
Dutch Apple Cream Pie .95
Lemon Sherbet .75
Chocolate Chip Ice Cream .75
Irish or Jamaican Coffee 1.50

Beer
Old fashioned draft beer, kept cold from cellar to spigot.

Bread
French and pumpernickel, kept warm at the salad bar

Salad Bar
Create a salad to suit your taste. As much as you care to eat.

1076 Williston Road, next to Econo Lodge
Entrance across from Ramada Inn

Dinner Served Daily
5-10 P.M.

Cocktail Lounge
4-closing
862-6585

Raw Bar — Thurs. & Fri. 4-7
Shrimp, Cherrystones, Oysters
25¢ each

Paul Theroux

No Smiles for the Camera

By Curtis Haynes

Picture Palace by Paul Theroux $9.95, Houghton Miflin Co.

Writers with a good reputation often have difficulty challenging themselves to produce more good books. The temptation to crank out as many books as possible while still popular is often deadly. Today's popular theme is the woman's perspective on the world, and in Picture Pala, Paul Theroux falls into the trap of trying to write a bestseller rather than a good novel. His story about a 70-year-old famous woman photographer, Maude Pratt, begins with originality and ends in depressing blankness. Along the way, Theroux tries to spice things up with sex and Maude's masculine vulgarities. It doesn't work.

The story is narrated by Maude and it is interesting to study how a male writer tries to see through a woman's eyes. Theroux offers all of his valuable insights on art and photography too early in the book. He knows his subjects, but his plot is contrived.

Growing up on Cape Cod in the 1920's, Maude becomes obsessed with photography as a way of attracting the love of her brother Orlando. The camera is Maude's Third Eye, her means of perceiving her surroundings. But she can never be sure if photography presents the truth or a deception. Brother Orlando commits his incestuous acts not with Maude but with his other sister Phoebe. Maude photographs the event, has a nervous breakdown, and goes blind. Not very realistic, eh?

Suddenly, while blind, she becomes famous for her past pictures, some of which ruin her father's career. In yet another turn around, her father takes on the job of her agent and nurse in her seclusion. At last, her sight gradually improves, and she loses her virginity to a visiting GI in 1944 at the age of 38, thinking he's Orlando, and miraculously, her sight is restored. How trite. Phoebe and Orlando then drown and her parents die, leaving her alone.

Maude's life becomes her work and the best scenes in Picture Palace are photography sessions with luminaries of the 20th century: Graham Greene, Thomas Mann, Aldous Huxley, Evelyn Waugh, and others.

Finally, a flattering parasite, Frank Fusco, puts on a retrospective show of Maude's work, and, while her work is praised, Maude is ignored. Her life is a failure and she walks off into her loneliness.

Paul Theroux earned notoriety for The Great Railway Bazaar, an account of a train trip through Asia. Two favorably reviewed novels followed, The Family Arsenal and The Consul's File. Theroux does write well; the first third of Picture Palace is proof. The plot here moves along aided by a breezy style and some imaginative descriptions and wit. But Theroux gets stuck between the present and flashbacks to Maude's past, and the result is uneven. Maude's family past just isn't that exciting; she gained fame from photographing celebrities. Ultimately, Maude has nothing to show for herself but memories.

Picture Palace will interest photography buffs, but women will not take to it simply because it is about a woman. Picture Palace isn't a bad novel, it is only fair. Theroux does have literary talents which he will hopefully direct toward a tighter, more meaningful book with more alive characters.

Goin' South

Continued From Page 27

made up of anyone who is out of the Disney fascination stage to accept such suggestive sexual references without at least partially delivering somewhere along the line. He even goes so far as to show a man who is seemingly masturbating in the bushes while watching Miss Steenburgen bathe fully clothed, complete with boots, in a stream. While amusing, it is also a much too obvious representation of the point that we, as an audience, are being held out on.

The way sex is dealt with is not the only unfulfilled promise in this film. The couple are being forced off their land by a railroad tycoon, as are a number of others, but this conflict is only half-heartedly pursued. Introduced early in the film, the subject is virtually forgotten until near the end. Since we also discover that many of the farms in the area, including this one, are rich in oil and that the inhabitants have no idea of its worth, we keep waiting for a standoff against the greedy oil company that never materializes.

In directing Goin' South, Jack Nicholson has needlessly compromised between making a lampoonish statement on the old west and a film that deals with human foibles and emotions. It could, and probably should, have been a great combination, but the imbalance between the massive doses of comedy and the slight inflictions of seriousness leave us, at the finale, with only a sense of incompleteness.

Step Out... ...in Style in FRYES and TIMBERLAND from:

CRISPIN Leather

160 College St.

Random Notes

Jogathon

There will be a JOGATHON on November 4th (rain date November 5th) at Leddy Park in Burlington, beginning at 10:00 a.m., sponsored by the Downhill Edge, with proceeds going to the Creamery Educational Foundation, to support the Women Women Women 2 conference to be held in May of 1979.

Pledge sheets for the JOGATHON can be picked up at the Downhill Edge, on lower Main Street, at Quiche 'n Things, on lower Pearl Street, or at the Creamery in Shelburne. There will be prizes in each age category for the largest pledges turned in, so pick up your sheets right away!

For more information about the JOGATHON, call Nancy Post, 425-3193, or Hannah Dennison at the Creamery, 985-3003.

Agriculture

On Saturday, November 4, the College of Agriculture at the University of Vermont will be holding a Professional Careers in Agriculture Day. The program will begin at 10:00 a.m. in the Marsh Lounge, Billings Student Center, with an introduction by Dean William Kelly of the College of Agriculture.

The morning program will consist of two guest speakers, Mr. Robert Brown, director of Admissions, Cornell University– College of Veterinary Medicine, and Dr. Sarah Hicks, D.V.M., recent graduate of the University of Pennsylvania Veterinary School. Coffee, donuts and cider will be served in the morning session. There will be a break for lunch and then in the afternoon session the following departments will make a short presentation followed by a question and answer period: Agricultural Economics, Agricultural Education, Animal Science, General Studies and Plant and Soil Science. All interested students are invited to attend.

Careers?

The following employers will be on-campus to interview graduating students the week of November 13-17. Sign-up for these interviews on Nov. 6, 7, 8. Career Planning and Placement Office, 109 S. Prospect St.

Commercial Bank in Vermont. Position in management trainee. Must have interest in management and in commercial banking. Rotational program. Seeks Business Admin. with definite interest in marketing. Grade point average 2.75 or above.

Heath Consultants, Stoughton, MA. Positions: Travelling Consultant – starting position which requires extensive travel for first 2 years throughout U.S. Applicants must have own transportation. Heath performs leakage control services & surveillance for utility companies. Seeks BA/BS Earth Sci/Forestry/Natural Resources/Envir. Sci.

Naval Underwater Systems, Newport, R.I. Positions: Research and Development, Computer software. Seeks BS/MS/PhD EE, Electronic E, Computer Sci.

Stanley Works, Shaftsbury, VT. Positions: Manufacturing Engineering Trainees. Seeks BS in Ind'l E, ME, Mft. Eng.

General Electric, Burlington, VT. Positions: General Elec. Edison Engrg Program. Manufacturing Management Program. Field Engineering Program. Knolls Seeks most Engineering disciplines, sciences, computer sci. – Please check further in the Career Planning Office.

State of New Hampshire, Dept. of Public Works & Highways, Concord, NH. Positions: Highway design & construction, bridge design and construction. Seeks BS/CE Highway engineering only.

U.S. Dept. Commerce, Bureau of the Census, Washington, DC. Positions: Statisticians, Math Stat., Comp. Progr. All candidates must have at least 15 semester hours of math & stats., 6 semester hours must be in statistics. Seeks Math, Stat., Comp. Sci., Soc., Psych., Mktg., Econ.

Jordan Marsh Co., Boston, MA. Positions: Executive Training Program – Dec. grads only. Seeks candidates interested in a career in retail buying and merchandise management. Lib. Arts majors, Bus. areas.

Gordan & Sherman, Certified Public Accountants, Montpelier, VT. Positions: Staff Accountants. Seeks BS in Accounting.

Graduate Schools Conducting Information Interviews

American Graduate School of International Management, Glendale, Arizona.

Princeton University, Woodrow Wilson School of Public & International Affairs, Princeton, NJ.

Military Information Teams – Billings Center

U.S. Marine Corps.

Holiday Blues

Starting Tuesday, November 6th, Agora Counseling Center is offering a group designed for those of us who don't feel like celebrating during the holiday season. The group will meet every Tuesday 6 p.m. to 7:30 p.m. through January 2nd. The focus will be to Survive, while gaining some new ways to deal with the expectations, disappointments, feelings and stress of the holidays.

The fee is $10.00 per session and is negotiable for those who cannot afford it.

The group is limited to eight people. The registration deadline is Thursday November 2.

For registration and information, call Agora Counseling Center at 658-4336 on weekdays 9:00 a.m. to 12:00 noon.

Church Street Center

The Church Street Center has announced its November-December schedule of mini-courses, workshops, and special activities. The listing of over forty mini-courses includes a full complement of offerings in dance, music, art, photography, and yoga, in addition to such new offerings as "Balkan Singing Styles," "Houseplanning," and "Theatre Appreciation and Playgoing." A number of workshops are planned, including a three-part discussion of Middle East Issues, and a workshop on the legal rights of women. Featured special activities include two discussion series: "Dilemmas in Education" and "Should Vermont Prohibit the Conversion of Farmland to Non–agricultural Uses?" The Housing, Economics, and Energy Project will sponsor a workshop series in energy conservation. For further information on these programs, or to receive a brochure with detailed description of all offerings, call the Church Street Center at 656-4221, or stop by at 135 Church Street.

Students

Freshmen and sophomores in the College of Arts and Sciences: Do you know what distribution requirements you need for graduation? Are you aware of the "24-hour rule" or the "30 of last 42 hour rule" which you must comply with to graduate?

For answers to these and other questions concerning academic life in Arts and Sciences, come to the Advising Workshop sponsored by the Dean's Advisory Committee (DAC) to the College of Arts and Sciences.

The workshop is scheduled for Nov. 7th at the following locations: 7:00 p.m. – Jeanne Mance Main Lounge; 8:30 p.m. – McCauley Main Lounge; 7:00 p.m. – MAT Main Lounge; 8:30 p.m. – Patterson Main Lounge.

Members of the DAC plus Assistant Deans Barbara O'Reilly (at JM and McCauley) and Jack Ewell (MAT and Patterson) will be present to answer your questions.

Dancercize

Dancercize offers cardio-vascular fitness, strength, flexibility, coordination, endurance and muscle toning, all through a series of dance/exercise movements choreographed to modern music. It allows self-expression, emotional release, enjoyment of dancing and enhances creativity in each individual – all this in 45 minutes per class!

Starting November 13th and 14th meeting twice per week for 6 weeks. Fee: $12.00

Days, times and locations are as follows: Monday & Wednesday 9–9:45 a.m. – Memorial Aud. for newcomers; Monday & Wednesday 6:45–7:30 p.m. – Adams School continuation; Monday & Wednesday 7:45–8:30 p.m. – Adams School for newcomers; Tuesday & Thursday 12 noon – 12:45 p.m. – Memorial Aud. for newcomers; Tuesday & Thursday 4:00–4:45 p.m. – Memorial Aud. for newcomers.

Outdoor Rec.

The Outdoor Recreation Management Program at L/LC has compiled a pamphlet of the recreation facilities in the greater Burlington area. If you're interested in checking out some different areas, check out this booklet. Pamphlets can be found at the Library on campus or the Chamber of Commerce and various sports stores off-campus. Or else come to D280 or D370 at L/L to get your own. For further information – call x4689 or x4264.

EMBA

EMBA pre-enrollment sessions for Engineering students will be held Monday, Nov. 6th 12:00 noon, Votey Reading Room, and Thursday, Nov. 9th, 3:15 p.m., 101 Votey.

EMBA pre-enrollment sessions for Business Administration students will be held Tuesday, Nov. 7th, 12:00 noon, Votey Reading Room, and Tuesday, Nov. 7th, 8:00 p.m., Votey Reading Room.

EMBA pre-enrollment sessions for Computer Science, Math, and Statistics students will be held Tuesday, Nov. 7th, 9:00 p.m.

Note: All students in P3 (pre-professional Program) must sign up for one of these sessions by Nov. 3rd in 103 Votey.

Ski Swap

This Saturday, November 4th, WDW complex is sponsoring a Ski Swap in WDW main lounge. Winter apparel, skates, skis, poles, etc. can be brought to be sold from 8 a.m. to 11 a.m. on November 4th only. There will be a 10% commission charge on all equipment sold.

Local ski shops may also become involved, so come on over and just browse.

Auditions

Try-outs for Man of La Mancha are being held Oct. 31, Nov. 1 & 2 at 7:00 p.m. in the Essex Playhouse, junction of Route 15 and 128 in Essex Center. There will be open auditions for actors, with singing experience and some dancing. The show will be directed by Mr. Stephen Janes. Performance dates are Jan. 18-21 and Jan. 25-28.

Buisness

What's it all about? Come to the Billings Center on November 8th to talk with over a dozen business leaders about their specific field of interest and the dynamics of a career in the world of business. The fields represented will be: Accounting, Retail Management, Law, Hotel/Restaurant Management, Sales and Marketing, Bank Management, Management Trainee Development, Insurance and Financial Planning, Owning and Operating your own business, Personnel management and Advertising. More information and sign-up at the Dept. of Business Administration, 301 Votey.

Art

All interested in re-initiating the Art Collaborative please attend the third meeting at the Francis Colburn Gallery, 3rd floor Williams Hall, Wednesday, November 8, 4:00 p.m. Topics to be discussed will include the writing of a proposal to the Student Association: an attempt to be recognized, once again, as a student organization (and funded as such). We need your energy and ideas. Come find out what we are all about. All Welcome!!

Advising

Sue is havi g difficulty deciding upon a major. Her parents want her to be a doctor, so she enrolled in the Pre-Med program. All of a sudden Sue's interests begin to wane. She does like her psychology courses. How does she go about changing her major? How does she tell her parents about her change in plans? If you have similar concerns or want someone to explore career options with you, come to the Advising Referral Center at 337 Waterman, x4174. Let us help make the system work for you!

Movies

Christie Hall is sponsoring two special showings of The Great Race at 7:00 and 9:00 p.m. Friday, November 3. Place is Southwick Gym, and admission is $1. The movie is 153 minutes of "Rollicking gagged-up comedy about an old time auto race from New York to Paris! Tony Curtis, Jack Lemmon, Natalie Wood, and Peter Falk.

Potluck

On Sunday, November 5 the Gay Student Union will host a Potluck Supper in Marsh Lounge, Billings Center at 7 p.m. The general meeting will also be held at this time. Anyone is invited to attend and bring a dish. For more information call 656-4173.

Calendar
Week of November 3 - 9

3 Friday

EXHIBITIONS

Francis Colburn Gallery – Invitational Snap Shot Exhibition. 9 a.m. – 5 p.m.

Fleming Museum – "War!" – a cross cultural viewpoint. "The Library Furniture of H.H. Richardson." "Tools & Technology."

Living Learning – Anthony Sini: Paints & Drawings. 4–8 p.m.

LECTURES

"Interaction of ADP–Ribosylating Toxins with Cultured Cells: Biomedical Studies Using Resistant Mutants," Dr. Moehring, 12 noon, B-403 Given.

"Career Awareness Group," 2 p.m., sign-up & meeting place x3450.

"Health Care Delivery," Mr. Auron Fuchs, Vermont State Dept. of Health, 1:10–2:00 p.m., Rm. 216 L/LC. All are welcome.

PERFORMING ARTS

"Joseph & the Amazing Technicolor Dreamcoat," 5 p.m., 115 Commons, L/L.

SPECIAL ACTIVITIES

German folksongs – C370 L/L, German House, 4 p.m.

Third Annual Vermont Women's Poetry Festival, 8 p.m., Church St. Center.

Greek Dance Workshop with David Bilides. Admission $1.00, Southwick ballroom, 8 p.m. Refreshments will be served. Sponsored by the UVM Folk Dance Club.

FILMS

SA Film – "Islands in the Stream," 7, 9:30 & 12 p.m., B106 Angell, $1/ID, $1.50/General.

Mel Brooks movie "12 Chairs" 235 Marsh Life/Science. Showings at 5, 7, 9 and 11 p.m. $1 admission.

SPORTS

Women's X-country in EAIAW Regionals. Time TBA.

OTHER

Sugarbush, Smuggler's & Mad River Ski Pass Sales – 9 a.m. – 5 p.m., Billings Lobby.

FILMS

SA Films "Best Years of Our Lives," 7:30 p.m., B106 Angell. Free/ID, 50 cents/General.

OTHER

Smuggler's, Sugarbush, & Mad River Ski Pass Sales, 9 a.m. – 5 p.m., Billings Lobby.

MEETINGS

Vermont Council of UVM, annual meeting, 10:30 a.m., 1:30 p.m. & 7 p.m., L/L Center.

Meeting of all secondary education majors to review their program. 3:00 – 5:00 p.m. Social hour: 5:00–6:00 p.m.

UPCOMING EVENTS

Living/Learning Center Program Fair. More info. call 656-4211, 4212.

WDW Ski Swap, WDW Main Lounge, Equipment may be brought to be sold from 8–11 a.m.. The swap will be from 12 to 5 p.m.

4 Saturday

EXHIBITIONS

Fleming Museum – "War!" a cross-cultural viewpoint. "The Library Furniture of H. H. Richardson." "Tools & Technology."

WORKSHOPS

"Home Winterization," 9 a.m. to noon, Church St. Center.

PERFORMING ARTS

"Joseph & the Amazing Technicolor Dreamcoat," 115 Commons L/L. 5 p.m.

Lane Series "The Trinidad Folk Festival," 8 p.m. Memorial Auditorium.

FILMS

IRA Film "All the President's Men," 7 and 9:30 p.m., Southwick. $1 admission.

Film "Kazablan," an Israeli movie sponsored by Hillel, 8 p.m.

SPORTS

Women's X-country in EAIAW Regionals. Time TBA.

CONCERTS

Bruce Springsteen, 8 p.m., Patrick Gym.

WEEKLY EVENTS

Admissions Group Information Session, 10 a.m., North Lounge, Billings.

"Choosing a Major," 3:30 p.m., 237 Waterman.

"Magneto Polaritans at an Si-SiO Interface," M. Lawrence Glasser, Ph.D. 4 p.m., A102 Cook.

Green Peace Movement: "Save the Whales & the Seals," 8 p.m., Ira Allen Chapel.

Dr. Rush will be speaking on Curriculum and Careers Available in Electrical Engineering, 3:15 p.m. Votey Reading Room.

5 Sunday

EXHIBITIONS

Fleming Museum "War!" a cross-cultural viewpoint. "Tools & Technology." "The Furniture of H.H. Richardson."

PERFORMING ARTS

"Joseph and the Amazing Technicolor Dreamcoat," 5 p.m., 115 Commons L/L.

FILMS

SA Film "The Actress," 7:30 p.m., B106 Angell. Free/ID, 50 cents/General.

IRA Film "All the President's Men," 8 p.m., Southwick. $1 admission.

SPORTS

Men's Ice Hockey vs. Bishop's University (exhibition game), 7 p.m., Gutterson.

MEETINGS

GSU Potluck Supper, 7 p.m., Marsh Lounge, Billings.

6 Monday

EXHIBITIONS

Francis Colburn Gallery – Vickey Lowry & Jim Brown: Black & White Photographs. 9 a.m. – 5 p.m.

Fleming Museum – "War!" a cross-cultural viewpoint. "Tools and Technology." "The Library Furniture of H.H. Richardson."

L/L Gallery – Anthony Sini: paintings & drawings. 4–8 p.m.

LECTURES

Vermont Seminars, "Water Quality in the U.S.: Conflicts, Their Resolution, & Federal Policy," Joan Kovalic, 7 p.m., Memorial Lounge, Waterman.

"Who Should Decide What is Taught in Our Public Schools," Gerald Anderson, 7:30 p.m., Church St. Center.

"The Business of Woodworking: 1700–1840," Charles Hummel, 8 p.m., Wilbur Room, Fleming Museum.

"Mental Health in Rural Areas," Professor Jeanette Folta, Dept. of Sociology, UVM 1:10–2:00 p.m., Rm 216 L/LC. All are welcome.

MEETINGS

VPIRG, 5–6:30 p.m., Conference Room C, Billings.

OTHER

UVM Directories arriving for Commuter Students, Billings Front Desk.

Church St. Center, new mini-courses beginning this week. Call 656-4221.

7 Tuesday

EXHIBITIONS

Francis Colburn Gallery, Vicky Lowry & Jim Brown: Black & White Photographs, 9 a.m. – 5 p.m.

Fleming Museum, "War!" a cross-cultural viewpoint. "Tools & Technology." "The Library Furniture of H.H. Richardson."

L/L Gallery – Anthony Sini: paintings & drawings, 4–8 p.m.

WORKSHOPS

"Expressing Your Sexuality," 3 p.m., Counseling & Testing Center.

"Total Well Being/An Holistic Approach," 3:30 p.m., Counseling & Testing Center.

LECTURES

Grand Rounds with Herta Guttman, M.D., Institute of Community & Family Psychiatry, Jewish General Hospital, Montreal, 4 p.m., 103 Rowell.

Writers' Workshop Program, Rosellen Brown, poet & fiction writer. 8 p.m., John Dewey Lounge, Old Mill.

FILMS

SA Film, "Hard Days Night," 7 & 9:30 p.m., B106 Angell, 50 cents everyone.

MEETINGS

Staff Council, 12 noon, Memorial Lounge, Waterman.

Christian Science College Org. 4:30 p.m., B102 L/L.

SA Senate Meeting, 7:30 p.m., North Lounge, Billings.

OTHER

Smuggler's, Sugarbush & Mad River Ski Pass Sales, 9–5 p.m. Billings Lobby.

Israeli Folk Dancing, L/L Center 115 Commons, 8 p.m.

8 Wednesday

EXHIBITIONS

Francis Colburn Gallery, Vicky Lowry & Jim Brown: Black & White Photographs. 9 a.m. – 5 p.m.

Fleming Museum "War!" a cross-cultural viewpoint. "Tools & Technology." "The Library Furniture of H.H. Richardson."

L/L Gallery – Anthony Sini: Paintings & Drawings, 4–8 p.m.

LECTURES

Career Awareness Groups. For info. & sign-up call 656-3450, 2 p.m.

Director's Night with John Engroff of L/L Center, 5 p.m., LINKS Office, 337 Waterman.

"Sexual Assault: Toward Improved Communication Between Women & Men," sponsored by LINKS, 7 p.m. 426 Waterman.

Vermont Seminars Program – The Holocaust "The Holocaust as Ultimate Event," by Terrence Des Pres, and "The Holocaust Experience in Language & Fact," by Lawrence Langer, 8 p.m., Benedict Auditorium, Marsh Life Science.

"The Rural Elderly," Professor Alfred P. Fongler, Dept. of Sociology, UVM. 1:10–2:00 p.m., Rm 216 L/LC. All are welcome.

WORKSHOPS

"Self-Appreciation," 3:30 p.m., Counseling & Testing Center.

SPECIAL ACTIVITIES

"Business Career Day," 9 a.m., 10 a.m., 11 a.m. & 1:30 p.m., North Lounge, Billings. SIGN UP in 301 Votey.

Writers' Workshop Program Open Class, Rosellen Brown, J. Dewey Lounge, Old Mill, 12 noon.

Continued on Page 38

Sports

The Faceoff...

The Chase...

The Shot... Photos by Huse & Frowenfeld

Vermont Hockey Preview

Added Aggressiveness Sharpens Cats' Claws

By Josh Reynolds

The University of Vermont hockey team will feature a skilled offense and a considerably more aggressive attitude than last year as the Catamounts plunge into their 78-79 season next Sunday in an exhibition game against Bishop's University at Gutterson Field House.

NEW FACES

Two experienced Penn transfer skaters and a number of gifted freshmen will join the improved returning veterans. The top draft choices were UPenn's leading scorers Gary Prior (wing) and Tom Cullity (center), who were recruited when Penn's varsity hockey team was dropped. Both came to Vermont with two years of Division One hockey under their belt, and this experience and scoring ability should be an asset.

Penn did not have an exceptional season last year, but any team in the Division One conference is a tough competitor. Prior and Cullity should be an integral part of UVM's scoring power, an area that has been weak in recent years. Head Coach Jim Cross discussed these players and their contribution: "Our greatest need is offense, so these two scorers will help a lot. Their attitude has been good and I feel that they should make a major contribution to the team." Cross also pointed out that although they had to adjust to a new style of play, Prior and Cullity were performing well in tryouts.

"We've got a number of very good freshmen," commented Cross, "and five of these are good enough to step in and play immediately." Among them are defenseman Billy Kangas from Eveleth, Mich., whom Cross likes for his "smart, heady play," Chris Coutu of Point-aux-Trembles, Que., and Chris Hodgson of Cheshire, Conn. Hodgson was not recruited, but he showed so much skill in tryouts that he may be one of the starters. "He's quick, tough, loves to learn and has fun" Cross explained. Two other talented freshmen forwards are Scott Fairbairn (wing) and Garry Herbert (center). Fairbairn, who captained the football team as well as playing hockey at Kent, is an accomplished player. Herbert has great speed.

BACK TO WIN

"New blood is good, but what will benefit the team most are the veterans," Cross emphasized. "Also, our returning seniors are markedly improved. They have come back with a positive, determined attitude, and are all in great shape, down in weight and playing a good game. All of them are playing the best hockey of their career."

"We have an overall attitude of wanting to move the puck; Jim Duffy, Greg Wilkie and Ben Lord are moving it faster and handling it better than ever before. Wilkie had a tendency to hold the puck just a split second too long which often led to trouble, but he's worked on the problem and it should make a considerable difference. Duffy has returned in excellent condition and with a winning attitude which should add spark to the team."

Center Craig Homola, the sophomore from Eveleth, Mich., who tied the league last year for goal scoring, is also returning, as is defenseman Mark Brown. Wings Billy Ford and Chris Zimmerman, who will be playing on the same line, are playing an aggressive, clean defense. Zimmerman has shown that he can score as well.

Unfortunately, the injury-ridden Serge Leblanc will probably not see much action this year. Leblanc, the brilliant defenseman from Montreal, who was voted top defenseman in his league and was Cross' number one draft choice, was injured in his third game with Vermont last year. He has not seen action since. "Right now he is not in our current plans," stated Cross. "He would have to practice three consecutive weeks before we would consider him, and he is just not doing that now."

Leblanc still holds hope of playing this year. "I'm practicing now, but the knee is still bad," he admits. "I've been working out all summer, and I hope to get some play in but the knee has got to be completely better before I play." Leblanc has been recruited by the Montreal Canadiens, but he stated that he has no intention of leaving UVM. If he does play this year, it should certainly help the team, but Cross is not expecting it.

Last year's goal tending crew has returned led by Sylvain Turcotte, who should be starting in the opening games with his smart playing and good glove hand. Tony Frost has returned with a better work attitude and both goalies have lost their tendency to hit the ice often during a slump. Burkhard Hoene, the tough worker, should complete a very solid crew.

"With the addition of the two players from Penn, we have helped ourselves greatly and are thinking about the playoffs"
-- Coach Jim Cross

"Right now Leblanc is not in our current plans"
--Coach Jim Cross

"I hope to get in some play but my knee has to be completely better before I play"
-Serge Leblanc

Cross will again go with four forward lines. On the first line are Murphy at center, Ford at left wing and Zimmerman at right wing. On the second line Homola will anchor the Cats' efforts with Prior and Vincent on the wings. Cullity, Duffy and Lord will form the third wing. Gordie McFarlane, Fairbairne and Hebert round out the Vermont offensive effort. Louis Cote returns to spearhead the Vermont defense, along with Wilkie, Coutu, Hodgeson and Kangas.

Scoring is the key word as UVM begins its season. Cross pointed out that "in the past few years we've lacked the ability to score, even though the defense is tight. We have outshot teams and still lost. This year we definitely have considerably more goal scoring potential. In 1974 we had Tim O'Connell who scored 41 goals, but last year our top scorer racked up only thirteen. To be competitive for a playoff berth we need a number of twelve to fourteen goal scorers." This season may see just that. The new skill and the improved veterans combine to form an impressive lineup.

Cross concluded by stating, "We feel we have the strongest year ever and with the addition of the two players from Penn, we have helped ourselves greatly and we are all thinking about the playoffs. We want it badly. We've come so close the last few years, and the playoff scene has been standard practice here for years, so we want to be a part of it again." The playoffs? The potential is there, but the season will tell.

Interested in Writing Hockey?
Contact Cynic Sports x4413

We carry the DANSKIN line

Leotards
Leg Warmers
Jazz Pants
Gym Suits
Tights

ACT TWO

Ninety Seven Church St. Phone: 658-2050

Catamount Soccer Men Crush Hapless Black Bears

By Steven Larose

Orono, Maine — Brian Fleming's pair of goals and two assists keyed a seven goal University of Vermont men's soccer outburst as the Catamounts worked out the frustrations of Monday's overtime loss to Bridgeport on the hapless Black Bears of University of Maine, 7-0 Saturday morning.

Unlike Monday's game, Vermont had no offensive hesitation and displayed consistent passing and crisp, clean thrusts towards the Maine goal. Fleming paced Vermont with goals in both halves, while Zareh Avakian exploded for two goals in the second half. Vermont's substitutes broke into the scoring scene for the first time this year as newcomers Flint Willey and Bill McInerney each scored once.

Larry Stone began the Catamount field day with a goal at 14:59 of the first half on an assist by Fleming. Only 20 seconds later Fleming found the nets after taking a feed from Gardy Fraker. Both shots were hard curving ground shots into the lower corners.

Vermont's offense had several brilliant spots in the first half, the most outstanding of which was Avakian's breakaway, dribbled through two Maine defenders and blasted at the Maine goalie who managed to block the shot. Goalie Bart Farley was rarely challenged during the first half, as the Cats dominated most of the half with an impressively coordinated offense. The Cat defense was also instrumental in the victory, as the fullbacks effectively cleared any Maine attacks.

Avakian made it 3-0 early in the second half with an unassisted line drive from the left corner. Fleming kept the Cat rally flowing with his connection at the 19:09 mark of the second half. Greg Ward crossed to Fleming who then went one on one with the Maine goalie and faked him out with a ground shot into the left corner.

Brian Fleming controls through a tackle. Photo by Muse/IDC

Farley's consistent play in the Vermont nets again paid off for the Catamounts, as Maine was awarded a penalty kick after Ward tripped a Maine defender at 21:20 of the second half. Farley made a diving save to the right hand side to block the shot. Farley has not admitted one penalty kick this season, one of the toughest shots to block in soccer. Rob Wood then took over the goalie duties for the remainder of the contest.

The play of Vermont's substitutes was the most impressive factor of the contest, with the newcomers on the squad making the most of the opportunity to prove themselves. Coach Reinhardt later remarked that he was pleased with his bench and that these players would play a greater role in future games. After a short-lived Maine drive against a Vermont defense flatfooted midway through the second half, Willey boosted the Vermont runaway to 5-0 with his goal on an assist by Larry Stone. Fleming continued to make the best of the opportunities Maine's lackluster squad presented him, as he picked up on a breakaway and blasted through Maine's defenders, only to have his shot batted away by the Maine goalie.

Avakian put the icing on the cake for Vermont with a goal at the 32:20 mark with an assist from Fleming. Ken McInerney wrapped up Vermont's afternoon with the final goal on

(continued on page 38)

Old/Used/Out of Print BOOKS

Fabulous Prices

Bygone Books

Great Gifts

10¢–$50

Try us for your supplementary reading !!

Monday—Saturday
9:30 am-5:30pm

91 College St.
(Between Pine & Champlain)
Burlington, Vermont 05401
Tel. 802 862-4997

Bus Ride Blues En Route to Maine

By Steven Larose

Aboard a Bus with the UVM soccer team somewhere in Maine

The endless expanse of gray interstate that cuts through the barren countryside is mercilessly eaten up by the non-stop bus. Inside there is a lonely hush as 30 collegiate soccer players pass the long ride by reading, playing cards and backgammon or sleeping. For this is life in the Yankee Conference, traveling and playing a majority of the games on the road.

The University of Vermont soccer Catamounts traveled to Orono Maine this past weekend for a Yankee Conference encounter with the University of Maine Black Bears. From the beginning the game seemed to be the least of the Cats' worries, as many complained of upcoming exams and withdrawal symptoms from being deprived of Friday night drafts. As we set out on the six-hour sojourn to the nowhere expanses of Maine, the group fell silent and minds turned to catching up on reading or sleep.

All was quiet until we hit the worst roads in New England, courtesy of New Hampshire. Although all the members on the team are seasoned travelers, the general consensus was that this was the longest and roughest trip of the season. As the bus sliced through the night, all thoughts and conversation turned to our expected arrival, any minute now. Hours later we arrived in the thriving metropolis of Bangor, Maine.

Even though a big night on the town lay at their fingertips, Coach Reinhardt took a firm, fatherly hand and imposed a curfew, reminding the team that tomorrow's contest was not to be taken lightly.

The actual soccer game seemed very anti-climatic after the extended hassle of traveling. It seemed ironic that the Cats had traveled so far to perform a task that seemed so trivial. Vermont made short work of the fledgling Maine squad, who came into the game with a 4-9 record. Maine's soccer program is in the same shoes as Vermont was before UVM dropped football. Now the Vermont soccer program has been well developed, but Maine still has to play second fiddle to their football team.

On Saturday, Maine's football squad was taking on Lafayette in a home game at 1, and the UVM-UMO soccer contest was slated as a warm-up act. Maine soccer receives little or no publicity, little spectator support and generally is invisible compared to the football squad. At Maine, there were more people watching the band warm up for the football game than spectators viewing the soccer team. Maine must have created a self-fulfilling prophecy, since the Cats literally butchered the

(continued on page 38)

Never let your studies interfere with your education M.Twain

weck's
WINE & CHEESE
Burlington Square Mall 658-2070

Vermont Women Harriers Cap Regular Season with 33rd Win

By Tom Phillips

Led by the first and second place finishes of Judi St. Hilaire and Donna Raymond, the University of Vermont women's cross-country team overcame inspired UMass and UNH running to win the last regular meet of the '78 season in a contest held last weekend at UVM. The final score had Vermont first with 30 points, Massachusetts second with 42, and UNH last with 56.

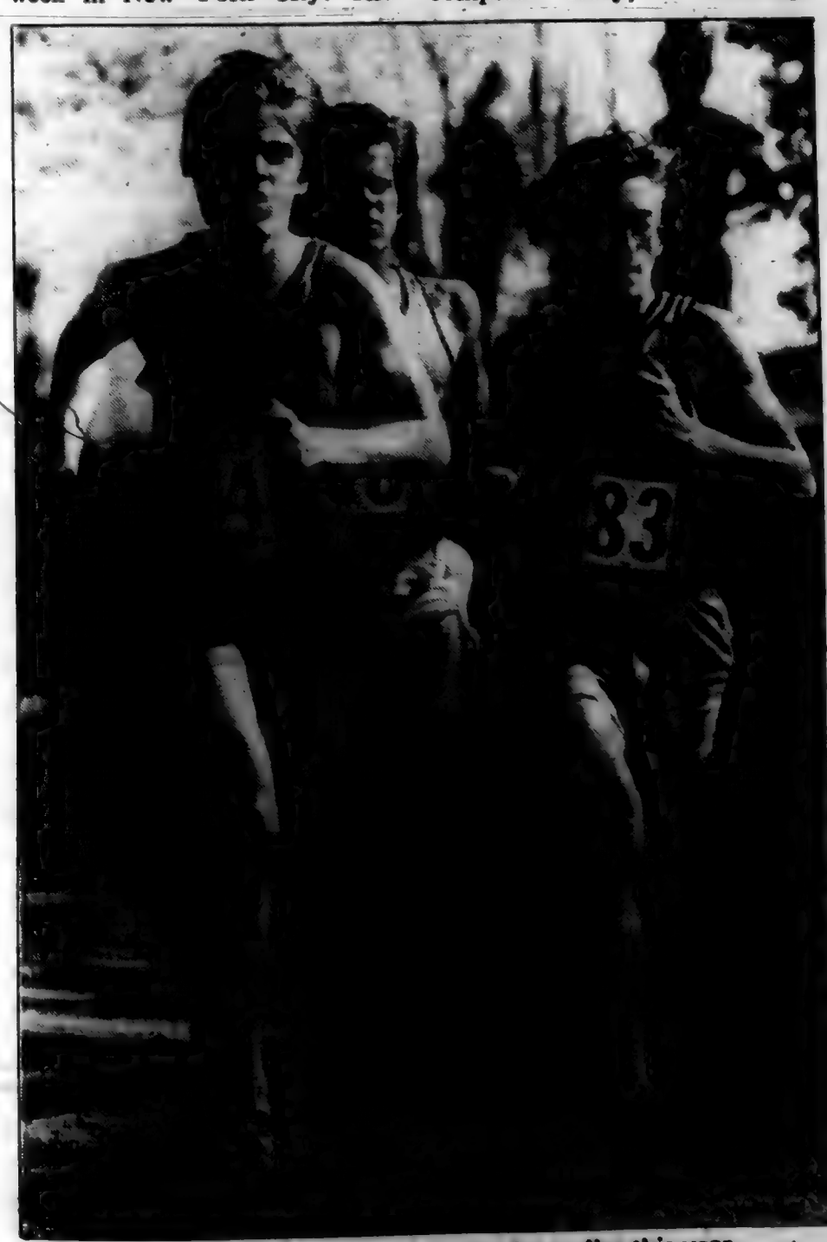
The race took its expected shape as soon as the gun went off, with UVM runners pressing for the lead. St. Hilaire and Raymond paced the group for a while before breaking away from the pack. But, behind them, a battle which would result in a surprisingly close team finish was being waged.

Coach Perry Bland described the action as "the kind that gives coaches ulcers." "I knew that St. Hilaire and Raymond would be challenging each other, more or less, for the lead. But then I figured we'd grab two places in a row, like fourth and fifth or fifth and sixth. We all knew that both UMass and UNH had some good individuals that could place in the top ten, but we never expected they would form a bunch in front of our third and fourth runners. As it came out, our third and fourth girls only placed 7th and 9th. And that almost cost us the meet."

Vermonters cross-country storms earlier this year. Photo by Lori Murch

Though the improved performances of the UMass and UNH squads added points to the Vermont score, the Catamount win was never seriously in doubt. Bland's fear of losing the meet was understandable, however, as the 12-point margin of UVM victory was the slimmest in quite some time for the now 33-2 women's cross-country team.

Once again, St. Hilaire recorded a speedy time in winning individual honors. St. Hilaire covered the rolling Burlington Country Club 3.1-mile course in 17:25, just 17 seconds ahead of runner-up teammate Donna Raymond. Amy Bouchard and Anne Schiavone, seventh and ninth, were the next two UVMers to finish, in 18:16 and 18:19 respectively. Sophomore Heather Adams, in 11th place overall, was the fifth and final scorer for the Catamounts. The Cats' usual fifth scorer, Robin Snyder, was slightly off of her pace, as she finished this time as Vermont's sixth runner and out of the scoring.



With restored vigor, the UVM women will compete in this Saturday's Eastern States Meet to be held at home on the AT Post Field. In this contest, the Cats will have to be in peak form if they are to be serious challengers for the title. Depth-laden teams from Penn State, Princeton, Rutgers, and Middlebury will provide the Vermont girls with the competition that has been lacking all fall.

Runningmen Falter at IC4A's

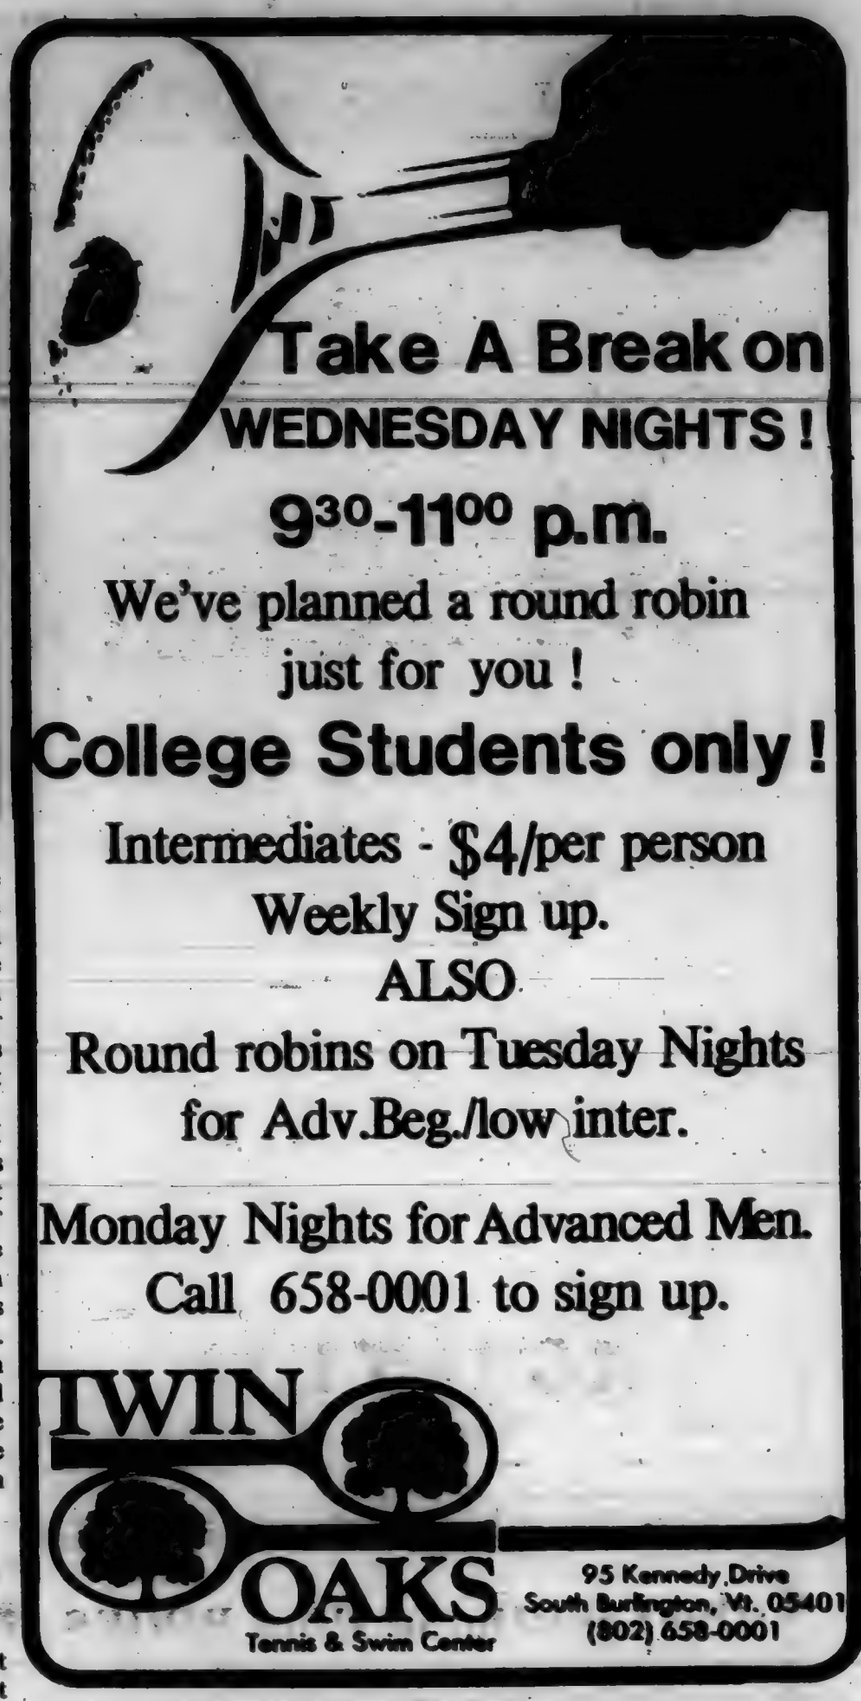
By Tom Phillips

While struggling to keep pace with the surprisingly quick IC4A championship field, the University of Vermont men's cross-country team stumbled through one of its weakest performances of the season last week in New York City. The Cats finished ninth in the fifteen-team meet with 210 points, well off the winning 106 point total of Millersville State College (Pa.)

But a quick glance at the final team standings does not paint the full picture. For the complete story, a thorough check of the Vermont timesheet is needed. There, it is clear that most of the Cats were not up to par on the legendary 5.0-mile Van Cortlandt Park (Bronx, N.Y.) course.



Mike Myers passes a Rhode Island contender earlier this year. Photo by Lori Murch

Kent Karns, the top UVM finisher in 33rd place overall, ran the hilly five-miles in 26:35, a respectable time for such a difficult course. Unfortunately though, Karns was the only Vermont runner to perform as expected. The remaining UVM runners simply had off days, as reflected in the average time loss of thirty seconds per runner for a five-mile race.

Dave Elliot (41st), Mike Myers (45th), Tom Bilodequ (48th), Kevin Martell (53rd), Randy Sightler (69th), and Tom Beatini (70th) all finished just above or below the 27-minute mark. This compares to their more usual time of 26:30 for a five-mile race. It was simply a bad day.

Coach Bill Nedde, in anticipation of the Cats' next and last meet, the New England Championships (Nov. 4 at Franklin Park, Boston), said, "All we can do now is regroup the way we did before the Yankee Conference Meet last week. If we can get everyone back to the level we were at in that meet, we'll be okay. I don't think there's any reason why we can't get seven runners back under 27 minutes."

Hopefully, the Cats will be able to do just that by Saturday's New England meet, for the field in that meet will be every bit as fast as the IC4A race. Vermont will face tough groups from Providence (ranked in the top five nationally) and Holy Cross, in addition to Yankee Conference powers UMass, UConn, and UMaine/Orono.

Contributing Staff

NEWS: Sarah Bailey, Stacey Cushner, Mark Dixon, Morris Earle, Jr., Rich Hyland, Brooke Laffan

FEATURES: Barry Gustin, Nelson Hockert-Lotz, Valerie Vier

SPORTS: Randy Briggs, Rob Smith, Hart VanDerburg, Molly McRoberts, Tom Phillips, Lori Murch, Tom Cianciolo, Josh Reynolds, Dale Gates

ARTS: Tom Nuccio, Peter Wentworth, Judie Yuill, Ardith Denzer, Thomas Campbell, Scott Hammer, Pablo Conrad, Tom Daniels

ADVERTISING: Nat Foote, Dinah Minot, Anne Stires

PHOTOGRAPHY: Rick Ames, Debbie Wolk, Jim Otto, Don Cunningham, Bill Menning, Joe Curcio, Carolyn Holahan, Phil Nanas, Liz Dunn, Rob Swanson, Karen E. Salzman, Mitch Sprung, Mike Simays

LAYOUT & GRAPHICS: Lauren-Glenn Davitian, Jenny Landrey, Brooke Freeman, Rachael Love, Art Gorr, Laura Benjamin, Lisa Eaton, Carol Hills, Amy Lowry, Mellisa Ionta, Robert Giles, Mike Foss, John Reynolds, Jean Goldstein, Angelo Segarra, Liz Hemingway, Lorri Toppel

TYPIST: Libbet Cox, Karen Salzman
TYPESETTER: Sue Ball
PMT's: Jose Morelli

Vermont Cynic
University of Vermont
Burlington, VT 05401

Printed by
Upper Valley Press
Bradford, Vermont

WRUV

90.1 MHZ

Vermont's Jazz Authority

$12.90

LEVI'S

Jeans and Cords

Pants Plus

12 N. WINOOSKI AVE.
BURLINGTON, VT.
802 - 864-0181

Rockefeller & Hall Spur Vermont Volleyball Squad to 4th in N.E.'s

By Rich Chalmers

Connie Rockefeller and Marsha Hall were voted all-tournament players as the University of Vermont volleyball team captured fourth place in the New Englands held last weekend at Bates College.

UMaine at Farmington won the round robin tournament while Salem placed second and Boston University landed third.

The tournament proved costly for Vermont as Rockefeller, Hill and Cindy Kinkead were withdrawn from the competition because of sprain-related injuries.

Vermont opened the tournament on Friday night against BU but had trouble offensively as the Terriers' aggressive style and confident ball-control handed the Catamounts a 15-4, 15-12 loss. Improved passing enabled the Cats to take a 15-13, 15-12 victory over Salem in the second game.

On Saturday, the Catamounts downed Wheaton 12-15, 15-12, 15-7 and UMaine 16-14, 16-14 before a 14-16, 6-15 loss to BU placed them in the playoffs with a 3-2 record. Salem whipped Vermont 15-1, 15-11 and BU added another loss to UVM's record with a 15-4, 15-8 win over the Green and Gold.

"Rockefeller and Hill were hitting, blocking and scrambling well throughout most of the tournament," said Coach Cathy Schiller. "Our passes started to come together in the second match but our serving and setting hurt us."

Vermont had to leave Cathy Medlock, one of the strongest players on the team, at home due to a prior commitment, and Coach Schiller stressed the importance of her absence. She went on to say, "If we had more consistent performances from everyone, we would have gotten better results, but it's coming."

The Catamounts will enter the URI tournament this weekend in which 16 pools of teams will compete. UVM is scheduled to lock antlers with Rutgers, URI and Yale. Coach Schiller characterized the upcoming tournament as a "learning experience" because of the high caliber of play expected. UVM is now 6-13 on the season.

Soccer Ladies Whip Albany, Dartmouth

By Molly McRoberts

UVM's women's soccer team hosted a first-year Albany State team in what proved to be their most 'mismatched' game of the season, as the Cats blasted their way to a 9-0 victory Tuesday at Archie Post Field.

"It wasn't really like a game to us, because Albany is playing their first season in soccer, with very little experience," commented Coach Mary Ellen Rathbone. "But it was good practice for us, and the team enjoyed it."

Goalie Rachel Lawrence was only required to make one save for the Cats. UVM's defensive line pulled up to play at the forward line for most of the game, enabling fullbacks Sandi Wood and Jeanne Hunter to each score for Vermont. Tori Ryder scored one goal and Hilary Engisch, Jan Spencer and Andrea Kamerow each chalked up two points during the game.

******

Forward Kella Burr scored an unassisted goal early in the final game of the season for the Cats at Dartmouth last Saturday when the Vermont women battled a tough Dartmouth defense to win 2-1.

"We played well together, yet we should've had more shots on goal," said Coach Rathbone. "The patrol of the referees was a little disappointing. We should have prevented the goal that they (Dartmouth) made." UVM made 20 shots on goal, in comparison to Dartmouth's 14. Goalie Ann Bartlett made 12 saves for the Cats.

"Dartmouth really hustled in the second half, and our forward line had a little trouble getting it together at the beginning. But we really started playing a more consistent game, and took control," added Coach Rathbone. Hilary Engisch kicked the ball onto the legs of a Dartmouth defender, who knocked the ball into the net of her own goalie, clinching a 2-1 win for UVM.

"Keela Burr, Hilary Engisch, Jeanne Hunter and Linda Johnson all played really well, but all in all everybody did a fine job," said Coach Rathbone. "The team was really excited about winning that last game," she added, "and we're psyched for another strong season next year." Women's soccer closed the fall season with a notable 11-2-1 record, as compared to last year's 7-4-0. "I'm proud of the team, and am looking forward hopefully to some championship games next year," said Rathbone.

Vermont Crushes UMaine

Cont. from page 36

an assist by Willey. Vermont outshot Maine 33-8 and Farley had eight saves to Maine's 13.

The Catamounts are now 8-2-2 on the year and 3-0-2 in the Yankee Conference. Vermont is tied for first in the Yankees with Connecticut, while Fleming is third in Conference scoring. Farley is third in the Conference goalie standings, with a .67 goal per game average.

The Maine victory was a "romp in the sun" according to several Vermont players. Fleming later remarked "Maine's goalie was really pretty terrible. We couldn't help but score." However, the party is over for the Catamounts, who face three tough teams on the road. Vermont faced Dartmouth on Wednesday, with the Cats in a must-win situation in order to make the NCAA playoffs. Vermont Coach Reinhardt predicted that the winner of this match will go on to the NCAA's. Vermont travels to Hartwick on Saturday, and has to come away with a victory in order to ensure a playoff spot. The season finale is against old foe UConn the following Saturday. Although the NCAA spots will have been picked before this match, the contest figures to be the battle that will decide the Yankee Conference title.

Bus Ride Blues...

Cont. from page 36

struggling squad.

The game just won was forgotten as quickly as the final goal was scored. On the return trip the conversation didn't center on the victory, but on upcoming contests with Dartmouth, Hartwick and UConn. Vermont now finds itself in a must-win situation for the last three road games of the season. In the front section of the bus the coaches alternated between mapping strategy, discussing UVM athletics and telling jokes. In the back a typewriter clicked away churning out a term paper, while others hibernated again. The constant roar of the engine was only interrupted by the cheers after an upset in a mean backgammon game that was in process. All the while the wheels were spinning, carrying the team back to Vermont to prepare for another game down the road.

CALENDAR CONTINUED----

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 9

EXHIBITIONS

Francis Colburn Gallery – Vicky Lowry & Jim Brown: Black & White Photography, 9–5 p.m.

Fleming Museum – "War!" a cross-cultural viewpoint. "Tools & Technology." "The Library Furniture of H.H. Richardson."

L/L Gallery – Anthony Sini: Paintings & Drawings, 4–8 p.m.

LECTURES

"Program Review for Secondary Education Majors," 3 p.m., Memorial Lounge, Waterman.

"A Viscious Attack on Property Rights," Richard Medley, 3:15 p.m., John Dewey Lounge, Old Mill.

Scottish Country Dancing – 7:30 p.m., beginners & 8 p.m., advanced. 104 and 109 Old Mill. Info. call 863-4107 and 862-2428.

Israeli Folk Dancing 8 p.m., 115 Commons, L/L.

FILMS

Physics film series, "The Characteristics of Physical Law," Richard Feynam, B106 Angell, 4:10 p.m.

MEETINGS

SA Finance Committee, 5–6:30 p.m., Conference Room C, Billings.

UVMOC, 7–9 p.m., Marsh Lounge, Billings.

Campus Crusade for Christ, Leadership Training Class, 7:30 p.m., 115, 118 Rowell.

Roberts Caps Off Scoring Field Day:

Ruggers Romp Over McGill

By Dale Gates

Larry Roberts fought his way into the endzone for the Cats' final tally to secure a 17-3 victory for the University of Vermont men's rugby team over McGill University last Saturday afternoon.

UVM dominated the powerful McGill team throughout most of the game. Vermont scored early on a penalty kick from Pete Cataldo giving UVM a three-point advantage. But McGill returned quickly by scoring a penalty kick of their own to tie the score. The score remained tied until half time as both teams battled to take advantage but were unable to put points on the board.

Vermont scored early in the second half as Pete Christman bulled his way into the endzone for a four-point try. Vermont continued its efforts as the UVM scrum pushed McGill off of a loose ruck to allow the UVM backs to pass to the wing and back inside to Mike Everett, for another four-point try.

The final score of the game came when UVM wing forward Roberts charged his way through the McGill defense to score another four points. Pete Cataldo added two more points on the conversion kick. The win raised UVM's record to 4-3 on the season.

UVM Coach Nante Meyer said "it was a very physical game. The UVM backs provided an incredible offensive attack. The Vermont scrum, although outweighed by McGill, played very well, winning many scrums and lineouts."

Ruggers fight for the leather. Photo by Kevin Eaton

The UVM B Team also won by defeating the McGill graduates 10-6.

Vermont plays host to Mad River for the final game of the fall season this Saturday at 1 p.m. on the Archie Post Field.

Sports Notes:

UVM Paddle Tennis Tourney

The University of Vermont will host a mixed doubles paddle tennis tournament at the Lakeside Tennis and Racquet Club on Nov. 4th.

The first 16 teams to sign up will be eligible. The entry fee is set at $4.00 per team for those presently taking the UVM paddle course and $6.00 per team for all others. Paddle instructor Jean Selvig, organizer of the tournament, stressed that partners can be found for players without one.

Every Thursday from 8 – 11 p.m. is UVM Paddle Night at Lakeside during which UVM students are encouraged to come and play at reduced rates. The crowd is usually sizeable so partners can always be found.

There is a Men's doubles open tournament scheduled for Nov. 18th, the details of which have not as yet been determined.

Sailing Club Concludes Successful Season

The University of Vermont sailing club recently concluded a fall season which showed increased organization, student enthusiasm and a promising future for the club.

The more than 60 sailors involved in the program used the two flying Juniors and two Larks, stored at the Shelburne Point Shipyard, in practicing for a full schedule of intercollegiate meets.

Although strong winds prevented intramural races from taking place as planned, UVM student Joanne Trask was able to organize and gain support for a number of meets against other schools.

The first weekend, four club members participated in a learning regatta at MIT. The next weekend Dean Bensley, Pauline Vander Noordaa, Carolyn Holzehorn and Mindy Katz placed third at the New England Bliss Trophy at Harvard. A crew of seven raced an Islander 37 against other 30-42' boats sailed by other schools at the Stamford, Conn. Yacht Club on October 7th and 8th. UVM skipper Joe King and crew placed fourth out of 11 in their division and 11th out of 22 in all.

Six UVM sailors went down the following weekend to race against MIT and came away fourth in their division. Kurt Chrisdale, Alan Davies, Chris Williamson and Peter Anderson placed 10th out of 20 boats in Boston over Oktoberfest weekend to cap off the season.

More involvement in intercollegiate racing and securing an area to dock the boats on the Burlington waterfront are two of many goals the club leaders have in mind. In its struggle to become better known to all the UVM students, the club will be offering free sailing lessons as well as the usual intramural and intercollegiate races this spring.

Sports This Week

| SPORT | DATE | OPPONENT | PLACE – TIME |
|---|---|---|---|
| Cross-Country – W | 3-4(Fri-Sat) | EAIAW REGIONALS | A.T. Post Field–BCC – TBA |
| Cross-Country – M | 4 (Sat) | at New England Championships | Franklin Park, MA – TBA |
| Synchronized Swim | | at Albany St. | Albany, NY – 9 a.m. |
| Soccer – M | | at Hartwick | Oneonta, NY – 1:30 p.m. |
| Hockey | 5 (Sun) | BISHOP'S UNIVERSITY (exhibition game) | Gutterson Fieldhouse – 7 p.m. |
| Swim – W | 7 (Tues) | at New Hampshire | Durham, NH – 4 p.m. |
| Volleyball – W | 9 (Thurs) | at Springfield w/Conn. | Springfield, MA – 6:30 p.m. |
| Hockey | 10-11(Fri-Sat) | at Bowling Green | Bowling Green, OH – 7:30 p.m. |
| Soccer – M | 11 (Sat) | at Connecticut | Storrs, CT – 10 a.m. |
| Swim – W | | MASSACHUSETTS | Forbush Pool – 1 p.m. |
| Field Hockey | 11-12(Sat-Sun) | at Northeast Tournament | Orono, ME – TBA |

THE APPALACHIAN GAP

Lots of Pants at 1/2 Price

Village Sq. Waitsfield Langdon St. Mont. College St. Burlington

WE'RE WHERE YOU'RE AT!

ON WILLISTON ROAD

Monday-Thursday 8:30-5:00
Fridays til 6:00

Chittenden TRUST COMPANY

Member FDIC

THE CENTER PUB

UJ's

22 Main St.
Winooski

Darts
Backgammon
Chess
Foosball

Sandwiches
Crackers + Cheese
Friday Happy Hour + Raw Bar 1–7

Clams + Shrimp Only 25 cents

Sunday Football
Ladies Night is Wednesday

See Our
Superb Selection

SKI WEAR
SPORTSWEAR
SKI EQUIPMENT

SKI PARKAS $35-$175
by Roffe, Gerry, Bogner, Alpine Design, Comfy, Ski Levi, White Stag, Head, C.B. Sports, Profile, Cevas, Woolrich, Beconta.

SKI SWEATERS $20-$86
by Vermont Originals, Stowe Woolen Weavers, Meister, Demetre, Lido, Sportif, Irish Hand Knits, Icelandic Imports, Beconta, Bogner, Head, Knut and Knut.

SKI VESTS $27.50-$100
by Bogner, Roffe, Skyr, Woolrich, Beconta, Gerry, Alpine Design, Head, C.B. Sports, Ski Levi.

SLACKS
SKIRTS-DRESSES $18-$70
by Glen of Michigan, Leap, John Meyer, Lanz, Point of View, Cos Cob, Gordon, J.B.J., Garland.

LANZ SLEEPWEAR $16-$38
Pajamas, Nities, Robes

SKIS $21-$278
by K2, Dynastar, Trak, Jarvinen, Karhu, Rossignol, Olin, Hexcel , Head, Kastle, Yamaha, Elan, Kneissl, Fischer, A&T, Hart.

SKI BOOTS $37-$235
by Garmont, Nordica, Dolomite, Hanson, Raichle, Lange, Technica, A&T.

ALPINE SHOP

Williston Road
So. Burlington

OPEN DAILY
9 A.M. — 9 P.M.

Corner of So. Winooski and Cherry Downtown Burlington

Sports Profile

Linda Peabody: Sparkplug of UVM's Field Hockey Offense

By Randy Briggs

Linda Peabody's high offensive drive has been a critical asset in the University of Vermont field hockey team's success. With Peabody leading the scoring parade, the Catamount stick women have posted an outstanding 11-1-3 record.

The Manchester, Mass. native has always known success. A natural athlete, Peabody played on three winning teams at St. Timothy's school in Maryland. She learned the game at a very early age. "I started playing field hockey in the third grade. I liked all sports, but field hockey in particular," she said.

Peabody plays left inner, which by design is a high scoring position. Consequently, she is expected to carry a large share of the scoring load.

The squad's winning record this year has been reflected through its teamwork. "This team is a real cohesive group," added Peabody. "Everyone gives advice and inputs. There is a lot of constructive criticism which is good for the team. Coach Lange also has done an excellent job in keeping the team together. Our practices have good balance. We practice our necessary drills and also scrimmage. We've had a lot of fun this season."

"You must blend the combination of having good skills & being in shape"

–Linda Peabody

Peabody pinpointed the reason for her accomplishments this season: "The defense has been strong this year. This has enabled me to concentrate more on just offense." This solid defense has enabled Vermont to dominate many games this year and has thus been a contributing factor in Peabody's sixteen goal season.

Reflecting on the team's outstanding record, Peabody revealed a number of determining factors for this success. "There were a hundred girls that tried out for the team this year. We've also had a number of good freshman players." The combination of these two attributes has enabled Coach Lange to have solid depth on the bench. This depth factor is an essential quality of any winning team.

When asked what was the most crucial factor in playing winning field hockey Peabody replied, "You have to communicate when it comes to the passing portion of the game. On top of that you must blend the combination of having good skills and being in shape." Peabody stays in good condition year-round by competing in lacrosse in the spring and playing soccer in the summer.

Peabody realizes that there is always room for self improvement. "I have to improve on receiving free hits. I also need to concentrate on bettering my stickwork," she noted.

As a result of her play in this past weekend's RECFHA tournament, Peabody was one of six UVM women picked to play in the North East All-Star Field Hockey Tournament scheduled for November 11th and 12th at Orono, Maine. Although this past weekend's tournament was to showcase individual skills, Vermont recorded two wins and a tie. The Cats have never participated in the New England AIAW team tournament. "Next year we may enter the team tournament," noted Peabody. "I would much rather play in a team tournament than an individual one. I feel that we have a good team and would do well. Sure the competition would be tougher, but this would give us more incentive to play well."

The political science major has coaching in mind for the future. "I feel that I am not quite good enough to give semi-pro or pro field hockey a shot," said Peabody. "I would like to coach field hockey in the future, though."

Peabody had high praise for this year's team. "This is the best team I have played on in my three years at Vermont. Next year the outlook also looks very bright. We only lose three members off this team. We should be as good or better next year."

One of the ingredients of strong varsity team, according to Peabody, is a strong J.V. team. Vermont's J.V. team has been a key factor in the depth of the varsity squad, as the system provides talented players ready to jump into field hockey at the collegiate level.

As Linda Peabody returns next year along with her consistant high scoring game, Vermont will probably have another stand-out field hockey season.

Sports Scene

Surprises In the NFL

A year ago if my roommate ever told me that a NFL match between Tampa Bay and Green Bay would be a "big" game in the race for the divisional playoffs, I would have called up the men in white coats to take a sick football fanatic away. But in a year, when parity among almost all 28 teams seems to be increasing, last Sunday's Packers-Buccaneer battle (won by Green Bay on a last minute field goal, by a score of 9-7) was indeed a big game in the NFC central division race.

The 1978 football season has been one in which perennial playoff standbys like Oakland and Minnesota are fighting for their lives against former weak sisters Seattle, Green Bay, N.Y. Giants, Tampa Bay and New Orleans. Consistently in the thick of contention in past years, Baltimore, Cincinnati and St. Louis are virtually out of the playoff picture in 1978. What's going on, you ask? Is the "pack really back?" Has the success of basketballs' Supersonics rubbed off on the Seahawks? Have the New York Giants found a new Y.A. Tittle?

The truth of the matter is that the former weaklings of the NFL have combined great drafting with good coaching and youth to finally become competitive.

While Dallas, Los Angeles, Pittsburgh, and New England appear to be the "class" of the NFL this year, even these teams have been upset by those which belong to the growing "middle class" present in the NFL (Dallas losing to Washington, Los Angeles losing to New Orleans, Pittsburgh losing to Houston, New England losing to Washington). This increasing "middle class" present in the NFL is really the ability of former weak teams like Green Bay and Seattle to attain measurable improvement through a combination of the draft, coaching and maturity. At the same time, the reigning superiors like Minnesota and Oakland are finding it more difficult to improve their playoff machines because of aging warriors and the lack of superior draft choices. The fact that after nine weeks of football, nineteen out of twenty-eight teams still are realistically in the playoff picture, exemplifies the level of parity attained in the NFL. The poor have definitely gotten richer, while the rich have had trouble retaining their past wealth this year.

Seattle, behind the awesome arm of third-year quarterback Jim Zorn, was leading the NFL in passing (217 yards a game) going into last Sunday's contest with Denver. Anyone who saw Seattle battle last year's AFC champs and force the game into overtime, recognized the poise exhibited by the Seattle offense and, to a lesser extent, their defense. In a game where Denver exhibited an awesome running attack and lightning quick defense, they were forced to kick an overtime field goal (after being stopped three times from inside the Seattle two-yard line) to salvage the victory. With wins over the Jets, Lions, Vikings and Raiders this year, the Seahawks are a mere two games behind the division leading Broncos, so don't count them out of a possible wild card playoff berth yet.

The Tampa Bay Buccaneers, who have the second best overall defense in the NFC this year, also have an outside shot at a wild card berth. After only two victories in their first two seasons, the Bucs have used the draft and free agent market to build one of the soundest defensive units in the NFL. Led by awesome defensive end, Leroy Selmon, the Bucs held Chicago's super runner Walter Payton to a mere 34 yards on 15 carries in a game recently won by Tampa Bay.

Other perennial losers who have matured into possible contenders are the New York Giants and New Orleans Saints. In New York, the leadership of QB Joe Piscancik combined with the running of backs Bob Hammond and Doug Kotar have brought the Giants five victories. The Giants' defense, led by a possible All-Pro linebacker in the likes of Harry Carson, has remained solid and helped the youthful offense by scoring three touchdowns from interceptions and blocked kicks. Presently at five wins and four losses and with no key injuries to speak of, New York could manage a wild card berth this year. The Saints of New Orleans are now in their 12th NFL season and already have had as many victories (five) this season as they've ever had in one full season. The reason is matured Archie Manning who finally has reputable receivers in Henry Childs and rookie Wes Chandler, and a fine rushing duo in Chuck Muncie and Tony Galbreath. Behind the coaching of former Dallas assistant Dick Nolan, the Saints have implemented their version of the Dallas flex defense, and with three victories, the Saints are now playoff contenders.

The success of these five teams combined with the demise of the Colts, Bengals, Cardinals, Bears and Vikings, to name a few, has led to a most unpredictable football season. No one team in the NFL is a real pushover this year and by the same token, there doesn't appear to be an invincible powerhouse either. It is this increased equality which has led to the many upsets and exciting games this season. The teams which finally end up making the playoffs will be those teams who can remain poised and emotionally charged while also avoiding costly injuries during these final seven weeks.

SUNDANCE

Get your fall look together...

...with LEATHER!

Featuring a wide and varied selection of vests and jackets ... including those hard-to-find flight jackets. A timeless piece of fashion!

...Now available at SUNDANCE!

38 CHURCH STREET

At the corner of Church and Cherry

WE ARE RIGHT NEXT DOOR TO THE CAMPUS!!

AND RIGHT OFF INTERSTATE 89 — EXIT-14W

We are a large, very well equipped service station, staffed with expert help that takes a sincere interest in you and your car.

We feature GOOD, FAST SERVICE

- Mobile Tires
- Alignments
- Oil Change
- Wrecker Service
- State Inspection
- Tune Ups
- Lubrication
- Wheel Balance
- Towing
- Brake Work
- Cold Weather Starting

Spillane's Mobil Servicenter

863-2896

• 24 HOUR SERVICE •

• Next to Gaynes on Williston Road •

WE'VE GOT CORDS...
CORD JEANS, THAT IS!!

WRANGLER
Corduroy Jeans
Regular 12.95
$11.00 Pair

ALL LEE
Corduroy Jeans
Regular 14.95
$12.00 Pair

other goodies -

● UNWASHED DENIMS
Straight & Flair legs, Regular to 14.95 $10.00 Pr.

CORCUROY JEANS
Children & Student Sizes $9.00 Pr.

•••••
Colossal Selection
TURTLENECKS
•••••
SWEATERS
For the Whole Family
•••••
FLANNEL SHIRTS STYLE & WARMTH

DON'T MISS OUR NEW
KID'S DEPARTMENT

SALE PRICES SPECIALLY EXTENDED 'TIL NOV. 11th!

Open until NINE Monday and Friday
Church Street
Downtown Burlington

ARMY & NAVY
SKELTON'S
864-5011

WE MAKE WARM FRIENDS!
C'mon in NOW and SAVE on cold weather goodies - always the best selection.

VT. RESIDENTS and STUDENTS
• ski for less •
at
Smugglers' Notch

| BASH BADGE | SEASON PASS | |
|---|---|---|
| 12.50 per badge | ADULT | $165 |
| Ski All Weekdays 7.00 | YOUNG ADULT/COLLEGE (22 and under) | 140 |
| Ski Weekends/Holidays 10.00 | YOUTH (17 and under) | 130 |
| 50% OFF LESSONS AND EQUIPMENT | CHILD (14 and under) | 95 |
| The perfect learn to ski package! | MID-WEEK PLUS (Save $5/day weekends) | 100 |

Deadline Extended to Nov. 30th!

Conveniently available at BILLINGS STUDENT CENTER

Camera for pass and badge pictures wil be on location!

10AM to 4PM THURSDAYS and FRIDAYS

MAIL COUPON TO SMUGGLERS' NOTCH (with check)
JEFFERSONVILLE, VT. 05464, Box S.

☐ BASH BADGE
☐ VT. ADULT
☐ VT. YOUTH
☐ VT. CHILD
☐ COLLEGE PASS/YOUNG ADULT
☐ MID-WEEK

Name _____
Address _____
_____
Age _____ Tele. _____

ACT NOW: Prices Increase Oct. 31st

National Sports Briefs

New England Stomps Jets 55-21

The New England Patriots experienced one of their best days in history as they trounced over the New York Jets 55-21 last Sunday. Patriot quarterback Steve Grogan connected for 15 of 19 passes for 281 yards for the afternoon. The Patriots scored touchdowns the first seven times they had the ball and led 21-0 after the first 20 minutes of the game. "I don't think we can play much better on offense," said Grogan. "Even things like the inside runs. You don't expect to get big yardage on inside runs but we got it."

The victory rearranged the Patriot record book as six squad records were broken or tied. New England set new team records for most points per game (55), most touchdowns per game (8) and most net yards gained per game (529). The Pats tied the records for most touchdowns rushing per game (4), most points after touchdown per game (7) and most points in first quarter (21). "It just seemed easy," Patriot guard Sam Adams admitted. "The Jets just weren't like I thought they would be. They weren't fired up. They weren't the team I'd read about in the papers. I didn't have any problems at all."

"Their offensive performance in the first half is as good as any I've ever seen," commented Jim Kensil, president of the Jets.

Steinbrenner Defends Yankee Fans

New York Yankee owner George Steinbrenner attempted to smooth over his criticisms of the umpiring during this past World Series by stating, "I would never question the integrity of an umpire – maybe his judgment, but never his integrity."

Steinbrenner then went on to say he was not pleased with the Los Angeles Dodgers' remarks concerning New York's fans. "Bill Russell called our fans 'animals.' Did he say that because of all the errors he made? Davey Lopes said they ought to put a bomb on Yankee Stadium." Steinbrenner suggested the Dodgers should apologize for their remarks more than he should apologize for his criticisms of the umpires.

Lobsters and Apples Withdraw from Team Tennis

Heavy losses with little hope of improvements have forced Boston Lobsters owner Robert Kraft to suspend his team's involvement in the World Team Tennis League for next season. The New York Apples made a similar statement at the same time. Kraft has been threatening such a move for a year because of the refusal of other team owners to pay the salaries of such top pros as Jimmy Connors and Bjorn Borg. The league will have to continue with only six squads (San Diego, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Seattle, Indiana and Phoenix), but Kraft hopes the time without Boston and New York will allow them to make a number of changes which will make it beneficial for both teams to rejoin the league in 1980.

The Reds 1-1 in Japan Tour

The Reds defeated the Yomiuri Giants 5-2 in the second game of Cincinnati's 17-game tour of Japan in Tokyo Sunday. Johnny Bench clocked a solo home run while right-handed pitcher Tom Hume gave up only five hits in a seven inning showing. It was Cincinnati's first win in Japan, having lost the first game 7-6 to the Giants on Saturday.

Frederick , Thomas Take Gold Medals

United States gymnasts Marcia Frederick and Kurt Thomas attained gold medals in the World Gymnastic Championships held in Strasbourg, France last weekend. Frederick, 15, won the gold on the uneven bars while Thomas, 22, recorded highest honors in the floor exercises. It was Frederick's first world class championship and the first time the U.S. men's gymnastics team has taken a gold medal since the 1932 Olympics. Oblivious to other gymnastic powers, the Soviet Union continued its dominance of the sport, receiving 17 of the 38 medals.

Agnew Offers $35 Million For Baltimore Colts

Former Vice President Spiro T. Agnew reportedly offered $35 million to Baltimore Colts owner Robert Irsay for his team, but Irsay flatly refused the bundle. Sources have it that Agnew was attempting to buy the team with money put forward by Arabian clients.

Ali Might Defend Crown Vs. Rossman in Buenos Aires

Preparations for Muhammed Ali to defend his heavyweight boxing championship crown are now being made, according to boxing promoter Bob Arum. Light Heavyweight Mike Rossman is the man Arum has in mind for the bout which will probably take place in Buenos Aires during late February or early March.

CLASSIFIED ADS

(THEY'RE FREE!)

OUTDOOR EQUIPMENT

For sale — ski rack (barre crafter) fits foreign cars (sedans, i.e. Audi Fox) $20. Call 862-4243.

1 pr. Atomic ARC, G.S. comps. 190 cm, brand new, hand matched set at factory $140. 1 pr. Dolemite ski boots, men's size 9, excellent condition, $70. Call Paul 863-3692.

For sale — Hy-Gain mobile 19 channel C.B. radio and antenna. $40. 863-6657 late.

Hiking boots for sale — 1 pair women's dexter, vibran sole boots, worn only 1 season, size 8½ fairly wide. Make an offer. Call Debbie A, 863-4060.

Insulated Bean boots 12" size 5M, boys (7M women's). Worn twice, real warm, reg. sell for $46.50, you pay $30.00. Call 862-5244.

MUSIC

Electro harmonix low frequency compressor. Old but working good. $15 firm. Call Jim at 985-2113 and come see it.

Gibson bass guitar, Kalamazoo bass. Good condition. Good buy at $135 firm. Call Kurt at 985-2921 and come see it.

Guitars and amps for sale. New and used. Consignment sales. Acoustic and electric guitars. Good bargains. Stay awhile, play awhile in our unique guitar parlor. Weekdays 4—8. Saturdays 10—4. Green Mountain Guitars, 65 George St. (near the post office), 864-9232.

Folk guitar, steel string flat-top with case. Perfect for beginner. Total value $90. Asking $65. Also used Gibson J-50 with plush hard-shell case, new value is about $710, asking $350, make an offer. Call Dave 862-2257.

Acoustic bassist, also percussionist playing congas and assorted percussion. I am a guitarist seeking a trio to play originals and acoustic jazz — Call Nick at 862-7656 after 9 p.m.

Used musical instruments needed: we BUY, SELL, TRADE guitars, amps, drums, drum sets, band instruments (saxophones, trombones, flutes, clarinets, etc.) If you have an instrument gathering dust, see us for cash. Looking for a new instrument — we give a 30% discount on Guild, Yamaha, guitars, Univox and Ampeg amps, our complete line of instruments and accessories. Use our convenient Burlington phone 864-0767. Pickup and delivery convenient to UVM campus.

Wanted — Hollow body electric guitar. Willing to trade equipment or pay cash. Call Nick at 862-7656 after 9 p.m.

For sale — Marantz 240 stereo power amp 125w/ch rms. 23 channel CB radio with slide mount & antennae. 2 Rickenbacker 6-string guitar pickups. Dynachord 50 watt PA amp. German made. Tube amp. 10 or hi z inputs. Lots of features. Very clean sound. Call Chris, 655-1400.

Wanted to buy: FM tuner. If you have one you'd like to sell please call Debbie A, 863-4060.

Stereo components, etc. Warehouse prices. All new, all guaranteed. Call John Grapel, 862-8617.

1 Empire 698 turntable w/Shure MV15 cartridge. 1 Pioneer 9191 cassette deck. Call Shep 655-1443.

Act quickly for specially low stereo prices! Most major brands all fully guaranteed. Can beat all prices. Systems are especially low. Stop by or call Danny, Wilks 214, x3444.

1 pair Lafayette Criterion speakers, 12 watts per channel, excellent condition, $40. Alan Aldag, 323 Christie, x-2914.

WHEELS

For sale — 2 165-13 regular tires, $5 each. 2 165-13 radial tires, worn, $3 each. Call Debi, 863-3692.

For sale — 1972 Chevy custom-20 pickup. 3/4 ton excellent condition. 61,000 miles. Best offer, 863-6657 late.

For sale — all kinds of BMW (1600—2002) parts. Reasonable, 878-4536.

For sale — 1972 Custom-20 Chevy pickup. 350 V-8, 61,000 miles. Excellent condition. Sacrafice $1700. Call 863-6657 late.

MISCELLANEOUS

Nutrition Opportunity. Become a distributor of America's fastest-growing line of nutrition products. Earn extra income. Unlimited potential. Call 862-1951 between 5 and 7 p.m.

Looking for a ride from the corner of Catherine and St. Paul Street to UVM and back for two staff members. Hours 8 to 4:30 Contact Linda at extension 4015.

Wanted to buy... etching press... must be in good condition. Call Beth at 658-6300, ex. 157.

House exchange. Little Silver, N.J. family of 5 desires to exchange home with family in the greater Burlington area Dec. 23 to 31. Call collect 1-201-747-7320 or 212-486-5767. Ask for Robert Halloran.

Anyone still interested in applying for the SA Judicial Council, applications are still available at the Political Science office and at the Harris-Millis main desk. Deadline for completed forms is Monday, November 9th at the Harris-Millis main desk. Structure and Philosophy information on the Judicial Council is posted outside the political science office, 201-A Old Mill.

Men's volleyball — any person interested in starting a men's volleyball club team for next semester. Contact Bob Perez 656-3809. If I'm not in, leave your name and phone number.

INTERNATIONAL CAREER?

A representative will be on the campus MONDAY NOVEMBER 13, 1978 to discuss qualifications for advanced study at AMERICAN GRADUATE SCHOOL and job opportunities in the field of INTERNATIONAL MANAGEMENT

Interviews may be scheduled at Career Planning & Placement

AMERICAN GRADUATE SCHOOL OF INTERNATIONAL MANAGEMENT
Thunderbird Campus
Glendale, Arizona 85306

SALESMEN NEEDED!

There will be positions open next semester for advertising salesmen. Contact Peter Voll at the Vermont Cynic if you are interested. Phone: 656-4412 the Progressive Voice is back...

WWPV-FM
88.7 MHZ
Starting Fri. Nov. 3

Exciting Selection of Handcrafted Items!
25th Annual
VERMONT HANDCRAFTERS
CRAFT FAIR
NOV. 16 • 17 • 18
Thurs. 12-9 • Fri. 10-9 • Sat. 10-5
MEMORIAL AUDITORIUM
BURLINGTON, VERMONT

CHEESE SPECIALS

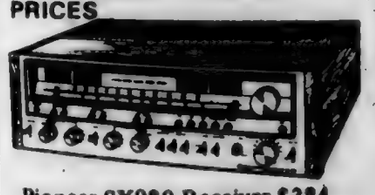
Our own garlic herb special . . . . . $2.99/lb.
Compare with "Boursin" at $7.00/lb.



Jewish Rye Bread $.79/lb.
Jarlsberg . . . $2.89/lb.

plus many more cheeses, cheesecake "seconds," homemade quiche, yogurt in bulk, wine, crackers and mustards

CHEESE OUTLET
398 PINE ST.

STEREO CLEARANCE HOUSE HAS LOWEST STEREO PRICES

Pioneer SX980 Receiver $384.
Technics SL3300 Turntable $120
Akai Cs702D Cassette $125.

Our Free Catalog has many more deals on major brands, even lower prices on our monthly specials sheet. Send now and find out how to buy current $7.98 list lp's for $3.69. Stereo Clearance House Dept. PA53 1029 Jacoby St., Johnstown, Pa. 15902. Phone Quotes 814-536-1511

Dining Hall

WEEK #1

| November 2, 1978 THURSDAY | November 3, 1978 FRIDAY | November 4, 1978 SATURDAY | November 5, 1978 SUNDAY | November 6, 1978 MONDAY | November 7, 1978 TUESDAY | November 8, 1978 WEDNESDAY | November 9, 1978 THURSDAY |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| BREAKFAST | | | | | | | |
| 1)Waffles2)Scrambled Eggs3)Soft Boiled EggsHome FriesCottage cheesePastry or Muffins | 1)French Toast2)Fried Eggs3)Hard Boiled EggsHash BrownsCottage CheesePastry or Muffins | 1)Pancakes2)Easy Riser3)Soft Boiled EggsHome FriesCottage CheesePastry or Muffins | 1)Orange French Toast2)Poached EggsHash BrownsCottage CheesePastry or Muffins | 1)Griddle Cakes2)Omelets I-483)Soft Boiled EggsHome FriesCottage CheesePastry or Muffins | 1)French Toast2)Scrambled Eggs3)Hard Boiled EggsHash BrownsCottage CheesePastry or Muffins | 1)Pancakes2)Poached Eggs3)Soft Boiled EggsHome FriesCottage CheesePastry or Muffins | 1)French Toast F-22)Fried Eggs3)Hard Boiled Eggs F-21Hash Browns W-6Cottage CheesePastry or Muffins |
| LUNCH | | | | | | | |
| 1)Hot Beef Sandwich w/potatoe and gravy2)Spanish Rice3)Vegetable Cold Plate P-41 | *1)Killarney Corned Beef and Cheese Sandwich2)North American Lasagna3)Ratatouille Fresh local vegetables only. Squash, Zucchini with Pita | -B R U N C H-1)Scrambled Eggs2)Waffles3)Tuna Salad SandwichSausage Patties | -B R U N C H-1)Scrambled Eggs2)Pancakes3)Corned Beef SandwichBacon | 1)Pizza2)Beef Turnover with Gravy3)Banana Citrus Fruit Plate P-54 | 1)Hot Dogs w/Bar2)Corned Beef Hash*3)Vegetarian Sandwich DelightSuper Toss Salad bar in dining room | 1)Sandwich Bar2)Chinese Chicken Casserole O-243)Spinach Quiche | 1)BLT S-52)Beef Noodle Casserole L-93)Lentil Stew w/ Fresh Vegetables X-30 |
| DINNER | | | | | | | |
| 1)Veal Parmesan2)Beef Stew with Biscuit*3)Curried Vegetables in Casserole - Green Beans, Soy Beans, Wax Beans, Onion, Celery, stir fried w/ sesame seeds | 1)Rst Turkey with Giblet Gravy and Dressing2)Batter Fried Fish3)Polenta Pie X-20Candied Sweet Potatoes | 1)Roast Beef aujus2)Double Burger3)Sukiyaki with Brown Rice UVM8 | 1)Cheese Steak on Grinder Roll2)Turkey Tetrazzini3)Taco Bar4)Vegetable Quiche | 1)Baked Chicken2)Batter Fried Fish3)Soy Bean and chopped nut Casserole | 1)Roast Pork with Gravy & Cornbread Dressing2)Lasagna, meat AND meatless3)Spinach Brown Rice Bake | 1)Veal Parmesan2)Ground Beef and Potato Pie L-103)Grilled Liver with Onions M-314)Fritata | 1)Grilled Chopped Steak w/Brown Gravy and Sauteed Onions2)Corned Beef and Cabbage3)Vegetarian Eggplant X-32 |

*Vegetarian Specialty — *New Item - check it out — Redstone Station at Wright Hall — White House at Harris-Millis — *A Super Sandwich ground avocado, fresh alfalfa sprouts, tomato

SAGA

Top Line Equipment Gives us the Edge!

SKIS. . .

Rossignol
Dynastar
Hexcel
Olin
Kastle
K-2

BOOTS. . .

Nordica
Dolomite
Scott
Garmont

BINDINGS. . .

Salomon
Look Marker
Besser
Spademan
Geze

SKI WEAR . . .

Alpine Design
Ski Levi
Beconta
Gerry
CB Sport
Swing West
Powderhorn

Great Packages!

Package No. 1

•Rossignol Challengers
•A&T Poles
•Saloman 222 Bindings With Ski Brake

NOW ONLY $149.95

Save 30% off this $212.95 value

Package No. 2

•Rossignol Concords
•A&T Poles
•Look GT Bindings With Ski Brake

NOW ONLY $189.95

Save nearly $60 off this $247.00 value

The Downhill Edge

65 Main St., Burlington

Now open nites 'til 9 except Sat.
Free parking in rear.

862-2282

FREE

VERMONT CYNIC

FREE

VOLUME XCV NUMBER 8 "What's in a name?" NOVEMBER 9, 1978

Bruce Springsteen:

The Boss Is Back!

Page 29

"Somebody stop me...before I hurt myself!"

Photos by Rick Ames

Inside:

· Cynic Under Fire From Vanguard Press -3

· Alternate View on Inflation -13

· A Look at Richelieu Flood Control Project -15

Mountaineering #3.

METHODOLOGY

Heading for the mountains
Fig. 1

Mountaineering, as all but the chronically misinformed know, is the skill, the science and the art of drinking Busch Beer. It begins by heading for the mountains (i.e., a quick jaunt to your favorite package emporium or wateringhole) and ends by downing the mountains (i.e., slow slaking swallows of the brew that is Busch).

¶ However, between those two points lies a vast area of personal peccadilloes sometimes called technique and sometimes called methodology (depending on your major). Hence, this ad. ¶ Sipping vs. chugging. Both have their merits, of course. But generally speaking, except for cases of extreme thirst or a leaking glass, sipping is the more prudent practice for serious, sustained mountaineering. ¶ Next, the proper position. Some swear by sitting; others by standing. Suffice it to say that the most successful mountaineers are flexible, so you'll find both sitters and standers. (Except on New Year's Eve, when it's almost impossible to find a sitter.) ¶ Which brings us to additives. Occasionally a neophyte will sprinkle salt in his Busch; others mix in tomato juice; and a few on the radical fringe will even add egg. While these manipulations can't be prohibited (this is, after all, a free country), they are frowned upon. Please be advised that purity is a virtue, and the natural refreshment of Busch is best uncompromised.

Sipping vs. chugging
Fig. 2

Fig. 3

Standing vs. sitting
Fig. 4

¶ Finally, there's the issue of containers. Good taste dictates a glass be used. But bad planning sometimes prevents that. If you find yourself forced to drink from the can, you should minimize this breach of etiquette. Be formal. Simply let your little finger stick out stiffly (see Fig. 4). Happy Mountaineering!

Don't just reach for a beer. BUSCH® Head for the mountains.

©Anheuser-Busch, Inc. St. Louis, Mo.

News

Cynic Under Fire From Vanguard Press

Weekly Paper Says Cynic is Competing Unfairly

By Scott Sartorius

The Vermont Vanguard Press has hired a Montpelier attorney to investigate whether the Vermont Cynic competes unfairly in the marketplace against other advertising-supported media.

Vanguard Press publisher Stephen Brown says that because the Cynic is state and federally supported and that because UVM's student newspaper enjoys a tax exempt status and pays "zero overhead," the Cynic should be restricted from competing as freely as it does in Burlington. Brown said the Cynic has handed his ten-month-old weekly "heavy competition" and he believes the paper should "lay off a little bit in terms of its competitive nature."

The issues currently being discussed by Vanguard Press attorney, Andrew Field, and UVM attorney, Paul Sutherland, concern differences over circulation and distribution points. Brown called these aspects a "first step" and added that he hasn't heard of any progress from Field since discussion began late last week. Reportedly, Sutherland has presented Field with a rough outline of a proposal, but he too has heard nothing back from Field who is out of town.

Cynic editor David Greeff said the reason the Vanguard Press has raised these points is because "they're in financial trouble. They feel the Cynic is taking some of their ad revenue away in Burlington."

Greeff said that although there may be some issues to be discussed, "we feel that we have not exceeded the boundaries legally within the rights of a state-supported college newspaper." Greeff added that he doesn't feel placing restrictions on the Cynic's distribution and circulation will do the Vanguard Press much good, though.

"Even if they limit our distribution to solely on campus, there won't be a subsequent decrease in ad revenue," Greeff said. "I believe the reason for their lack of success is not the presence of the Cynic, but rather the Vanguard's misjudgement of the market," he added.

Approximately 40 percent of the Cynic's 10,000-copy press run is distributed to bars, restaurants, grocery stores, inns and the like. The other 60 percent is distributed on-campus to Billings Center, Waterman and the dormitories.

Brown is a graduate of UVM and worked for both the Cynic and the Vermont Summer Cynic. He was also instrumental in publishing the Summer Cynic's back-to-school issue in 1976, which has been a highly profitable edition since that year.

"All I'm trying to do is stay alive," Brown said. "I'm in business trying to make a weekly living for 20 people."

Brown understands the unique position the Cynic is in because he worked there, but he said the tendency of people who work for the Cynic is to become "extremely emotional" when they feel threatened. He said the present Cynic staff "is not looking at things objectively."

Brown said that there are "very few products like the Cynic in terms of size, coverage, and ad revenue, especially when considering the fact that UVM doesn't have a school of journalism. But he added, "In no way are we out to change the concept of a student newspaper." He just wants the question answered: "Are most of the state-supported papers student papers, or do they go into the community?"

In a related development, Vanguard Press attorney Field contacted the Vermont Secretary of State's office Tuesday to try to have the name "Vermont Cynic" reserved for corporate title. The Cynic, which first began publishing 95 years ago, apparently never registered its name with the Secretary of State.

If Field's move to register the name "Vermont Cynic" is successful, the Cynic could conceivably be forced to alter its name. But a spokesman at the Secretary of State's office said the move probably won't go through, at least not without some serious examination.

Greeff called the move a "cheap shot" and Sutherland said he didn't understand why the move was made; Brown said the move was not his idea.

"I was called after Field initiated the move," Brown said. Brown also called the move "irrelevant," saying, "I'm not going that route."

In addition, Greeff said that trying to take the Cynic's name "can only help to change a friendly situation into an unfriendly one."

But while the relationship between the two weeklies does still seem to be a friendly one, there are a number of points of difference that have to be ironed out between the two papers.

"I'm not trying to play the heavyweight," Brown said.

There's more to come on this one.

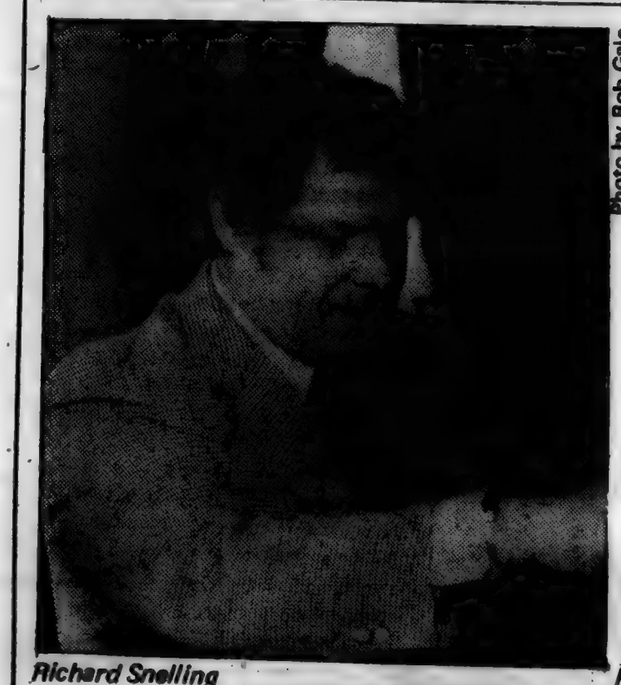

Photo by Bob Gale

Richard Snelling

Madeline Kunin

Photo by Ellen Gray

Democrats Remain Strong in Burlington After Election

By John Letteri

With statewide voter turnout estimated at nearly 50 percent, Chittenden County elected a legislative delegation of 16 Democrats and 12 Republicans Tuesday.

In Burlington, only District 4-9 had no Democratic winners. Two Republicans who have never held state office before, Torrey Carpenter and Theodore Riehle III, defeated Democratic opponents. This decision resulted in a net gain of one seat for the Republicans in Chittenden County.

Three other Democrats were elected to office from Burlington, including 21-year-old UVM student Pam Erkson. Barbara Reuschel and Polly Rowland, who ran unopposed to fill Edwin Granai's seat, were the other two Democratic newcomers.

Outside Burlington, two incumbents were beaten, and four ran unopposed. Mike Martineau, a 22-year-old political science major, ousted Republican incumbent Clark Bensen in South Burlington, and Gloria Conant defeated Democratic incumbent Thomas O'Niel by about 200 votes.

The outlying communities elected a strongly Republican legislative delegation. Ten Republicans, and only four Democrats were elected from Chittenden districts that include the towns of Colchester, Jericho, and Richmond.

In the state-wide races, Democratic gubernatorial candidate Edwin Granai failed to carry Burlington, a town he had represented for four years in District 4-3. Elsewhere in Chittenden county, incumbent Governor Richard Snelling won by a distinct margin.

Madeline Kunin, Vermont's lieutenant governor-elect, handily defeated Republican challenger Peter Smith in Burlington. Mrs. Kunin garnered over 5,000 votes compared to Smith's tally of approximately 2,500. In the surrounding communities, the race was much tighter, and was not decided on a state-wide level until very early Wednesday morning. For example, in some of the smaller towns in Addison county, Mrs. Kunin and Smith were often separated by less than ten votes.

In direct contrast, the race for the United States House was decided with only five percent of the vote in. Democratic challenger S. Marie Dietz and Liberty Union candidate Peter Diamondstone were buried underneath Jefford's landslide. It's estimated Jeffords garnered nearly 80 percent of the electorate in winning his third term as Vermont's lone Congressman. He drew very strongly from all parts of the state, and more often than not productively with, but independent of the governor.

(continued on page 4)

Index

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Cover Story | 29 | Arts | 29 |
| S.A. Corner | 10 | Flicks | 32 |
| News Briefs | 12 | Calendar | 40 |
| Commentary | 13 | Sports | 41 |
| Features | 15 | Sports Profile | 44 |
| Good Health | 16 | Sports Briefs | 48 |
| Editorial | 26 | Random Notes | 50 |
| Op Ed | 27 | Classified | 51 |

Put on Warmth in Style

With the cold air descending upon us, you'll want to be ready. Fashionably warm, and with that comfortable do-anything fit. A Sunbuster vest or jacket will send you into winter in the style just right for the action you enjoy.

Shown above: Bayhead Vest, 65% Poly, 35% Cotton, 100% Nylon Lining, 10 oz. Polarguard Innerlining. Alpine Parka, 65% Poly, 35% Cotton, 100% Nylon Lining, Yoke, Polarguard Innerlining.

Open Mon.-Thurs. 9-6
Fri. 9-9; Sat. 9-5
85 Main St. 658-3313

SKI RACK

Election ...

continued from page three

town vote tallies showed Dietz and Diamondstone in the thirties and forties, and Jeffords in the hundreds.

Although Liberty Union candidates came nowhere remotely near challenging for victory, they did gather enough votes to remain on the ballot for 1980. According to state statute, a party has to get at least five percent of the vote in an election to remain viable as a political party. None of their candidates for major state offices accomplished this, but the Liberty Union candidate for Treasurer, Ralph Land, and Treasurer Alfred Potthast, earned 11 percent and 10 percent respectively.

In other statewide races, Secretary of State James Guest easily won over his two opponents, taking 58 percent of the vote. Attorney General M. Jerome Diamond smashed Dennis Bradley, the Republican challenger, and Guido Condosta, the Liberty Union candidate, winning by an almost 50,000 vote margin. This finally put an end to the non-lawyer harangue of Dennis Bradley, a man who promoted capital punishment for all drug dealers, and the sale of marijuana in state liquor stores. He also advocated having the jury decide if a case merited a trial before a case went to full court proceedings. If it did not, the prosecution was to be fined $10,000 under Bradley's plan.

Although Liberty Union candidates came nowhere near challenging for victory, they did gather enough votes to remain on the ballot for 1980

Regulations May Safeguard Transportation of Hazardous Materials

By Ann Seidenberg

Proposed regulations governing the transportation of hazardous materials in Vermont received praise last week from the Vermont Public Interest Research Group (VPIRG).

Testifying in a public hearing in St. Johnsbury concerning the proposed regulations put forth by the State Transportation Agency, VPIRG Assistant Director Charles Sheketoff said the proposals "take a positive step towards filling the gap which exists under current federal regulation."

The regulations are the outcome of a VPIRG-backed bill (H.549) passed by the 1978 Legislature which gave the Agency of Transportation authority to regulate the transportation of hazardous materials in Vermont. Hazardous materials are defined in the bill to be "those substances or materials in such quantity or form which may pose an unreasonable risk to health and safety or property when transported in commerce, by all modes." They include radioactive wastes, flammable liquids and gases, and poisons, among others.

H.549 also established a Hazardous Materials Committee to become a central clearinghouse for information as well as to coordinate state regulatory activities. Previously, different agencies were responsible for different areas of the transportation process. That created an overlapping and duplication of responsibilities.

Sheketoff testified that the adoption of state regulations takes "a giant step forward by establishing a more active role for the state in the regulation of the transportation of hazardous materials." Federal regulations exist governing transportation of such materials, but they are only enforceable by federal officials and apply only to interstate shipping. The proposed state regulations would adopt certain federal laws, changing only the extent and direction of enforcement. State and local officials would be authorized to cover intrastate transportation of hazardous materials.

Sheketoff recommended strengthening the proposed regulations to make them "more responsive to the real need to protect public safety and more in line with the intent of H.549 (the bill which gave the Agency the authority to adopt the regulations)."

Sheketoff made three recommendations at the hearing. The first was to include in the driver's shipping papers an "on the scene action guide or some other pertinent information regarding emergency procedures in case of an accident while transporting hazardous materials." Secondly, he recommended that drivers be required to have a knowledge of emergency procedures to pass their driver qualification tests. Thirdly, and most important, Sheketoff recommended that carriers be held financially responsible for the cost of containment and clean-up in the event of an accident. He emphasized, however, that the carrier should have recourse against the shipper in the event the shipper's negligence caused the accident.

"In the very least," he stated, "by clarifying the financial responsibility in this manner, we can prevent delays in clean-up operations caused by drawn-out arguments about who is going to pick up the tab."

Rural Women Urged to Act for Change

Forbes says Women Must Share Today's Burdens

By Stacey Cushner

The rural woman wants to be recognized for the "value of her work, a woman with potential ability," said Coral J. Forbes, an active member of the National Organization for Women and the American Civil Liberties Union.

Speaking last Thursday as part of the Rural Options series, Forbes said men dominate all areas of "their society" while women remain "on" their pedestals, out of reach, out of action, and unsupported."

Only with the aid of the women's movement have the needs of rural women become known. According to the Rural American Woman's Conference in March, 1978, rural women still feel isolated. Migrant women's needs are unanswered, male land ownership inhibits their progress toward self-sufficiency, and domestic violence remains unrecognized.

Certain organizations can listen to the demands and meet the needs of the American woman. The Rural American Women's Organization subcommittee hearings of the Family Farms and Rural Development Committee, and House Committee hearings on Agriculture can "identify with today's rural problems that remain the same as a generation ago," said Forbes.

Nevertheless, out of 1500 rural bills passed through the 95th Congress, only a "handful" affect women, and none specifically deal with them, said Forbes. Only 38 bills out of thousands passed had a "direct effect on women," she said.

Forbes urged women to get involved with the government by communicating with members of Congress. She said they neglect women more by default than conscious sexism.

If a woman cannot testify in person, a written statement is the next best thing, said Forbes. "It is your tax dollars they are spending and you should have a hand in how it is spent."

Most importantly, Forbes wants people to realize the time has come for the rural woman and man to stand together, not one behind the other. "They must share today's burdens, they are to open the door and women are to walk through without fear."

Ms. Forbes was the legal counsel for the subcommittee on Family Farms and Rural Development in the 94th Congress. She is presently a member of North Carolina Senator Charles Rose's staff.

Bureaucracy Delays Pollution Control Bill 5 Years

By John Letteri

After five years of repeated hearings, re-writes, and votes, the U.S. Congress finally passed a Water Pollution Control Act that reflects the needs of this decade, said Ms. Joan Kovalic, a member of the House Public Works and Transportation subcommittee staff.

Kovalic, during her speech as part of the Water Resources Seminar Monday night, described the legislative process the bill moved through before enactment.

The bill was originally written in 1948, when it was decreed that the Surgeon General should "assist and encourage" municipalities to install proper water treatment programs. A budget of $22 million was appropriated to help defray up to one third of the cost for a municipality building facility for this purpose.

Between 1955 and 1965, the budget for the programs rose from $550 million to $3.5 billion. Outright grants were available for up to 75% on the cost of building water and sewage treatment plants. However, before money was allocated, states had to develop ways to keep up their water quality according to federal guidelines, and also submit final plans for any construction to the federal government for approval.

By 1972, the funds for the program had skyrocketed to 18 billion, with the same outright grants for up to 75 percent of construction costs still available. At the same time, the federal regulations governing the allocation of money within the program had increased almost as much. Ms. Kovalic said one of the principle reasons behind the rewriting of the bill was the complaint that the language and number of federal regulations were so difficult to understand, people were not taking advantage of the money offered. In addition, the regulations were too rigid for people to realistically follow.

Since both the House and Senate differed on how to re-word the bill, a study was ordered in 1972 to determine the social, economic, and environmental impacts of a Water Pollution Control Bill. After three years and $17 million, the study concluded the bill needed a rewriting.

In 1976, the House Committee began a series of hearings which focused on 83 different federal requirements contained in the Water Pollution Bill and heard over 200 witnesses. Yet, the session failed to act on the measure before they adjourned in October of 1976 for elections.

After the entire process of hearings and numerous rewritings was completed again, the bill finally passed both houses of Congress in December of 1977. It provided for 25.5 billion dollars in funds, again with outright grants available for up to 75 percent of the cost of the construction of proper water treatment programs.

The final bill set aside four percent of the money for states designated as rural. This is based on the fact that some individuals or group of individuals, not comprising a municipality, would need a separate water treatment program.

ANNIVERSARY SALE

Fri., Sat., Mon., Tues.
Nov. 10,11,13,14

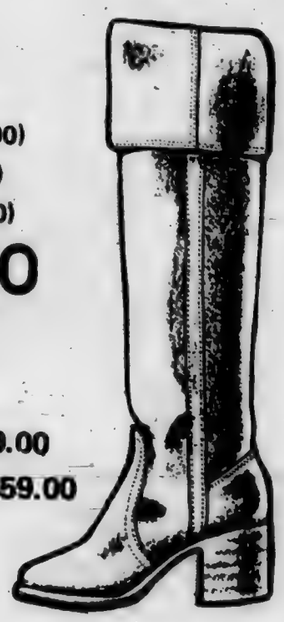
After a great first year we'd like to offer you some great values



FRYE®

FRYE BOOTS
Selected Styles & Sizes

LADIES

(12prs0 Cuffed, Round Toe, Russet color (reg. $93.00)
(3prs) Stitched, Cuffed, Round Toe, Dk Camel (reg. $99.00)
(11prs) Stitched, Cuffed, Round Toe, Brick (reg. $99.00)
(11prs) Western Cuff & Toe, Stitched, Russet (reg. $88.00)

all $59.00

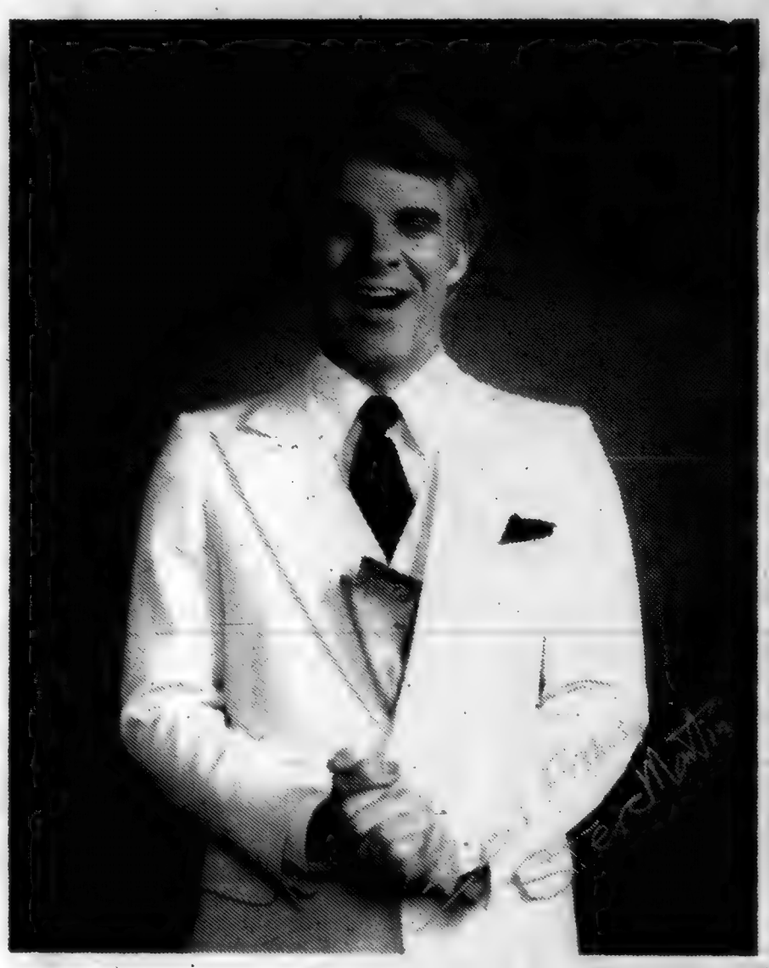
MEN'S

(14 prs.) Black Dress Boot(reg. $70.00) $49.00
(3 prs) Plain Square Toe, Brick color (reg. $77.00) $59.00
(11prs) Plain, Round Toe, Russet color (reg. $79.00) $59.00

COATS and JACKETS
Selected Styles & Sizes

7 Ladies Styles
as low as $80.00 (from $150.00)

6 Men's Styles
as low as $97.00 from $150.00)



Open Mon. & Fri. till 9pm.
160 College St. 863—2216

CRISPIN Leather

$50.00 Cash Prize!

THE Treaty
of
YORKTOWN

1st Annual Steve Martin Contest

This Monday and every Monday is talent nite at the Treaty. It's your big chance to leap to stardom, break hearts and generally humiliate yourself in front of your friends.

The Big Night!

This Monday, Nov. 13, is the Steve Martin Contest with a $50.00 Cash Prize for the most wild and crazy guy! Plus the music of Madman Bob Resnik to give the nite a little class.

It all starts at 9:00 P.M. Monday nite.

The Treaty of Yorktown
156 St. Paul Street
Burlington, Vermont

Incidence of Arson in Burlington Alarming

State Police Investigated 390 Cases Last Year

By Jim Oakes

Few crimes are as frightening and destructive as arson. During the past year alone Vt. State Police investigated 390 cases of arson. In a pre-dawn fire two weeks ago, a UVM student lost her possessions, her apartment and her dog to a blaze that is being investigated as arson.

To combat the growing problem, state police organized an arson squad in 1977. Since that time arrests have increased from 24 in 1976-77 to 54 in 1977-78. While this constitutes a significant increase, state police Detective Perkins noted that arson is a difficult crime to prove because "usually your evidence is burned."

Many arsons have little or no motive. Forty-eight juveniles were "involved" in arson cases last year in Vermont. Commenting on the Oct. 23 Solomon Block fire on North St., which the police suspect was arson, State's Attorney Mark Keller said, "Juveniles around town were calling it a big joke."

While arson may be a joke for some, it is big money for others. Insurance companies paid out $2,593,770 in claims for fire damage in just Chittenden County last year. Arson does not account for all of this money, but it has a significant share.

"Insurance companies paid out $2,593,770 in claims for fire damage in just Chittenden County last year."

Burlington has had a great number of arsons, or suspected arsons in the last few years. The gaping hole at the corner of Main Street and South Winooski Avenue in downtown Burlington was once the Strong Building. Arson was suspected to be the cause when the building burned down in 1971. The estimated replacement cost was $1 million. The Mayfair store on Church Street received $100,000 worth of damage from a 1972 arson. On May 16, 1978, the Women's Health Center was firebombed with a Molotov cocktail at the Center's North St. address. The Health Center lost its previous offices above the Black Cat Cafe when a fire of "undetermined origin" destroyed the building on May 1, 1977.

Two other community service organizations besides the Women's Health Center have been hit by arsonists in the last 18 months: the King Street Youth Center in May 1977, and Helping Hands, on October 23rd of this year. No arrests have been made for either fire.

Police are reticent to talk about arsons. Their leads are preciously few, and they want to avoid publicity that may encourage potential arsonists. This type of crime is found predominantly in Vermont's urban areas. Chittenden County has the greatest number of fires investigated, 115, while Rutland county is second with 66.

The path from a burning building to a court room is long indeed. Once the fire is doused, the Fire Marshall determines whether it warrants investigation. If the fire is suspicious, the State Police are called in. They then sift through the ashes and charcoal for clues. Witnesses are rarely available to interview, and there is often no apparent motive.

The States Attorney's office works in conjunction with the police and eventually prosecutes any arrests, but often the police investigations stretch over many fires and long periods of time. Accordingly, the States Attorney who begins a case is often not there to prosecute it. Burlington has had three States Attorneys in the last year and a half.

The city of Burlington offers a one thousand dollar reward for information leading to an arson conviction, but few people have collected the money. Meanwhile, arsonists continue to set fires for money, revenge, or just for kicks, with small risk of getting caught.

Peter Smith

the (lieutenant's governor's) race was much tighter ... in smaller towns in Addison county, Mrs. Kunin and Smith were separated by less than ten vote s.

Student's Complaint May Change City Traffic Ordinance

By Randy McMullen

Responding to complaints by a University of Vermont student, the Burlington Traffic Commission (BTC) indicated Monday that it may favor changing a traffic ordinance requiring cars to park at least 15 feet away from fire hydrants.

Peter Lind, who first aired his complaints in last week's Cynic, cited a discrepancy between the 15' city ordinance and a state law – which requires a leeway of only six feet – during a BTC monthly meeting. He charged that the matter should be clarified either with parking signs or yellow painted curbs, so that other students will not be victimized in the future.

The BTC, however, seemed to indicate that they would prefer changing the city ordinance instead. "To be consistent," said one member, "we would have to paint every place that a fire hydrant stood; and that's just not feasible." It was also maintained that during winter months, the snow would render the yellow curbs useless.

In addition, Lind cited areas in Burlington where this ordinance is obviously not enforced. One example, a hydrant on the corner of College and Center Streets, has a metered parking space well within the required 15-foot leeway.

How close should one get? Photo by Bob Gale

BTC members themselves agreed that the ordinance might be too restrictive. "It's pretty much a matter of common sense," said one member. "People don't normally park close to a hydrant, yet they don't take out a tape measurer either."

If the BTC decides to formerly support a change in the ordinance, it will be brought before the city board of aldermen for final consideration. It has not been specified what the final leeway would be.

One issue that will be considered is whether the Burlington Fire Department will approve of the shortened leeway. However, Lind reported during the ETC meeting that of eight BFD members questioned, only one even knew the required leeway was 15 feet. The general consensus, he added, was that the distance could be shorter.

Lind's efforts began on Wednesday, October 11, when he parked just over nine feet from a hydrant on University Place. A native of Rutland,

(continued on page 9)

Carter's Inflation Plan Needs Time to Produce

By John Letteri

The Carter Administration's plan to control inflation is "entitled to a fair amount of time to see if it will work," said Robert Stafford (R–Vt) in an interview Monday.

The seven-year veteran of the Senate said the plan, which includes appeals to business and labor to voluntarily control wage and price increases, was everything the White House could do "short of enacting mandatory controls." Stafford also applauded the administration's recent efforts to shore up the ailing dollar on the international money markets.

Part of the blame for the recent inflationary spiral has been put on federal spending. Stafford defended this charge, saying the growth in spending and numbers of employees has been greater in the state and local governments than in the federal. He said the federal government has been the "favorite whipping boy" of the public and media, but all branches of government are guilty of increases.

To relieve the effects of increases in government spending, Stafford called for a continuation of the restraints the Congress imposed on themselves this year, and a stronger movement toward a balanced budget. He said the House and Senate passed a budget calling for a $38 billion deficit, which was 22 billion dollars less than the administration's proposal. He said the effects of Proposition 13 in California, whereby property taxes were slashed up to 67 percent, have been felt at the federal level and are part of the reason Congress was intent on reducing federal spending in this election year.

Stafford does not, however, favor huge cuts in either personal income tax or property tax. He voted against the Kemp-Roth bill, which would have reduced federal income taxes by 33 percent over the next three years, because the proposal did not provide for a counterbalancing reduction in government spending.

Instead, Stafford co-sponsored the "son" of Kemp-Roth, which allows for tax reductions only with substantial restraints on the growth of federal spending and a balanced budget by 1983.

With regard to the United States' interests in Africa, Stafford said America was trying to bring about governments of the majority through free elections. In Rhodesia and Namibia, Stafford said the combined efforts of the United Nations and the United States could eventually produce a peaceful ascension to black majority rule.

Stafford gave Carter an "A for effort" for his Camp David summit meetings which produced a framework for peace between Egypt and Israel. He said the two countries should be able to work out a separate peace without the West Bank problems presented by the Palestine Liberation Organization and Jordan.

Begin's "sudden strident statements" concerning expanding existing settlements on the West Bank, however, were poorly timed as far as the peace treaties were concerned, said Stafford, and the Prime Minister of Israel committed a "diplomatic error" by doing so.

Stafford commented on the question of nuclear power, saying he was not an "enthusiastic supporter" of atomic fueled power plants, but could not foresee a future energy policy in the U.S. that does not include them. He feels the problem of safe disposal of waste has got to be solved before large-scale nuclear power plants can be implemented. He cited coal and oil-short countries abroad as having already started to employ nuclear power on an accelerated scale.

"(Stafford) was not an 'enthusiastic' supporter of atomic fueled power plants, but could not see a future energy policy in the U.S. that does not include them."

In the 95th Congress Stafford is the ranking member of the Committee on Environment and Public Works and specializes in matters of environment and transportation. He is a member of the Committee on Veteran's Affairs and serves on the Committee on Human Resources, where he is ranking minority member of the subcommittees on Education and Handicapped, and is a member of the Labor subcommittee.

When the late Senator Winston Prouty passed away in 1971, Stafford was appointed by then-Governor Deane C. Davis to fill Prouty's seat. Stafford then was elected in a special election in 1972 and again in 1976. He had previously served six terms in the House of Representatives from 1960-1970 and thus became only the 83rd American to be elected as a governor member of the U.S. House and the U.S. Senate from his home state.

THE
LAST CHANCE
SALOON

1st Annual Backgammon
Tournament

Saturday Nov. 11
Starting at Noon

Two Divisions
Beginners with consolation round
Intermediate with double elimination

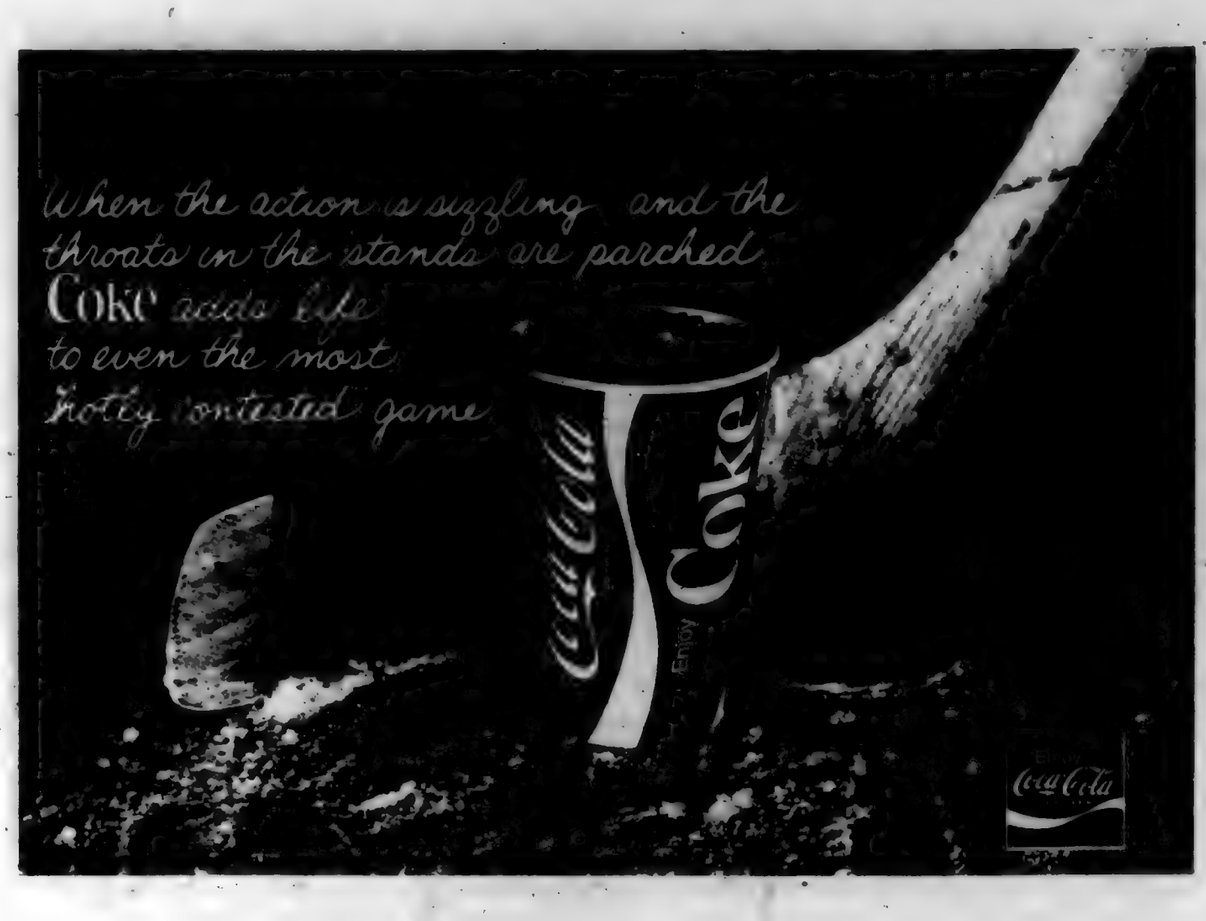
Prizes
Engraved trophies, gift certificates

Entry Fee
$3.00

Lunch Served

Sign up in Advance
at the Chance

147 Main St.



R.W. Hunt's Presents
in Concert

AZTEC
TWO-STEP

Nov. 13 & 14 at 7:30 & 10:30

Tickets $5
on Sale Now at HUNTS
101 Main St. 863-9850

VT. RESIDENTS and STUDENTS
• ski for less •
at
Smugglers' Notch

| BASH BADGE | SEASON PASS | |
|---|---|---|
| 12.50 per badge | ADULT | $165 |
| Ski All Weekdays 7.00 | YOUNG ADULT/COLLEGE (22 and under) | 140 |
| Ski Weekends/Holidays 10.00 | YOUTH (17 and under) | 130 |
| 50% OFF LESSONS AND EQUIPMENT | CHILD (14 and under) | 95 |
| | MID-WEEK PLUS | 100 |
| | (Save $5/day weekends) | |

The perfect learn to ski package!

Deadline Extended to Nov. 30th!

Conveniently available at BILLINGS STUDENT CENTER

Camera for pass and badge pictures wil be on location!

10AM to 4PM THURSDAYS and FRIDAYS

MAIL COUPON TO SMUGGLERS' NOTCH (with check)
JEFFERSONVILLE, VT. 05464, Box S.

☐ BASH BADGE
☐ VT. ADULT
☐ VT. YOUTH
☐ VT. CHILD
☐ COLLEGE PASS/YOUNG ADULT
☐ MID-WEEK

Name _____
Address _____
_____
Age _____ Tele. _____

ACT NOW: Prices Increase Oct. 31st

Photo by Rick Ames

C. Brooks Peters: Forcing Jews to pick up glass with their bare hands.

Night of Terror Triggers Holocaust

By Mary Dixon

Kristallnacht, or the night that windows of shops owned by Jewish people in Berlin were shattered, allegedly by the German S.S. Police, "triggered" the expansion of blatant persecution of Jews in Germany, said C. Brooks Peters, a Berlin correspondent for the New York Times from 1937 to 1950.

Peters covered Kristallnacht for the Times on November 10, 1938, after receiving an anonymous tip telling of a certain place at 2 a.m. At that time, he saw a black Mercedes limousine "like those of the S.A. Storm Troopers" driving down the Lichtegestratze where he was told to go. From each vehicle five men with crowbars broke the windows of stores owned by Jews, which according to the law were marked with the owner's name. They threw the merchandise in the display cases into the streets. At the West End of Berlin, Peters said he saw a looting escapade the likes of which he'd never before seen on the stores that were attacked.

At approximately 6 a.m. Peters saw one of the principle synagogues in Berlin burned. Flames surrounded the base of the building and "an acrid odor of gasoline filled the air." He said he could distinctly hear cries coming from inside the building. An impenetrable line of police had encircled the building even though few spectators were about. Large numbers of fire companies came, but made no attempt to stop the synagogue from burning, and instead sprayed water on the surrounding "non-Jewish property."

The next morning Peters saw Storm Troopers forcing Jews to pick up all the glass from the streets and windows with their bare hands.

At 5 a.m. the same day, Goebbels, the Minister of Propaganda of the Third Reich, ordered that all physical violence and indignation in the streets against the Jews be halted. But a billion marc (equal to 250,000 at that time) fine was decreed on German Jewry. Insurance money for damages was not paid to the Jews but directly to the Reich treasury.

In addition, Jewish newspapers were ordered closed; all Jewish cultural and educational societies were ordered dissolved, and non-Jews were forbidden in Jewish owned shops. Jews were forbidden in German universities.

A statement in the Storm Troopers paper, the Schwatzebohn, warned that all Jews in Germany stood as hostages should harm be done to a single hair of a "single head of a German," and all Germans who opposed anti-Semitism had better take care, lest their "cowardice and treachery" get them personally into trouble, said Peters.

The November 9–10 destruction which included Kristallnacht, was a prelude to the murder of five to six million Jews in Germany between 1939-1945.

Three anti-Semitic actions led up to Kristallnacht, said Peters. One was the annexation of Austria by the Nazi Party in March, 1938. After the annexation, attacks against the Jews and anti-Nazis in Austria were "brutal and widespread," forcing people to flee.

Former President Franklin Delano Roosevelt called a special conference of 33 countries to discuss how they might assist refugees from Austria. But nothing was accomplished by the convention because none of the countries agreed to raise their immigration quotas.

In the U.S. FDR could not raise the quota because Americans did not want him to. The Depression was hurting people already in the U.S., and a vocal group of influential people called the Eugenisists claimed that people from southern and eastern Europe, especially Italians, Poles, and Jews, were "biological degenerates," said Peters.

Second, on March 25, 1938, the Polish Parliament passed a law making many Polish passports invalid. This was an effort of the Polish government to get rid of their Jews, many of whom were in West Germany.

The German government, not wanting the Jews, asked that law not apply to the Polish Jews in Germany, threatening deportation otherwise. The Poles refused the request. On October 29, 1938, 15,000 Jewish men, women and children were deported from West Germany to Poland.

A Polish Jew Heshl Grynszpan, who was illegally in France, was so enraged by the treatment of his deported sister and family by the Germans, that he decided to kill the German

(continued on page 9)

Brock Evans

David S. Wyman

Vermont Seminars Rolling Along

Special Press Release

Two distinguished speakers will be at UVM next week to lend their expertise to the university's Vermont Seminars program.

The Washington, D.C. Director of the Sierra Club, Brock Evans, will be addressing the "Current Issues in National Resources Policy" section of the Rural Options in Urban America program. Evans' speech, "Wilderness and the American Dream: A Human Imperative," will take place Nov. 14 at 7 p.m. in the Memorial Lounge of UVM's Waterman Building.

On Nov. 15, at 8 p.m., in the Benedict Auditorium of the Marsh Life Sciences Building, David S. Wyman, a history professor at the University of Massachusetts, Amherst, will lecture on "The American Response to the Holocaust," as part of the Vermont Seminars' program, "The Holocaust: Perspectives – Past, Present and Future."

Evans, who started as the Northwest Representative of the Sierra Club in Seattle in 1967, is the founder of Washington, Oregon and Idaho Environmental Councils, each of which is a focal point for private environmental interests in the respective states. He is currently serving as Chairman of the National Resources Council of America. In 1973 he took the position as Sierra Club representative in the nation's capitol. Since then he has founded and organized the Alpine Lakes Protection Society and now sits on its board of trustees.

Evans, who gave up his private law practice in 1967 to work for the Sierra Club, was named "Environmentalist of the Year" in 1972 by the Washington Environmental Council. A Board member of the North Cascades Conservation Council, he has also written the book, The Alpine Lakes.

Wyman, who wrote the book Paper Walls: America and the Refuge Crisis, 1938-41, is working on a sequel to Paper Walls on the American response to the Jewish Holocaust, 1941-45. A Quaker, Wyman has taught at the University of Massachusetts since 1966, after he earned his Ph.D. in history from Harvard University specializing in the era of Franklin D. Roosevelt. Recently, he authored an article in Commentary on "Why Auschwitz was Never Bombed," (May, 1978, pp. 37-46). The article stirred so much controversy that further remarks were needed in the July and September, 1978 issues.

Hydrants ...

continued from page seven

Vermont, he knew only of the six-foot leeway required by state law. After talking with several Burlington and UVM authorities, he learned of the discrepancy between the state law and the Burlington ordinance, and determined that the issue was unfairly vague. He at first rejected an offer to have his five-dollar ticket voided, stating that "the problem still exists."

Lind has subsequently had his fee dropped, and is awaiting further action regarding the discrepancy.

Night of Terror ...

continued from page eight

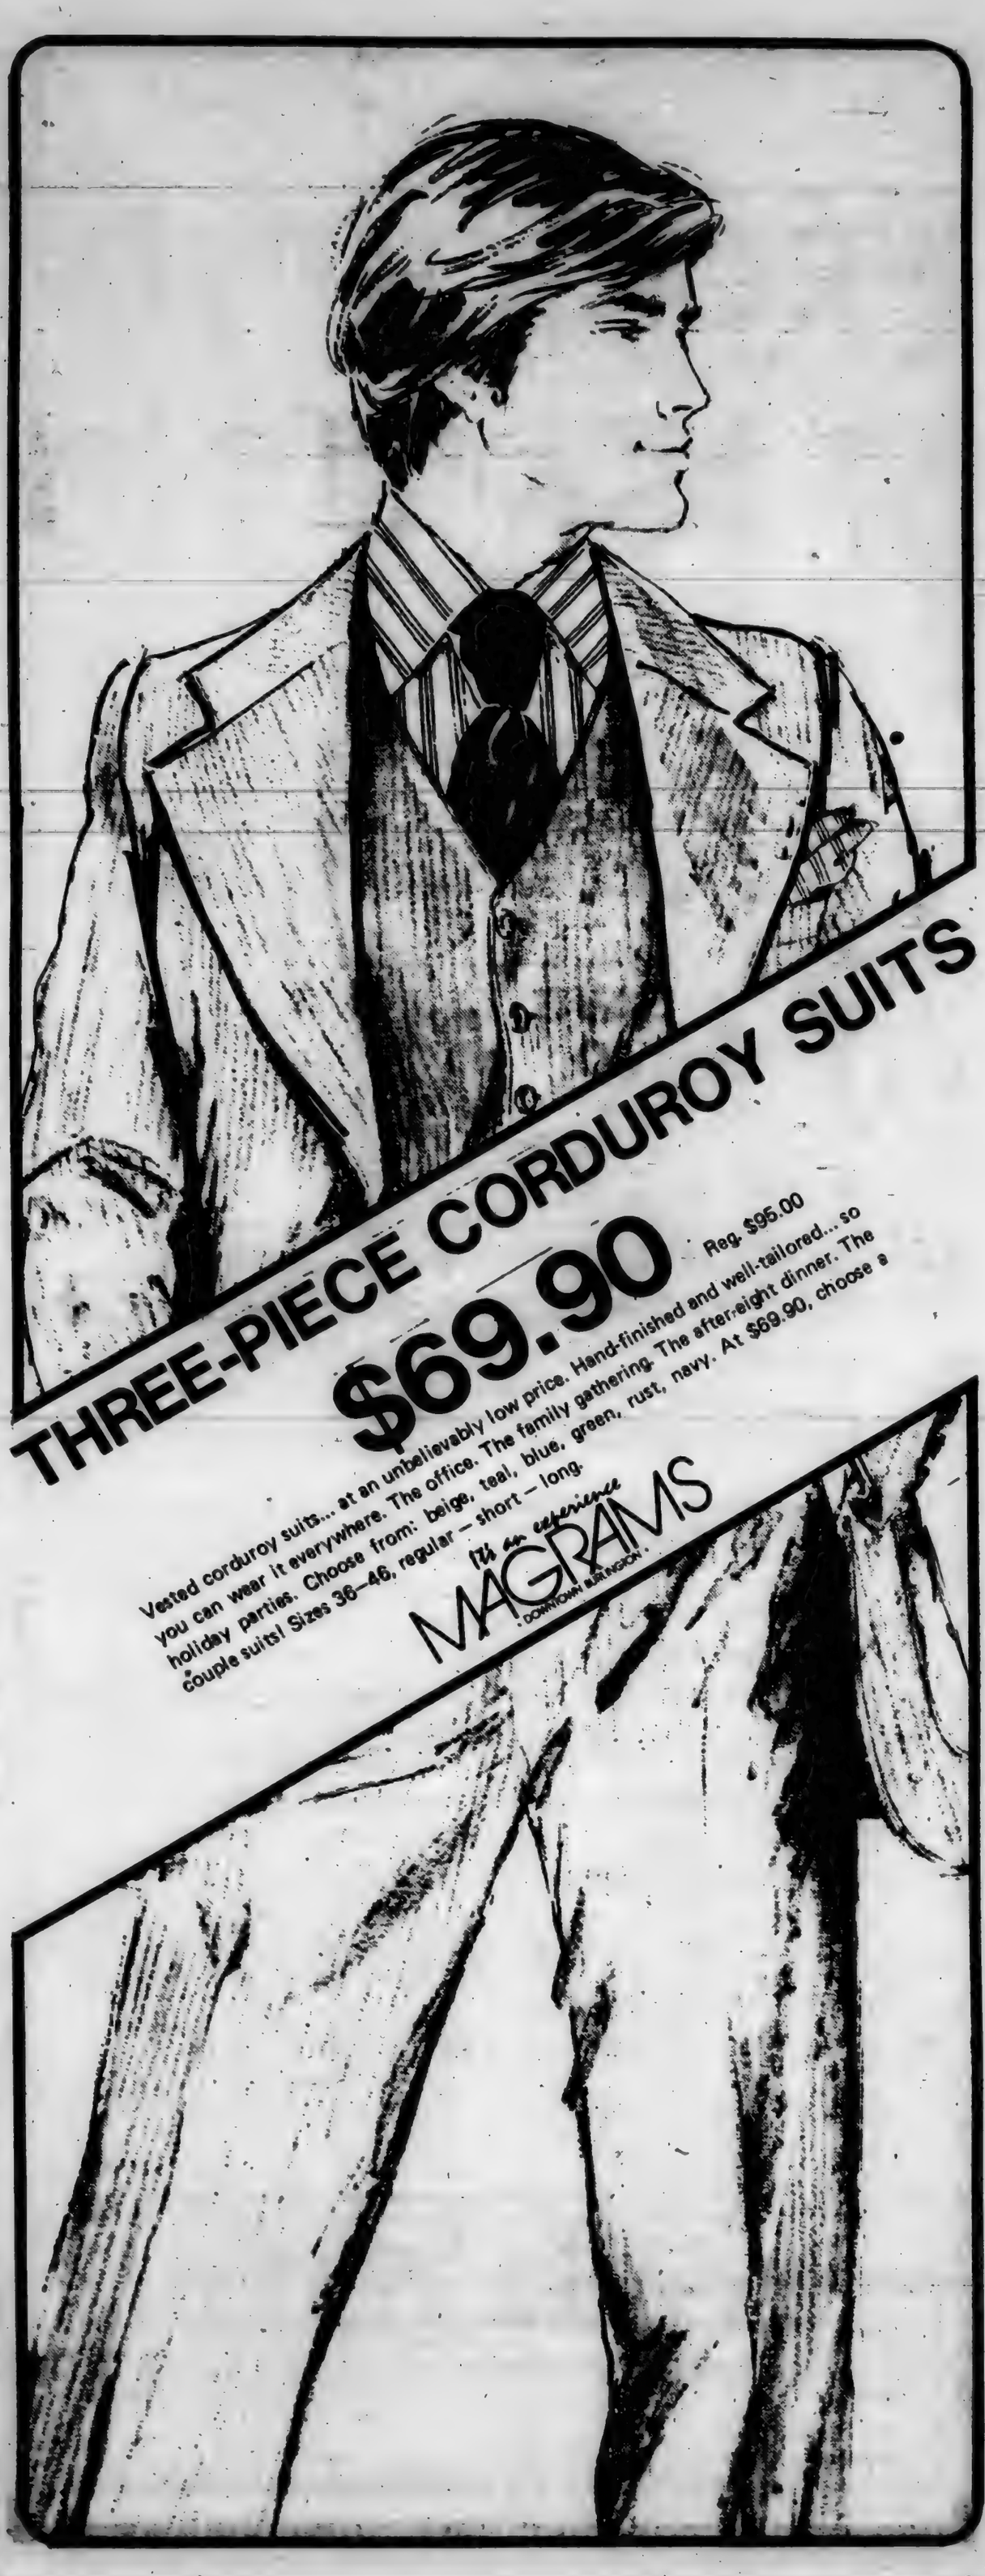
ambassador. Instead, on November 7 he shot the secretary to the ambassador. On November 9 the secretary died. A Although Grynszpan was arrested, he was never tried for the murder. He said that there would be a "spontaneous demonstration" against Jews. This apparently signaled the organization of a "violent demonstration" at 2 a.m. November 10.



C. Brooks Peters' story on Kristallnacht was what is called a "world beat" meaning that he got it exclusively for the N.Y. Times. No other reporters covered Kristallnacht in Berlin because Goebbels' statement implied that no actions would be taken against the Jews.

Like What You See?

Then Do It.

Come by the Cynic office in Billings and provide us with creativity.

PRO-SOUND SALE

Don't miss Tech Hi's limited-time sale on high quality P.A. Equipment! Here are some examples of the remarkable prices you'll find at Tech Hifi. Many other items not listed here are on sale at similar discounts.

1. Tapco 6200 Mixer—Reg. $333, Sale $269
2. Tapco 6100RA—Reg $449, Sale $349
3. Electro-Voice S12-2 speaker—Reg $600/pair, Sale $449/pair
4. Crown D-150A power amp, demo—Reg $549, Sale $399
5. Tapco 6000CF Mixer—Reg $245, SALE $199
6. Clubman 1-1M Disco Mixer—Reg $249, Sale $199
7. Audiotechnica Mics—20% off Reg Prices
8. Piezo Tweeters—Reg $13, Sale $9.95
9. Soundcraftsmen—MA 5002 AMP, Reg $799, Sale $649
10. Tapco Equalizer—Reg $289, Sale $229

LIMITED QUANTITIES

tech hifi

Soundrooms you can play in.

150 Church St. · 862-2638

S.A. Corner

General Assembly Nov. 16

South African Investments to be Discussed

By Peter Vanderbilt

General Assembly November 16. The first General Assembly of the year is going to be held on Thursday, November 16. The purpose of the General Assembly is to give all students not only a chance to voice their opinions on the various issues affecting them, but also a chance to vote on these issues. The General Assembly has the final word on all S.A. issues and policies.

The topics of discussion at this meeting will be UVM's investments in South Africa, the Student Lobby, Student Grievance Procedure, and various Senate committee reports. This assembly will be held at 7:00, November 16, in the North Lounge of Billings. UVM ID's will be required, since this is a student assembly.

South Africa Forum. On Wednesday, November 15 at 8:00, the Student Association, Minority Student Organization, and the Center for Cultural Pluralism will present a forum on South Africa. Michael Spencer, South African Consul for Information, George Houser, Director of the American Committee on Africa, and a representative from IBM will present differing views on U.S. investments in South Africa. A question and answer period will follow.

Student Lobby Planning Continues. The Student Action Committee last week discussed legislative attitudes toward students in Vermont and the relationship between the Chittenden County delegation and the University with Dr. Robert Stanfield, Lattie Coor's special assistant. Stanfield also offered many suggestions on how to organize a lobby that will be effective in the "state appropriations" issue.

A notebook is available to all students containing legislative roll call votes, voting districts, and lists of names and addresses for writing letters. Any students wishing to look through this should come up to the S.A. office and ask.

The Student Action Committee is also continuing to work on a student grievance process, a project started last year by former S.A. V.P. Linda Purdy.

S.A. Representative Attending IRA Meetings. A Student Association Senator will attend weekly IRA meetings in order to keep on-campus students informed of what S.A. is doing, and to listen to what the on-campus student needs and wants from S.A.

Student Association Information Desk in Billings. In an effort to increase communication to and from the off-campus population, the Communications Committee will be setting up an S.A. information desk in the lobby of Billings Center one day a week. This desk will be manned by S.A. senators, and all students are welcome to stop by and ask any questions they may have. Students are also welcome to come up to the S.A. office to talk with whoever may be around – after all, you're paying for it.

S.A. Human Resources List. The Special Affairs Committee of the S.A. Senate has posted a human resources list from which the S.A. will be able to draw for any vacancies that may occur. Anyone wishing to have their name included on this list should come up to the S.A. office, or call S.A. at 656-2053.

Special Events Policy Goes to Senate for Approval. The S.A. Senate Ad-Hoc Committee on Special Events Policy has approved the criteria drawn up for Special Events funding. This policy will have been presented to the Student Association Senate for approval on Tuesday, November 7.

Club News, Etc. On Saturday, November 11 at 7:00, 9:30, and midnight, WRUV-FM will be sponsoring Jimmy Cliff's film The Harder They Come at B106 Angell. $1.00 admission will be charged at the door, and refreshments will be allowed.

The Billings Center Governing Board is sponsoring a logo contest. First prize is $20.00, and all entries should be brought to the BCGB desk on the third floor balcony of the Billings Center by November 10.

S.A. Speakers is presenting John Frizell, a spokesman for Greenpeace International Foundation on Thursday, November 9 at 8:00 p.m. in Ira Allen Chapel. This will be a multi-media program on "The Whale, the Sea, the Environment" and will include slide shows, movies, and a talk by and discussion with John Frizell. Admission is free to all.

Anyone having information on the following clubs and wishing to preserve them should get in touch with the S.A. office as soon as possible: Alpha Lambda Delta, American Society of Civil Engineers, Baptist Student Union, Catalina Club, Chi Epsilon Beta, East Asian Cultural Exchange, El Club Hispanico, Environmental Club, Friends of Geology, Geographic Forum, Inter-Varsity Christian Fellowship, John Dewey Philosophy, L'Amicale Francaise, Lawrence Forensic Union, L'Chaim Club of UVM, Meeting of the Ways, Modern Dance Workshop, News and Weather, Physical Education Majors and Minors, Pre-Vet Club, The International Club, Thinking and Drinking Club, UVM Table Tennis, UVM Volleyball, Warren-Austin Model United Nations, Recreation Management Society, German Club.

Wild Rose Productions presents :

GIL SCOTT-HERON

also appearing

BRIAN JACKSON and the MIDNIGHT BAND

and

SOUTHWORTH

Wednesday Nov. 29th

7:30 PM

FLYNN THEATRE

Main St. Burlington

ALL SEATS RESERVED

Tickets on sale today at

FREEMARK ARTISTS 864-0287

Main St. upstairs near Nectors and Patisserie

Jimmy Cliff show Nov.20th SOLD OUT

Thankyou Burlington

Just Opened!

MON — Thurs.
10am-12pm
FRI. & SAT.
UNTIL
2am

BURGER KING®

Buy one Whopper, get another one free. Limit one coupon per customer. Valid until Nov. 23, 1978

practipally on campus...1200 Williston Rd.

World And National News Briefs

Compiled By Dave Rocchio

Election Spells End for Thomson, Brooke

New Hampshire has finally spoken – and it no longer wants King Meldrim Thomson to be a part of its government. Thomson, the ardent conservative best remembered for the "guerrilla" tactics he employed during anti-nuclear protests at the Seabrook power plant, was unseated in his race for re-election by Democrat Hugh Gallen. Gallen, a former state representative, built his campaign on New Hampshire's absence of a sales or income tax, vowing to keep them in their present status. Gallen also picked up momentum by opposing a utility rate increase supported by Thomson.

Massachusetts had one of the more interesting gubernatorial races seen in a while. The winner was Edward J. King, a conservative democrat who is anti-abortion, pro-nuclear power, pro-capital punishment and in favor of lower taxes. The loser was Frank Hatch, a moderate republican. The thing about the race is that winner King is far more conservative than Hatch, even though it is Hatch who ran as a Republican. And all this from a state that voted for McGovern!

In another Massachusetts race, Sen. Edward Brooke, a Republican and the Senate's only black member, was defeated by Democratic Rep. Paul E. Tsongas. Brooke's loss was brought on by his admitted misstatements about his personal finances during his divorce testimony.

In New York, Gov. Hugh Carey defeated Republican Perry Duryea to serve a second term as governor. The New York campaign was characterized by television commercials in which one candidate would point out the other candidate's various inefficiencies and inadequacies.

Former N.Y. Knick and Princeton basketball star Bill Bradley, a Democrat, won a Senate seat in New Jersey by defeating conservative Republican Jeffrey Bell.

California's change-up star Edmund G. "Jerry" Brown won re-election, thus paving the way for a shot at President Carter in 1980. Brown originally opposed the now famous Propotition 13, but after it received a great deal of support from California residents, decided to support it. In fact, a poll before the election showed that because of Brown's maneuvering, a substantial percentage of Californians actually thought that Brown himself initiated the Proposition.

Republicans won a major victory in Minnesota by taking the two Senate seats once held by Vice President Mondale and the late Hubert Humphrey. The winners were Rudy Boshwitz and Sen. Wendell Anderson, who was self-appointed to succeed Mondale when he left to join Carter.

Overall, Republicans only picked up a few seats in the House and none in the Senate, despite a number of Mid-West Republican upsets. Democrats still maintain a large majority in both Houses.

$99 Round Trip to L.A.

In the latest move in the air fare competition, Pan American World Airways announced recently that it will offer a $99 round trip ticket from New York to Los Angeles starting Nov. 15.

The reduced price, less than one-half the current cheapest cross continental flight, is intended to advertise Pan Am's presence on a new domestic route. Pan Am is primarily an international carrier.

A Pan Am spokesperson said there will be several restrictions on the flight including a requirement to purchase the ticket 7–14 days in advance and penalties up to 100% of the fare for any cancellations. Also, the flight will be limited to 50 people on one flight a week in each direction, according to the spokesperson.

Times, News Back on the Streets

It was like seeing a couple of old friends when the New York Times and the Daily News hit the streets again this week. The two morning papers had been on strike for 88 days, while New York's traitorous afternoon daily, The New York Post, was only out of print for 56 days. The Post had abandoned negotiations between the striking pressmen and the three papers in October to resume publication.

Some believed that because the Post had begun printing before the other two, it would pick up an intolerable competitive advantage. That is, advertising revenue for the Times and the News would fall far behind that of the Post forcing the publishers into an early unfavorable settlement with the pressmen.

The withdrawal of the Post, however, gave the pressmen's union a feeling of power, the Times reported, and encouraged them to negotiate. The strike was briginally started when the publishers unilaterally imposed new working rules for the pressmen – and the ensuing negotiations between the two sides had been stalled because of the inflexibility of the publishers.

Post publisher Rupert Murdoch said the reason he decided to resume printing was because he had been made a "fool" of because the Times and the News had been talking behind his back with union President William Kennedy, Jr.

A last minute hurdle for the Times and the Post surrounded talk of a strike by the Newspaper Guild. The Guild voted Sunday to accept a new three-year contract, even though some issues are still unresolved.

Military Controls Iran

Ten months of violent demonstrations and more than 1,000 deaths have forced Iranian Shah Mohammed Riza Pahlevi to put his country under military control, governed by an 11-member cabinet. Tanks and troops have been ordered to the city of Teheran and all media coverage has been blacked out.

Chief of Staff Gen. Gholam Riza Azhari, named as head of the cabinet, will become Iran's prime minister.

In a televised broadcast Monday the Shah said: "I commit myself to make up for past mistakes, to fight corruption and to form a national government to carry out free elections." The Shah has also cancelled many of his proposed projects, such as a subway system for Teheran, because his rebellious opponents have branded them "capitalistic." The capitalistic influence of the U.S., his opponents claim, is one of the reasons for the demonstrations and strikes. (Iran's annual inflation rate is currently about 50 percent.)

The State Department said it strongly endorses the Shah's move to military control due to lack of any acceptable alternative. Some of the Shah's policies, however, have recently been under fire on Capitol Hill and the U.S. is said to be rethinking its position toward Iran.

U.S. officials also remain concerned that if the country's strike on oil production – and export to the U.S. – is not settled soon, the U.S. will face shortages.

In France, Iran's exiled spiritual leader, Ayatollah Khomeini – an avid opponent of the Shah and followed by most Iranians – said he doesn't rule out a civil war unless the Shah is overthrown.

Taiwan Gets Less Powerful Planes

Taiwan asked the U.S. for warplanes capable of a strike on mainland China months ago, but this week found out it will be sold 48 more F-5E's, capable only of strikes in the strait separating Taiwan from the mainland. The decision to sell the planes, even though they are less powerful than what was requested, comes in the midst of changing of relationships between China, the U.S., Taiwan and Japan.

Chinese Deputy Prime Minister Teng Hsiao-ping said last week that the Chinese will eventually establish diplomatic relations with the U.S., but only if ties between Taiwan and the U.S. are severed. That is, Teng predicted a stalemate between the U.S. and China unless aid to Taiwan is cut off. Taiwan is the home of Chinese Nationalists.

The sale of planes to Taiwan, however, seems to be contradictory to recently stepped-up efforts by the Carter administration to cultivate ties to China.

Meanwhile, China and Japan last week both inked a treaty of "peace and friendship" with Teng giving Japanese Prime Minister Takeo Fukuda a historic bear hug.

Mideast Treaty Taking Shape

Those new settlements that Israeli Prime Minister Begin promised his people on the West Bank and Golan Heights began to take shape this week as it was announced that $32.5 million would be earmarked for apartments there. Israeli radio reported that 230 units would be added to existing settlements in the Golan Heights and that 660 apartments would be built on the West Bank of the Jordan River. Both areas are in occupied territory.

Nevertheless, both Israeli and Egyptian officials seem to be ironing out their differences with the possibility of a treaty being signed next month.

In a related matter, the Israeli Cabinet approved this week a pullback of its forces on the Sinai peninsula to a line from Ras Muhammed in the south to El Arish on the Mediterranean. The concessions were seen as a step toward the treaty.

In Baghdad, Iraq this week, officials attending the Arab summit conference pledged a $35 billion fund to guard Israeli borders. Also, summit members agreed to economic sanctions against Egypt should it sign a treaty with Israel.

Lee Iacocca Gets a New Job

The badly slumping Chrysler Corp. tried to prop itself back up again last week by hiring Lee A. Iacocca, the recently fired president of the Ford Motor Co. Iacocca was dismissed by Ford Chairman Henry Ford II as the result of a power struggle between the two men. Iacocca is said to have an uncanny ability to sense what the public wants in new cars (he developed the fast-selling Mustang), and then to design and develop them at a rapid pace and economical cost. He had been with Ford for 32 years.

Iacocca is not being hired for free, though. He will have a free hand to do pretty much as he pleases, including shake up present management, and will receive several million dollars cash compensation as well as options on 300,000 to 400,000 shares of Chrysler stock at its current market price, $10.

During the first six months of this year, Chrysler was in the red by about $90 million, and the company is retrenching overseas, having sold its operations there to Peugeot.

Mediation in East Africa

Uganda's apparently new foreign policy of blowing up bridges belonging to their neighbor and seizing sizeable chunks of nearby land has met with some disfavor in the U.S. But while the undeclared war between Uganda and Tanzania rages on in the bushlands, steps to mediate the disagreements were begun this week.

For twelve days, these two East African countries have been fighting over a 710-square-mile strip of land seized by Uganda. When Ugandan forces reached the Kangera River, 18 miles inside Tanzania, Ugandan President Idi Amin announced the area would be made a "full district" of Uganda.

The Wall Street Journal reported earlier this week that The Organization of African Unity was asked by Amin to mediate.

While the U.S. has officially scorned Uganda's move, Amin has received an "encouraging message" from the Soviet Union.

In Tanzania, newspapers said officials there have vowed to oust Amin from office because of the intrusion into their land.

In a related development, Amin announced the birth of his new son – his 35th.

Commentary

An Alternative View on Inflation

By Glenn Canner

In recent weeks the American public has had an unusual opportunity to hear the Carter Administration's views on the causes of inflation, and the prospects for a recession. The Administration, through its spokesmen on economic affairs, has at various times expressed the opinion that the current inflation is caused by such things as higher wage demands by big labor, excessive price increases by big business, the declining value of the dollar on foreign exchange markets, expectations of future inflation and high market interest rates. While intuitively appealing, these explanations of the ongoing inflation miss the mark. While each of the factors enumerated by the Administration play a visible role in the inflation process, none is an independent cause of inflation when viewed as a persistent and continuing phenomenon.

As examples of the Administration's inflation scenario, consider two of the prominent factors cited by the Administration; the declining overseas value of the dollar and the high and rising level of current market interest rates. The decline in the foreign exchange value of the dollar (about 40% against many major currencies since last year) is said to be an independent cause of U.S. domestic inflation. When the dollar declines against the mark, yen or franc, domestically imported goods are more expensive; that is, the dollar prices of German cars, Japanese steel or French wines all increase. To make matters worse, the higher imported goods' prices leave room for competing American firms to raise their own prices and increase profit margins. While such a chain of events undeniably exists, and is monthly priced up in the calculations of the Consumer Price Index (CPI), the decline in the value of the dollar is a symptom, not a long term independent cause of inflation.

What about high and rising interest rates? Once again the Administration scenario has intuitive appeal. The current prime interest rate (the loan rate banks charge their best business customers) stands at 10¾% and is rising. In the long-term consumer loan market the conventional home mortgage loan rate stands at 10%. Don't higher loan interest rates increase the costs to firms of doing business, which they then pass on in the form of higher prices, and don't higher mortgage rates raise the costs of housing to the typical American family? Undeniably they do. However, as in the case of the depreciating dollar, the current high and rising level of interest rates are a symptom, not an independent cause of inflation.

What then lies at the heart of the inflation process as an ongoing phenomenon? What common factor explains why we have both high and rising interest rates and a depreciating foreign exchange value of the dollar?

The answer to these questions has been provided by economists repeatedly for well over a hundred years. The essence of the explanation is best captured in the often quoted phrase expressed by Milton Friedman that "...inflation is always and everywhere a monetary phenomenon." Simply put, this school of thought views the source of all ongoing inflations as arising from excessive growth in the money supply. When the money supply is allowed to grow at a rate higher than the growth in the economy's long-term potential to produce, inflation must result. When the money supply is allowed to grow at these excessive rates the result is too much money chasing too few goods and inevitable inflation.

While in the short-term a variety of exogenous factors can temporarily influence the measured inflation rate – for example, the OPEC oil price increases in 1973 – the underlying long-term rate of inflation is determined solely by the rate of growth of the money supply. Viewed in this framework, the decline in the value of the dollar is not due to our huge oil imports but rather from an excess of money growth in this country as compared to the countries from which we import. Similarly, the current high and rising market interest rates are primarily due to an inflation premium based on the recent explosion in the growth rate of the money supply and the resulting spurt in current and expected future inflation rates.

The record is clear. In the past two months M1 (a widely used measure of the money supply) has grown at annual rates of over 11.9%; in the past six months at an annual rate of 10.5% and at an 8.2% rate over the last full year. When viewed against a growth in this country's long-term productive potential of about 3 – 3½% a year, inflation must result.

Ultimately, the only way to bring down the long-term rate of inflation is to slow the growth rate in the money supply to levels consistent with the growth in our ability to produce. The speed and extent to which the monetary brakes are applied (as they surely will be) will determine the length and depth of the coming economic slowdown, and the rate at which the current inflation will diminish as our number one domestic issue.

Dr. Canner is a visiting instructor in Economics, and a recent graduate of Brown University. Dr. Canner will be offering a course this winter entitled "Issues in Monetary Policy."

Revolution: Society and Self

By Eric Pollard

There is a growing movement in the U.S. and other countries to end the racist policies of the Republic of South Africa and nations who employ a similar approach to existing racial differences. This movement represents one of the largest social actions to arise in recent history. The unification of such elements as the World Council of Churches, the Communist Youth Organization, and the still extant black power and civil rights groups, is at the outset an indication of the import and impact of the issue at hand. Not since the Vietnam War has there been such a potential for unity of purpose and action to decry injustice.

As to the intent of this informal coalition, there is no question. It is designed to the end of establishing majority rule in South Africa. To achieve this, the coalition advocates any form of support to the native people, from the political-economic statement of divestiture of commercial stock held in American corporations with operations in South Africa, to the supply of non-military materials to the African nationalists. By joining together all segments of society interested in freedom and justice in a bond of moral outrage and disgust over the policies of the South African government and the commercial institutions that support it, the coalition desires to provide a basis of international support, both political and economic, upon which the African people can build a stable, equitable society.

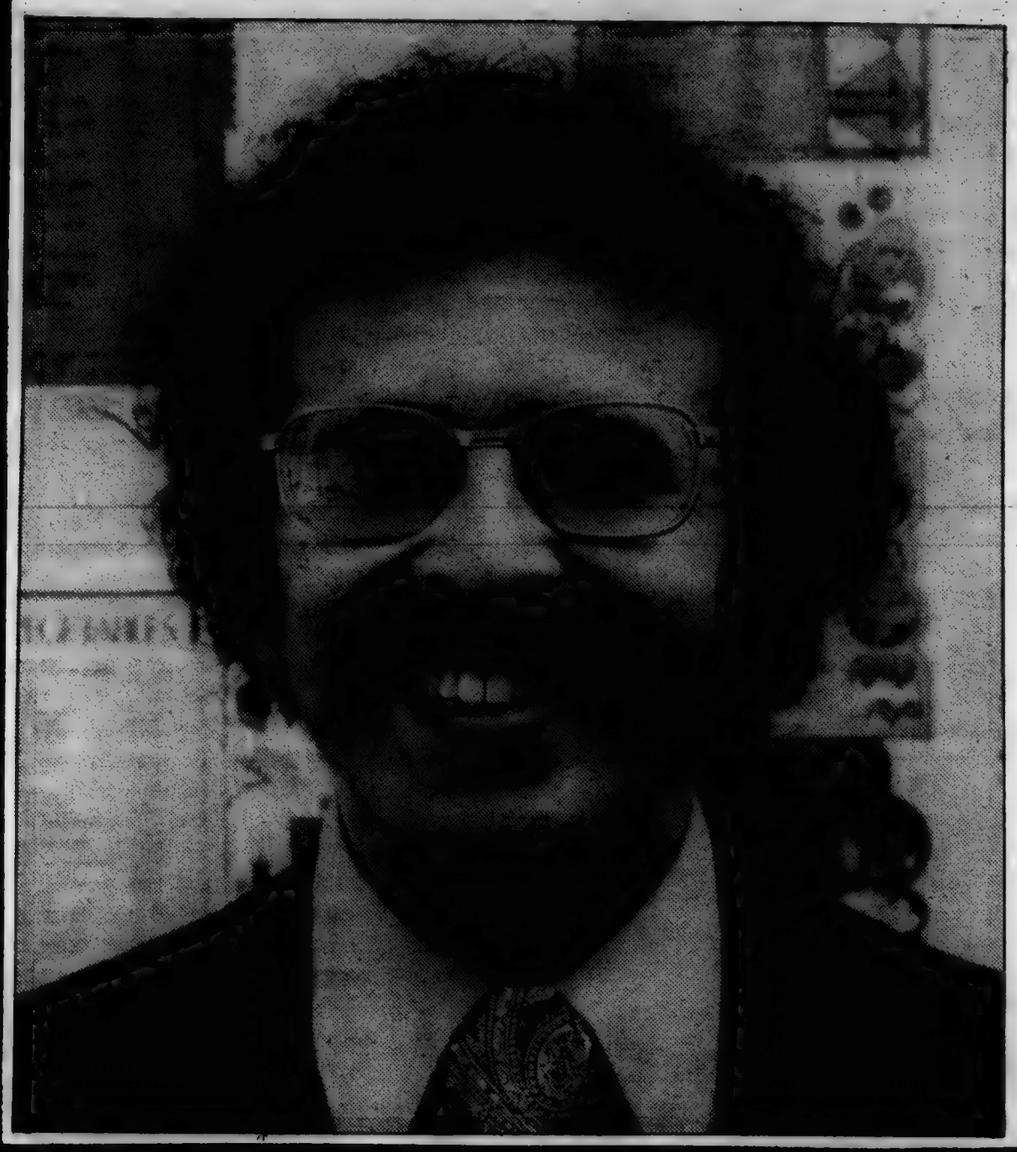
It is a lofty goal indeed, and yet the rhetoric which accompanies and supports the goal bears further examination. The situation in South Africa is linked to that in the United States in order to give potential adherents reason to become involved in the movement. The socially oppressed in South Africa become the economically oppressed of this country and the multi-nationals become our own corporate structure. The injustice of the white apartheid government is related as an extension of imperialistic and oppressive policies here at home. By making the potential race war in South Africa a projection of an economic conflict in the United States, the coalition hopes to utilize each individual's dis-satisfaction with society here to create impetus for change abroad.

Herein lies an error so basic, so blatant that it is not readily discernible. A recent commentator speaking for the divestiture of university stock holdings in South Africa said that there must be an end made of "them putting us on," with reference not to the situation in Soweto but to the apparent situation here in the United States. He was not appealing to the fraternal instincts of the listener but rather to that individual's feelings of dissatisfaction and frustration with his own life. In this light, it is not easy to see how the current rhetoric of self-centered polarization can be of any use to the situation in South Africa, where conditions are dangerously polarized already. It is not receptive to compromising influences and appears far less interested in the well-being of the native population of South Africa than in the rectification of the domestic concerns of the individual. It emphasizes the degeneration of man as a generic being to the point of Machiavellian altruism, where pursuit of self-interest may lead to defending the rights of others. It is a revolution of the individual against the powers that inhibit one's ability to exercise complete free will, i.e. control the sources and supplies of wealth.

The result of such a revolution is not equality, nor is it even equal opportunity. It is, rather, a simple juxtapositioning of the elements involved, the reversal of the polar situation. The violation of the ability to exercise free will is still present with a new group under subjugation. The same degenerative principles of revolution apply to this new group, who would have an increased desire to return to the founts of economic well-being. It is evident that the old adage holds true: "The more things change, the more they remain the same." That is, of course, not to say that those who espouse the rhetoric are blind to the truth or are set on deceiving anyone. They desire only to improve the lot of that group which ascribes to their principles.

A more lasting and effective form of revolution does exist. The advocates of this method of change tend to be very meek and timid, refusing to expound their philosophy to those who have not yet heard it. They have, after reaching a certain level of security, turned to themselves at the obvious expense of those who could most benefit from their experience. They dare not threaten their respectability by proclaiming what has proven to be the most successful, lasting revolutionary ideal of recorded history. It began as an active movement some two thousand years ago based on principles that developed from the beginning of society as we know it.

The thought of Christianity as an effective form of revolution may seem startling. It is one of the best kept secrets of history. Marx spoke of Christianity as the "opiate of the masses" and the oppressor of the people. What he saw was the Church, i.e. organized religion. He did not consider the precepts upon which Christianity was established. Just as the United States government does not necessarily embody the spirit of the documents upon which it is based, so organized religion may not embody the spirit of the events upon which it is based. Similar to the Marxian approach to revolution in that it focuses on the individual, Christianity solicits a somewhat different response in that it seeks to change the individual and thus his environment rather than the reverse, as is seen in Marxism-Leninism.



The evidence, both recent and historic, is clear in its implication: the person of Jesus Christ is the most revolutionary figure of all time. That Jesus lived and died is of little political importance; thousands have perished in what they thought to be good causes. The uniqueness of Jesus is in his resurrection; eleven of his twelve followers were killed because of their insistence that the crucified Christ had, in fact, defeated the grave. Out of that group of twelve fanatics grew a movement that two thousand years of oppression and neglect could not destroy. As a revolution, Christianity has been successful; the world has been changed. It has, however, not reached the depth and breadth that it must in order to effect all men in their relationships with one another. Its evolutionary impact, its ability to unify people in a bond of mutual concern for justice and equality, has yet to mature.

The situation in South Africa demands action. This action will be revolutionary in that the traditional form of government and social organization will be altered drastically. One method is no solution at all; it only affords a reversal of power roles and exchange of frustrations. The other method has tremendous potential for change, but lacks the kind of support necessary to bring it to pass. Both merit investigation by those who are, in fact, concerned with the injustice with which human beings treat each other. The revolution in South Africa will succeed, the force of time and history are with it. There will be more revolutions and time remains to consider whether they will be evolutionary or devolutionary in nature.

S.A. Speakers Presents

Dr. Michael Jacobson

Director of the Center for Science in the Public Interest.

"The Politics of Food"

November 14, 8;OOPM
Carpenter Auditorium
Given Building UVM

FREE TO ALL

Dr. Jacobson is one of the nation's foremost nutrition and health advocates. He has authored numerous books, articles, and posters including: Eaters Digest, Nutrition Scoreboard, and The Changing American Diet.

WRUV PROGRAM GUIDE

| | SUNDAY | MONDAY | TUESDAY | WEDNESDAY | THURSDAY | FRIDAY | SATURDAY |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| 6:00 AM | | Bill Flanigan | John Paruta; Arcadian Driftwood. Soft mellow music to make love by, including rock, jazz, reggae, comedy, and acoustic. | John Dennison; Earth Tones. Modern Jazz, mild fusion | John Paruta; Northern Lights — Southern Cross. Similar to Tuesday's Arcadian Driftwood | John Dennison; Muthafusticus Modernusticus. Your basic mixed grill | Eric Mayor |
| 7:00 AM | | | | | | | |
| 8:00 AM | Mark Paulsen; Slow Motion Sunrise. Folk Rock — Bluegrass — Light Jazz | | | | | | |
| 9:00 AM | | Tom Melloni; M⁴ = Monday Mornin' Mood Music. Soft-core rock. | Doug Lang | Rob Resnik; Early Bird Show. Japanese koto music from 17th century England | Karyl Levinson. More on the mellow side, especially at 9 a.m. Some jazz and several new artists | Brad Hockmeyer; Safe As Milk. A little folk, a little rock, a little folk rock, | Doug Lang |
| 10:00 AM | Mary Dewey | | | | | | |
| 11:00 AM | | | | | | | |
| 12:00 AM | | Michael Barne; It's 90.1, do you know where your children are? Progressive FM stereo rock, a weekly run down on the Canterbury Tales | David Snyder; Icarus — Icarus in daylight hours. Lighter music and humorous programming with emphasis on rock and folk. | Robert Sherwin; Nineteen Forty Five. Listen... then decide (I don't really know) | Andy Levine; The Chum Session — Part II Cruising the musical spectrums, landing at Scatico around July | Jana Panarites; My Show. Jazz, contemporary, pop, folk, Tom Rush to Joni Mitchell to Earth Wind & Fire, as long as it's good music. | Shana; Direct Current. Music with a positive charge |
| 1:00 PM | | | | | | | |
| 2:00 PM | Micheal Pickman; Zone V. Rock and jazz and we'll see what happens. | | | | | | |
| 3:00 PM | | Lori Goodman; Story Lori Radio Recipe. Mix together generous amounts of jazz and rock, and consume with relish. | Eric Sorensen; Enough of the Gamouth. Jazz: Essentially non-electric with a more ezz-thetic than rhythmic emphasis. | Paul Kaza; Progressions. Contemporary jazz with emphasis on progressive sounds. Special previews of upcoming artists | Tom Nuccio; Jazz Is. The full gamut of jazz from bop and blues to fusion and funk. Radio Free Jazz aired at 5:00 | Lewis Heyman | Roger Lewis; Mars Hotel. A great place to pull when you're on a trip. Mind altering music laced with Dead air. Won't you try Saturday afternoon? |
| 4:00 PM | | | | | | | |
| 5:00 PM | Goodman, Heyman, Melloni; La Fiesta de Musica. The best Latin music styles | | | | | | |
| 6:00 PM | | | | | | | |
| 7:00 PM | Ed Bemis; Jazz Workshop. | Pat Callahan; Evening Concert. Classical music. | Steve Grover; Evening Concert. emphasis on solo and chamber work! | Joanne Feldman; Vermont Minuet. A sampling of popular classical music. | Frank Wilder; Opus I Classical Music | Jay Strausser; Trenchtown Rock. Reggae, mon, and some West Indian, you know. | Matt La Sordo |
| 8:00 PM | | | | | | | |
| 9:00 PM | Eber Lambert; The Candle Eye Breeze. Light jazz to easy progressive, classical rock to the avantgarde!!! ending with the Experimental Music Hour | Brad Zeve; Jazz Now. Contemporary jazz with special feature album at 10:00 P.M. | Rich Pomerantz; Duke's Place Hear the masters as well as the roots of be-bop and swing. Foundations of jazz, but whose stories defy adjectives. | Andy Levine; The Chum Session — Part I. Spanning all the musical boundaries. Plus Strictly Rockers. roots reggae every other Wednesday 8—9 p.m. | Charlie Frazier & Midnight Rider; Cryptic Envelopment. Anything and everything from blues to jazz. | Brad Bosley; After 8. Light to heavy rock, coming from Trenchtown Rock to Sonic Slam | Marc Andrews |
| 10:00 PM | | | | | | | |
| 11:00 PM | | | | | | | |
| 12:00 PM | John Dennison; Muthafusticus Modernusticus. Your basic mixed grill. | Jay Strausser | Jan Carlee; Lunar voyage. A general survey of insanity featuring such notables as Gentle Giant, Kinks, Peter Gabriel, Little Feat, etc. | Joe Figucia; Sticks and Stones Anything goes! | Boris; Boris' Night Out. One night a week, Boris is let out of his dungeon to play in hot vinyl. | Mitch Stern; Sonic Feast. The finest blend of contemporary and not-so-contemporary progressive rock available. | Mark Reyman |
| 1:00 AM | | | | | | | |
| 2:00 AM | | | | | | | |

Features

Shall The Great Plug Be Pulled?

By Jim Oakes

Thousands of acres of marshland and the continued unregulated state of the Lake Champlain Basin are threatened by an ambitious shoal blasting, dredging and dam building project proposed for Canada's Richelieu river, which drains the Lake northward into the St. Lawrence Seaway.

To identify the major problems and competing interests surrounding the Richelieu flood control project, the Cynic questioned Charles Ross of Hinesburg, a Vermont horse farmer and member of the International Joint Commission, the agency that will authorize or reject the construction project. Even though a formal application has not been filed, Ross stressed "the real fight is right now. It will be determined in the next six to nine months."

The crux of the problem lies in a natural reef or shoal that stretches across the Richelieu River and creates a dam-like obstruction. Incredible volumes of spring water draining down the Richelieu is backed up behind the plug-like obstruction, flooding Quebec farmland and housing developments in the St. Jean-Iberville area. This same flood stage water level, however, is what replenishes the marshlands, which surround Lake Champlain and provide a breeding environment for birds and fish. Should the St. Jean flooding be alleviated by removing or replacing the shoals, disputing studies estimate between 10,000 and 25,000 acres of marshland will be adversely affected, says Ross.

In arguing against the destruction or replacement of the shoals, conservationists point out that Lake Champlain is one of the few major lake basins left in the U.S. still uncontrolled by man.

ALTERNATIVE PLANS

Ross says the flood control project has been discussed in many variations intended to stop the submersion of the Quebec land by spring high water. Simply stated, the cheapest alternative would be to blow out the shoal altogether and permanently lower the level of the lake, but everyone agrees this would be an environmental disaster. The second alternative, according to Ross, is more expensive and involves blowing out the natural shoal and replacing it with a dam-like structure that would artificially lower the lake in anticipation of the spring floods. The third and most recent Canadian proposal, would in effect move the shoal closer to the lake, thereby leaving the water levels at natural and unalterable heights while providing Quebec with substantial flood relief. While this ambitious proposal would lower Richelieu water levels with little or no damage to the marshlands, Ross noted that, "economically, we are told this does not seem propitious."

Environmentalists point out that the construction proposals did not consider the effect of the lake ice on the mechanized dams or the consequences of a malfunction at a critical time. The ice on Lake Champlain 'goes out' very rapidly and with tremendous force in the spring.

A construction project of this scope rivals the dreams of the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers and one would expect the Canadians to be quite adamant about the need for Richelieu flood control. Such does not appear to be the case. Ross revealed that "many Canadians said at the last hearing – which was a surprise to us – 'we don't want the project, you don't want it, so let's drop it.'"

In spite of this apparent apathy on the part of "affected" residents, Quebec is behind the project. Ross noted that all agricultural land will be a tremendous asset to Quebec should it separate.

WHO STANDS TO GAIN?

But more important than the farmland appears to be the potential for profits from the development of flood-plain housing projects and second homes for Montreal residents. Justin Brande, environmental research associate at UVM, noted that the "mayor of St. Jean had land in Iberville that would double in value as soon as they put the dam in." In addition, much of the flood-plain property is held by banks and trust companies who hope to cash in after the dam is built.

In recent years large quantities of land have been submerged every spring. Many Canadians have already bought into the St. Jean flood plain, attracted by the low cost and the new boating 'canals' that stretch inland at right angles from the Richelieu. They are understandably upset by the flooding, which hit a record high in 1976. One resident said: "My main point is that we are from the area and as human beings we should have priority over aquatic life."

For the most part Vermonters and New Yorkers look askance at all the alternatives. "What crystallized in the last round of hearings was that there seems to be a very substantial body of people in Vermont and New York who are opposed to the projects," said Ross.

Ironically, while the third plan is the best of the three, it is the least likely to be used because of its exorbitant cost. The other options presented to the IJC will involve shrinkage of the marshlands. The aggregate figures are not in yet, but the acreage is considerable.

ENVIRONMENTAL CONCERNS

The marshland environment depends on spring flooding for several reasons. Fish need the high spring water to swim into the marshland where they breed. Birds and animals need the wetlands for breeding and nesting, while the marshland vegetation provides essential food and cover. Because of this, Vermont hunters' organizations are solidly against the project.

Further, environmentalists point out the aquatic importance of the wetlands. After being replenished by the spring floods, the many thousands of acres of wetlands become water storage areas which environmentalist feel are critical to the ecological balance of the lake basin.

Environmental groups that are involved with the Richelieu project include the Lake Champlain Committee, the Adirondack Mountain Club, Audubon, Sierra Club and the Friends of the Earth. These organizations see Richelieu as part of a larger problem: basically, if people didn't live and build on flood plains there would be no damage. As an alternative to the dam proposals, environmentalists have offered a long-term acquisition package that would have the government eventually buy out the flood plain land. Canadian developers don't think much of this alternative.

As a regulator and IJC member, Ross has shown great concern for the environment. In fact, the National Environmental Protection Agency (NEPA) evolved directly out of Ross's dissenting opinion in the 1965 "Storm King Case," a landmark victory for conservationists. In the opinion, he stressed the need to examine non-structural alternatives to any proposed construction. Ross noted that "many of the controversies involving our natural resources are fairly uneven because you are dealing with huge economic interests and well-financed expert lawyers on the one hand, and environmentalists who mean well but don't have the lawyers or the facts."

PROTECTING THE PUBLIC INTEREST

Ross said that regulators should "go overboard" in protecting the public's interests. He observed that aggressive representation of the public's interest is often missing in forums like the Vermont Public Service Board rate case hearings, because the board appoints the lawyer for the public, and they habitually avoid "wave-makers." Smiling, Ross recalls the only occasion he represented the public before the PSB: "We went all the way to the Supreme Court of Vermont in an attempt to defeat the purchase power adjustment clause." The PSB never asked Ross to represent the public again.

On one side of the Richelieu dam proposal there are huge construction contracts to be awarded, opportunities for real estate developments, and 1.3 million dollars of annual flood damage. On the other side is the intangible value of the "natural" state of Lake Champlain and thousands of acres of wet, soggy, marshland.

As a final word on Richelieu, Ross posed the following question which pertains to any structural flood control project: "Will the Canadians, or for that matter even the Americans, be satisfied with a regimen for Lake Champlain which is designed to maintain environmental criteria, or will the pressure to change the regimen and abandon more marsh be overwhelming, when they can see the economic benefits of such action?"

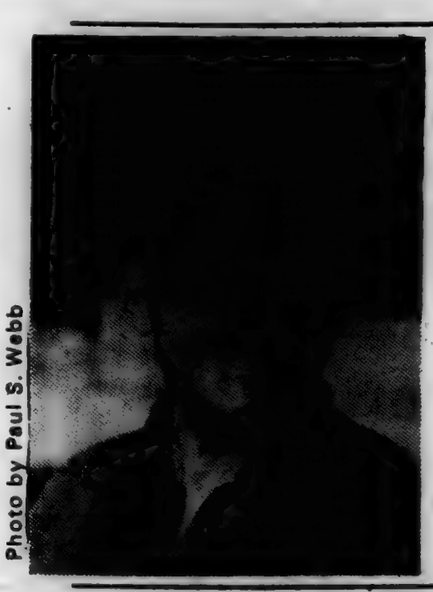

Photo by Paul S. Webb

" Many Canadians said at the last hearing--which was surprising to us-- don't want the project, and you dont want it, so let's scrap it"'

Dunham Duraflex Rejects

dunham

This is no imitation.
It's the genuine, original
Duraflex® waterproof boot.
There's nothing like it. Anywhere.
At any price!

| Mens | Womens |
|---|---|
| $39.95 | $36.95 |

dunham FACTORY OUTLET

161 Church St. Burlington 862-6089 Open Daily 9:30-9:00, Sunday Noon-6

Good Health

The Medical-Industrial Complex

By Peter Millard

If you have come to the conclusion that there is something wrong with our system of medical care in the United States, you are not alone. Congressmen, economists, philosophers, doctors and consumers are pointing out with increasing frequency that the distribution, cost, quality and dehumanizing effect of modern medicine are barriers to a healthy America. Our technological and interventionist system of sickness care (called health care by some) has proven ineffectual and prohibitively expensive. The English pay less than one third the amount that we pay for medicine; they also have a longer life expectancy, lower infant mortality, and lower maternal mortality. What are the reasons for this paradox?

Let us consider the economics of medicine. Medical care is one of the largest and most profitable industries in our country. Each American pays an average of more than $700 a year for medical care and medical costs have been expanding far more rapidly than the economy as a whole. At the present rate, medical care outlays will approach $200 billion by 1990. Our insatiable desire for more medical intervention has created a medical-industrial complex which does not obey the dynamics of the free-market: doctors and drug companies set the demands for their services and determine their own fees. Half of all Americans now take a prescribed medication every 24 hours, and there is an overabundance of unnecessary surgery, x-rays, and lab tests. The result of all this is an epidemic of doctor-caused (iatrogenic) illness.

Medicine has become a commodity. As in other industries, profit maximization takes priority over good health. Drug companies now spend over $4000 a year per physician on advertising directed specifically toward physicians. Corporate giants such as Greyhound, Union Carbide, Firestone, and 3M have recently joined the medical industry. The medicalization of life and the expansion of biotechnology have created a system so full of hazard that it is possible that wasteful procedures now outweigh the necessary and effective part of medicine. Instead of investing cheap ways to prevent disease, we have designed a system which effectively multiplies costs and suffering.

To put the above in concrete terms, consider for a moment the over-prescribing of antibiotics which is causing a world-wide diminution of their effectiveness. Drug resistant strains of bacteria are now common and some infections which at one time responded favorably to antibiotics are now untreatable. Antibiotics are used indiscriminately in the livestock industry and doctors use them with insufficient knowledge of the organisms that are attempting to eradicate or of the side effects which the drugs cause. For example, researchers at Duke University recently found that 64% of the time the wrong antibiotic is used or the wrong dose given. Dr. Richard Novick, Chief of the Dept. of Plasmid Biology of the State of New York, wrote recently that, "the situation is completely out of hand, and the imposition of external regulation, unpleasant as it is, is crucial if the usefulness of antibiotics is to be retained." As in much of medicine, procedures which are effective when used selectively become hazards when grossly over-utilized.

It is not surprising that the medical industry creates paradoxes of over-utilization, poor quality and high cost because it is part of a larger economic system which creates the very same paradoxes for other commodities. Capitalism demands continual expansion if profitability is to be assured, and when such a system operates in the realm of health the results are bound to be disastrous.

Photos by Debra Wolk

Roy Smith pushes for social change at a Student Committee Against Racism rally in front of Billings last Wednesday

Revolutions Home and Abroad

An interview with Roy Smith, chairman of the Communist Youth Organization

"The Black people of South Africa are going to have to meet fire with fire! Nobody is gonna give them anything 'cause they're NICE!"

Roy Smith

By Nelson Hockert-Lotz

Roy Smith is the national chairman of the fledgling Communist Youth Organization (CYO). Last week he addressed a rally sponsored jointly by the Student Committee Against Racism (SCAR) and the CYO, on the steps of Billings Center. The topic: divestiture of UVM's holdings in corporations which operate in racist South Africa. About one hundred students attended the rally.

Smith is an extremely charismatic Black man just out of Harvard, where he majored in Afro-American Studies.

He met with this reporter in a local pub, Sullivan's, and discussed divestiture and social change over beer.

********

Cynic: Today students appear to comprise a far more complacent group than in the late 1960's and early 1970's. Do you find them still responsive?

Smith: We find students to be very open-minded as a group. The student movement of the late sixties is in a lull. Students are still active, but lack cohesiveness. Over thirty-thousand students demonstrated against the Bakke decision. Ten thousand have demonstrated in support of the South African people, and against the white minority regime.

The people running the country are saying the student movement is dead. They're encouraging the students to remain "dead" politically. They don't want students involved in politics. But students are still interested in politics.

Right now, students aren't as aware of what's going on in the world as they were during the Vietnam war.

Cynic: So the C.Y.O. wants to educate students politically?

Smith: It's our job, our responsibility, to go among the students, and educate them so they can take up the struggles that have to be waged now.

The 70's are a time of re-grouping for the battles that are going to take place in the future. In the near future there will be uprisings larger, and more clearly targeted against the system, than anything that took place in the 60's. But they're not going to occur, if we don't educate the students now.

Cynic: You explained earlier that you had come to see your life as important only in your dedication to change. Why did you choose the C.Y.O. as your vehicle?

Smith: I believe in working with anybody who is working for change.

Personally, I chose the CYO because I felt we needed a basic change here in the United States. I didn't want poor people to be poor anymore. I didn't see any reason why Black people should face racial discrimination anymore. I wanted an organization dedicated to the final goal of eradicating these problems.

"The easiest way for evil to succeed is for good people to do nothing."

Every other organization I investigated, the NAACP, the Young Socialist Alliance, the Black Student Unions, lacked a program for achieving these goals. They did not believe in revolution.

Cynic: What is the essence of this revolution?

Smith: I think it's power. Poor people aren't poor because they want to be poor. They're poor because they don't have power. Working people have to organize, and eventually to arm themselves to seize power.

Cynic: If the aim of revolution is to put oppressed people in power, then it's going to be like the Reconstruction of the South?

Smith: That's right, only this time we'll have the power. We're not going to sell it out like they did before.

Personally, I got involved in this because I wanted Black people to finally get some of that "equality" we've all heard and talked about so long.

Cynic: How did you get involved in divestiture?

Smith: First, we already knew what was going on in South Africa before we got involved in divestiture.

We had been supporting the Azanian Freedom Fighter (a Black movement for majority rule) sending them jeans, sneakers, medicine and stuff that they need to carry through the struggle.

A conference of colleges in New England asked us to get involved in divestiture and we did.

Cynic: Do you see violence as the only real solution?

Smith: A violent overthrow of the white minority regime is the final way that the situation will be changed. "Africa for the Africans," is our slogan.

Sure, economic sanctions are going to hurt them. But in the long run, the corporations are not going to pull their support out of the minority government until the African people can seize power.

We have to support the Azanians now. Only when they achieve power will the racism end.

Cynic: Will divestiture really have a crucial impact on South Africa?

Smith: Definitely yes. Divestiture is a part of the United Nations call to end economic support for the white minority regime in South Africa. Most other countries have gone along with the U.N.

Universities invest a tremendous amount of money, and divestiture of capital from all corporations with holdings in South Africa would really hurt those corporations. Harvard has $130 million invested in these corporations. Princeton has $27 million.

On that scale, these corporations would be denied considerable capital.

But what would really hurt is the struggle on the university campuses. A lot of students are going to be educated about what's going on in Africa. That's going to create public pressure to get our government out, too.

We're also going to see students supporting the Azanian freedom fighters' struggle.

Cynic: Students at Columbia last year took over the Administration building in protest of the trustees' decision not to divest their South African holdings. They were unsuccessful. How long do you think this struggle for divestiture will take?

Smith: It may take as long as the struggle against the Vietnam war. We're fighting the same things here, and it's not going to be easy. The movement now is in its embryonic state.

This movement will start going, we hope, with the conference on Nov. 15-17 at New York University. 43 universities are sending representatives.

Cynic: What do you think might be effective in pressing the South Africa government, besides the divestiture struggle?

Smith: We put the most pressure on them when we support the other side, the Azanians. It's as simple as this: if we send them old keys, they can melt them down to make bullets. They don't have machine guns like the government forces do.

We've got to work for divestiture and we've got to support the right side, as well, just like a man's got to walk on two feet. As a Black man down South once said, "The easiest way for evil to succeed is for good people to do nothing."

In some ways it's like Vietnam. The American people got educated as to what their system means. They protested, and it exposed the system. But what really ended U.S. investment in Vietnam? The Viet Cong won!

Cynic: Critics of divestiture point out that U.S. corporations in South Africa can influence the government toward more moderate policies. Do you think that's possible?

Smith: A Black man can use the same bathroom as a white at a G.M. plant in South Africa. The South African government has made it clear that foreign business don't touch politics, so that's as far as G.M. could go, even if it wanted to do something more.

But let's look at G.M., ITT, Xerox, Ford, Catapiller Tractor. Critics of divestiture want these corporations to carry on the Black people's struggle in South Africa. Did we see these corporations in the vanguard of the civil rights movement here in the U.S.? Hell, No! And we expect them to do it in South Africa?

Cynic: You proclaim "Africa for the Africans," yet there is "communist" intervention in Africa, as well as American involvement. What about the USSR in Angola?

Smith: I think they are much worse. The U.S. is still the strongest of the superpowers,

(continued on page 20)

Never let your studies interfere with your education — M. Twain

weck's
WINE & CHEESE
Burlington Square Mall 658-2070

BECK ARNLEY

National Discount Club

Save Up to 20% Off on Selected Items.

Special!
Wiper Blades 20% off
All Oil-Filters $2.95

Sign Up Now at...
Imported Parts Center
3060 Williston Road
South Burlington, Vermont 05401

"THE HARDER THEY COME has more guts, wit, humor and sheer exuberance than most movies you'll see in any one year of movie-going."
...Vincent Canby, NEW YORK TIMES
B106 ANGELL LECTURE CENTER Sat Nov. 11— 7,9:30, 12pm
7,9:30 & 12 $1.00 admission. Proceeds go to WRUV—FM

A Call For Mutual Understanding

The natives are a little more restless than usual, and the Burlington board of aldermen doesn't like it

By Henry Chamberlain

Noise-making parties have once again created problems between permanent residents of Burlington and off-campus students. The tension arises from large parties — sometimes well over a hundred people — at student-rented homes. Since these houses can't possibly handle groups that large, the noise and confusion of the party moves out into the immediate neighborhood. Since these situations are becoming a relatively common occurrence, all off-campus students are being labelled as trouble — an unfortunate occurrence for all concerned.

What makes the situation unfortunate is that Burlington aldermen are presently threatening to enact an ordinance specifically aimed at students. Students work hard at their studies in pursuit of assorted careers, and party hard at week's end to release built-up tensions. No one denies students can be noisy at times, even unruly at others. However, off-campus students have set up homes in the community and must face their status as citizens of Burlington.

Yet ordinances designed to restrict student activity are discriminatory. Students are not the only people to cause disturbances in the community. Any ordinance must be designed to curb an undesirable phenomenon, not a specific group of Burlington citizens.

It should be noted that UVM has no control over off-campus students. Those students have reached the majority age of 18 and the community privileges that accrue from it. This is also true for fraternity and sorority members who are also legally independent of any UVM jurisdiction. The Burlington Police Department is responsible for the control of these citizens, numbering about 4,000, as well as the more than 40,000 year-round residents.

It is easy to implicate the Burlington Police Dept. in the problem. It is constantly being charged that police are not tough enough in dealing with noisy students. Chief Abare is aware of these charges, and more importantly, of the need for the fair handling of all disturbances in the city. It is police policy to warn citizens if the noise is excessive, so that those involved can quiet down. If that fails, it is necessary to identify those responsible and issue citations.

Problems, however, arise from trying to discover what constitutes an unreasonable level of noise. Do a group of people talking outside at 3:00 a.m. constitute a problem, or a dozen car doors closing, or a loud stereo? It is indeed a difficult question. Blatant disregard for others' rights should be dealt with accordingly, but the others have to be taken on an individual basis. It is essential to enforce the community ordinances equitably.

This reporter, along with Dr. Keith Miser (Dean of Students), William Mahr (Assistant Director of Student Activities), Linda Perkins (President of the Greek Coordinating Council), Student Association President Charlie Clark, and Vice President Missy Burke, and Burlington officials, aldermen Jean Stackpole, Joyce Desautels, and Richard Wadhams, Jr., respectively, recently attended a meeting to explore the problem of off-campus noise. The university's interest and concern was obvious from the presence of the group, which was not over-looked by those in attendance.

Concerning enforcement, Mark Keller (States Attorney for Chittenden County) stated that students will no longer be given breaks, but rather be treated as "average citizens." What this refers to is apparently his own misconception that off-campus students are not "average citizens" already. He, in fact, does not, or has not, given preference to students, and they have not asked for any.

Clark Hinsdale, President of the Tenants Association, did not see a major problem existing. His tenants are given two warnings about noise before an eviction notice is necessary. He would rather work with his tenants than confront them. Problems are always going to exist when different people live together in a confined area. Most students would seem receptive to working out acceptable noise levels. Those that aren't would have to be dealt with more stringently.

Mr. Hinsdale did complain, however, that the police are too lenient in enforcing noise violations. At times it appears that the police are "baby-sitting" parties, rather than quieting them down. A possible solution would be to issue citations more quickly. This is a good idea, except that at times when hundreds of students are packed into a house, it is not always easy to identify those responsible.

UVM's delegation was led by Dr. Keith Miser, who found the meeting "very positive" because the aldermen were able to express their displeasure with the current noise problems. These problems occur in neighborhoods the aldermen enjoy living in because of the "college flavor."

Dr. Miser was firm on his stance that the school should not have enforcement responsibilities over off-campus students. That practice, he noted, was something universities used to perform. However, while the majority age is 18, and contemporary society exhibits a liberal stance towards its youth, students have become citizens of the communities they live in. They should be treated accordingly.

Dr. Miser could see "no single solution to the problem" of increased student noise. However, if the campus media and the student government present the problem to those involved, and if the police continue their concerted effort to control situations, the noise problem can be controlled to everyone's benefit. An interesting fact that Dr. Miser relayed was that the number of off-campus students has fallen by 200 since 1972. It is not a problem of the university flooding the community with extra students, it is a problem of community co-existence.

One segment of the university community that was not tagged as causing any trouble was the Greek system. Fraternities and Sororities have apparently worked well in Burlington. Mr. William Mahr (Assistant Director of Student Activities for the Greeks) felt this was due to a "system consciousness."

(continued on next page)

"off-campus students have set up homes in the community and must face their status as citizens of Burlington."

Photo by Karen Salzman

This Brookes Avenue Apartment house, through its wild parties, has invited complaints, notoriety, and finally citations.

Mutual... continued from page 18

The Greek system at UVM, once cited as ten percent of the total student population, is growing. A consequence of this has been the creation of a strong Greek Coordinating Council headed by Linda Perkins, which has instilled greater accountability for actions by the Houses. When they throw block parties, they inform the neighbors, at times acquire noise permits, and most importantly, they police themselves.

Any time Greek parties have gotten out of hand, Miser has been called by the Burlington Police Department. Then he or one of his staff goes to the House to calm the situation down.

POSSIBLE SOLUTIONS

Burlington residents have to realize that off-campus students are under the jurisdiction of Burlington ordinances. If there is a problem with noise that you are unable to straighten out with your neighbors, call the police. For the students' part, they have to appreciate the rights of their neighbors.

If a Greek party gets out of hand, the police are once again the appropriate people to call. They will inform Miser of the problem and if necessary, move in to restore order.

However the problem is handled, discretion is the better part of valor. A hasty call for ordinances against students is not a solution, but rather a provocation. Forums, such as the recent one between representatives of the Burlington and UVM communities, are useful in airing complaints while reaching understandings. Hopefully, the two communities can continue meeting in this matter to resolve unwanted situations, rather than draw lines for a confrontation.

---

RECYCLED ENERGY

Struggling
Fighting back
Both wind and cold

Walking,
Tear well up.

Exhausted,
She reaches
the door.

The chair catches
her tiredness.

Her energy shoveled
Below zero degrees
Melts and refreezes
In the sidewalk snow,

And the sap begins to flow.

—L. J. Maurer-Theberge

---

| | | | | | | | | | | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| | S | T | A | I | R | S | | S | E | R | O | U | S | |
| S | C | A | R | L | E | T | | T | H | O | R | N | E | D |
| C | U | R | I | O | S | I | T | Y | S | E | E | K | E | R |
| A | T | H | | V | A | P | O | R | | | | E | D | E |
| R | T | E | | E | Y | E | T | O | | S | E | M | I | S |
| A | L | E | | | | N | I | N | | T | A | P | E | S |
| B | E | L | G | R | A | D | E | | P | A | S | T | R | Y |
| | | R | O | Y | S | | P | U | C | E | | | | |
| S | C | H | E | M | E | | R | I | N | K | S | I | D | E |
| H | O | O | E | Y | | R | E | N | | | | N | E | G |
| U | N | I | T | S | | E | C | O | L | E | | A | C | R |
| L | F | S | | | P | A | C | E | R | | S | I | E | |
| A | U | T | O | G | R | A | P | H | H | O | U | N | D | S |
| S | T | E | R | E | O | S | | L | A | S | S | I | E | S |
| | E | R | R | A | N | T | | E | R | E | C | T | S | |

Last Week's Ans.

SUNDANCE

Get your fall look together...

...with LEATHER!

Featuring a wide and varied selection of vests and jackets ... including those hard-to-find flight jackets. A timeless piece of fashion!

...Now available at SUNDANCE!

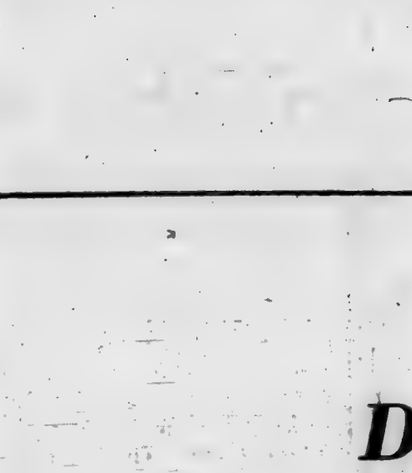
38 CHURCH STREET

At the corner of Church and Cherry

Lane Series



1978-79 Season

University of Vermont

Don't Miss

Concentus Musicus

November 16

BOX OFFICE: The Ticket Store, Park Centre Building, 131 Main Street, Burlington, Vermont 05401 — Lane Campus Box Office, Grasse Mount, University of Vermont, Burlington, Vermont 05405

CALL: (802) 863-0466 — (802) 656-3438

HOURS: 10:00 A.M.-4:00 P.M. Monday-Saturday — 10:00 A.M.-4:00 P.M. Monday-Friday

TICKETS: $7.50 and $5.00; $6.50 and $4.00 (with UVM student ID)

RESERVATIONS: Held 72 hours — Mail Orders accepted with payment

Remember:

UVM Students receive a dollar discount on all Lane Series tickets.

LIVE ENTERTAINMENT!!!

Sunday Nov. 12: Three Way Split
Tues. Nov. 14: John Chicoine on guitar
Sunday Nov. 19: Bob Chevalier

Rasputins
163 Church St.

Revolutions Home and Abroad

continued from page 17

but the USSR is rising to take their place.

The U.S. has also experienced some defeats, in China, Korea, Vietnam and Cambodia.

Russia is now making its move to become top-dog imperialist power of the world. But Russia is not as developed as the U.S., so it has to resort to war. It cannot achieve domination economically, so it beefs up its war machine until it's stronger militarily than the U.S.

It also has the cover of being a socialist country. The U.S. has played it pretty dirty with the world's people. Everybody knows what it means when Uncle Sam says he's comin' in. But when Russia jumps into Angola, it has the cover of being a socialist help.

It says, "We're helping our brothers to be free." When in fact, they're ripping them off. It's the same thing they did in Czechoslovakia.

So they're much more dangerous to the Third World than the U.S.

Cynic: What about the Cuban freedom fighters in Angola?

Smith: Look at Angola. The Russians and Cubans didn't come in until the Angolans were poised to win.

They split the unity of the Africans and set up a regime which is in service to the Soviets. It's still in debt to the Soviet Union. Gulf Oil is still there.

Cuba is a colony of the Soviet Union, just as Angola is, now that the Cubans have won control there.

Cuba is controlled by the Soviets. It's still a one-crop economy (sugar) and it's forced to sell all of its sugar to the Soviets at prices below the world market prices.

It's the same relation Cuba had to the U.S. twenty-five years ago.

Cynic: Black people still being oppressed by white people?

Smith: By imperialists.

The Russians learned from what the U.S. couldn't do. They send Black Cubans instead of white G.I.'s to Africa to fight their battles.

The Russians in Cuba have the highest standard of living of anyone there. They live in the best houses and drive fancy cars. It's the "ugly Russian" instead of the "ugly American."

The Blacks in Cuba have more education now, after the revolution. But they still live in ghettos. They've got the most menial jobs. They get drafted to fight in Angola.

Cynic: Would communism in the U.S. look like that of any of the communist countries today?

Smith: First, all we have now is socialism, the dictatorship of the proletariat.

Communism is the final goal. All people will be equal. Work will be what people need. It's a technological revolution too. People often forget that about communism. Technology will provide for our needs, without what we know as work.

When the U.S. goes socialist, it will have a greater impact on the world than even China had. We are the closest nation in the world to achieving the technology of communism.

Cynic: What is the CYO working on besides the struggle against apartheid in South Africa?

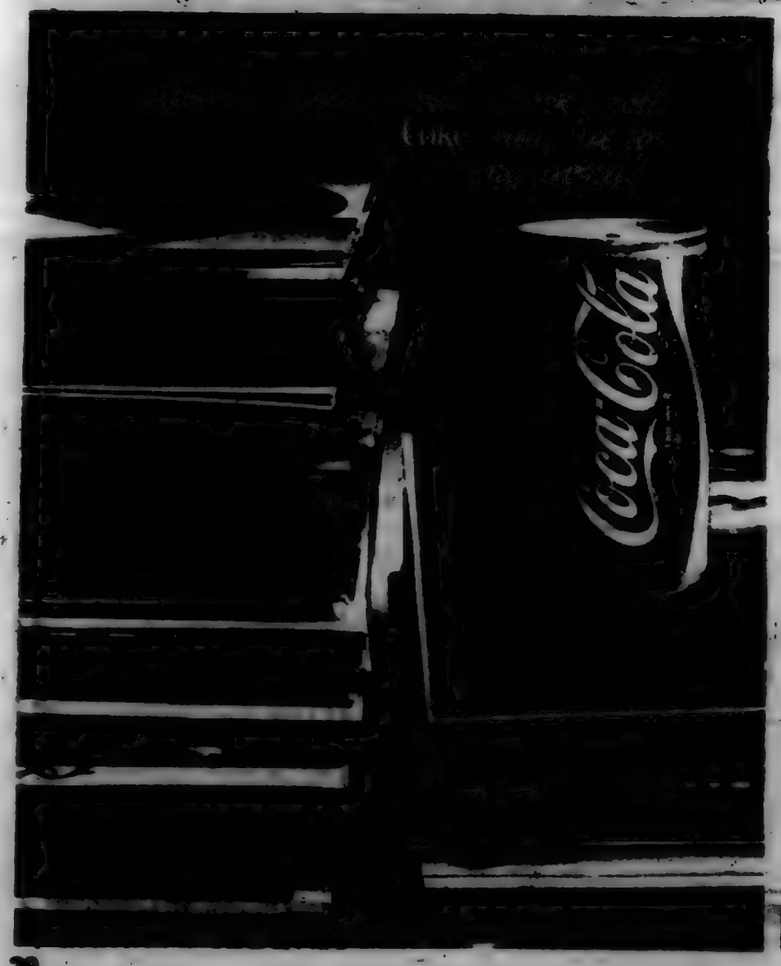
Smith: We've been very active in the struggle taking place in Tupelo, Mississippi. The Black people in Tupelo are boycotting the white businesses in protest of racial discrimination there.



The town is 40% Black, but there's never been a Black city official. The white people have closed the Blacks out of all but the most menial jobs.

The Ku Klux Klan is very active there, and they've attacked the Black community. But the Black people are determined to stand up to them.

They're having a big demonstration down there on Thanksgiving. We're getting as many young people down there as we can to show support. There will be cars going down from the University of Vermont.

"Everybody knows what it means when Uncle Sam says he's comin' in. But when Russia jumps into Angola, it has the cover of being socialist help."

beer wine
THE ONLY
BEVERAGE WAREHOUSE
IS IN WINOOSKI
Lowest Prices Largest Selection
kegs soda

The Lattie F. Coor Short Story Contest

$25 first prize

$15 second prize

Stories due Nov. 21

Abortion in Vermont

Yes, No, Or Maybe?

An Essay by Dana Baron

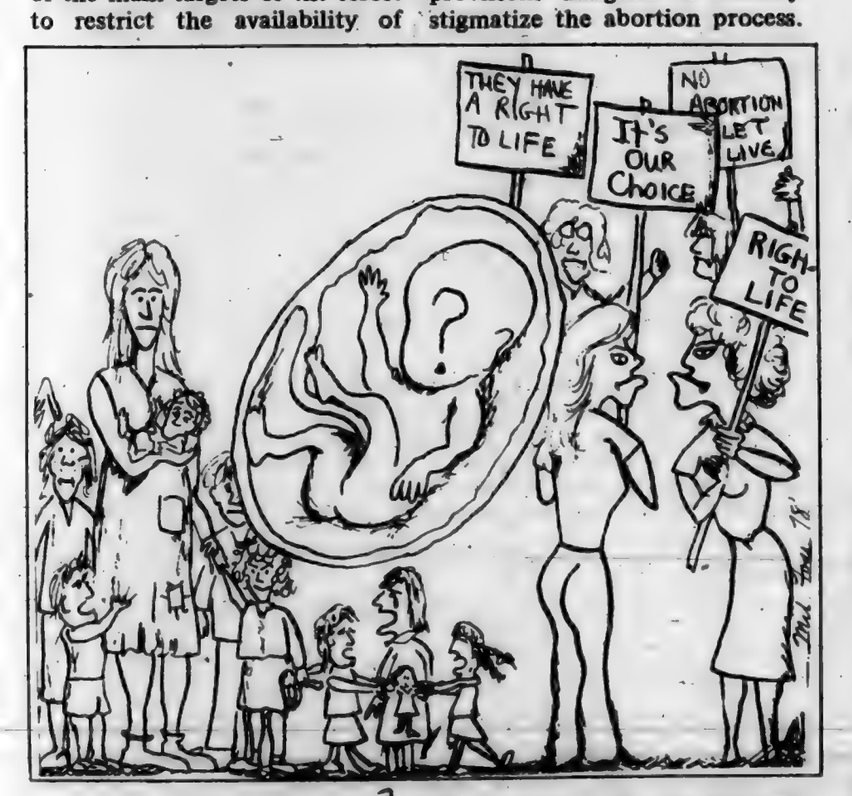
For many years, an intense and emotional debate has raged around the issue of abortion. One one side are the "Right to Life-ers" who feel that an unborn fetus is a live human being and that abortion is therefore equivalent to murder. On the other side stand the supporters of the "Right to Choice," who feel that a woman should have control over her own body and consequently the right to choose to continue or terminate a pregnancy.

Until 1973, the main issue was whether or not abortion should be legal. Then in January of that year, the supporters of legalization won a major victory when the U.S. Supreme Court declared unconstitutional all state laws forbidding abortion.

At that time, a good deal of confusion surrounding the legality of abortion already existed in Vermont. In February, 1972, the Vermont Supreme Court struck down the existing state law that had made it illegal for a doctor to perform an abortion. Thus, for almost a year until the Supreme Court decision, Vermont operated without any law dealing with the issue.



With abortion legalized, the central issue of the controversy became the availability of abortion and it appears that one of the main targets of the effort to restrict the availability of abortion has been the poor. Following the 1973 Supreme Court decision, Medicaid began to fund abortions for poor women. The Right to Life Forces immediately began to work on both the Federal and State level to cut off funding.

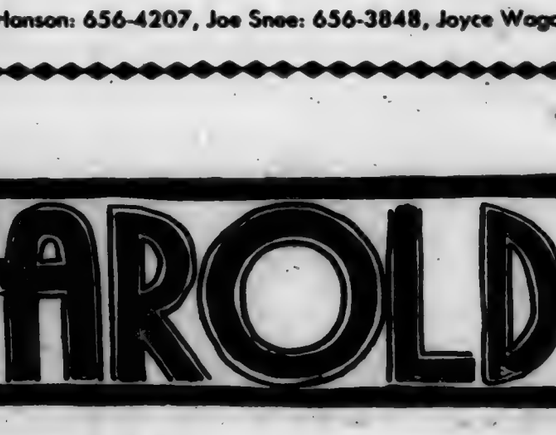
In September, 1977, this effort met with some success when the U.S. Congress passed a bill restricting the use of federal funds for abortion to cases involving rape, incest, or the risk of death to the mother. The U.S. Supreme Court backed up this bill in June, 1977, by declaring that states are not required to spend Medicaid funds for abortion.

As Congress worked towards passage of legislation cutting off Federal funds, Vermont Governor Richard Snelling and Human Services Secretary Elizabeth Candon both issued statements assuring Vermonters that state money for abortion for poor women would remain available whether or not the Federal funds were cut-off. Sister Candon, a Roman Catholic nun, was immediately criticized for her statement by John Marshall, the Bishop of Vermont. Snelling also came under heavy fire from the Right to Life supporters in the state. When the Federal legislation passed, both Snelling and Candon backed down from their original statements and state funds for abortions for poor women were cut off except for cases involving rape, incest or where 2 physicians say the mother's life or health is threatened.

Apparently, this was not enough to satisfy the more extreme anti-abortion forces in Vermont. In the 1977 session of the State Legislature, Melvin Mandigo sponsored a bill intended to cut off state money for abortion for rape and incest victims. The bill also sought to make it necessary for a single minor to obtain parental consent and for a married woman to obtain consent from her spouse before an abortion could be performed.

It also included several provisions designed to severely stigmatize the abortion process. For example, the bill required that the doctors go through a procedure that basically amounted to trying to talk the woman out of the abortion. It also required any woman who received an abortion under the law to register with the state.

In September of this year, Vermont Social Welfare Commissioner David Wilson pointed out that in the year since funds were cut, the number of Medicaid abortions had not declined. He used these figures to suggest that those who really needed abortions were getting them, but the state wasn't paying the bill, and therefore both sides should be happy.



Susan Adams, of the Vermont Women's Health Center in

(continued on next page)

UVM DANCE-A-THON

TO BENEFIT THE
VERMONT LUNG ASSOCIATION
SPONSORED BY EAST CAMPUS RESIDENTS
OPEN TO UVM STUDENTS — FACULTY — STAFF ONLY
*(AT LEAST ONE PARTNER MUST BE UNIVERSITY AFFILIATED)
NOVEMBER 10-11-12, 1978 (7 PM FRIDAY-1 AM SUNDAY)

GRAND PRIZE
$500 CASH SCHOLARSHIP
$250 TO EACH TEAM MEMBER FOR MOST MONEY RAISED FOR THE LUNG ASSOCIATION.
NUMBER OF HRS. DANCED X PLEDGES = TOTAL

MARATHON PRIZE
$300 CASH SCHOLARSHIP
$150 TO EACH TEAM MEMBER FOR THE MOST MONEY RAISED BY THE TEAM DANCING THE ENTIRE 30 HOURS!
(GRAND PRIZE WINNERS EXCLUDED)

THIRD PRIZE
$100 IN SAVINGS BONDS & $50 SAVINGS BOND FOR EACH TEAM MEMBER FOR THE THIRD LARGEST AMOUNT OF MONEY RAISED.

!! WITH SPECIAL PRIZE DANCE CONTESTS !!
DANCE THE NIGHT AWAY AT
M.A.T. DINING HALL
Get Information and Registration Packets at the following:
HARRIS-MILLIS Front Desk
Contact Jeff Hanson: 656-4207, Joe Snee: 656-3848, Joyce Wagoner: 656-2955

HAROLD J's

165 Church St.
Burlington, Vt.

HAROLD J's GOES CRAZY!!!

| | |
|---|---|
| TUESDAYS | 25¢ Drafts$1.00 Mixed Drinks |
| WEDNESDAYS | LADIES NIGHT25¢ DRAFTS50¢ MIXED DRINKS |
| THURSDAYROCK N' ROLL | 5¢ DRAFTS 8-910¢ Drafts 9-1015¢ Drafts 10-1120¢ Drafts 11-1225¢ Drafts 12-2 |

"On Top Of Church Street"

Hawks Point

Never A Cover Charge

89 Church St.

"Just Jazz" Quintet
Featuring songs by Sam Armstrong
Fri. & Sat. Night

Mon. night football on the 8-foot screen

WRUV

90.1 MHZ

Vermont's Jazz Authority

IN THE MALL

IN THE MALL

The Earring Place

Coupon Sale!
20% OFF
WITH THIS COUPON

Largest Selection of Earrings in Burlington! Gold Pendants — Chains — Stick Pins. Our Entire Stock at 20% Off.
EAR PIERCING TECHNICIAN IN ATTENDANCE
Monday thru Friday 10 to 9, Sat. 10 to 6
Sundays 1 to 5

Yes Or No?

Continued from Page 21

Burlington, disagreed with this assessment. She pointed out the VWHC is the only place in the state that offers a sliding fee scale that makes it easier for poor women to receive an abortion. This service is readily available only to women living in the Burlington area. "We're still seeing the same number of women needing abortions who are eligible for Medicaid," she said while pointing out that the number of abortions for poor women has not increased proportionally to the number of abortions for middle income women. "It seems that the poor women who need abortions are not getting them, as David Wilson suggests," Ms. Adams argues, "but more middle income women are getting abortions."

What are some possible solutions to the dilemma posed by this debate? Mary Beth Hughes of UVM's Women's Referral Center suggested that Medicaid money remain available for abortions, but with some looser restrictions. "The emphasis should be on prevention," she says, suggesting that abortion be accompanied by complete birth control information and free contraceptive services. She feels that abortion should be available to the poor as well as the rich, however: "After all, who should know better than the woman herself whether or not she should have a baby."

Ms. Adams of VWHC feels that Medicaid money should be available for abortion on demand. The sliding fee scale provided by the center, which sets a minimum fee of $25.00 for an abortion, puts an extra burden on other patients of the center. Currently, the Women's Health Center bills Medicaid for all costs except the actual abortion, according to Ms. Adams. Women seeking an abortion are provided with a full explanation of the procedure and complete contraceptive counselling. "Pre-operative and post-operative medical exams are provided and each woman is assigned a 'counselor advocate' who provides emotional support for the abortion patient. "All of this is included in the original fee."

What are the alternatives to readily available abortion to all who need it? One alternative is to carry the pregnancy full term. But this choice is unacceptable to many women who, for one reason or another, can't handle the responsibility of a child or can't afford another mouth to feed.

For thousands of years women have been receiving abortions, whether they were considered legal or not. When they weren't legal they were often performed by un-trained physicians, sometimes under unsanitary conditions or by the pregnant woman herself. Needless deaths and injuries have resulted from these alternatives. The effort to restrict the availability of abortions only results in making the operations safely available to the rich (who always could afford the operation) while making the poor seek out the "butcher" or sink further into poverty with another hungry child.

---

You tell me quite naturally and quickly that, no, you really don't want to,
but you are leaving for another weekend,
for a few days somewhere.
I don't even recall,
no I don't.

You might as well have told me that the Apocalypse was due to arrive in two days and to start preparing for it, and I wouldn't even try because what, then, would be the point?

I walked sullenly to a little room where I live,
kicking cinder blocks and pulling up tree stumps that bothered me,
thinking that when I got back there,
that I would burn it right down,
with everything that I own inside, so that all the memories and all the traces would be gone.

And you might tell me that the plans are pressing and that everything that's important in your life is dependent on this moment, and you might even hope to be lucky enough to find me when you return, but I was careful not to leave a future address or a trail to follow, and when I try to remember where you left to,
I can't recall, you know
I can't even recall.

—Mary Landon

Creative Sound offers carefully selected stereo systems
We'd like to introduce you to our new matched
SYSTEM $379

Our stereo systems have become known for the high quality and value that they present. It's taken over 12 months to find just the right products to achieve such a fine system, priced under $400, and yet worthy of your ears. System $379 will bring years of high fidelity performance to you, with the same high standards of performance that you might have paid twice as much for several years ago. In this sense, System $379 is truely a value breakthrough.

System $379 consists of the new Technics SA80 receiver, it features a powerful 30 watt RMS output, and an FM tuner that is as sensitive as many receivers costing more. And it has many of the same high performance characteristics that are found in even the most expensive Technics receivers, such as: flat group delay IF, phase-lock-loop FM, 90dB phono S/N radio.

We've coupled this first class receiver to the Fisher MS 135 passive radiator speaker system. These very efficient speakers will surprise even the most critical ear, for their high clarity and accurate base handling response are very good. When you listen to System $379, you'll agree that these speakers are far from ordinary.

Last, but not least, we've included the BSR2260 automatic turntable. It comes equipped with the QLM 30 MDIII stereo cartridge. The BSR2260 is a very reliable performer. It features cue control as well as auto eject at the end of a record. It can also be operated manual as many audiophiles prefer.

Upon credit approval System $379 may be purchased for as little as $37 down with $17.10 a month for 24 months (A.P.R. 18.11%)

Lafayette Creative Sound
radio electronics

• 157 Pearl St., Essex Jct. • Barre-Montpelier Rd., Barre • "In the Mall between Kmart & Martin's," South Burlington

THE VZ

AGE COLLECTION FROM HATHAWAY

SPECIAL PROMO

English Poplin Shirt
60% Cotton
40% Polyester
in Stripes
Red
Blue
Brown

BUY ONE SHIRT— GET AN ALBUM FREE!!

HATHAWAY SHIRTS FACTORY OUTLET
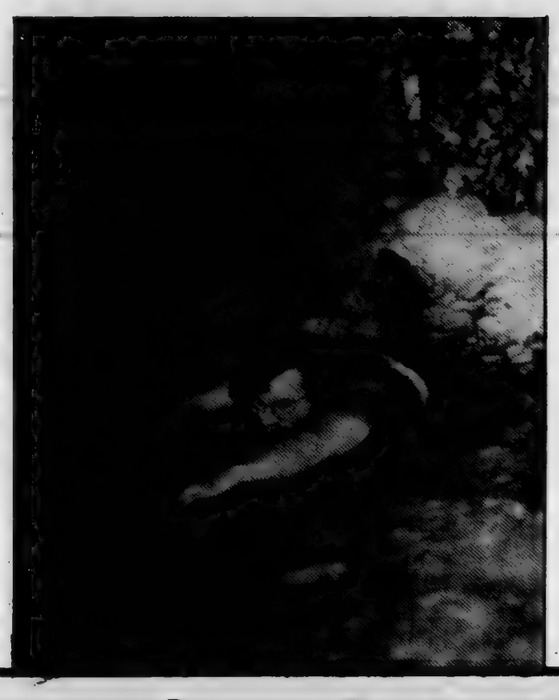
155 Cherry St.



Story and Photos by Bill Menning

Welcome to the FACC!

The FACC--Friday Afternoon Climbing Club--can be found on any reasonably dry friday afternoon at a railway cut in Winooski

When you work up an appetite . . . Come to Finast!

Finast has all your favorite snacks ready . . . we knew you would be hungry!

- Potato Chips
- Snack Crackers
- Fresh Fruits
- Your favorite cold beverages

and just about everything you can think of!

Visit

Mr. Deli

You'll find a world of Eating Pleasure at our own Mr. Deli Counter. You'll find Fresh Cold Cuts, Domestic and Imported Cheeses, Fresh Made Salads and Baked Goods. Our Mr. Deli experts are Ready to Serve you. Ask about our Delicious Party Platters available for your next get-together.

Finast SUPERMARKETS

825 WILLISTON ST. BURLINGTON, VERMONT

collegiate crossword

© Edward Julius, 1977 Collegiate CW77-23

ACROSS

1 Jack of nursery rhyme
6 Food with lox
11 River adjacent to Rutgers College
13 Branch of the military
15 Mouthlike opening
16 City in Texas
17 Sweet potato
18 Whirled around on one foot
20 Wire measure
21 Actor John ——
23 Cabs
24 German port
25 Paint substance
27 —— mother
28 Small brown birds
29 Capital of Iran
31 Part of the body
32 No one specified (abbr.)
33 Movie sci-fi thriller
34 —— section, in math
36 Defeat soundly
39 South Pacific kingdom
40 "L'etat, c'est ——"
41 Sample TV show
43 Burl ——
44 VP Aaron, and family
46 Emperor or pianist
47 Tennis call
48 Bothers
50 Was victorious
51 Chicago newspaper
53 Following closely behind
55 Certain Asians
56 Bitter conflicts
57 Hinder
58 Passover dinner

DOWN

1 Former Italian president
2 Man or monkey
3 Hilly region of Morocco
4 On one's toes
5 Unspoken, but understood
6 "—— in Arms"
7 Like the Gobi
8 Hodges of baseball
9 Foes
10 Permissive
11 Kingly
12 From Carson City
13 Morning, in Marseilles
14 Disposes of 19 Draft animals
22 Puts up a picture again
24 Soviet government
26 City in Ohio
28 Young animal
30 Mythical bird
31 —— Guevara
33 Desires, as for knowledge
34 —— wagon
35 Former
36 Angry
37 Shad-like fish
38 Profession of TV's "Quincy"
39 Slopes
40 Backless slippers
42 Ice device
44 Mistake
45 Data, for short
48 Trumpet attachment
49 "Your majesty"
52 Unit of computer information
54 Jar part

Mandala

A yogi may turn his mantra in thought;
I focus you in the core of my heart
Beyond my mind, where mind is not.
What we are seeking has always been sought
By Himalayan mystics of Buddhist lore
And brahmin casts in Vedantic tradition,
Christians engaged in their sacred mission,
And Islam with her holy war.
The goals of spiritual man are one –
As singular as the commitment of two
To know that knowing is not to pursue
The love that binds, lest it come undone.
Yet, you and I form a palindrome,
With love our center, the origin, the known.

–Rob Schnelle

For The Record...

In last week's article "Theft in Burlington", Detective Richard Garrow was incorrectly quoted as saying that the Burlington Police Department cannot enter a person's house and instruct them on crime prevention; when his Crime Prevention Unit does just that.

Expresso
PLASTIC POINT PEN
Sanford's

SPECIAL:
Reg. .64
Sale Price .39 offer ends Nov. 17

UNIVERSITY STORE
ON THE CAMPUS

After A Long Day's Hunt, You'll Be Glad You Wore Hermans

For the kind of warmth and comfort you need in cold weather, these fabulous boots, are insulated to 20° below zero! Rugged rawhide leather uppers, quick and easy speed lacing, deep-cleated VIBRAM® soles and heels.
You can depend on your Hermans!

Herman Shoes Boots

AUTHORIZED HERMAN DEALER

Jan's
Vermont's Quality Shoe Store

90 CHURCH ST.
DOWNTOWN BURL.
864-4735

Mon. & Fri. 'til 9:00
Mastercharge/VISA
Parking & Bus Tokens

VERMONT CYNIC

EDITORIAL BOARD

Editor-in-Chief: David C. Greeff
Managing Editor: Jerome E. Andrews
Copy Editor: James Oakes

News: John Letteri
Arts: Vaune Davis
Features: Randy McMullen
Sports: Rich Chalmers
Steve Larose

Advertising Manager: Peter Voll
Business Manager: Jim Wade
Photo Editor: Robert Gale
Contributing Editors: Henry Chamberlain
Russell Flannery
Diana Greene
Eric Kilburn

The Vermont Cynic is published weekly during the school year except vacations by students at UVM. Opinions expressed herein do not necessarily reflect those of the University administration, faculty, staff, or the State of Vermont.

Editorial

Encouraging Signs for the Future

Student apathy, once the pet peeve of every sixties child on campus, seems to have finally bottomed out. Indeed, if the recent activities at UVM and other American universities are any indication, one cannot help but maintain a guarded optimism for the future. More and more students are apparently deciding that college is more than just good grades and keg parties, and are sacrificing time from these areas towards more meaningful educational goals.

Witness the following developments of the past few months:

—The S.A. senatorial races drew more candidates and the voter turnout was higher than any election in recent memory. In previous years, there were barely enough candidates to fill the available positions.

—Agricultural majors unhappy with the large-scale farming orientation of the college of agriculture formed Students for Progressive Agricultural Development and Education (SPADE). The group is gathering student support and planning to meet with the administration in hopes of re-directing certain aspects of the Agricultural curriculum.

—The Student Committee Against Racism (SCAR) has recently formed to educate UVM about South Africa and apartheid. The committee hopes to persuade the university to divest its holdings in corporations with investments in South Africa.

—Political benefits, such as the Kristina Berster effort, seem to occur almost weekly. This Friday evening an anti-nuke event featuring a movie and a local bluegrass band will be held in Billings, with the proceeds going to the Clamshell Alliance.

What is heartening about many of these efforts is that they seek change in cooperative, rather than antagonistic ways. Previous campus political movements often fell victim to emotional rhetoric that alienated those not yet ready to join the ranks, or polarized people into "Us-Them" camps. Very little creative dialogue ensued when a sixties radical told a cop "up against the wall, you pig." In contrast, SPADE and SCAR are working with faculty members and a diversity of student organizations in the hopes of furthering their causes. Such modes of action cannot help but be more successful than the inimical effort of the past.

Whatever the cause, the rebirth of extracurricular action is a sight beautiful to behold. One Cynic editor proclaimed last week, "I'm sick of apathy, man," and no wonder. For the first time in years we've been receiving more articles and letters than we have space to print. Keep it up folks.

Political energy, regardless of its source or focus, is always healthy for a university. For a precious few years, students have the time and objective sources for information. We hope increasing numbers of individuals will make the most of this opportunity. Only by examining issues thoroughly, and taking action, can students truly refuse to let college get in the way of their education.

LETTERS

Hockey Tryouts?

To the Editor:

I am writing in regard to the farce called open tryouts for men's division I ice hockey this past October 30th and 31st.

In mid-October, prior to tryouts, a notice was posted in the Cynic regarding the aforementioned tryouts. Briefly, the ten choppy lines stated that anyone wishing to try out may do so on the last two days of October at 7 p.m. However, misinterpretation of the next few lines disappointed me, as well as a handful of other individuals. These lines said that prior to tryouts, one should report to 201 Patrick Gymnasium to clear academic eligibility.

So, off I went to 201 Patrick Gym at around 6:15 p.m. on Monday, October 30th to clear academic eligibility. Ah, but wait, I had been red taped!

I was informed that the notice was supposed to mean that you were to report to 201 Patrick Gym a few weeks, if not at least four or five days before tryouts to get all the necessary forms to fill out, not to mention the required physical. Without the forms and physical, I was told, they would not let me on the ice.

My belief was confirmed when I encountered Coach Cross himself, skating around, just having a dandy time, knowing very well, I am sure, that he had his team. But, alas, there are legal formalities to deal with in regards to giving all students who wish to play a fair shake.

The unreasonableness of Cross astonished me. He bluntly informed me and another person that, without forms and physical, we wouldn't be allowed on the ice. He couldn't seem to understand how I, as well as six others, had not gone through the legalities, when all his varsity players did without confusion!

Whether Coach Cross himself or a member of his staff is responsible for this notice posted in the Cynic, I am not sure. However, it surely could have been written with more clarity and with proper attention paid to the facts missing. A look at a back issue of the Cynic will confirm this. The notice posted was vague purposely or through ignorance. Again, I am not sure.

The experience I have just related to you readers, I am sure, is not uncommon when dealing with division I athletics. But now don't you think it's time for a reassessment of values?

As students, are we not entitled to an equal opportunity to develop and enjoy our talents as those hand-picked? Why isn't there an open tryout for all at the beginning of the season? Do we not have some inalienable rights as tuition paying students of UVM?

Disillusioned and I hope not alone,
Jeffrey Sisitsky

Sorry!

To the Editor:

I would like to take this opportunity to publicly apologize for the quality of sound at last week's IRA Theater presentation, All the President's Men, held on November 4-5. As regular patrons of our film series know, we have been plagued with sound problems throughout the better part of October and our first show in November as well.

The reasons are twofold. First, the acoustics in Southwick Gym are somewhat less than adequate. Second, the sound system purchased by the director of the film series last year was shorted out during the shoot-out sequence of the movie Taxi Driver. Since then, we have borrowed equipment from the University Media Service as we await the repair of our own. We hope to have our own equipment in use by this weekend. Please bear with us as we try to rectify the situation.

Any questions or suggestions concerning this problem, or about the film series in general are welcome. You can reach me at 658-4775.

Sincerely,
John L. Allen
IRA President

Obnoxious Dogma

To the Editor:

A suggestion. Instead of calling the final two pages of the front section of the Cynic "Letters," why not rename them "The Jeff Beckerman Sounding Board for Ideas I Don't Agree With (and hence are wrong)"?

In his frequent letters, Mr. Beckerman expresses dismay (poorly) because the opinions (particularly sports) conveyed in the Cynic do not coincide with his own. Mr. Beckerman thus concludes that the ideas expressed in the Cynic are wrong, the paper is biased, and he and all New York fans are being persecuted. Bully for you.

How, Mr. Beckerman, are the attitudes of "our" Cynic supposed to match the ideas of any one UVM student, and particularly yours? The Cynic is representative of the ideas of the UVM community, not an exact replica of the opinions of a particular UVM student; fortunately, not yours.

Although the opinions expressed in many Cynic sports columns are not shared by you, Mr. Beckerman, that doesn't make them invalid. And because a particular columnist (not to be confused with a reporter) may applaud a Boston team and snub one from New York, it doesn't mean that columnist is deranged, or that the Cynic is biased.

Ned Andrews has a great idea: why don't you write your own column, Mr. Beckerman, and get your obnoxious dogma out of an otherwise interesting section.

Sincerely,
Mark Kevorkian

letters continued on page 28

Chain Letter Fallacies

By Eric Kilburn

Remember the good ol' days, when swindlers peddled patent medicines that cured "cancer, ulcers, dyspepsia, hemorrhoids, migraines," and other assorted ailments? What about travelling fortune-tellers, faith-healers and flim-flam artists of bygone eras who sold you their shallow talents at a hefty price? Are those days dead and buried, killed by the Federal Trade Commission and other agencies? Don't bet on it folks, because the rip-off is back in town.

"You can make $100,000 without any risk" begins the Circle of Gold chain letter, a West Coast phenomenon that has swept the country like a plague, and is now infecting the minds and pocketbooks of numerous Vermonters. Circle of Gold's sales pitch is so malevolently mellow, and its promised benefits so lucrative, that many honest, well-intentioned people have begun to believe it can work for them. Can it? In this writer's view, the chain letter, like its huckster cousins of yesteryear, is a profiteering device that ultimately benefits only a few, at the expense of many. By analyzing the Circle of Gold from both its specific and broader scale ramifications, it is hoped that this contention can be demonstrated.

The insidiousness of Circle of Gold's approach is evidenced in the dozens of catch words sprinkled throughout the accompanying literature. Words like "trust," "integrity," "faith," "spiritual" and "prosperity" dot the three-page explanation of the chain letter, along with such assuring phrases as "careful planning," "phenomenally successful" and even "the success of an early retirement." Beyond this, the literature demonstrates how a person's initial investment of $100 can geometrically increase up to $100,000, assuming that everyone plays by the rules as "responsible individuals."

To be what the chain letter defines as a "responsible individual," within one day of first receiving the letter, a person must (1) send $50 (in addition to the $50 paid initially to join the chain) to an individual at the head of a twelve-person list; (2) find two people who are also willing to buy into the chain. At this point, your name moves to the bottom of the list, moving up as the people you originally sold the chain letter to sell their letters and so on. Theoretically, at the end of twelve days, your name will have moved to the top of the twelve-name list, and the money rolls in. With the potential of $2^{11}$ or 2048 people each sending you $50 after just twelve days, it's no surprise why so many people have risked the $100 cost.

What the chain letter and perhaps many of its purchasers overlook is the myth of spontaneous profit. Unless you're the U.S. mint or into counterfeiting, money cannot be gained without money being lost. (A Ph.D. in economics is not necessary to understand this.) Thus, for every $50 one receives from the letter, someone somewhere along the line will have to have lost $50. There is no such thing as a free lunch, although, as W. C. Fields put it, "there's a sucker born every minute." It takes a lot of suckers each sending you $50 to make $100,000, but the originators of the Circle of Gold were undoubtedly Fields fans.

Also indefensible is the presumption that the chain will last forever, or at least keep going for a long time, making money for everyone along the way. This analysis neglects the possibility that many of the chain's participants may not be able to sell the letter to anyone. In addition, what would happen if everyone in the world with $100 to spare bought into the chain? What is left for the people at the end of the line, who have no one to sell their letters to? Surely they won't be able to resell the chain to all the people who were part of an earlier link in Circle of Gold, because many of these individuals would still be anticipating money from the first time around, and be unwilling to invest again. Somewhere down the road, someone must fail, and when they do, many people lose, and a few gain.

"Had ye but faith, ye could move mountains" said Jesus, although it is unlikely that He had much to do with chain letters. Given the previous evidence, however, it is interesting that an important factor in Circle of Gold's growth is trust. "I never really thought about your argument" said one individual, "because the people on the chain are good people – I really trust them." Here again the argument is tenuous. In a chain letter, "trust" is superficial because it makes money. Excuse the spiritual semantics, but when one's faith in people is based on a desire for private gain – not out of respect or love – can it legitimately be called "faith?"

For most people the logic for joining the Circle of Gold is a case of "I need the money." This is how it should remain. If people must join a chain letter they should do so out of uninhibited greed and not under the illusionary Milo Minderbinderism that "it's good for everyone, because everyone has a share." This way, the communal, team-spirit rationale is discarded and the only thing left to wrestle with is one's own conscience.

Moralistic assumptions aside, individuals have made money on the chain letter. To these people I would like to suggest the following: "Try Dr. Kilburn's Magic College Cure-All Elixir, the surefire remedy for hangovers, VD, low grade-point averages and constipation! Only $14.95 per bottle! Buy now while the supply lasts!" For the others, who are perhaps less easily taken in by profiteering schemes, take two aspirin and go straight to bed. Your chance for a fortune could arrive tomorrow.

Protecting the Non-Smoker

By Jeff Beckerman

I'm sitting in my room reviewing the minutes from the October 17 meeting of the Student Affairs Committee of the Faculty Senate. On the agenda is a discussion on smoking in classrooms. One is immediately struck with the idea that no one knows what to do or say about this problem: "There was doubt among the members about whether or not there was a university policy."

So I began to ask certain individuals on campus. Again no one knew of any policy, from the Assistant Vice President for Academic Affairs, to the chief of UVM security. Why isn't there a specific, restrictive policy in UVM dealing with the problem that daily affects all students on this campus?

The only reason that might explain this predicament is student apathy or timidity! It is damned annoying to study in the library, to concentrate in class, or to relax in any enclosed area with the obnoxious and hazardous smoke that fills the air. "There's no issue between a smoker and non-smoker that can't be settled with common courtesy," says a spokesman for R. J. Reynolds, a leading tobacco company. Perhaps! But what about the smokers that treat your request with a vicious stare, a look of annoyance, or total disobeyance. Common courtesy might work for a few, but the others believe in the rights of the smokers. Forget it! What about the rights of the non-smokers?

The mention of any health-related statistics in this article would only be unnecessarily repetitious. Everyone has heard the percentages and odds given by the Surgeon General of the United States. We all agree that smoking is dangerous to one's health. Any person willing to argue this point is deceiving himself to the point of idiocy. The lobbying unit of the tobacco growers, the second most obnoxious lobby next to the National Rifle Association, can't seem to find any valid, logical excuses for not banning smoking in public places. The only excuse they have is purely economic – that is, if cigarette smoking was banned, they would lose money.

The heart of the problem lies in the smoker's perceptions of smoking in society. Smoking is an activity engaged in voluntarily by a certain group of individuals. Choosing not to smoke is a choice by a group of individuals. But breathing in second-hand smoke is as harmful as breathing in the original smoke. Dr. Wilbert S. Aronow, professor of medicine at the University of California and chief of cardiology at the Long Beach Veteran's Administration Hospital, claims that second-hand smoke "is harmful to millions of people who have cardiovascular diseases and causes discomfort to others." Why, then, do smokers claim it is their right to injure the health of all persons around them? Evidently, they do not have the right to injure any other citizen's health. Therefore, smoking in public among non-smokers is not a right at all!

"Breathing in second-hand smoke is as harmful as breathing in the original smoke."

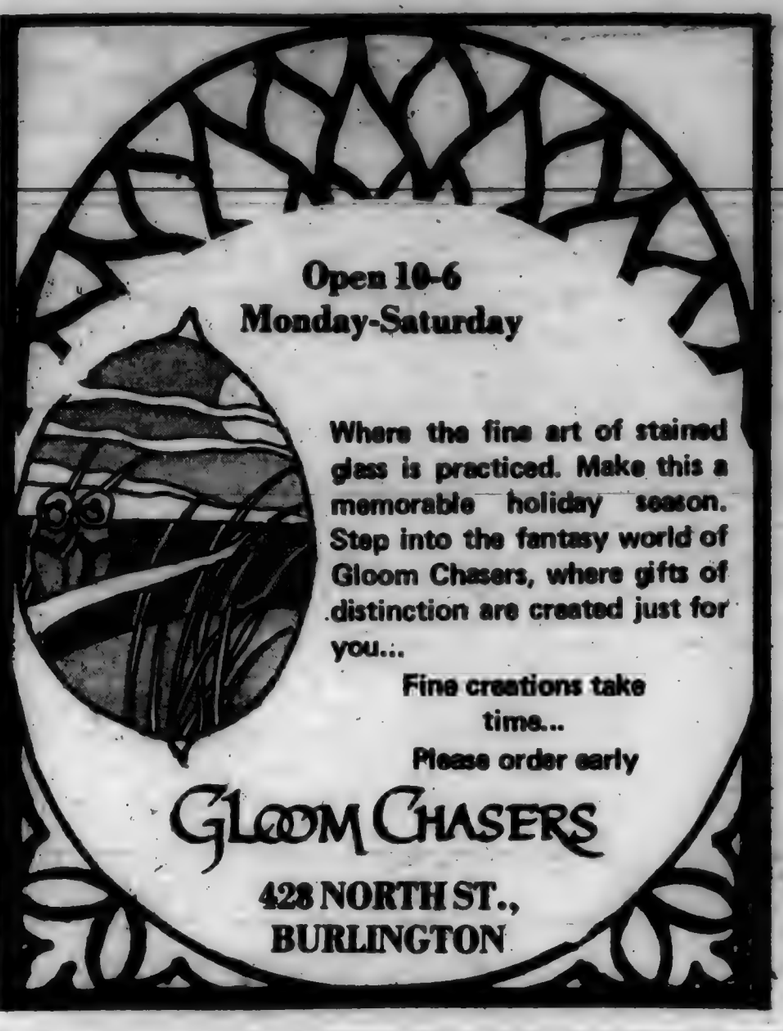
The answer to this noxious problem lies in student assertiveness, in demanding their rights for protection of their health. Unfortunately, student apathy is reaching unprecedented levels. Few issues in UVM interest more than 20% of the student population. Students need consensus approval in order to achieve a goal. If enough individuals start asking others not to smoke in public areas, then others, with the same ideas, will not feel alienated. There is power in numbers, and if a good number of vocal students voice their opinions, the ever-present carcinogenic smoke might begin to slowly vanish, and our health quickly improve. But meanwhile, are we forced to share in the smokers' smoke? Hopefully not; help is in sight!



From California, home of Charles Manson, skateboards, the Beach Boys, cult religions, and Proposition 13, comes... Proposition 5!!! On election day, November 7, the citizenry of that state will have the opportunity to pass a "sweeping anti-smoking statute," which would make "smoking unlawful in any enclosed health facility, and in any enclosed clinic." The words are strong, but what is needed is exactly that – a strong prescription for a sorely needed illness. Given strength under the law, this statute will not be ignored, condoned, or violated.

A poll taken in September 1978 by the Field Institute showed Proposition 5 has a good chance of passing. This alarmed the tobacco growers for two reasons. First, California consumes 10% of the total U.S. cigarette production, and that loss of revenue would be substantial. Second, the long-term effect of this law would be incredible. According to Edward A. Grefe, a vice-president of Philip Morris U.S. cigarette-making subsidiary, "It's going to have an impact" elsewhere. So the tobacco industry pumped $2.8 million into the campaign of TV ads and billboards. This sum accounted for 90% of the total $3.1 million campaign fund. This figure of $3.1 million is then compared to the meager $400,000 spent backing Proposition 5.

The tobacco industry claims that all the adjustments needed to comply with Prop 5 would cost the taxpayers $20 million. But the state's fiscal adviser puts that sum at a more modest $1.1 million. State government and businesses would also save $178 million on health-related items, such as insurance and sick days.

The opponents of Prop 5 keep pounding away at what they believe is an eminently unfair law. What will the outcome be? A poll taken last month showed the issue dead even. In late October, the LA Times showed the proposal easily losing. In my opinion Prop 5 will lose in this election, primarily due to the overwhelming monetary funds of the tobacco industry. But the day will come when a Prop 5 will pass.

At least the idea of allowing intelligent non-smokers to live a long, unabbreviated life has achieved public recognition and understanding. This is the first step in a major effort to right a truly hazardous wrong!

Letters Continued

Racism: A Problem of Definition

To the Editor:

In response to Jeff Marshall and Soloman White (Cynic, Nov. 2, 1978), I would say that they are clearly unable to comprehend the facts and subtleties of white racism. One problem concerns definition. Marshall must have been confused because when he was supposedly defining discrimination, he actually defined racism.

The conception of racism recognized by most social scientists is the following: "White racism is equal to power plus prejudice. Racism is different from racial prejudice, hatred, or discrimination. Racism involves having the power to carry out systematic discriminatory practices through major institutions of our society. In the United States at present, only whites can be racists, since whites dominate and control the institutions that create and enforce American cultural norms and values. Blacks and other minorities do not have access to the power to enforce any prejudices they may have." (National Education Association, 1973).

If Mr. Marshall is insulted by the fact that he is a racist (remember that I did not create the problem) because he has white skin, then I think that should be enough motivation for him to do something about it. Racism is a white problem also, even more than a minority problem; so if you don't like it, then change it!

By definition, all non-whites are not racist, even though Mr. White believes that to be the case. They can be prejudiced, but not racist, because they don't have the power of institutions and do not control dominant societal patterns which have adverse effects on major subgroups in our country. After decades of struggle against racism we have accomplished something. We have virtually eliminated overt discrimination, such as lynchings, bombings, etc., and legal discrimination such as Jim Crow laws.

The battle against racism can be won if the rules are changed so that a person does not have advantages because of his race. I do not think that Mr. White is the expert he poses to be if he cannot come to terms with social reality. Being a racist has nothing to do with being a good or bad person. The subtle fact is that you can have the best intentions for blacks, not be prejudiced, and remain a racist. Some of the people that I love the most are racist! Racism is much more than a definition or a label, but a position that one has relative to non-white minority groups in America, and it has a history. The point of my letter was to define a problem we have right here in America, so that we can do something about it. Blame is not my aim.

Michael L. Davis

A Lousy Swap

To the Editor:

I am writing in regard to the ski swap which was organized at the W.D.W. complex on the Redstone Campus Saturday morning Nov. 4th. I arrived on bicycle at 11:30 to see if equipment might still be accepted for the swap. I was informed by a student, sitting at the front desk of the swap area, that equipment would be accepted until 12:00. I quickly rode home, got my boots and skis and drove back, arriving at the same desk at 11:55. I then asked if someone was available to accept my equipment and was told that equipment was no longer being accepted

I was upset, but I decided to set up my skis outside of the selling area with the hopes of catching a buyer in passing. I was there for about five minutes, when a woman (who appeared to be in charge of the swap) approached me and informed me that I could not attempt to sell my equipment in the building. I explained to her what had occurred (as did several others who had had similar experiences) and was consoled with several "I'm sorry's," "That's too bad!" and "There is nothing I can do," and an additional reminder that I would have to leave the building as I couldn't sell my equipment within it. I asked what she meant by this. I asked what she meant by couldn't and was told that I needed a permit to sell in the lobby and besides "I would be taking away from their business."

It is apparent to me that the organizers of the swap did not take responsibility for the misinformation passed on by those working with them. They made no real attempt to alleviate any of the problems which developed, but rather worked to compound them. I had assumed that the swap was to be a service both to the organizers and the students. For me, the service was clearly for the organizers alone.

Sincerely,
Ira Bernstein

Turnips, anyone?

Agriculture needs more public attention. Lately people have been taking more notice of what's going on in agriculture and they're beginning to be concerned.

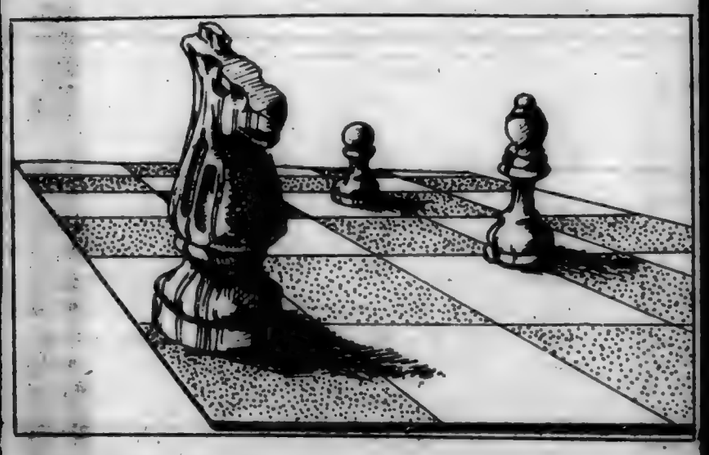
What worries me is the fact that many people are rejecting modern agriculture entirely. Instead they adopt amorphous, though inspiring, words. "Organic farming," "respect for the land," "healthy soil," "natural farming," "low energy," "localized markets," these are all examples of popular expressions. The other side of the coin, the anathema of popular interest, is summed up by expressions like these: "chemical farming," "blatant monocultures," "energy intensive," "middlemen," "quantity instead of quality." Any new political or social movement generates scores of popular cliches, quoted by people who often don't understand the implications behind what they say. But this current movement towards a more "sensible" agriculture is so important that I think all of us involved should learn as much about what is really going on as we can, before we reject the present agricultural system.

If we are truly concerned about our food and farming, and want the use of herbicides, pesticides, fertilizer and fuel to be cut down we must be willing to do four things:

(I) We must be prepared to pay perhaps twice as much for the food we eat. In this country one out of three meals is "eaten out." Yet Americans spend only 16% of their income on food, by far the lowest percent in the world. This has been accomplished through "modern American agriculture." Current methods produce great quantity and great quantity keeps prices low. If the use of farm chemicals and fuel were reduced, it would be unavoidable that our yields would drop – at least until Ag. scientists started working on the necessary research. Those who remember paying $1.25 a head for lettuce (when rains wiped out part of the western lettuce seedings) might appreciate what anything but an excess does to American food prices.

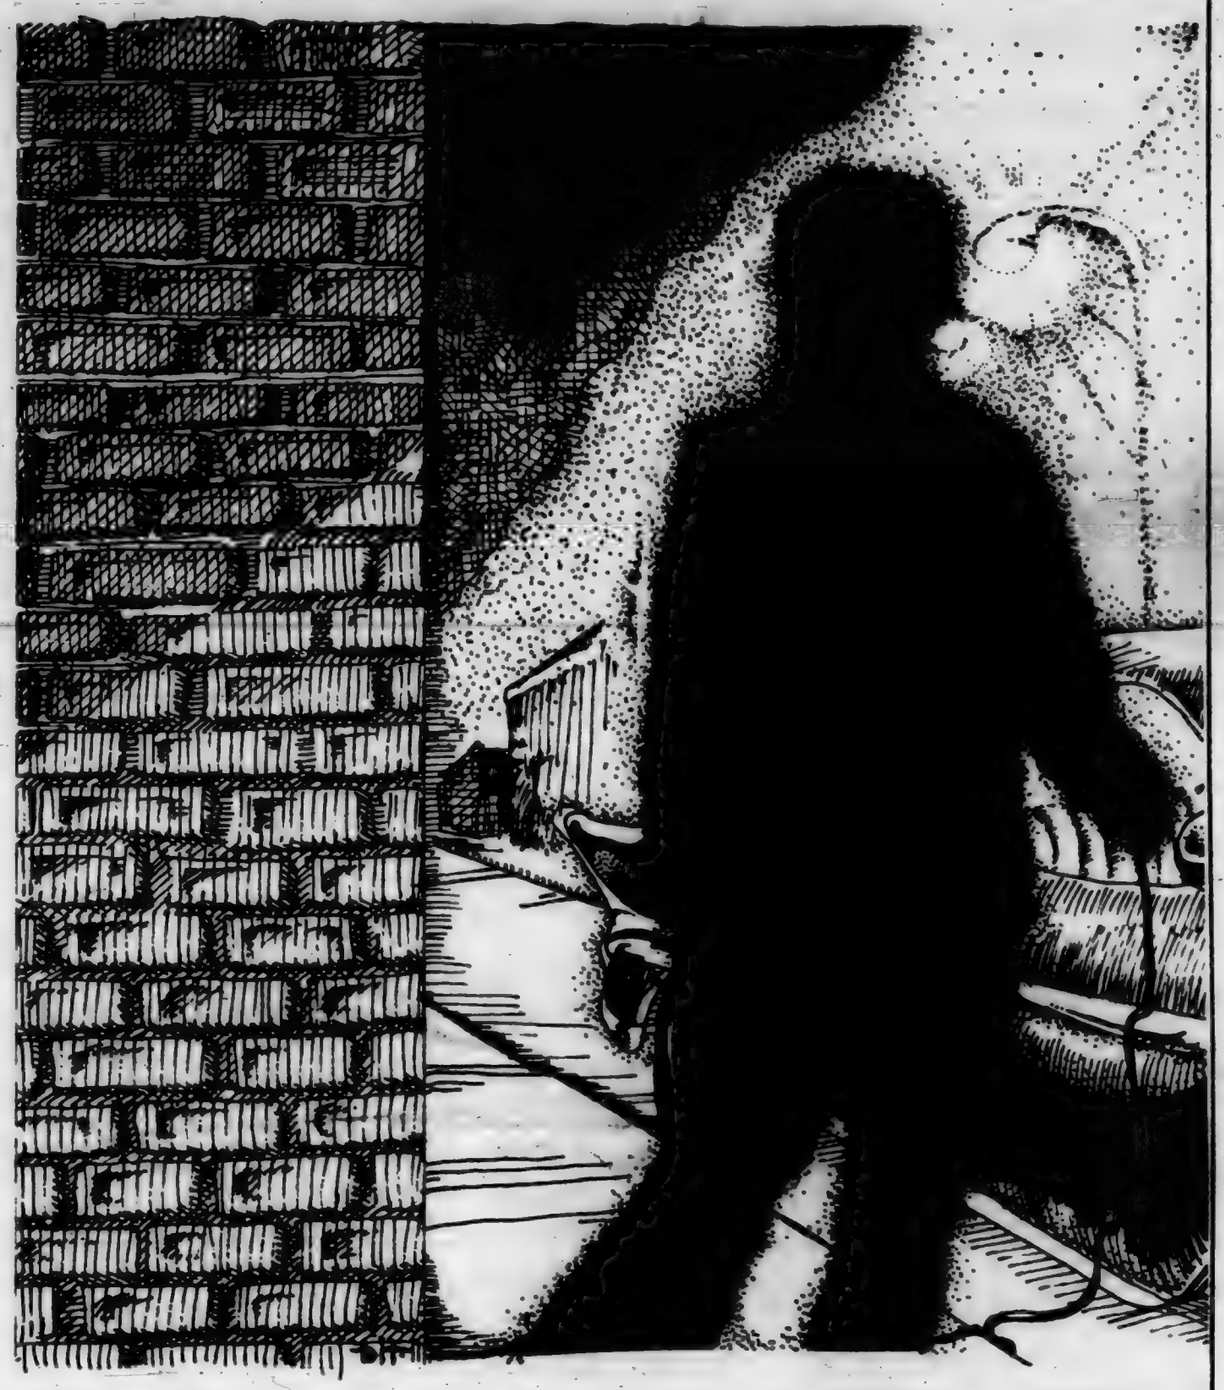
(II) We must be willing to eat many vegetables frozen or canned or only when they are locally in season. We will have to tailor our diet to those vegetables that can be grown locally or can keep in storage. "You mustn't bite the hand that feeds you." As importantly, you mustn't eat from the hand you disagree with. If you expect in February to have a nice salad of fresh lettuce, tomatoes, celery, and pepper, or to buy from a grocery rack full of an assortment of unblemished fresh vegetables, you're kidding yourself as to the implications of low-energy and/or localized agriculture.

(III) We must be willing to accept tedious, low-paying and exhausting manual labor as necessary and honorable. Cutting down on energy intensive agriculture means an increase in manual labor. It's not that farming today isn't hard work. It is. But we shouldn't expect someone else to do the "dirty work" unless we ourselves are willing and proud to do so.



(IV) We must be willing to accept as positive the tremendous advance scientists have made in the fields of livestock and plant and soil science. Agricultural research has not all been oriented towards "corporations," "chemicals," and "agribusiness." For example scientists are now working on a breed of corn that can fix nitrogen like a legume. Tillage techniques have been invented which cut down tremendously on energy output and conserve valuable moisture. In one area of Montana soil scientists' research on tillage has boosted average yields of wheat from 17 to 30 bushels/acre. In the field of animal genetics, progress has been made in increasing the protein content of milk.

Let's begin to practice as we preach. It is not nutritionally imperative for instance that we have iceberg lettuce and California tomatoes all winter, or western beef. Right now we have an extensive regional market. We can increase its viability if we will begin to support it without fail. Don't buy Idaho potatoes or Washington state apples, wait until things come in season here. Buy from farm stands or ask your local markets to buy local produce. Above all, don't squawk if it costs more; food is the most important thing that we buy.



Philip Gerard

That Scrappy Punk From New Jersey Was Born to Rock

What makes it all work, what makes it all believable, is that everything Springsteen does seems as natural to him as eating and sleeping."

By Pablo Conrad

Who is this bad boy in black denim, this scrappy punk from New Jersey, hailed as the new prince of rock and roll on the covers of Time and Newsweek? Six years ago, nobody had heard of him except a few night riders and riff-raff across the river in Jersey. Well, that's history now.

At Patrick Gym last Saturday night, Bruce Springsteen had his sell-out audience captivated in the truest sense of the word. From the moment he lit "Badlands," through two long sets and three encores, the crowd was his.

If rock and roll is essentially a live medium, then it may be said that Springsteen is its king. His more recent recorded efforts have tended toward deafening walls of high pressure noise, lacking the scruffy articulation that he achieved on Greetings From Asbury Park. Perhaps what makes Springsteen rock royalty just can't be captured on a record. If that sounds like a weak excuse in an industry that counts LP sales in eight digits, then you should have been up at Patrick last week.

Backed by his six-member E Street Band, Bruce Springsteen was the original American punk, bursting across the stage from the very beginning, exhorting an enthusiastic audience with every gesture and look to feel the urgency of his music.

With the exception of saxophonist and partner in crime Clarence Clemons, the E Streeters looked like the cheap hoods and motorcycle gypsies that Springsteen writes and sings about. Guitarist Steve Van Zandt, with long black hair under a beret and a gold earring sparkling at the side of his sallow face, grinned out over the crowd and leaned into his microphone to back up Bruce on choruses. Above him on a riser, and decked out in black leather pants and jacket, Roy Bittan played an equally black and shiny grand piano, often backing Springsteen alone during the quieter interludes. Also grim and competent were Gary Tallent on bass and Danny Federici on organ.

Clarence Clemons, the only black E Streeter, stood out imposingly at stage left in a white three-piece suit. Clarence has been a veteran of Bruce Springsteen's career ever since its inception in 1971. His horn playing is shatteringly crisp and soaring, and his presence onstage provides a strong contrast to Springsteen's rock and roll antics.

At Patrick Gym, Clemons moved to share some of the crowd's adoration, jumping down onto the lowered front of the stage and kneeling before the outstretched hands to blow furious solos. Throughout the concert, his breaks added vital soul to the Thunder Road, stock car imagery of Springsteen's music.

But it's Bruce and his antics that gets people to sleep out on cold cement to buy concert tickets that sell out his shows on the first day of sales.

Standing five feet, eight inches in black boots and tight black pants and jacket, Bruce Springsteen does it all for his audience, leaping up onto speaker cabinets easily, ripping and tearing at his Fender guitar and hanging limply from his mike stand crying out desperate lyrics about his heroes of the backstreets.

Springsteen and partner in crime Steve Van Zandt

Photos by Rick Ames

What makes it all work, what makes it believable, is that everything Springsteen does seems as natural to him as eating and sleeping. He can stand tall on a P.A. cabinet and tear his shirt open, cloth shredding and buttons flying, without it appearing totally ridiculous. He sings savagely, the E Streeters burning away behind him and stares about wildly for an instant and then plunges into the audience with the microphone, reaching up out of a sea of bodies to keep singing to the back of the hall.

After his visit with the first five rows, he held the Gym enthralled. From the top of the bleachers, to the front of the stage, Bruce Springsteen was playing to ardent fans. He offered them a complete range of his material, concentrating on songs from his new Darkness at the Edge of Town LP during the first set. After a twenty minute intermission, he came back to punk out with a tune by Robert Gordon and a Patti Smith hit, "The Night Belongs to Lovers." But the best of it was the pure Springsteen.

Off his album The Wild, the Innocent and the E Street Shuffle, Springsteen chose the song "Rosalita" to finish his second set. With the audience loudly joining in the chorus, Springsteen pushed himself to higher and higher extremes, leaping and kicking and cavorting on the stage, dancing next to Clemons and then falling down on his knees playing ferocious lead guitar.

What he does worked for giants like Little Richard and Chuck Berry before him, and Springsteen is determined to make it work again. After a forced retirement from the stage for three years, he's making his comeback the hard way, playing an exhaustive eight month tour. With eighty-plus shows under his belt, two sets at UVM might have been enough, but following "Rosalita," he made three encores with the E Streeters, returning the second time to slam out a medley of hits from Sixties, one after another: "Devil with the Blue Dress on," "Good Golly, Miss Molly," "C. C. Ryder," and "Oh, Jenny, Jenny."

Finally, drained and exalted, Bruce Springsteen made it off the stage for good, while the audience stood up and cheered under full house lights. Nearly midnight, the concert had been a success.

Shows like his demand the support of a band like the E Streeters, (all old friends of Springsteen) as well as a crew of expert sound and light technicians, but there's no question that Springsteen's personal energy and sheer enthusiasm are what made Saturday night what it was. When he screams out "I'm a prisoner of rock and roll,... and you're committed for life!" Springsteen finally captures the dirty, gritty essence of his own seamy American heritage.

Bruce Springsteen is one hundred percent a performer, and at Patrick Gym on Saturday night, he gave it all.

"...Bruce Springsteen was the original American punk, bursting across the stage from the very beginning, exhorting an enthusiastic audience with every gesture and look to feel the urgency of his music."

TPI EXPRESS
24 MAIN ST. WINOOSKI
655-3005 655-0977

...FAST, FREE DELIVERY!
also 23 Park St. Essex Jct. 879-6333

In-House Pitchers of Draft only 50¢ with purchase of a large pizza
Fresh Whole Wheat Pizza upon request

John Wayne, Honorary Crusade Chairman.

Maybe we'll cure cancer without your help, but don't bet your life on it.

The way it stands today, one American out of four will someday have cancer. That means it will strike some member in two out of three American families.

To change those statistics we have to bring the promise of research to everyday reality. And to expand our detection program and techniques. And that takes money. Lots of money. Money we won't have—unless you help us.

The American Cancer Society will never give up the fight. Maybe we'll find the answers even without your help. But don't bet your life on it.

American Cancer Society

Unpredictable Weather

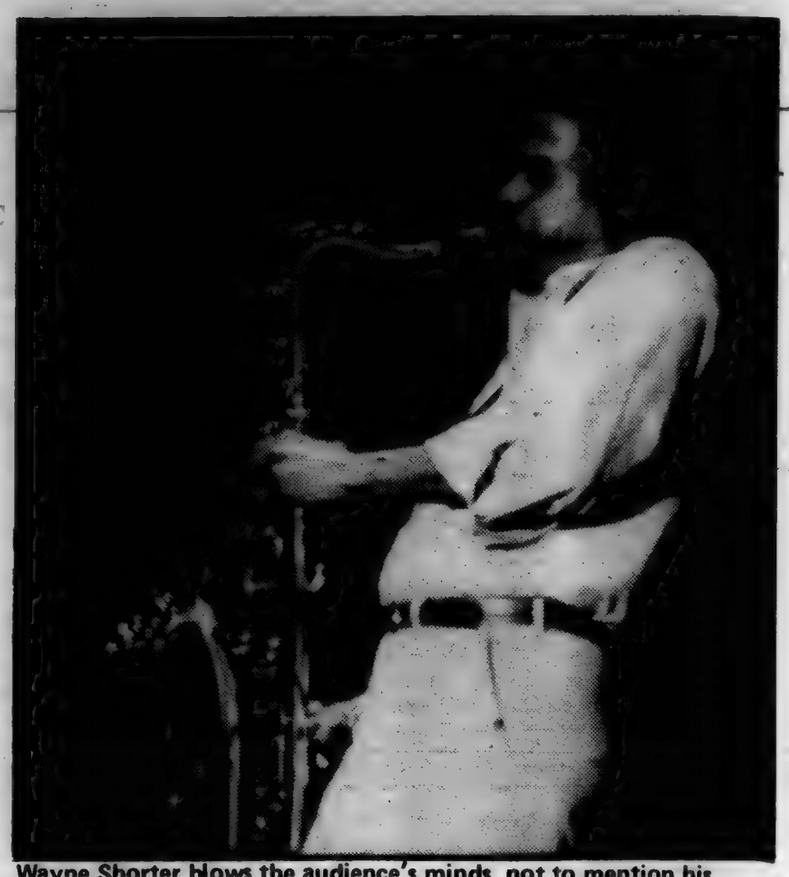
By Diane Greene



For a November evening it was unusually temperate outside Middlebury's Memorial Field House and for a general admission affair the crowd was equally as mild. There were no aggressive line-pushers that make the patient paranoid, and the security hyper. People waited with comaraderie while anticipating Weather Report's first appearance in Vermont.

Weather Report's performance last Thursday was spectacular — with consistent craftsmanship and freshness they were as much a delight as the 60 degree evening air.

Weather Report has been evolving along with their jazz sound since they began in 1973 and now nearly six years and seven records later they have not stopped. Just as their percussionist has changed with each album, so has their sound — Weather Report simply defies definition. Composer-musicians Wayne Shorter and Joseph Zawinul have held this band together without holding them down. Their very name, Weather Report, explains their sound — unpredictable, electric, and natural.

The crowd was seated on the freshly shellacked chairs while a dynamic classical piece marched to its climax when the lights went out. Weather Report was about to begin and the crowd turned as intense and silent as a cliff diver on the verge of his plunge. Zawinul stirred up a synthesizer concoction of rhythmic hoots and a steel drum melody that conjured up a sense of the tropics. The prelude was over and the rest joined in for a stunning rendition of "Black Market."

Zawinul, with his forever-present multi-colored cap and fiendish grin, played his polyphonic synthesizer with command and joy. Jaco Pastorius, the most talked about bass player in the jazz world, joined in laying down the pulsating beat with ease while his linky body strutted with as much funk as superfly. Peter Erskin, the newest drummer who previously played with Maynard Ferguson, was the highlight of this number. His speed, dynamics and sensitivity to changes in beat resembled Billy Cobham.

Wayne Shorter blows the audience's minds, not to mention his saxophone. Photos by Patricia McGerald

Stormy winds and waves then oozed from the stage and the ominous sounds of Pastorius' bass blended with a heavy, even tempered drum. Then Shorter "the chameleon" shot out the clean, sharp sounds of his shining soprano saxophone, playing a tune from their Mysterious Traveller album, "Scarlet Woman." Shorter doesn't simply play the sax, but describes himself through the sound of a horn. The renascent quality of his style was salient and succinct.

Each member gave a solo that illuminated and personified the hybrid quality of this jazz group. Zawinul led the way with a snappy boogy-woogy tune then transformed into an entertaining trip through the sound of his synthesizer. Pastorius, dressed in red from head to toe, gave a solo that swept the crowd away. Using three sound devices, Pastorius' sound tickled and surprised the senses. His bass playing was harmonic, fluid, and mystical. The harmonics of Pastorius' bass playing created a melodic and percussive sound. The variety of sounds he got off his Fender bass compensated for the fact that there was no percussionist with him. Shorter stepped into and gave a clean, peppy old time jazz show that made the crowd go wild. Erkstin came next with a whippy solo that explored every avenue of his enormous drum set up with

(continued on page 37)

Keyboard player Joe Zawinul

Beyond the Stereotypes

An Interview With 'Weather Report'

By Charles Frazier
Special to the Cynic

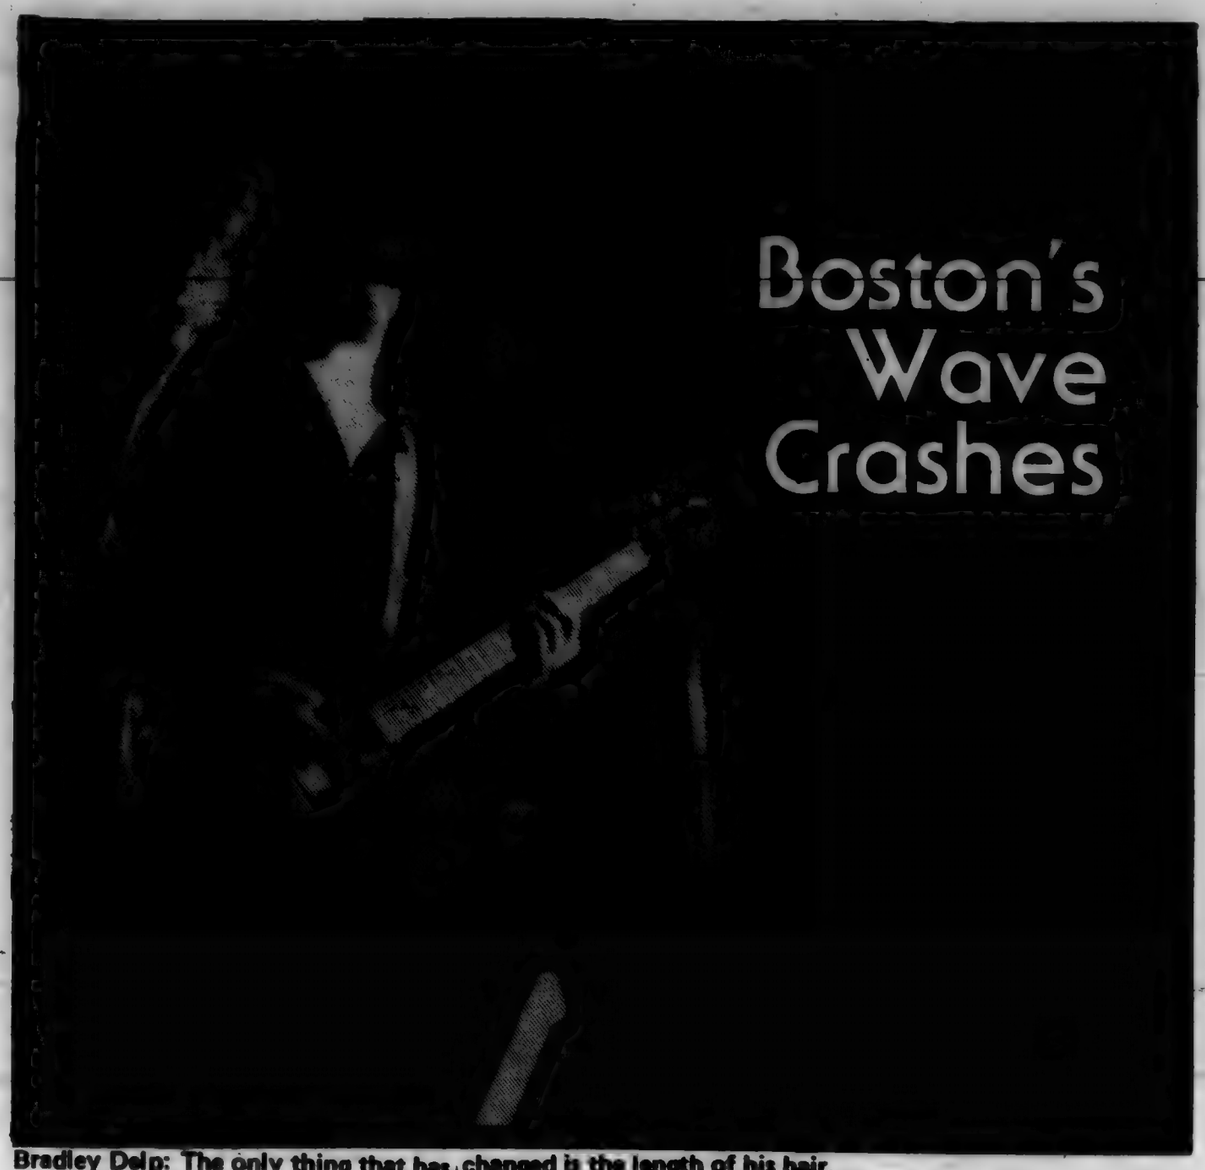
"Where's Middlebury?" asked Joseph Zawinul scanning his soup coaster with a map of Vermont printed on it. "We're in Burlington, right?" To be with Weather Report in the building where state weather forecasts originate seemed a bit too coincidental, but there I was in the airport cafeteria, talking to them over Heineken's and soup, as they changed over from plane to car for the trip to Middlebury.



The band was in high spirits from their flight over the beautiful countryside on an untypically sunny Vermont fall day. Drummer Peter Erskine had been here before with Maynard Ferguson for two earlier jazz festivals, and would be playing before his brother from Brattleboro the next night. For the others, it was their first time in Vermont, one stop on their World Tour '78, which took them to Europe and the Far East for five weeks each, before their present ten week tour of the States.

Ironically, it was in Ferguson's band that the founding fathers of Weather Report; keyboardist extraordinaire Joseph Zawinul and saxophonist Wayne Shorter, first met 20 years ago. "Newspapers are always giving Ferguson credit for "discovering" us," Zawinul said, "but it was just a gig. Besides, he obviously didn't know what he had!"

In searching for a name, Shorter was trying to think of something people heard every day, like "Six O'Clock News." "When Wayne threw out Weather Report, we knew it was right; we didn't want it to exemplify our music... people have always got to stick a label on things so they know what to do with them, like white people who call black people's music 'jazz.'"

The band would like to rip off all the various labels like jazz and fusion, which have been attached to their music. Bassist Jaco Pastorius pointed out that they had been voted No. 1 instrumental group, not No. 1 jazz group in Playboy's music poll. Their "Birdland" had challenged "Star Wars Theme" for best song in the Grammy Awards contest.

(continued on page 36)

Bradley Delp: The only thing that has changed is the length of his hair.

By Bruce Vielmetti

The biggest difference between Boston '76 and Boston '78 is probably the length of Bradley Delp's hair; it looks as though he hasn't touched it since their first LP. With the help of Delp's longer locks and another album of songs, Boston played for a full house at Dartmouth's Rupert C. Thompson Arena last Friday night.

A third of the seats were still empty when Sammy Hagar warmed up a cool audience at 8:15. The Dartmouth crowd was more interested in warming up at the four story bonfire blazing away on the central green. Hagar had some rockin' good songs, an overdose of stage energy and a strong, wide-ranged voice. If he had dropped the Ted Nugent act and worn out riffs, he might have outdrawn the bonfire.

After a fifty minute intermission, "the hottest band in the galaxy" landed at ten minutes to ten. The first spotlight revealed Tom Scholz creating an intricate introduction on his gold Les Paul and massive effects box. The rest of the group appeared as they began "Rock and Roll Band." By then, the bonfire must have gone out, because all the seats and several hundred standing room spaces were filled. The band went right on into "It's Easy," "Peace of Mind," "The Journey," and "Don't Look Back," the title cut from their new album.

The lighting and theatrics had been pretty plain up to this point. But Boston gave a more "show" effort with "More Than a Feeling." Another slow and involved guitar introduction by Scholz brought on a rising-sun lighting effect from behind the band, an orange glow that brightened right up until the rest of the group started in with the song.

Unfortunately, things sounded a little amateurish between songs: "Uh, that was our first single, as you probably remember, now we're going to do our new single," and "You people wanna rock now? You ready for some smokin'?" The atmosphere was a little passive up to that point. So they lit into "Smokin'" with the most punch they had shown all evening.

In the middle of "Smokin'" was Boston's biggest attempt at stage effects and enthusiasm. The stage blackened, then slowly and dimly relit as smoke billowed all over from under the equipment. On the huge church organ erected at the back of the stage, Scholz played an eerie solo like something out of "The Phantom of the Opera." Indeed, all you could see was a high collared black cape over the musician's back. Scholz played to a climax that connected the interlude to the main part of "Smokin'." Then, just as the rest of the band crashed back into the beat, Scholz turned, stood up, and leaped down from the church organ, with the cape flying off behind him and joined the song at the electric piano right on cue.

From an extended intro (Boston is big on these) to their last song, "Long Time," Scholz performed his electronic wizardry act – a Star Wars guitar solo that he played by shaking the instrument and waving his hands over it, while playing the effects box with his foot. It's an impressive little bit, but it hasn't evolved at all in two years.

Following "Long Time," a steady, but less than thunderous applause brought Boston back for three encores. They were almost out of songs, but found "Something – About – You," "Party," and "Don't Be Afraid" to fill the order. By the end, everyone had loosened up a bit and was rocking along and clapping, even the older fellow next to me who had never heard Boston and only came because he got free tickets for being curator at the Dartmouth muceum.

The show was sold out, including a few hundred standing room tickets. A security guard estimated the crowd at over 5000. Dartmouth handled the event extremely well: ushers in dresses, coats and ties serviced each seating section. A well-dressed Dartmouth crowd requires little policing and control. There was little if any smoking or drinking, and everyone seemed very content to remain seated. That's not to say it was a dead crowd; maybe that's just the Dartmouth way of having a good time.

Boston played for an hour and a half. The set was predictable and un-inspired, yet good enough to get heads bopping. Tom Scholz's guitar and occasional keyboard playing carried most of the numbers. Mostly, he stood at the left front edge of the stage like Darth Vader – tall, dressed in black, with little movement or expression, only a look of concentration. Yet even with the concentration, the live Boston didn't quite match the slick perfection of their studio sound, but then, that's live music for you!

Delp's vocals strained in several spots, and a few times he had to drop an octave to stay in control. But he got help from Scholz and rhythm guitarist Barry Goudreau on lots of the peak choruses.

As all the blazers, sweaters, sport coats and Dartmouth jackets walked out to Hanover night spots and frat parties, I heard a general concensus of satisfaction. Boston had delivered their processed rock without any disturbing or exciting surprises. For $9.50, everyone had a "nice" time, and they didn't even have to sweat.

Tom Scholz: Predictable and uninspired.

Photos by Jim Otto

WE'RE WHERE YOU'RE AT!

ON WILLISTON ROAD

Monday-Thursday 8:30-5:00
Fridays til 6:00

Chittenden TRUST COMPANY

Member FDIC

What's forecast for your day? Dial New York direct!

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Aries (March 22-April 20) | 1-212-936-5050 | Libra (Sept. 24-Oct. 23) | 1-212-936-5757 |
| Taurus (April 21-May 21) | 1-212-936-5151 | Scorpio (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) | 1-212-936-5858 |
| Gemini (May 22-June 21) | 1-212-936-5252 | Sagittarius (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) | 1-212-936-5959 |
| Cancer (June 22-July 23) | 1-212-936-5353 | Capricorn (Dec. 22-Jan. 20) | 1-212-936-6060 |
| Leo (July 24-Aug. 23) | 1-212-936-5454 | Aquarius (Jan. 21-Feb. 19) | 1-212-936-6161 |
| Virgo (Aug. 24-Sept. 23) | 1-212-936-5656 | Pisces (Feb. 20-March 21) | 1-212-936-6262 |

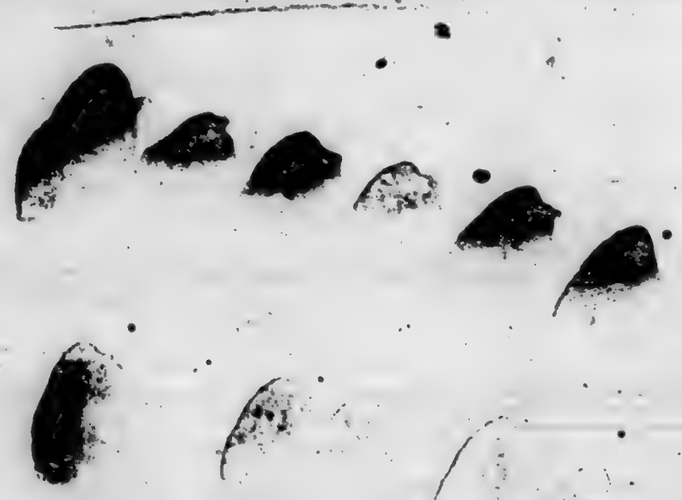
Hear your horoscope in a minute.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Mon.-Fri. | 8 a.m.-5 p.m. | 46¢ |
| Sun.-Fri. | 5 p.m.-11 p.m. | 29¢ |
| Sun.-Fri. | 11 p.m.-8 a.m. | 18¢ |
| Sun. | 8 a.m.-5 p.m. | 18¢ |
| Sat. | All day | 18¢ |



Tax not included

New England Telephone

*A service mark of Horoscopes-By-Phone, Inc.

Lynda McINTYRE Joe PHELAN

Painting, Drawing, Fabric Design.
Colburn Gallery, Williams Hall, UVM Nov. 13-21

HOW TO KEEP THE LIFE OF THE PARTY ALIVE.

For free information, write to:
DRUNK DRIVER, Box 2345
Rockville, Maryland 20852

Brad Davis as Billy Hayes, and Norbert Weisser, as his friend Erich, do a form of yoga to relieve prison boredom.

The Hollywood Express

By Scott Sartorius

Many of the movie critics who have reviewed Midnight Express disliked it – or at least tried to find fault with it. It's partially because the movie deals in prison violence and homosexuality, and that some find such topics taboo or distasteful. But it's also because the movie departs from being a documentary, or totally non-fiction, and employs a little "Hollywood" to make the story more palatable.

Richard Schickel, of Time magazine, delivered perhaps the lowest blow to director Alan Parker: "What we have here is one of the ugliest sadomasochistic trips, with heavy homosexual overtones, that our thorougly nasty movie industry has yet produced." Other reviewers have been quick to point out that Billy Hayes, the character depicted in the movie, never had a girlfriend in real life even though a substantial portion of the movie is devoted to this romance.

These reviewers seem angrily obsessed with either the Sam Peckinpah-like violence or the departure from total truth in search of box office receipts.

While it is true that not all critics disliked Midnight Express, and that in fact some gave it highest praise (Rex Reed called Express "a stupendous achievement... a colossal motion picture"), those who lowered their sights for the kill did so with blinders on. Express is not a pretty movie, but it's not based on a pretty story. It's not a documentary, but then if it was, no one would go see it.

The thing about Midnight Express is that a typical young American tourist, played by Brad Davis, tries to get two kilos of hash out of Turkey and gets caught. He pays $200 for the hash and has little intention of trying to make any "big money" on it – nor could he. You may have to be nuts to try to smuggle drugs, but given the right time and circumstance, such an act could run through the mind of any hash-lover. What's worse is that the Turkish government decides it wants to make an "example" out of Hayes by giving him a 30-year sentence for smuggling, versus a five-year one for possession. Thus, typical tourist Hayes gets screwed and there's absolutely nothing he can do but wait 30 years or catch the "midnight express." What happens between the time he is captured and the time he finally gets out is based largely on fact. That is, the abhorrent treatment rendered prisoners in Turkish jails.

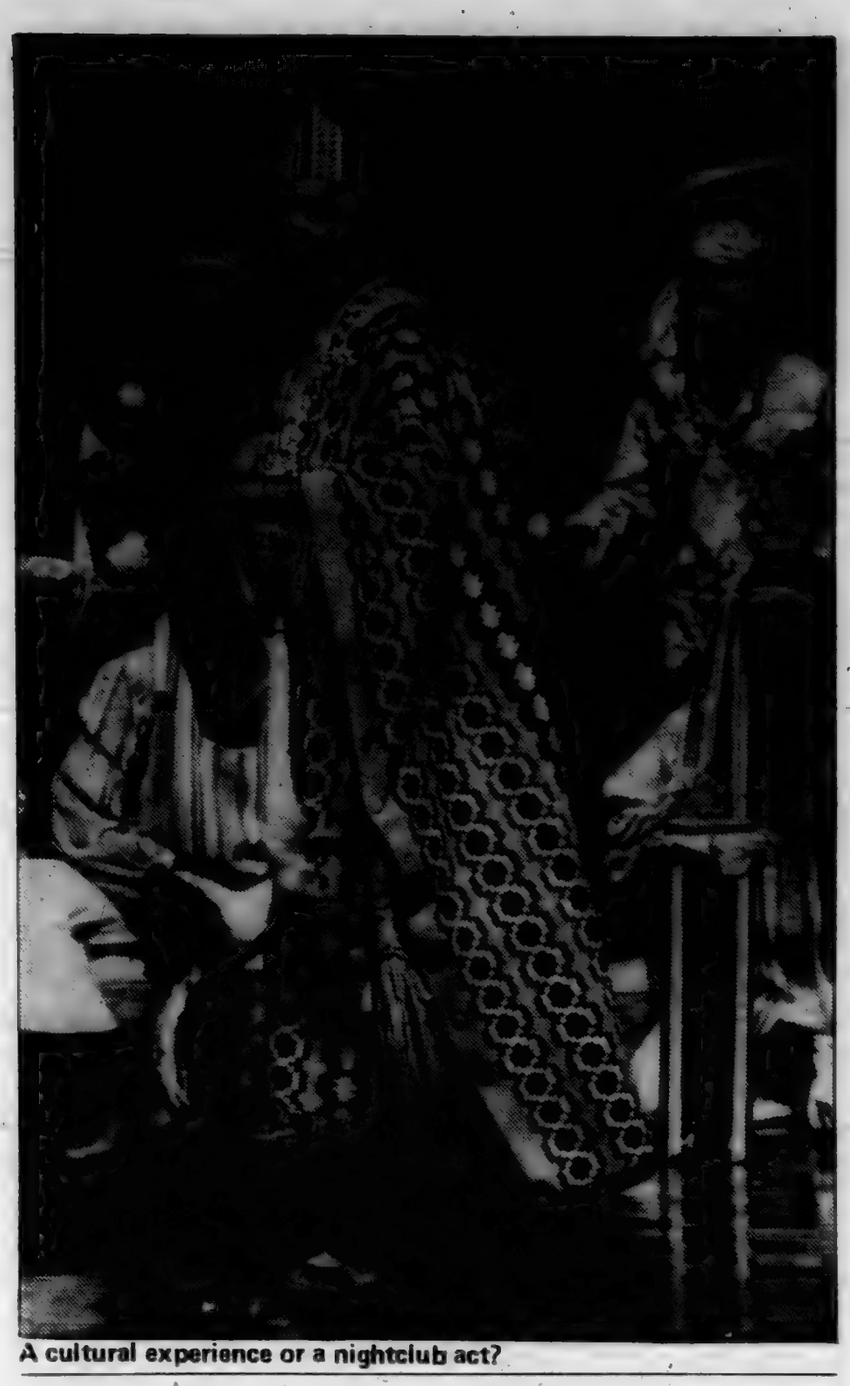
Midnight Express is so powerful, so gripping and so important a movie, any criticism leveled against it is far out-weighed by the movie's portrayal of a corrupt, inhuman system of justice. It seems insignificant that the real Hayes didn't have a girlfriend at the time, or that he never denounced Turkey during his final trial, or that he never tore out a prison enemy's tongue, when it is all compared to the mental and physical anguish he suffered. Express is beefed up with these ficticious instances, and even though advertising for the movie calls it "the true story of Billy Hayes," the bulk of the film depicts true experience. There is one caveat here, however, in that the movie escape differs from the real-life escape. This latter fact is disturbing because a scene leading to Hayes' final exit is somewhat far-fetched. The fact remains, however, that Hayes did escape.

Forgetting all of the violence and "messages" brought out in Express, the cinematography and music are marvelous. The filming was done in Malta, a 95-square-mile British island in the Mediterranean, rather than in Istanbul, the site of Hayes' incarceration (as if they would let a film crew do such a movie). But the crowd shots, the buildings, the hazy sunsets and use of light are all excellent. The soundtrack, too, has its merits from the heartbeat during the most tense scenes to tunes we'll probably soon be hearing in discos.

At any rate, realize that Express is not completely a true story, but don't let that fact deter from what the movie is really all about. After all, it was Midnight Express being shown at the Cannes Film Festival that led to the beginning of a prisoner exchange between the U.S. and Turkey.

GO HOME any weekend BY BUS!

VERMONT TRANSIT LINES



BRUCE SPRINGSTEEN
"Darkness on the Edge of Town"
Featuring the single, "Badlands"

"Columbia," are trademarks of CBS Inc. © 1978 CBS Inc.

Available at Upstairs Records for $4.99

A cultural experience or a nightclub act?

Shake Your Boom Boom

By Curtis Haynes

Usually, the tourists travel thousands of miles to see the natives, but on Saturday night, the Lane Series brought the Trinidad Folk Festival gyrating, singing, and drumming through two hours of good vibes at Memorial Auditorium.

With a refreshingly vivid array of music, costumes, and dances, the native artists displayed the warmth and color of their sun-drenched Caribbean isle.

As descendants of African slaves, the inhabitants of Trinidad have not lost the keen sense of rhythm and limber, erotic movements. The result was a performance as much cultural as artistic, a rare entertainment for Burlingtonians.

Before the curtains were up, the drums began pounding, heavy and eerie. When the curtain rose, first one then four dancers appeared, bathed in a mystical red light. These dancers set the quality of the night with spirited, energetic patterns highlighted by remarkable synchronization. The graceful quick action earned rousing applause after each piece. Backing up the dancing was a battery of conga and bongos beating out a rapid rhythm with uncanny precision.

The much heralded steel band was disappointing because it failed to live up to its publicity. The nine member band suffered both from the poor acoustics of the hall and some poorly chosen tunes. The accompanying organ drowned out most of the steel band and the songs were what one would expect to hear at a skating rink.

The vocal numbers were not well projected through the hall and the singers and backup guitarists at times seemed more like a night club act or a warm-up for the winter tourist season. Still, the Calypso songs were a welcome change from the ordinary. The native folk songs were sung in French Creole patois, unintelligible to the English-speaking audience, except for the call to "Shake your boom boom."

Founded in 1971 by artistic director and choreographer Aubrey Adams, the Trinidad Folk Festival was the only Caribbean group to appear at the Royall Festival Hall in London. Following that success, the Festival reaffirmed its reputation in Paris and in a sell-out tour of the United States and Canada in 1974.

The foremost performance of the night was the famous limbo. Three women jumped on stage waving torches like voodoo witches. Then the limbo kings slid, bent, and slithered their way two feet above the floor past barriers of arms, legs, and fire. Everyone was a winner. The limbo is a competitive dance brought to Trinidad over a century ago from West Africa. Travel brochures emphasize that no one leaves Trinidad without witnessing the Limbo. It's worth the trip.

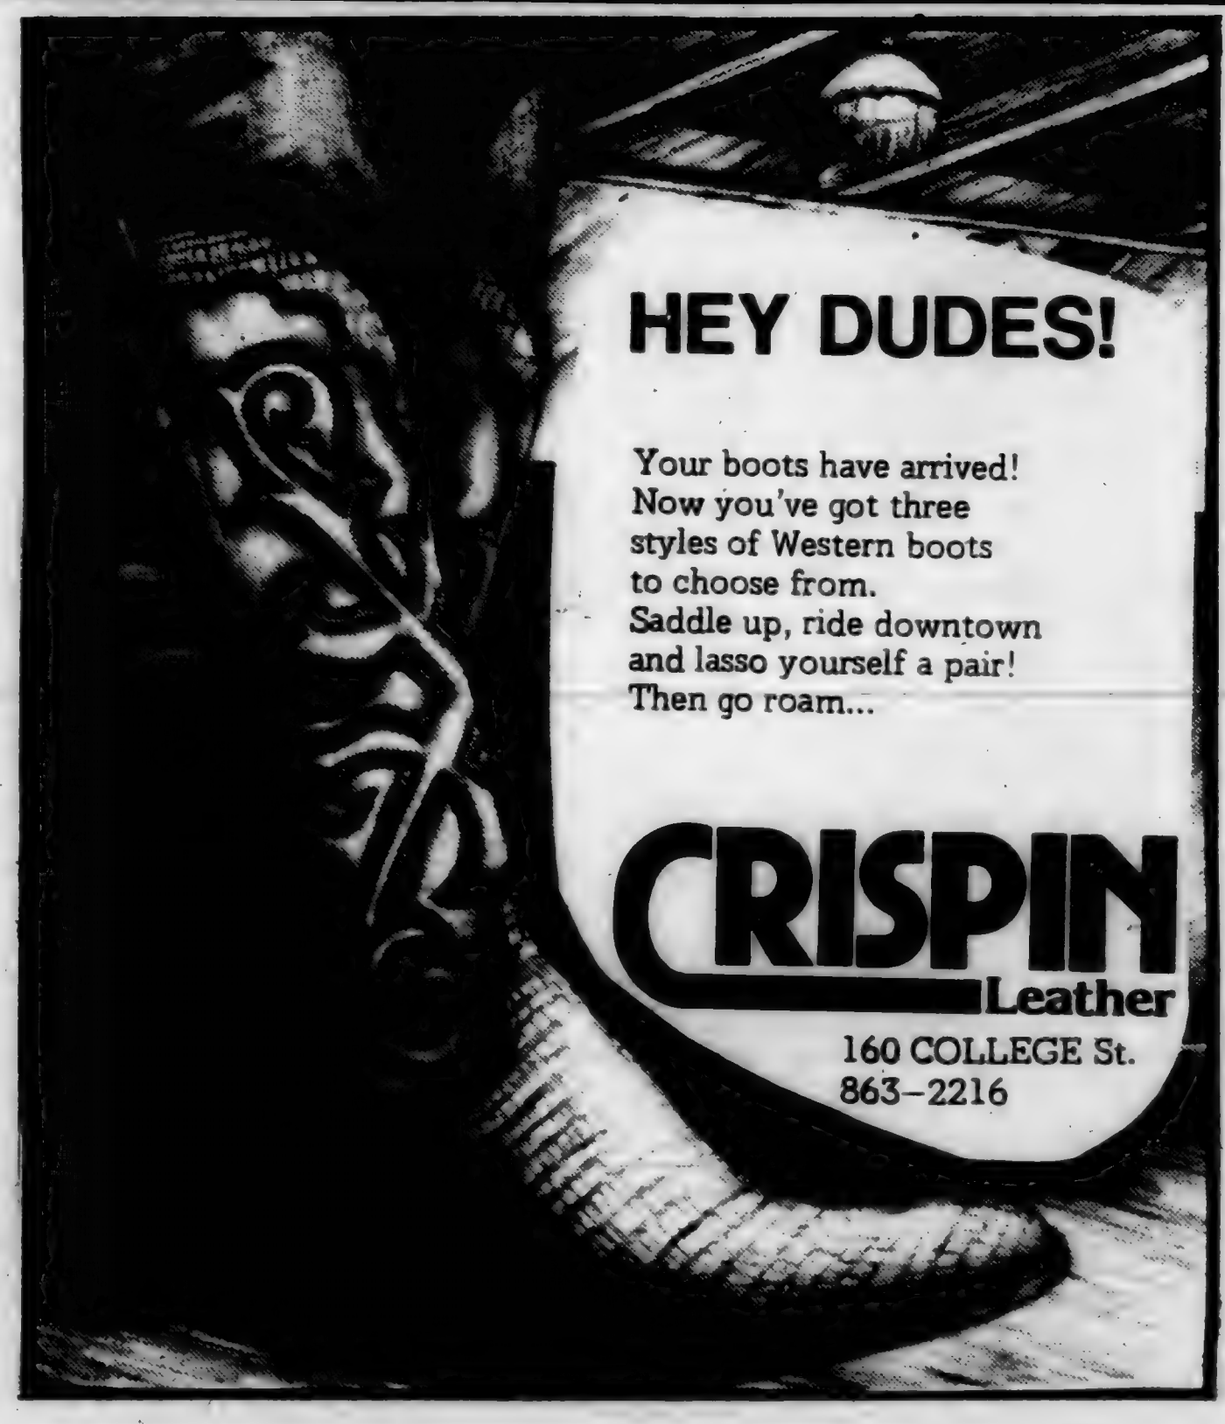
Traditional warrior dancers dressed in loin cloths, masks and brandishing spears raised nervous excitement and did the wild dance of men fighting with sticks to win the love of a woman.

In the Carnival Finale, the gayest, brightest costumes were donned to simulate the annual fun-filled riot that is Trinidad's "greatest show on earth." Characters with huge head-dresses strutted like peacocks and whirling rainbow swirls flashed across the stage. The audience was transposed to another time, another place. Even when the lights were turned on to go home, the dancers refused to stop; their art is their way of life.

doolin's

SALADS STEWS SOUPS SANDWICHES

Serving Food 'Till 11:00 PM



159 Main St. Under the Green Awning — Next to the Flynn

warm
warm
warm

ben & jerry's homemade

HOT HOMEMADE SOUPS!
LOTS OF HOT DRINKS!

CORNER of ST. PAUL & COLLEGE STREETS • BURLINGTON • 862-9620

HEY DUDES!

Your boots have arrived!
Now you've got three styles of Western boots to choose from.
Saddle up, ride downtown and lasso yourself a pair!
Then go roam...

CRISPIN Leather

160 COLLEGE St.
863–2216

Gentlemans Night

Wednesday Night

75c Drinks 40c Drafts

what ale's you

152 St. Paul St. Burlington 862-1364

Ladies Delight

Prime Rib and Seafood Specials Including Fresh

Lobster to Satisfy Even the Heartiest Appetite

Classical

Classical lutenist and guitarist Julian Bream

Julian Bream in the Face of Danger

By Vaune Davis

Of all the musicians who have fought against the acoustically deadening qualities of Memorial Auditorium, classical lutenist and guitarist Julian Bream has to be one of the most perseverant and successful. During his Lane Series concert Thursday night, Bream was an example of both style and substance in the face of imminent musical death, phased not in the least by the chorus of fire engines, buses, and hissing pipes that accompanied him during his performance.

Memorial Auditorium is about as soundproof as it is cozy, and it is a tribute to Bream that he was still able to give an engaging solo performance in such an architectural nightmare. Imagine Bream, gracefully elaborating on Newsidler's "Old German Airs and Dances," each more intricately beautiful than the last, only to be joined by the obnoxious roar of a bus changing gears as it charges up Main Street. Indeed, it was an experience not unlike being woken up from a pleasant dream by a blender full of nails.

Nevertheless, Bream plugged on, seemingly oblivious to his competitors, and managed to play with the engaging simplicity he is known for. He was all concentration during the first part of the show, bending over his lute and gracefully reviving the all but lost art of renaissance music. The lute was one of the most popular instruments during that period, and Bream is largely responsible for bringing back the instrument and its quiet, elegant music which has been virtually ignored for 300 years.

Bream is no technical wizard but his music is at all times clean, clear, and colorful. Although the sound did not carry as far as it deserved, Bream's elaborations on John Dowland's old Medieval folk ballads and skillful interpretations of the difficult rhythmic patterns in Adrian Denss' "Fantasia-Allemande," could still be appreciated.

The second half of the concert featured a variety of pieces for both classical and contemporary guitar – from the rigid structure of Johann S. Bach's "Suite in E Major" to three wildly esoteric tone poems. Bream ended with some selections from Isaac Albeniz's "Suite Espagnol" which was the most expressive piece he played that evening. The "Granada" was a serenade that captured the romance of Spain in a simple composition while "Cadiz" was more dynamic, sounding like an elegant circus theme. The "Sevilla," however, was accompanied by the wailing sirens of fire engines leaving the station around the corner and backed by a joyous chorus of hissing pipes in the corners of the auditorium. Bream's concentration was, to say the least, admirable.

With true dignity, Bream returned for a well-deserved encore. He was able to leave the audience on a pleasant note with another quiet, stylish piece by Bach, mercifully unaccompanied by the atonal spirits of Memorial Auditorium.

"Memorial Auditorium is about as soundproof as it is cozy, and it is a tribute to Bream that he was still able to give an engaging solo performance in such an architectural nightmare."

Photo by Mike Pickman

UVM's Family Album in the Colburn Gallery

By John Payne

Going to the snapshot exhibit at the Francis Colburn Gallery is like browsing through an enormous family photograph album. Hundreds of amateur photos are on display, loosely organized into classic album themes — individual and group portraits, family trips, pets, and a large miscellaneous section.

The positioning of the portraits is effective. They stare out at the viewer from one wall like the faces in some stranger's collection of his family's pictures. Some are intriguing, evoking emotion as though you might want to meet them. Others, however, are best trapped within the square, white frames.

The exhibit includes a color section of UVM student photos, including pictures of dorm life, parties, summer trips, and life in the country. Next to these more recent photos, is a section of older black and white shots, most of them posed portraits from another era. Some of the fashions from the twenties and the fifties look like Halloween costumes, and it is unfortunate that this part of the exhibit couldn't be saved for a historical document.

A favorite part of any family album is the exotic landscape section from family vacations. Since this section comes from a very large family, there are pictures from all over the world.

In the miscellaneous section there are some particularly unusual specimens. Fogg Museum urinals lined in a row, mannequins posed like nudists in a crowded storage room, a cocktail party, two rhinoceroses copulating for a captive audience, and two children smiling impishly behind a No Trespassing sign.

If one takes his time, there are gems to be found. Soliciting hundreds of photographs to make a multi-artist exhibit is an enormous task and should be continued, only with specific subject matter in mind. Individual artists have done specialized exhibits of subjects as bizarre as cows, pigs, people with drinks in hand, overloaded trash cans, and even fresh manure piles and three-legged dogs. It would be interesting, and perhaps the show would have a bit more continuity, if snapshots of specific subjects were solicited.

Nevertheless, it is definitely worthwhile to drop by the Colburn Gallery and browse through the pictures. Although there are so many that it is hard to sift them all out, each photo has a unique, personal quality that is amplified by the title the photographers have given them. The snapshots may range in quality from mediocre to outstanding, but they have one thing in common — they all reflect the UVM community's culture.

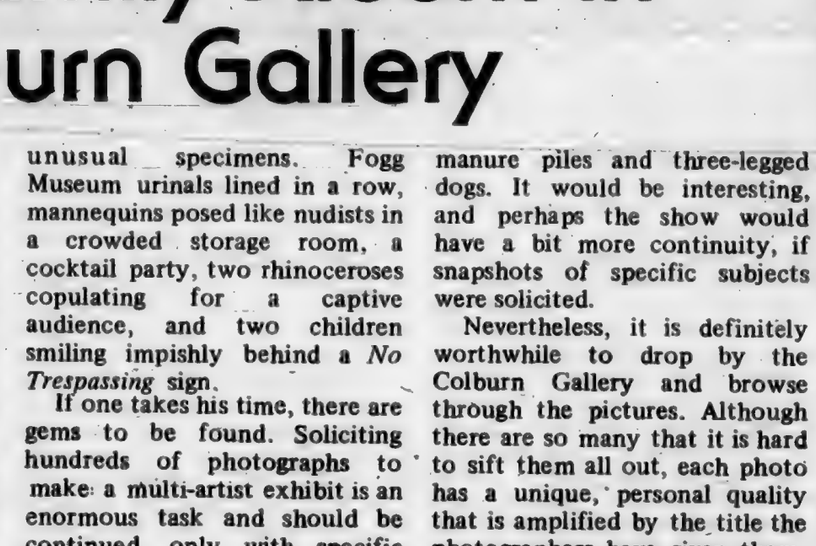

Photo by Bob Gale

There are gems to be found: (Top) "Love at First Sight;" (Above) Three water nymphettes; and (Below) UVM Student Photos- God knows what you'll find there

LEVI'S

Men's LEVI'S
Corduroys

$12.64
Reg. to $17

For 4 Days Only!

Sale Ends Monday
November 13th

It's an experience
MAGRAMS
DOWNTOWN BURLINGTON

Dress up your holiday season... we have many dresses in assorted styles

ACT TWO
ninety seven Church St. phone: 658-2050

Ariel

1978 is here !

The 1978 Yearbook is on sale NOW at the Ariel office in downstairs Billings.

The 1978 Ariel is bigger and better than ever; it captures a year.

cost - $5.00

Also - orders are now being taken for the 1979 Ariel which will be available in May 1979.

Beyond the Stereotypes

Continued From Page 30

"We're the leader in a field of one," explained Zawinul, "...because we're totally individualistic. There's no competition because we're not competing. Fortunately people like what we're doing. As far as polls go, we're the 'winningest' band around, but we just want to be accepted as artists, doing what we want to, and not what someone else wants."

"Right from the first day we told Columbia we wanted total control," Zawinul continued, "We even threw executives out of recording sessions. Now we give them the masters for a listen after we're done." With Heavy Weather turning gold, after 500,000 units sold, Mysterious Traveller and Black Market pushing 400,000, and their latest Mr. Gone selling 200,000 during its first week, Weather Report isn't likely to get much opposition to what they want to do.

Zawinul said they had not anticipated the success of "Birdland" or anything else they'd ever done. "We know what we do is good because we put a lot of thinking, feeling, and work into it," he stated. "When an album's finished, we've done our thing; then it's up to the people." A live album is the next project the band hopes to shoot for, and their present tour is being recorded for that purpose.

Their latest single, Zawinul's "The Pursuit of the Lady with the Feathered Hat," (backed by Pastorius' River People) is the basis for the wild cover artwork of their album Mr. Gone. Zawinul's wife created the design for their album Black Market by cutting the covers of old N.Y. Times Magazines. "The artwork becomes an extension of where the music's at," commented Zawinul. The name of the title tune of their latest album came about when Pastorius muttered, "Mr. Goooonnnee!!" to Shorter, who was playing a strange riff. Zawinul heard the name and it stuck.

When asked how they write their tunes, their response was familiar: "It's totally individualistic. Our music has feeling because we have feeling. We're fortunate in that we can both compose and play, not just one or the other like most people."

As to why they had gone through so many drummers, Zawinul and Pastorius offered justification, saying "...they were all fantastic drummers for what we were doing at the time, but when you need a certain thing, you have to go out and find it. When our music changed, they weren't quick enough to pick it up." "We're all percussionists now," added Shorter and Pastorius, who thought a guitarist was unnecessary because of the rhythmic way in which the band played.

Though each member maintains solo ambitions, the work of Weather Report as a group comes first. Pastorius is well-known for his studio work on Joni Mitchell's Don Juan's Reckless Daughter. With Shorter and Erskine, he has recently helped her on her new album of Charles Mingus' music. He also did an album with Michele Columbe, Larry Carlton of the Crusaders, and Steven Gadd, but it has yet to find a buyer because of its high overhead. But Pastorius claimed this work was "mainly for friends, and on tunes rather than albums."

Weather Report certainly seemed to be a solid whole made greater by its parts. I hope they continue to be individualistic and non-conforming. As Zawinul put it, "We don't think about our music and what it was, is, or will be. We just do it!" No one, including the band itself, has been disappointed.

practically on campus

GAYNES SHOPPERS WORLD

open daily til 9 pm

gaynes pharmacy

★★ call us or stop by and check our discount prescription prices

★★ within easy walking distance of the university campus and infirmary

★★ fast, friendly prescription service

phone us: 863-1597

Williston Rd. So. Burlington

Calendar

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 16

EXHIBITIONS

Francis Colburn Gallery – Lynda McIntyre & Joe Thelan: Painting, drawing & fabric design.

Fleming Museum – "War!" a cross-cultural viewpoint. "The Library Furniture of H. H. Richardson." "Tools & Technology."

LECTURES

"Fill It Up Please," with Fred Powell, senior staff engineer, Simmonds Precision, 3:10 p.m., B112 Cook.

"Curriculum and Careers Available in Electrical Engineering," with Dr. Rush, 3:15 p.m., Votey Reading Room.

"1978 W.A. Tisdale Lecture," by Dr. Robert G. Petersdorf, professor and chairman of the department of medicine, Univ. of Washington in Seattle, 4 p.m., Carpenter Auditorium, Given Medical Building.

UVM Society for Parapsychological Research, guest speaker, Dr. Ronald Steffenhagen, 4:30 p.m., Memorial Lounge, Waterman.

FILMS

SA Film "Dirty Dozen," B106 Angell, 7:30 p.m. Free/ID, $.50/general.

SPECIAL ACTIVITIES

"Thanks to You," a style show to benefit the United Way, 8 p.m. Ira Allen Chapel.

PERFORMING ARTS

"The Wild Duck," by Henrik Ibsen, 8 p.m., Royall Tyler Theatre.

Lane Series – Concentus Musicus, Vienna, 8 p.m., St. Michael's Chapel, Winooski.

OTHER

Pre-enrollment, all week. 8 a.m. – 5 p.m., Marsh Lounge, Billings.

Smuggler's, Mad River & Sugarbush Ski Pass Sales, 9 a.m. – 5 p.m., Billings Lobby.

George Benson is singing more, playing less. Photo by Debbie Wollk

George Benson: Lost in the Masquerade

By Lisa Eaton

"Everything must change," sings George Benson in one of his more popular tunes, summing up his own career without even knowing it. Of course, Benson is still a professional and talented artist, but over the years he has developed other interests in music. Benson, who used to be known purely for his fine, articulate guitar playing, is now relying more on his vocals, heightening his fame as a performer, but stagnating as a musician.

In his most recent performance at Plattsburgh State College last Thursday, this point was well proven as vocal selections formed over half his repertoire.

The stage was set. Keyboards, drums, bass and rhythm guitar. Finally, the lights went out and the overwhelmed audience rose to their feet, cheering and clapping as George Benson with a smile and guitar in hand, started the night off with the title song from his newest album, Weekend in L.A. The gym suddenly became silent except for the mellifluous sound of Benson and his guitar.

The songs he played were all from his latest three albums: Weekend in L.A., In Flight, and Breezin', the three most popular to date. But anyone who may have listened to the guitar works of Benson years ago would have been disappointed. Out of the thirteen songs he played last Thursday, eight of them were sung, with only brief moments of riffs and chord progressions. Some of these songs included: "Everything Must Change," "Gonna Love You More," "The Greatest Love of All," "This Mascarade," and his most recent hit on nationwide radio, "On Broadway." Many of these songs, however, were sung with such awe and intense dynamics that the audience was captivated by his character, forgetting that his hands were being used in gestures instead of guitar playing.

Nevertheless, there were moments when Benson showed off his mastery of the guitar with songs such as "Breezin'," "Affirmation," "Nature Boy," and a previously unrecorded instrumental piece, to mention a few. But his shows are always relatively the same. Beginning with "Weekend in L.A." and ending with "On Broadway," his concerts have become so glamorous and professional that they lack any type of spontaneity.

Seeing a great artist such as Benson for the first time is an uplifting experience well worth the trip to Plattsburgh. But those who have seen him before will find another performance by George Benson disappointing. That magic feeling that used to characterize the man's music is just not there.

Unpredictable Weather

Continued From Page 30

never-ending energy. All solos were interesting both technically and visually.

Weather Report featured their more contemporary work, playing a number of cuts from their latest release, Mr. Gone, with an exceptional rendition of "Young and Fine." Their selection was superb with songs like "The Remark You Made," "Teen Town," "Palladium," and "River People," and it became clear that Weather Report has changed their style. They have moved from a fragile, loosely improvised sound to a zealous and more carefully directed excellence that has finally made Weather Report a cult success.

The ended their set with "Gibralta," a song of Black Market and the crowd rose immediately for a strong and well-deserved standing ovation. With as little warning as a thunderstorm in summer, Weather Report was back on stage winding out their most popular tune "Birdland." Everyone's eyes lit up, especially Zawinul's, and the energy and enjoyment that had pervaded all evening hit its peak.

Stuft Shirt

A Beef & Seafood House
at
135 PEARL ST. • BURLINGTON

featuring an extensive Lunch & Dinner Menu

MON.–TUES.
STEAK + CRAB FOR 2 – $11.95
• WEEKDAY SPECIAL •
Fresh Swordfish $4.95
• WEEKENDS •
Prime Rib $5.95
• SUNDAY SPECIAL •
Buffet Brunch $4.95
"with seconds on us" — featuring Eggs Benedict

OPEN
MONDAY-SATURDAY 11 AM-10 PM
SUNDAY 11 AM-3 PM
Master Charge & VISA Accepted

FOR RESERVATIONS & INFORMATION — 864-9544

For YOUR Convenience we're extending HOURS!

The Burlington Savings Bank is pleased to announce that new hours are now in effect.

Check below for your local branch.

| | MONDAY - THURSDAY | FRIDAY |
|---|---|---|
| MAIN OFFICE (Burlington) | | |
| Lobby | 9:00 am - 3:00 pm | 9:00 am - 6:00 pm |
| CHURCH STREET | | |
| Lobby | 9:30 am - 6:00 pm | 9:30 am - 6:00 pm |
| NORTH AVENUE | | |
| Lobby | 9:00 am - 3:00 pm | 9:00 am - 6:00 pm |
| Walk-up | 8:30 am - 9:00 am3:00 pm - 5:30 pm | 8:30 am - 9:00 am |
| WINOOSKI | | |
| Lobby | 9:00 am - 3:00 pm | 9:00 am - 6:00 pm |
| Drive-up | 8:00 am - 6:00 pm | 8:00 am - 6:00 pm |
| ESSEX JUNCTION | | |
| Lobby | 9:00 am - 3:00 pm | 9:00 am - 6:00 pm |
| Drive-up | 8:00 am - 6:00 pm | 8:00 am - 6:00 pm |
| SO. BURLINGTON (Shelburne Rd.) | | |
| Lobby | 9:00 am - 3:00 pm | 9:00 am - 6:00 pm |
| Drive-up | 8:00 am - 6:00 pm | 8:00 am - 6:00 pm |
| PINE STREET | | |
| Walk-up | 8:00 am - 6:00 pm | 8:00 am - 6:00 pm |
| Drive-up | 8:00 am - 6:00 pm | 8:00 am - 6:00 pm |
| ST. ALBANS | | |
| Lobby | 9:00 am - 3:00 pm | 9:00 am - 6:00 pm |
| Drive-up | 8:00 am - 6:00 pm | 8:00 am - 6:00 pm |

PLUS...24-hour Automatic Teller Machine Service EVERY Day

Burlington Savings Bank

Main Office
658-1810

Call free from any Vt. telephone
1-800-642-5154

Member FDIC

United Way

You're

The United Way will be on campus all next week.

United Way

Photos by
Neal Desind

The United Way

Somebody Special!

UVM volunteers act as good-will ambassadors in the Burlington Community through the medium of the office of the volunteer programs. They receive as much as they give. These United Way agencies and many more are enabled to serve the community as well as the University through your concern.

Help support the United Way by contributing to the Student Fund when volunteers come to your door.

The United Way Student Campaign begins Monday November 13 and runs through the week. There are several events benefiting the United Way which will occur during the week:

–IRA representatives will be soliciting funds in their respective dorms. The dorm which donates the most receives 2 free kegs!

–IRA is presenting the film Bonnie and Clyde starring Warren Beatty and Faye Dunaway, Nov. 17, 18, 19.

–The Greeks and the Panhel Society are sponsoring a fashion show featuring men's wear from Michael Kehoe and ladies wear from Mayfair. Ira Allen Chapel, Thursday, Nov. 16 at 8:00 p.m.

–Delta Psi – All Campus Party, November 17

Remember, you're somebody special!

Week of November 10 -16

10 Friday

EXHIBITIONS

Francis Colburn Gallery – Vicky Lowry & Jim Brown: Black & White Photographs. 9 a.m. – 5 p.m.

Fleming Museum – "War!" a cross-cultural viewpoint. "The Library Furniture of H. H. Richardson." "Tools & Technology."

Living-Learning Gallery – Anthony Sini: Paintings & Drawings, 4–8 p.m.

LECTURES

"Biochemical Studies of Cell Adhesion to an Extra-Cellular Matrix," Dr. Schwartz, B403 Given, 12 noon.

Bioengineering Seminar – "Biostatistics," Taka Ashikaga, 3:30 p.m., 224 Votey.

"Rural Minorities," Professor Nicholas Dunigelis, Dept. of Sociology, UVM, 1:10 – 2:00 p.m., Rm 216 L/LC. All are welcome.

PERFORMING ARTS

"Joseph & the Amazing Technicolor Dreamcoat." Dinner served by the Scandinavian Suite before the show, 6 p.m., 115 Commons, L/L. Cost $4.

FILMS

SA Film "Family Plot," 7, 9:30 & 12, B106 Angell. $1/ID, $1.50/general.

SPECIAL ACTIVITIES

German Folksongs for Everyone, 4 p.m., C370 L/L.

Student Health Advisory Committee Clinic, 9 a.m. – 3 p.m., North Lounge, Billings.

OTHER

Mad River, Sugarbush, & Smuggler's Ski Pass Sales, 9 a.m. – 5 p.m., Billings Lobby.

Jazz Concert – The Learning Tree presents WINDOWS, starting at 7 – 10 p.m. The unique admission is bring a bit of food to feed the band and share among the listeners. Mt. Philo Rd., Shelburne, 985-2950.

11 Saturday

EXHIBITIONS

Fleming Museum – "War!" a cross-cultural viewpoint. "The Library Furniture of H. H. Richardson." "Tools & Technology."

PERFORMING ARTS

"Joseph & the Amazing Technicolor Dreamcoat," 8 p.m., 115 Commons, L/L, $1.

WEEKLY EVENTS

Admissions Group Information Session, 10 a.m., North Lounge, Billings.

FILMS

IRA Film "Julia," 7 & 9:30 p.m., Southwick. Admission $1.

WRUV-FM presents Jimmy Cliff's "The Harder They Come." at 7, 9:30, and Midnight. It will be held at B106 Angell. Admission $1. Refreshments will be allowed.

MEETINGS

Student Trustee Seminar, 7:30 p.m., Marsh Lounge, Billings.

WORKSHOP

The pottery program and Co-op will be sponsoring a workshop with Graig Marquette, who will be speaking on and demonstrating the use of colored clays at the Living and Learning Center. Everyone is welcome and it is FREE! 9 a.m. – 4 p.m.

12 Sunday

EXHIBITIONS

Fleming Museum – "War!" a cross-cultural viewpoint. "The Library Furniture of H. H. Richardson." "Tools & Technology."

LECTURES

Virginia Satir, pioneer of Family Therapy, will present "Family Family Family," 2–5 p.m., Ira Allen Chapel. Admission $7.50. Sponsored by the Creamery Ed. Foundation.

PERFORMING ARTS

Interstate Symphonic Wind Ensemble (from N.Y., Vt., and N.H.), 3 p.m., Music Building. Admission $1.

"Joseph & the Amazing Technicolor Dreamcoat," 8 p.m., 115 Commons, L/L. $1.

The Learning Tree presents a fanciful afternoon in the country. ART EXHIBIT - 12–5 p.m. works of adults, children, teachers who participate in the Learning Tree. PUPPETRY THEATRE 12:30 – 1:30 p.m. performance and participation. SONOROUS SUNDAY 2–5 p.m. any musician, poet, singer, composer, listener who seeks a forum for exchange. Refreshments will be served. Adults $1.50, children $.75. Mt. Philo Rd., Shelburne.

FILMS

SA Film "Bill of Divorcement," B106 Angell. Free/ID, 50 cents/general.

IRA Film "Julia," 8 p.m., Southwick. Admission $1.

MEETINGS

SA Senate Meeting, 7:30 p.m., North Lounge, Billings.

SPECIAL ACTIVITIES

Photography Program, 6:30 p.m., E230-250 L/L.

Second Sunday Brunch, a lox and bagel get-together and a chance to hear Dr. Betty Boller share her personal and professional dialogues with Martin Buber. 11 a.m. L/L Dining room.

13 Monday

EXHIBITIONS

Francis Colburn Gallery – Lynda Mc Intyre and Joe Thelan: Painting, drawing & fabric design, 9–5 p.m.

Fleming Museum – "War!" a cross-cultural viewpoint. "The Library Furniture of H. H. Richardson." "Tools & Technology."

LECTURES

"Should We Confine Our Education to that which Is Measurable?" Hugh McKenzie, 7:30 p.m., Church St. Center.

Women of UVM Home Arts Group, speaker Kay Strassburg, 7:45 p.m., Memorial Lounge, Waterman.

"Technology and Style: New England Furniture, 1820–1880," Jan Seidler, curator, Museum of Fine Arts, Boston, 8 p.m., Fleming Museum.

"Women in Rural America," Professor Jennie Stoler, Dept. of Economics, UVM, 1:10–2:00 p.m., Rm 216 L/LC. All are welcome.

MEETINGS

VPIRG, 5–6:30 p.m., Conference Room C, Billings.

OTHER

Pre-enrollment, all week. 8 a.m. – 5 p.m., Marsh Lounge, Billings.

Career Spectrum in Civil Service 4 – 6 p.m., Alumni House. For information call x2010.

14 Tuesday

EXHIBITIONS

Francis Colburn Gallery – Lynda McIntyre & Joe Thelan: Painting, drawing, and fabric design. 9 – 5 p.m.

Fleming Museum – "War!" a cross-cultural viewpoint. "The Library Furniture of H. H. Richardson." "Tools & Technology."

LECTURES

"Grand Rounds," the Crisis Clinic, 4 p.m., 103 Rowell.

Writer's Workshop Program, Poetry Reading by Robert Pack, 8 p.m., John Dewey Lounge, Old Mill.

Choosing Careers, 3 p.m., B107 L/L. For sign-up and info call 656-3450.

A Buber Panel featuring Dr. Richard Sugarman, Professor of Religion speaks on "Buber as a philosophical, religious figure within Torah Judaism" and Rev. Bill Hollister, Protestant Campus Ministry, speaks on "Ripples and Reverberations and Buber." 7:30 p.m. in L/L Commons 216.

Dr. Michael Jacobson, one of the nation's foremost nutrition & health advocates, will speak on "The Politics of Food" at 8:00 p.m., Carpenter Auditorium, Given Building. Free to all.

FILMS

SA Film "Richard III," 7:30 p.m., B106 Angell, $1 for everyone.

SPECIAL ACTIVITIES

Scottish Country Dancing, 7:30 p.m. beginners, 8:30 p.m. advanced, 104 & 109 Old Mill. Questions, 863-4107 or 862-2428.

MEETINGS

Christian Science College Organization, 4:30 p.m., B102 L/L.

OTHER

Pre-enrollment, all week, 8 a.m. – 5 p.m., Marsh Lounge, Billings.

Sugarbush, Mad River & Smuggler's Ski Pass Sales, 9 a.m. – 5 p.m., Billings Lobby.

VITA Seminar: "Relaxation and Coping with Stress," Leader Grace McGrath, 7 – 10 p.m. at the Vermont Institute for Transactional Analysis, 66 Main St., Middlebury. Free.

15 Wednesday

EXHIBITIONS

Francis Colburn Gallery – Lynda McIntyre & Joe Thelan: Painting, drawing & fabric design. 9 – 5 p.m.

Fleming Museum – "War!" a cross-cultural viewpoint. "The Library Furniture of H. H. Richardson." "Tools & Technology."

LECTURES

"Director's Night," with Barry Mansfield, director of Project STAY, 5 p.m., 337 Waterman.

"Tools & Technology: America's Wooden Age," with Paul Kebabian & Dr. William Lipke, 8 p.m., Fleming Museum.

"Legal Service Availability in Rural America," Mr. David Smith, former Chittenden County Public Defender, 1:10 – 2:00 p.m., Rm 216 L/LC Commons. All are welcome.

Vermont Seminars, "The American Response to the Holocaust," by David Wyman, Professor of History, Univ. of Mass. at Amherst, 8 p.m., Benedict Auditorium, Marsh Life Science.

PERFORMING ARTS

"The Wild Duck," by Henrik Ibsen. Royall Tyler Theatre, 8 p.m.

FILMS

Physics Film Series, "The Character of Physical Law," with Richard Feynman. Lecture III, "The Great Conservation Principles," 4:10 p.m., B106 Angell.

MEETINGS

SA Finance Committee, 5 – 6:30 p.m., Conference Room C, Billings.

UVMOC, 7:30 p.m., North Lounge, Billings.

Campus Crusade for Christ, Leadership Training Classes, 7:30 p.m., 115, 118 Rowell.

SA Communications Committee, 7:30 p.m., Conference Room C, Billings.

OTHER

Pre-enrollment, all week, 8 a.m. – 5 p.m., Marsh Lounge, Billings.

Continued on page 36

Sports

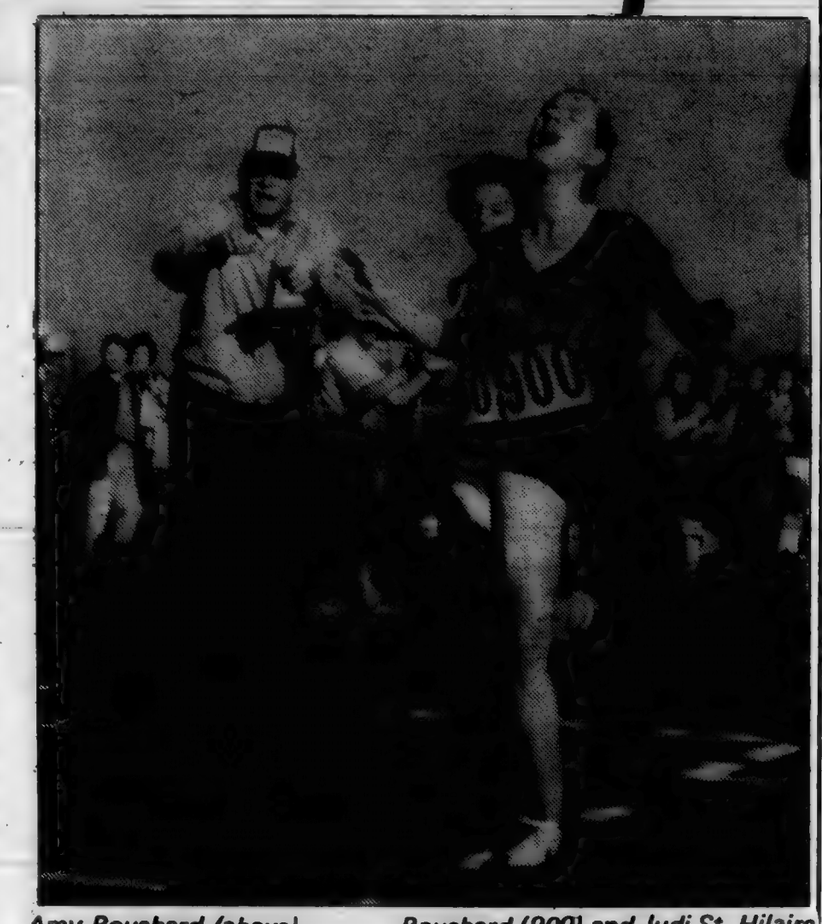
Vermont Women's Cross Country Grabs Fourth In Eastern Champs

By Tom Phillips

Led by the stunning fourth place finish of sophomore Judi St. Hilaire, the University of Vermont women's cross country squad paraded past all but four of the 38 teams entered to capture fifth in the Eastern Regional (EAIAW) Cross Country Championships held at UVM last Saturday.

The Cats' 157-point total was just ahead of Rutgers' 165, but behind the respective 47, 92, 128, and 129 scores of Penn State, Princeton, Maryland, and Harvard.



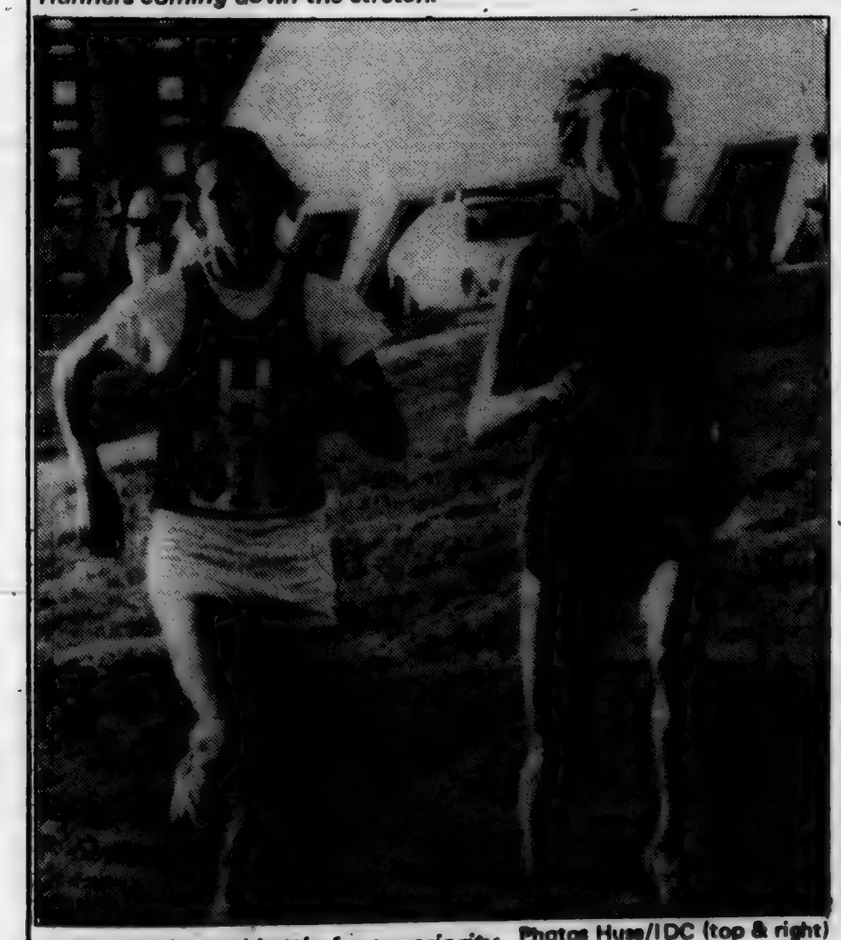
The highlight of the meet was the winning performance of Penn State's Kathy Mills. The world record holder in the women's 5,000 meter run, Mills paced the field through a 5:05 first mile before breaking away from the pack just before the two-mile mark. Once out in front, the smooth-striding Mills began battling her only remaining opponent – the clock. But, even the stopwatch was no match for her on this day. Mills drove powerfully up the last hill on the 3.1-mile UVM course, before breaking the tape with a record-breaking, first-place time of 16:18.6. This time shattered the previous record of 17:25, run by UVM's own Judi St. Hilaire just one week ago.

But, as it turned out, Mills was not the only runner to surpass the existing record; the race's top sixteen finishers all bettered the old standard. In this group were St. Hilaire and the other half of the Vermont harrier's duo, Donna Raymond. St. Hilaire sped to a personal best 16:52, while Raymond, who came in 13th overall in the 220-runner field, clocked a fine 17:16. Both runners, in finishing in the top ten (excluding runners from the top three teams), earned trips to the AIAW Nationals scheduled for Nov. 18th at the University of Colorado, Denver.

Vermont's high team finish, however, did not result from just the efforts of these two runners. Behind St. Hilaire and Raymond, Amy Bouchard, Anne Schiavone, and Robin Snyder were busy securing their respective 34th, 38th, and 68th places. These places turned out to be invaluable to the Vermont cause, as the Cats just managed to defeat Rutgers. This victory represented a bit of sweet revenge to the Cats, who suffered an unexpected early-season setback at the hands of Rutgers.

Perry Bland, the emotionally drained Vermont coach, offered his analysis of the meet. "I must say that I'm really proud of our Vermont team. Judi St. Hilaire and Donna Raymond rose to the occasion and improved their times and beat some pretty talented runners. I can't say enough about them. Amy Bouchard, Anne Schiavone, and Robin Snyder also ran good races, like they have all year. But, we still wanted to qualify as a team for the Nationals. That was pretty much our goal, as it is for most teams that run cross-country. But, I'm not going to weep over our not qualifying. We've enjoyed a really fun year, our best year ever, and that makes me even more anxious for next year."

Bland shouldn't be anxious, for this year's highly successful squad will lose only one consistent scorer, Robin Snyder, to graduation. It is hoped that some of the younger runners from this season's team, or even a talented incoming freshman, will fill the void created by Snyder's departure. But, who's to worry when the coach of UVM's New England Championship Team with a 60-6 record says, "we'll be even better next year."



Amy Bouchard (above). Bouchard (900) and Judi St. Hilaire

Runners coming down the stretch.

UVM and Harvard battle for superiority. Photos Huse/IDC (top & right) and Don Cunningham

Depth Is The Key

Runningmen Impress At N.E.'s

By Tom Phillips

Saving its best team performance for the last meet of the season, the University of Vermont men's cross-country team unveiled a new depth that propelled the Cats to a 15th place showing in the New England Championships run Saturday in Boston's Franklin Park.

The Catamount finish, which came in a field of 30-plus teams, stands as the highest Vermont placing since the 1975 team ran fifth.

The team title, as expected, went to defending champion Providence College of Rhode Island. The Providence team compiled the amazingly low score of 43 points to send Yankee Conference power UMass home as the runner-up for the second straight year. Providence's superiority was never in doubt, as they laid claim to the first three individual places. Ray Treacy, brother of NCAA runner-up and former Providence College harrier John Treacy, took the top spot by covering the fast 5.0-mile Franklin Park course in 23:39. Treacy was followed across the line by his two teammates and fellow Irish imports, both of which recorded sub–24:00 times.

The Vermont contingent, whose 365-point total was well off the winning 43-point score, managed to finish all seven of its runners within 12 seconds of each other. Kent Karns sparked the Cat effort with a 25:16 clocking, by far his fastest time on the Boston course. On the heels of Karns was Mike Myers with a time of 25:22. Then, a rush of yellow Vermont jerseys stormed over the line in the persons of Mike Landman (25:23), Tom Bilodeau (25:24), Dave Elliot (25:25), Rick Solie (25:25), and Kevin Martell (25:29). Every one of the Catamount runners recorded a personal best time for a five-mile course.

Coach Bill Nedde, ecstatic over the Vermont effort and especially the complete turn-around after last week's IC4A disaster, had this to say: "It's much nicer to end the season on a happy note. If the guys ran in this meet like they did in last week's IC4A's, the season would have been ending on kind of a sour note. But no one wanted that to happen. I'm just glad everyone ran the time they did because that will help us next year. I've been saying all year that we could get seven and possibly ten men under 26-minutes and I think some people were leery of that assessment. But now we have proved to ourselves that we can do that. My only regret is that I wish we could have run these times a little earlier in the year."

Fortunately for Nedde and his Cat runners, that regret is not one that will come back to haunt the Vermont cross-country program. The Cats

(continued on page 46)

SPORTS PHONE!

Dial New York direct for national scores and features!

| | 1st Min. | Add'l Min. |
|---|---|---|
| Mon.-Fri. 8 a.m.-5 p.m. | 46¢ | 32¢ |
| Sun.-Fri. 5 p.m.-11 p.m. | 29¢ | 21¢ |
| Sun.-Fri. 11 p.m.-8 a.m. | 18¢ | 13¢ |
| All Day Sat. | 18¢ | 13¢ |
| Sun. 8 a.m.-5 p.m. | 18¢ | 13¢ |

Tax not included

SPORTSPHONE is a service mark of Phone Programs, Inc.

1-212-999-1313

New England Telephone

The Biggest Burger Buy In Town...

BONANZA-BURGER

$1.19

So much more at Bonanza. When you order your favorite soft drink or coffee, we'll give you a free refill. You'll dine in a relaxed atmosphere with your order served on a platter, not in a paper bag. We don't like waiting in long lines so all things are really humming, you can place your order, select your table and we'll serve you. Those who wish may enjoy beer or wine with their meal. You always have options at Bonanza: you may prefer a succulent char-broiled steak for as little as $2.49 and don't forget to visit our famous Chuck Wagon Salad Bar.

Beer and Wine served

Shelburne Rd.
So. Burlington

Discover

BONANZA

THE WOODROW WILSON SCHOOL

of Public and International Affairs at Princeton University will interview students interested in pursuing a Master's Degree in Public Affairs with the following fields of specialization: International Relations; Modernization and Development; Urban Affairs and Domestic Policies; and Economics and Public Policy. Interviews will be held on Tuesday, November 14 from 9 a.m. till 1:30 p.m. at the Career Planning and Placement Office. Contact Mrs. LaRue. Minorities and women are encouraged to attend.

Basketball Preview:

Hoopster's New Speed Allows Fast Break Basketball To Come To UVM

By Randy Briggs

Greater overall speed and improved depth will enable fast break basketball to finally become the offensive style of the UVM men's basketball team, which opens its 1978-79 season against Plattsburgh State on Nov. 29.

Head Coach Peter Salzberg is very optimistic as he enters his seventh year at the helm. "This team has more overall speed and quickness than any team I have coached at Vermont. We also have more depth. In the past, a few injuries have hurt us, but this year is different. I feel that the whole squad can contribute in some way this year."

Despite the relative youth and inexperience that characterizes many members of the team, the Cats have enough veterans to make up for the early season break-in period needed for the freshmen.

The Cats offense was woeful a year ago, but Salzberg has a two-pronged plan to improve on last year's inefficiency. "We are going to fast break on every opportunity that arises," said Salzberg. "We are also going to work on improving our shot selection. The overall key is that we have good all-around athletes with good quickness. We haven't had this quickness in the past." Because of this speed, Vermont should be able to adjust to most styles of play that the opposition has to offer.

Vermont's strength this year lies in the front court. Leading the way will be 6'11" center Mike Kern. Kern led the Cats in scoring last year with a 13.5 point average. He also topped the squad in rebounding by pulling down an average of 7.0 rebounds per game. "We're looking for consistency from Mike," commented Salzberg. "He had a lot of great games and bad games last year." Salzberg is hoping that Kern will be more predictable this season.

Also returning is sophomore star Jim Nocera. Last year, Nocera was one of New England's top freshmen. He averaged eleven points a game and gave Kern a hand in the rebounding chores. Nocera's physical attributes are awesome.

Tyrone Johnson on a jump shot last season. Photo by Huse/IDC offensive maneuvers and he appears ready to play a big role in Vermont's drives for a winning season.

The front court will also have three freshmen. The Cats have three outstanding offensive recruits: Bob Brunton, Steve Thode and Mike Evelti. "Brunton represents the average player," notes Salzberg. "He has raw athletic ability with good speed and quickness. We would like him to develop the consistency of Mark Sobolewski. Steve Thode runs, shoots and jumps well. He is our best outside shooter since the days of Warren Prehmus. Mike Evelti is a good scorer who is very fluid and quick, up and down the floor. I feel Mike reflects the overall ability of the team," Salzberg concluded.

"This team has more overall speed and quickness than any other team I have coached at Vermont."

–Coach Peter Salzberg

The 6'5" Waltham, Mass. native is very strong in the upper body. He is much bigger than a normal 6'5" player and his forte is a strong, aggressive inside game.

Two other upperclass front court players include Tyrone Johnson and Bruce Beynnon. Last year, both played relatively minor roles in Salzberg's plans. This year, however, they will be vital links in the Catamount team. Johnson is much faster than he was a year ago. His strength lies in rebounding, an area in which the Cats badly need improvement. Beynnon has also improved over last year. He is much more fluid in his

The back court also appeared solid up until two weeks ago when sophomore guard Corey Wielgus dislocated his shoulder which is forcing him to undergo surgery. An excellent defensive ballplayer, his absence will hurt the Cats.

Dane Correll is also out of action for a few weeks. Correll has a stress fracture in his foot and his recovery is questionable. Salzberg is concerned over the recent events that have depleted the team's depth at guard. "The guard situation is very shaky. With Corey and Dane out of it, there will be additional pressure on our two seniors Tom Perrin and Greg Davis. We're also going to have to get good play from our freshman guards Jeff Brown and Ken Wright," Salzberg concluded.

Salzberg is impressed with Brown and Wright. "Jeff (Brown) will give us some additional scoring punch. He is a very hard worker and he'll help this team. Ken (Wright) is a very bruising type player who is physical and aggressive. He will fit in well with our running game."

Salzberg realizes that it will take time for his young team to gel. "We do lack experience. Eleven out of the fifteen players on the team are either freshmen or sophomores. We'll make a lot of mistakes in the first few games, but we will improve."

Vermont plans to employ an aggressive man to man defense this season. Along with this, Salzberg will use a combination of man to man and zone presses. "With our quickness we should be able to force the opposition into making some errors. When Kern is in the game, we will probably play some zone defense," noted Salzberg.

The Cat basketball mentor is not concerned about his players getting into foul trouble. "You can't equate fouls with defensive aggressiveness. The objective of defensive pressure is not to steal the ball but to force the other team to turn it over," he said.

For the first time, Vermont has an attractive sixteen game home schedule. This schedule includes such teams as Oregon, Niagra, Delaware, Air Force,

(continued on page 43)

UVM Blasts Bishops 12-1

Hockey Cats Display Power In Exhibition Vs. Bishop's

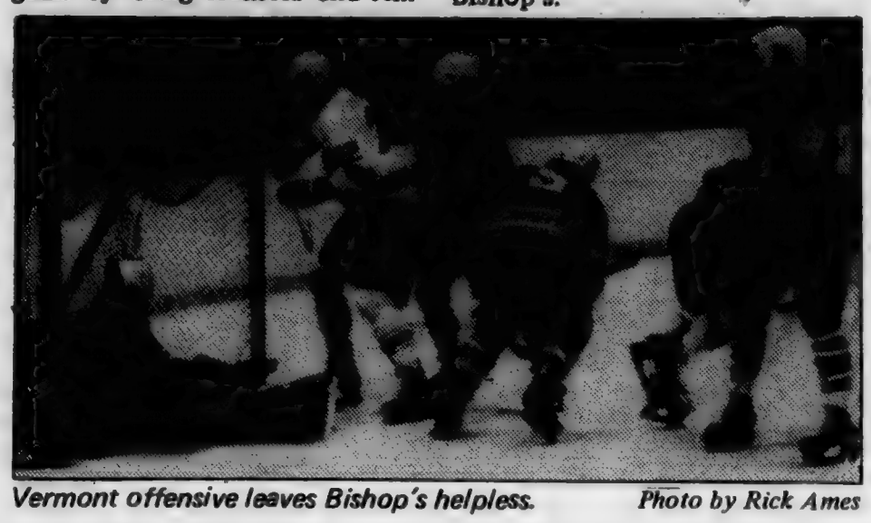
By Nick Witte

It was only an exhibition game but if scoring goals builds confidence, the University of Vermont hockey team must feel good, as Sunday night the Cats trounced an inferior Bishop's University 12-1 at Gutterson Field House.

Coach Jim Cross gave all four lines near equal ice time. Depth could be a key this year as the four lines have good balance. Cross said that the Cats will use three lines for the most part but with good strength off the bench, the fourth line will be utilized for power plays and penalty killing. Likewise, Cross used three defensive pairings alternately. These will be rearranged with the return of Greg Wilkie, on the bench with a muscle pull. Sylvain Turcotte and Burkhardt Hoene shared equal time as Vermont goalie for the exhibition game.

The score was only 2-0 at the end of the first period, but it was obvious UVM was more than just outclassing Bishop's. It was to Vermont's credit that the Cats kept the pressure on when the game had already been decided.

The highlight of the Catamount attack was the power play. Nine times Vermont had the extra skater and seven times they capitalized on it. They moved the puck well around the befuddled Bishop's defense. Crisp passing and cool points opened many opportunities. The defensemen from Bishop's had no control of the action in the slot and Vermont scored often on rebounds. Although it won't be as easy when B.U., Cornell, etc. come to Burlington, it was exciting to see the Cats use their heads and execute well.



The defense was virtually untested as Bishop's could get only 16 shots on the Vermont goalies. Their shots, mostly from far away, made life simple for Turcotte and Hoene. It would be nice to say that the Vermont penalty-killing crew deserved a lot of credit, but they hardly had rough going against the ineffective Bishop's power play. When Bishop's would finally break out, the UVM forwards back-checked and cleared the puck easily.

The first period was dominated by UVM, though the Cats could only score two goals on seemingly countless chances. Freshman Chris Hodgson got the opening goal on a blast from the right point at 1:54 into the period. The Cats applied good pressure throughout the period but didn't score again until Gordie MacFarlane knocked home a rebound at the buzzer.

Like the first period, the second was all UVM with the Bishop's goalie being peppered with 35 shots on net. Jim Murphy scored unassisted early in the period. Then the Vermont power play erupted for two goals by Craig Homola and Jim Duffy. Two of the prettiest goals of the night were scored within a minute by Penn transfer Gary Prior, set up with a beautiful pass by Homola. With freshman Michael Vincent on right wing, this line was sharp all night.

Bishop's scored its lone goal on a second rebound that the UVM penalty-killing squad couldn't clear. That goal was the sum of Bishop's offense for the evening and Vermont's Tom Cullity, another Penn transfer, scored from the slot to start another five-goal UVM attack. Jim Duffy scored twice in 21 seconds on power plays. Homola and Cullity added the final two goals to complete the 12-1 rout. In all, the Cats took 56 shots on goal, thoroughly outclassing Bishop's.

Coach Cross and his team know that when the regular season opens on Friday at Bowling Green, there will be few picnics like this one. But the Cats gained a lot of confidence Sunday night and newcomers shook off a few jitters. For a successful season, the Cats will have to use their heads and pick up where they left off against Bishop's.

Vermont offensive leaves Bishop's helpless. Photo by Rick Ames

Fast Break Basketball

continued from page 42

Texas A&M and UMass. The Cats will have to use their new offensive game plan in order to beat these teams. Most of the teams on Vermont's schedule are high scoring, offensive oriented units. If Vermont is to have a winning season, it must utilize the fast break effectively.

When asked if there is an advantage to playing at home, Salzberg responded positively. "I think the players are more convihced than I am, however. We should play well on the road too," he said. Salzberg did admit that if it wasn't for the vocal backing of the Vermont crowd, the Cats would have never upset Ohio State last year.

Vermont has suffered through two straight losing campaigns in the last two years. When asked if he feels any pressure to have a winning season, Salzberg commented, "We put tremendous pressure on ourselves to win all the time. The pressure from the community, the school, and fans is not that great. I hope that people will have high expectations for us. Last year's record was not that bad considering we had only ten home games, three starting freshmen and nagging injuries all season long."

Many observers have been critical of Vermont's slow-paced play over the past few years. Salzberg answered his critics by saying, "A coach has to realize what his team's abilities are. I have to be realistic about the kind of talent I have. Wins and losses don't tell the whole story. A coach has to adopt his philosophy to the kind of team he has." Salzberg has not had the speed the squad now shows. He said that if Vermont had tried to run with every team last year that they would have been "blown out of a lot of games."

Vermont competes in the ECAC New England Region. Out of eleven teams in the ECAC division, only four make the playoffs. With Providence, Holy Cross and URI almost assured of a spot in the post-season tournament, it leaves the other eight teams scrambling for the final spot. Salzberg concluded on a confident note. "We feel that we will not be outclassed by any team on our schedule this year," he said. "We are very optimistic and I'm sure this season will be very exciting to Vermont fans."

Sports This Week

| SPORT | DATE | OPPONENT | PLACE - TIME |
|---|---|---|---|
| Hockey | 10-11(F-S) | at Bowling Green | Bowling Green, OH – 7:30 p.m. |
| Soccer – M | 11 (Sat.) | at Connecticut | Storrs, CT – 10 a.m. |
| Swim – W | | MASSACHUSETTS | Forbush Pool – 1 p.m. |
| Field Hockey | 11-12(S-S) | at Northeast Tournament | Orono, ME – TBA |
| Cross Country – M | 13 (Mon.) | at IC4A's | Van Cortland Park, NY – TBA |
| Swim – W | 14 (Tues.) | at St. Michael's | Winooski, VT – 4 p.m. |
| Volleyball – W | 15 (Wed.) | at Albany St. w/RPI | Albany, NY – 7 p.m. |
| Gymnastics – W | | Vermont State Meet | TBA – TBA |
| Swim – W | | at Green Mountain | Bennington, VT – 4 p.m. |
| Cross Country – W | 18 (Sat.) | at AIAW Nationals | TBA – TBA |

Contributing Staff

NEWS: Sarah Bailey, Stacey Cushner, Mark Dixon, Morris Earle, Jr., Rich Hyland, Brooke Laffan

FEATURES: Barry Gustin, Nelson Hockert-Lotz, Valerie Vier

SPORTS: Randy Briggs, Rob Smith, Hart VanDerburg, Molly McRoberts, Tom Phillips, Lori Murch, Tom Cianciolo, Josh Reynolds, Dale Gates

ARTS: Tom Nuccio, Peter Wentworth, Judie Yuill, Ardith Denzer, Thomas Campbell, Scott Hammer, Pablo Conrad, Tom Daniels

ADVERTISING: Nat Foote, Dinah Minot, Anne Stires

PHOTOGRAPHY: Rick Ames, Debbie Wolk, Jim Otto, Don Cunningham, Bill Menning, Joe Curcio, Carolyn Holahan, Phil Nanas, Liz Dunn, Rob Swanson, Karen E. Salzman, Mitch Sprung, Mike Simays

LAYOUT & GRAPHICS: Lauren-Glenn Davitian, Jenny Landrey, Brooke Freeman, Rachael Love, Art Gorr, Laura Benjamin, Lisa Eaton, Carol Hills, Amy Lowry, Mellisa Ionta, Robert Giles, Mike Foss, John Reynolds, Jean Goldstein, Angelo Segarra, Liz Hemingway, Lorri Toppel

TYPIST: Libbet Cox, Karen Salzman
TYPESETTER: Sue Ball
PMT's: Jose Morelli

Vermont Cynic
University of Vermont
Burlington, VT 05401

Printed by
Upper Valley Press
Bradford, Vermont

The Cynic welcomes letters to the Editor from all its readers. The deadline for letters is the Monday at noon prior to Thursday's publication.

All letters should be signed and accompanied by your local address and telephone number. The Cynic reserves the right to edit any letter for precision and clarity.

Shorter letters will be given preference.

The Vermont Cynic assumes no responsibility for unsolicited materials. All submissions are subject to the Vermont Cynic's right to edit. All unsolicited material becomes the property of the Vermont Cynic.

No part of this publication may be reproduced without the expressed written consent of the Vermont Cynic.

Subscription rate is $12 yearly.

Circulation: 10,000.

What is the evolution of O'Keefe according to Darwin?

First, there was the idea.
A brew with a hearty, full-bodied flavor. A quaff smooth and easy going down. A tankard with a head full of pride. That is the origin of the species O'Keefe.
Having adapted and differentiated itself, O'Keefe prospers and proliferates throughout the land. It's a perfect example of the survival of the fittest. And it's also because, "It's too good to gulp."

Imported from Canada by Century Importers, Inc., New York, NY

Bluegrass and Country

Entertainment Wed. & Thurs. Nights

Monday — $.25 draft + $.75 pitchers
Tuesday — $.50 Molsons
Sunday — Ladies night $.25 off drinks

Happy Hour 3–7 daily
Football Specials — Sunday
Pitch Tournaments

sullivan's
4 NO. WINOOSKI AVENUE

Next to Domino's Pizza

LUMS

THE ONE PLACE TO GO WHEN EVERYBODY WANTS TO GO TO A DIFFERENT PLACE.

Everybody has his own taste, which usually finds you driving off in all directions in search of many restaurants to please many tastes. Don't get into a hassle.And don't drive far. Drive near, to your nearby Lums. We've got the all-foods menu. Great burgers and steaks. Roast beef. Shrimp. All kinds of sandwiches. Beers and wines. More ? Aspecial low-priced menu for the kiddies (it's more than a menu, it's a take-home, play-games-on-it souvenir of your visit).
Don't get into a hassle about where to go. Get into your nearby Lums.

LUMS No one else will give you more. more. more.

SUN.-THURS. OPEN 'TIL 1 AM
2 AM FRI. & SAT.

Williston Road
So. Burl., Vt.

Barre-Montpelier
Ames Shopping Center

Sports Profile

Judi St. Hilaire

Reliable and Consistent Cross - Country Runner

By Tom Phillips

It is no secret that this year's UVM women's cross-country team recorded one of the most successful seasons in the school's sports history. A long list of accomplishments — that includes an overall won-lost record of 60-6, a runaway Vermont State Championship victory, a New England team title, and a remarkable fifth place finish in the Easterns — attests to that claim. While good team depth, a fine recruiting job, and consistency were factors that produced a winning season, it is generally agreed that top individual efforts accounted for most of the team's victories. The most reliable and consistent individual on this Catamount squad, beyond any doubt, was Judi St. Hilaire.

A native of Lyndonville, Vermont, Judi was the top UVM runner in all but two of this season's meets. She finished second to teammate Donna Raymond in the first two meets, before making a steady charge that resulted in her 4th place finish in the Easterns. Not one who enjoys throwing bouquets at herself, the modest St. Hilaire attributes her improvement to her coach, Perry Bland. "Perry really is great. There is absolutely no pressure running for him. He makes every minute of involvement with the team fun. I think that is a good situation to have if you want to improve. Another thing about Perry I think helped both me as an individual and the team as a whole was his never getting disappointed. Even on days when we wouldn't run as well as we should have, he wouldn't get depressed. At least, he didn't let us on to it. And I think the fact that he never lost confidence in us is important."

"Now, my main concern with running is to get as much experience as I can."
— Judi St. Hilaire

Obviously satisfied with the cross-country program here at UVM, Judi addressed herself to the question of whether or not it was a mistake for her not to attend a more traditionally powerful running school. "I don't think I made a mistake coming here, simply because the type of relaxed program here is the kind I seem to perform best in. If I had gone to a really top running school, Penn State or someplace like that, I think the pressure to run well would be just too great. Especially if I was on scholarship, because then I would be obliged to run well."

Pressure or no pressure, Judi has seemingly never had to worry about running well. Nine individual Vermont high-school state titles, including three State cross-country wins, and six State track firsts in everything from the 440 through the mile run, made her one of the most sought-after athletes ever in Vermont. But despite all the attention, Judi wasn't about to leave her home state. "I wanted to stay in Vermont after finishing high school. I had never really lived away from home for any length of time; so, I thought it would be best to be fairly close to home for my first few years of school anyway. The money side of things was something else I had to consider and that was really the main reason I ended up going to UVM. But, eventually I would like to go where it's a little warmer since I'm not too crazy about snow and winter temperatures."

Perhaps this dislike for cold weather accounts for Judi's fondness of indoor track competition. "Even though I've had fairly good luck with cross-country, I've always enjoyed racing indoors much more. I think it is the excitement of the crowds turning you on which makes it so much fun. There is a certain closeness indoors between the spectators and the competitors. When you run cross country or outdoor track, that closeness is missing, making it less exciting. But, I'm learning to love running cross-country as well. This season's really done a lot to make me like outdoor competition almost as much as I love running indoors." As for this indoor track season, the personable St. Hilaire has set for herself the goal of "breaking into the 4:40's in the mile run."

The establishment of goals, however, is something that Judi doesn't make a habit of doing. "I don't really think it is necessary to establish any long-range goals. In the past, I've just tried to set my sights on things I thought I could achieve the quickest. I suppose I've changed my view on this a little bit. Now, my main concern with running is to get as much experience as I can. Experience, in my estimation, is really important to a runner. But, as far as looking far ahead to the Olympics or things like that, I really can't say

(continued on page 47)

Sports Scene

A Celtic Fan Writes

Dear Red & Celtics

By Rob Smith

Dear Red Auerbach,

After closely following the Boston Celtics for the last 16 years of my life, I feel compelled to offer you my sympathy concerning the uninspired and lackluster play of the Celtics this season. I realize that the addition of seven new players over the off-season and the return of only two of last year's starting five would result in a slow start, but the team's statistics reflect more than just a case of disorganization.

On offense, the Celtics expect consistent scoring from Jo Jo White, Dave Cowens, recently acquired forward Billy Knight and Tiny Archibald. These four players are all lacking a consistent hot hand so far and only Knight and Cowens are averaging over 17 points a game. Certainly all four of these "superstars" are capable of performing better than they have shown thus far, so maybe I shouldn't worry about a lack of offense in the future.

However, concerning the Celtics' defensive play this season (or lack of it), I feel there is plenty Celtic fans should worry about. The Celts have allowed opposing teams to score an average of 113 points a game – making them the fourth worst defensive team in the NBA thus far. Furthermore, they have been anything but tenacious on the boards, with Cowens averaging only eight rebounds a game, Marvin Barnes four per game, Cedric Maxwell seven a game and Billy Knight a mere five per game. Over the years, the Celtics have prided themselves on playing outstanding team defense and controlling the boards. This year's team has given no indication in their first nine games of playing the tough defense we've grown to expect. Is it time for the Celts to adopt the style of play that has proved so successful for the San Antonio Spurs – run and gun and hope you score 130 points because you're going to give up 120? Personally, I don't think the Celts have that kind of offensive fire power, so they had better learn to play more aggressive defense. Hopefully, having former defensive stars Satch Sanders and K.C. Jones as coaches will instill the concept of team defense into the players' heads.

"The problem is that the modern-day basketball player has not been able or willing to inherit the single most important aspect of winning basketball in Boston--- Celtic Pride."

But maybe my gripes and concerns are only touching the more visible problems with the 78-79 Celtics. Last year's team recorded the worst record in the last 15 years as a result of player-coach hassles, a lack of communication between the players themselves (most notably Sidney Wicks and Charlie Scott), a poor training camp dominated by holdouts and overweight players, and mid-season personnel changes. Over the spring and summer, the Boston franchise was sold to John Y. Brown, the former Buffalo Braves owner, who subsequently traded Kermit Washington, Kevin Kunnert, Freeman Williams and Sidney Wicks to his old team in exchange for Barnes, Knight and Archibald. Other changes included Tom Boswell being let go and the retirements of Ernie DeGregorio, Dave Bing and the legendary John Havlicek. You yourself Red almost left the Celtics this summer for the greener pastures offered by the New York Knicks. Things in Boston have changed rapidly in the last two years and all efforts at reorganizing the team into a contender have failed. Something has been missing in the Celts' erratic play the last two years. Red, you've brought talented ballplayers to Boston, yet the victories have often been few and far between. The problem, I am afraid, is one which runs deeper than any visible mediocrity. The problem is that the modern-day basketball player has not been able nor willing to inherit the single most important aspect of winning basketball in Boston – Celtic pride.

Celtic pride. It meant winning seasons every year, often because of the presence created by 13 World Championship flags hanging from the rafters of Boston Garden. It meant winning because you didn't really know what losing was like. It meant being part of an institution which had produced such greats as Bill Russell, Bob Cousy, Bill Sharman and Sam Jones. Playing for the Celtics was similar to many baseball players wanting to play for the Yankees – the great history of winning teams these two organizations developed made them desirable. This attraction no longer seems to exist.

Today, in a world of high-priced athletes, hardship drafts and multi-year, no-cut contracts, the basketball player

(continued on page 47)

HAPPY ANNIVERSARY

ALPINE SHOP

WE'RE CELEBRATING 15 YEARS OF SERVICE AND QUALITY IN GREATER BURLINGTON.

Hi Everyone:

Once again it's anniversary time at the Alpine Shop, and we all want to say thank you for allowing us to have served you for the past 15 years. Without you, our wonderful customers, there would be no Alpine Shop today. Jann and I can well remember when we lived in our little apartment up over the Shop, and the day we both worked 12 hours and took in only $3 (March 24, 1964). We sold 3 pairs of socks that day. Thanks to you we are still around, and we will never forget that our future depends on our ability to serve you in a friendly, courteous and helpful manner, and I hope you will always be treated that way at the Alpine Shop.

Sincerely,

Chuck Parkins

FREE
$15 Gift Certificate with every $100.00 purchase

Dynamite Anniversary Specials

| | |
|---|---|
| DUOFOLD TURTLENECKS | ONLY $10 |
| WEISS DOWN MITTENS | ONLY $12 |
| ROFFEE DOWN VESTS | ONLY $34 |
| VT. ORIGINAL WOOL HATS | ONLY $9 |
| LANZ GRANNY NITIES | ONLY $16 |

Thurs. Fri. Sat. Only

ALL SKI PARKAS
Over 500 Men's – Women's – Children's
10% off

Register for these Free Door Prizes

Rossignol Skis – Nordica Boots – Salomon Bindings

Special Cross Contry Package

TRAK FISHSCALE SKIS
TRAK TOUR BOOTS
TRAK TONKIN POLES
TRAK BINDINGS
MOUNTING
Only $99

Special Downhill Package

ROSSIGNOL SKIS
SALOMON BINDINGS
BARRECHAFTER POLES MOUNTING ENGRAVING
Only $149

WON'T YOU JOIN US FOR FREE CIDER AND DONUTS

ALPINE SHOP

Williston Road
So. Burlington

OPEN DAILY
9 A.M. – 9 P.M.

Corner of So. Winooski and
Cherry Downtown Burlington

Dan Bryant (above) sets up a shot while Bryan Fleming (below) struggles for ball-control.

Photos by Huse/IDC

Men's Soccer:

McLiverty Scores First Goal To Tie With Hartwick in OT, 1-1

By Hart VanDenburg

Peter McLiverty scored his first goal as a Catamount, forcing a 1-1 overtime tie between the University of Vermont men's soccer team and defending national champions Hartwick, last Saturday afternoon in Oreonta, N.Y.

Vermont Coach Paul Reinhardt was elated with his team's performance, not only in the Hartwick game, but throughout the season. "Let's face it," he said, "this was a rebuilding year, but the new members of the team have improved to become one of the greatest reasons for our success."

McLiverty was praised by Reinhardt who remarked, "Peter played the best game of his life." In testament to this, McLiverty was voted the co-player of the week in the Yankee Conference competition.

The Cats arrived at Hartwick knowing that only a first class performance would bring them a win or a tie. Either one would be the ingredient needed to give them a chance of making the playoffs. Hartwick, looking for a place in the N.Y. state regional playoffs, proved to be tough competition.

The game was a hard-fought battle for control at mid-field, with UVM taking the upperhand. A stalwart Cat defense of McLiverty, Barry Ryan, Cam Diamandis, Dan Bryant, and Bill Nedde, was the subject of much battering by Hartwick. Coach Reinhardt later remarked, "Our offense played outstandingly, not only now, but all through the season." Reinhardt continued by lauding goalie Bart Farley. "Many coaches have told me quite simply that Bart is probably the best in New England."

Vermont's difficulty in penetrating the Warriors defense resulted in excitement and tension building up from corner kicks and throw-ins. The nearest UVM came to a goal in the first half was from a Diamandis head shot off a corner kick by Fleming. But the score remained 0-0, and the battle raged on.

Hartwick's lone goal came when Farley made a deadly mistake late in the first half. Farley had just kicked the ball clear when it deflected off a Hartwick player's back. Then, as everyone stood glued in horror, the ball winged its way into the UVM goal.

The second half followed the same pattern of stalwartness. UVM desperately needed a goal, and Hartwick, just as desperate to stop them, drew back into a defensive roadblock. McLiverty's goal was the result of a hard-nosed battle with a defending warrior. Both players battled for the ball outside of the penalty area to the point of knocking each other down. But McLiverty jumped up and nailed the ball hard over the head of the Hartwick goalie.

According to Reinhardt, the overtime period was the most ulcerating experience of the whole game. Farley's performance in the nets prevented another Hartwick score with only five minutes left to play, when Hartwick unleashed a rocketing shot that Farley had to leap to block. The clock ran out and Vermont had successfully preserved the 1-1 tie.

Saturday's performance now leaves Vermont with a season record of 8-3-3 and one point behind B.U. in the New England soccer coaches poll. Brown leads with a 7-3-1 record, followed by UConn and Dartmouth; all these teams are assured of playoff spots. B.U. is in the fifth spot and Vermont is sixth. Vermont has a total of 93 points, while B.U. has 94. With such a small margin separating the two teams for the fourth and final position in the New England playoffs, the coaches will most likely evaluate the schedules of the teams to decide who had the harder season. Compared to B.U., Vermont has played a much tougher schedule and this should be the deciding factor when the choice is made this Wednesday.

The playoffs aside, Vermont is sharing the Yankee Conference lead with Rhode Island and UConn. The Cats travel to UConn on Saturday and a victory there should give Vermont the Yankee Conference title.

Men's Cross Country

continued from page 41

were in a rebuilding year this fall since only two of the top seven runners were seniors. This means that Vermont will start the season next year with a solid nucleus of five scorers from this year's team. Also, the Cats will receive added strength from both freshmen recruits and present team members who, for varying reasons, never hit their stride this year.

Dartmouth Trips Cats

By Hart VanDenburg

The University of Vermont men's soccer team's playoff chances suffered a blow Saturday at Dartmouth when Big Green nailed the soccer Cats 2-1 in a crucial late season game.

Despite the Dartmouth victory, the Vermont defense proved they are not an easy force to contend with. The two Dartmouth goals were the only result of numerous attempts by the Big Green to topple the UVM defense, which was constructed like a brick wall around their penalty area.

Vermont's only goal came with just over 30 minutes gone on the clock in the first half. Gardy Fraker took control of a corner kick and fed the ball to an unmarked Barry Ryan standing to his left. Ryan trapped the pass and confidently put it past the Dartmouth goalie to give the Cats a 1-0 lead.

But the lead didn't last long. Only two minutes later, Ryan was tackled in front of his own goal by Dartmouth's Tim May who then forced Bart Farley, the UVM goalie, to misjudge his save. Farley went down for the ball too early and May's shot went over his head and into the Vermont goal to put Dartmouth on the scoreboard.

Throughout the second half, Vermont's attack was stopped time and again by Jim Missciner in the Dartmouth goal. Vermont's Zareh Avakian, Fraker, and Larry Stone had shots that could have put their team back in the contest, but they were all stopped by Missciner.

Dartmouth dealt the death blow midway through the second half when a crossing kick by May was mishandled by Farley. The ball fell loose and Dave Hanson of Dartmouth pounced on it to put his team in the lead for good.

"We were dealing with an older and more experienced team," commented UVM coach Paul Reinhardt later. "We had our chance."

The Dartmouth coach, Tom Griffith, was happy with his team's victory, but was quick to praise Vermont. "They have too much depth," he said. "You can't go with 12 or 13 players against Vermont, you'll lose."

The loss dropped Vermont to 8-3-2 and set the scene for Vermont's dramatic tie with Hartwick on Saturday.

Peter McLiverty (23) pursues a UMass opponent as Vermont's Bill Nedde gives back-up support.

Photo by Huse/IDC

Judi St. Hilaire:

continued from page 44

that Olympic competition is one of my goals. That type of commitment would take an enormous amount of day-to-day dedication over many years. In the future, I would rather devote my time to something like coaching, where you could watch others improve from the time they start to the time they've gained much experience. Coaching little kids would really be fun."

Judi, a sophomore Arts and Sciences student, got her running start as a freshman in high school, the same year she went on to win her first state high-school championship in the 440. As she recalls, "I really had a lot of fun back then. It seemed like all I wanted to do back then was run and race and race and run." That fascination with competition continued into her freshman year at UVM, where she would again excel in track competition. But, by her own admission, the importance of running soon took on a new meaning. "When I entered UVM, my main concern was to run and compete and that type of thing. I was pretty naive. I didn't place much importance on the academic side of things. But I've learned to regard competition as only a part of my life and not the only thing. My chief concern at school now is to work to get into the Dental Hygiene program. I hope this doesn't conflict with my running, but it just might."

But in the face of her developing devotion to her academic goal, Judi still retains an interest in future competition. "I'll definitely be running, as long as I have the time to spare. I can't see totally giving up all the good experiences that running on a team has to offer. A team is a good thing to belong to, especially when you had a team like we had this year. Each runner was working for the team and not for herself alone. I know that I never would have run like I did this year if it wasn't for the team. We really had a great bunch of people this year, I can't wait for next year."

Dear Red:

continued from page 45

whose talent is marketable cares more about making money than he does about loyalty to his team. Sure, Sidney Wicks, Paul Jiles, Charlie Scott and Curtis Rowe wanted to play with the Celtics. But, except Silas, they all lacked the desire to give 110% of themselves. They would rather play their own personal style of basketball instead of converting to the tough defense-running offense style of basketball – the Celtic tradition. And as you know Red, these players were also the cause of numerous contract disputes and internal personnel conflicts.

Therefore, it is not surprising that with seven new players, three veterans, one second-year man, and the lingering Curtis Rowe, the Celtics are having a tough time this season. Now that the last of the great Celtics of old, John Havlicek, is gone, one has to wonder if any remnant of past Celtic pride remains. This year's team probably has more talent than last year's team and added depth from solid reserves Jeff Judkins, Dennis Autrey, and Chris Ford. The addition of stars Knight, Barnes and Archibald to a team with improved depth and a nucleus of Dave Cowens and Jo Jo White should spell victory. However, the Celts have won only two of their first nine games, and neither victory was overly impressive.

Therefore, it is my belief that this year's problems center around getting adjusted to new players' styles, a more competitive league overall and the fading away of past Celtic pride. Let's face it, Red, the Celtics are now just "another" team of high-priced players in a league which has grown extremely competitive. The green and white championship flags which hang from the Garden rafters still mean a lot to you, to myself, and the rest of the basketball world, but to the players themselves their meaning has diminished. The players' loyalty is still colored green and white, but it is measured in dollar bills, not flags. And Red, there is no way you can measure pride in dollar bills.

Sincerely,
A Mourning Celtic Fan

Intramural Winners

FOOTBALL

Quarterfinals: Kappa Sigma defeated Marsh 2, 36-0. Wing 3 defeated Alpha Gamma Rho, 7-6.

Semifinals: Kappa Sigma defeated Sigma Nu, 8-0. Sigma Phi Epsilon defeated Wing 3 40-14.

Final: Kappa Sigma defeated Sigma Phi Epsilon 8-6 for the All-Campus Football Championship.

SOCCER WOMEN

Quarterfinals: Wocrats defeated Millis 4, 2-1. Final: Wocrats defeated Coolidge 2-1 for the All-Campus Soccer Championship.

SOCCER MEN

Quarterfinals: Austin 3 defeated Aliens, 1-0. Shubees defeated Christie 1, 2-1. Alpha Tau Omega defeated Phi Delta Theta, 3-1. Malonies defeated Sigma Phi Epsilon 2-1. G.S.I. defeated Shubees, 3-2.

Semifinals: Malones defeated Austin 3, 2-1. G.S.I. defeated Alpha Tau Omega 3-0.

Finals: Malonies defeated G.S.I. 1-0 for the All-Campus Soccer Championship.

Birth defects are forever. Unless you help.
March of Dimes

DAKIN'S MOUNTAIN SHOP
CROSS-COUNTRY SKI
SALE Nov. 5th to Nov. 11th

All adult cross country ski packages (Package includes skis, leather boots, bamboo poles, and bindings mounted)

| | REG. | SALE |
|---|---|---|
| Gatinger 2000 | $ 79.95 | $ 71.95 |
| Gatinger WAXLESS | $ 84.95 | $ 76.50 |
| Birke BEINER | $105.95 | $ 95.95 |
| Fischer EUROPA | $107.95 | $ 97.00 |
| Fischer SUPER STEP | $119.95 | $108.00 |
| Bonna 1800 | $105.95 | $ 95.50 |
| Fischer EUROPA HC | $119.95 | $108.00 |

your choice of 10% off or ONE FREE Grey Ragg sweater with each adult x-c package

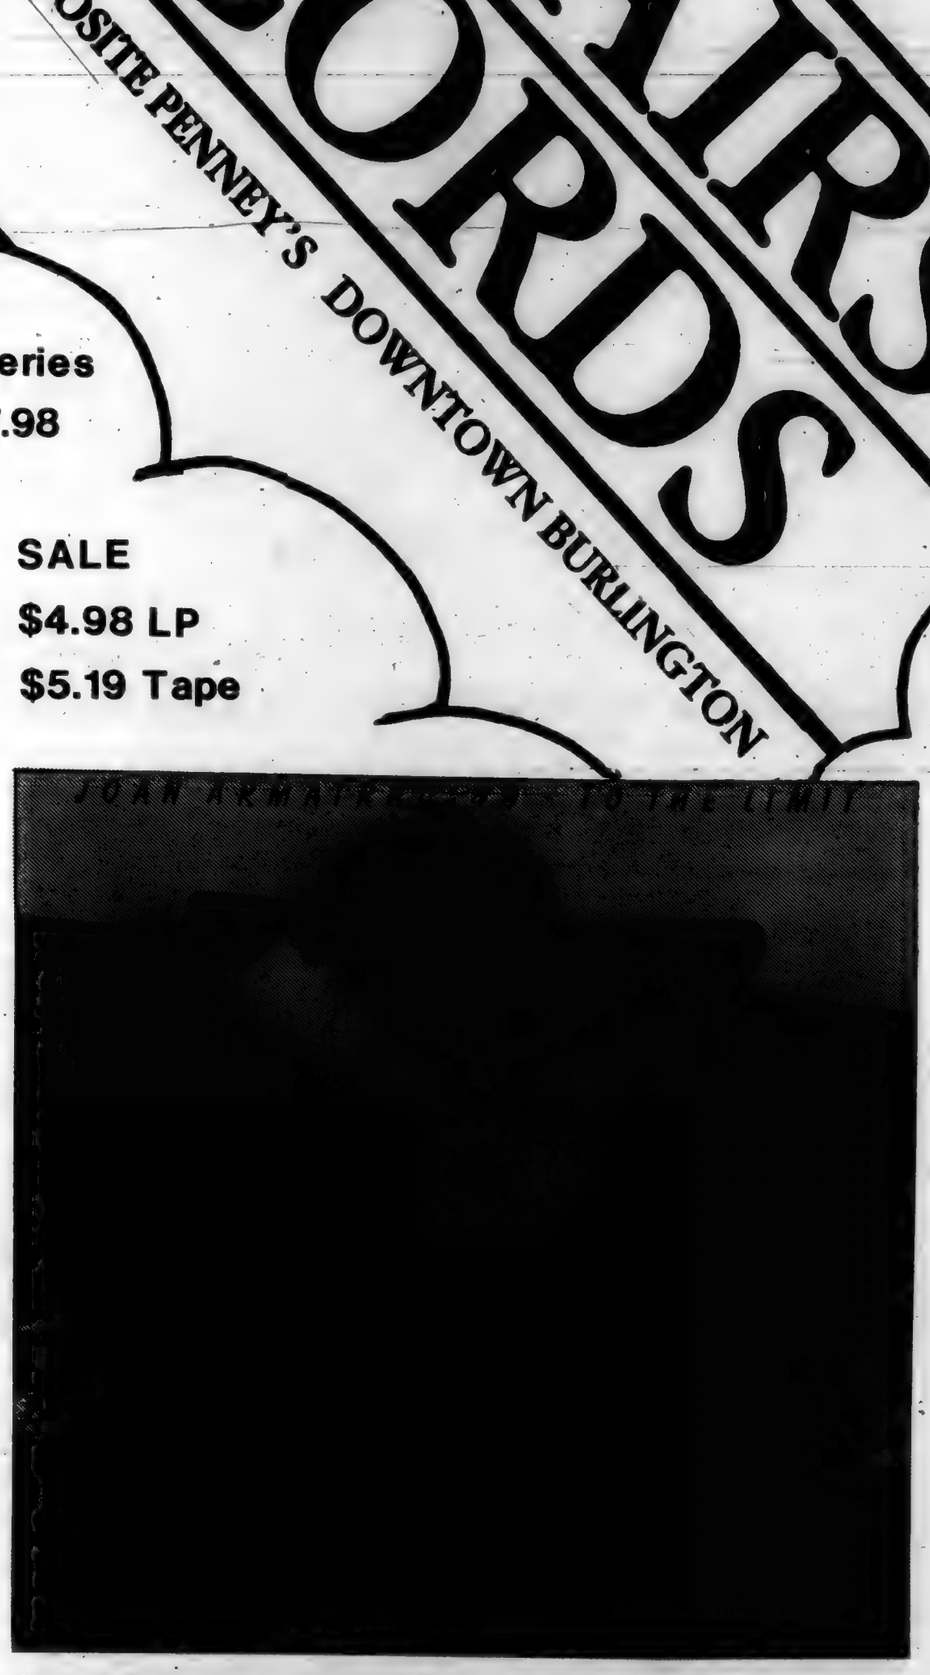
FALL & WINTER VALUES

Poplin Knickers Reg. $21.50 SALE $12.90
Icelandic Sweaters (Pullover) 20% OFF
Lee Storm Rider Vest Reg. $27.50 SALE $19.95
WOOL HATS 10% OFF
Mansfield Day Pack $11.00
WOOL MITTENS 20% OFF

Our FREE cross-country ski catalog is available now.

We're Open:
Sunday, 10–4
Saturday, 9–6
Mon.–Fri. 9–9

863-5581



DAKIN'S MOUNTAIN SHOP

UPSTAIRS RECORDS

OPPOSITE PENNEY'S DOWNTOWN BURLINGTON

Series
7.98

SALE
$4.98 LP
$5.19 Tape

A&M PROUDLY PRESENTS THE NEW ALBUM:

JOAN ARMATRADING
"TO THE LIMIT" SP 4732
ON A&M RECORDS AND TAPES

Produced by Glyn Johns
Management: Mike Stone Agency: Jerry Heller
©1978 A&M Records, Inc. All Rights Reserved.

National Sports Briefs

Vermonters Win Michigan Rally

John Buffum and Doug Shepherd of South Burlington, Vermont, won the Press on Regardless Rally last Saturday. The two racers completed the 620 mile course through Upper Peninsula backroads at Houghton, Mich. in a TR7. Sixty-four cars began the race, said to be the oldest and toughest contest of its kind, but only 26 managed to cross the finish line.

Athletes Banned for Taking Steroids

The European Athletics Association banned one Bulgarian and four Russian athletes for life for failing anabolic steroid tests at the European Track and Field Championships in Prague in September. The Russian athletes were Nadia Tkacenko, world record holder for the pentathlon, Jekaterina Gordijenko, fifth in pentathlon, Yergenyi Mironov, silver medalist in the men's shot-put, and Vasilyi Jersov, who held fifth in the men's javelin. Elena Stoyanova of Bulgaria was also banned for taking the body-building anamolic steroid drugs.

Edible Projectiles Ground Air Force

A food fight last Tuesday night involving stuffed green peppers, mashed potatoes, peas and cherry cake, ended in the restriction to academy grounds of the entire 4360-member cadet wing of the Air Force Academy. The fight took place during a pep rally in the cadet dining hall in preparation for Saturday's Army – Air Force football battle. The restriction was lifted, however, to allow 475 cadets to fly to West Point to spur on their team.

Veterinarian Sentenced to One Year

New York veterinarian Mark Gerard, convicted of last September's "Cinzano" ringer scandal at Belmont Park, was fined $1000 and sentenced to one year in prison Friday in Mineola, N.Y. The scandal netted him $78,000 in winning bets. Gerard is planning to appeal the decision.

Tiant to Leave Boston--May Go to N.Y.

The New York Yankees were the only team to draft former Boston pitcher Louis Tiant in the eighth round of the Major League baseball drafts, begun last Friday in New York, thus enabling him to enter talks with any of the teams as a free agent.

Yankee owner George Steinbrenner expressed his feelings concerning Tiant. "I'm very curious about him. All I know is that when he's pitched against us, he's given us fits. If he's used right, he can still be a very effective pitcher. I kept hearing about his age, but I think he's one of those guys that can pitch until he's ready to go home." Steinbrenner said he is considering a multi-year contract with the Red Sox pitching great.

"I didn't want to go into the draft," commented Tiant when asked how he felt about leaving Boston. "They put me into it. I don't want to leave. I have a home here, my family likes it here, I've spent the best of my years here. The fans have been good to me. But I guess they're thinking I can't pitch anymore. I have my ideas. I keep hearing I'm too old, but they run me out there when it gets tough."

"I'm happy the Yankees picked me," added Tiant, who is looking for a multi-season contract large enough to leave something left over after he retires. "They're world champions. If I have to go to the Yankees, I'll go to the Yankees. The fans certainly aren't stupid. They'll understand.

Evert Defends Austin and Shriver

Great Britain won the 1978 Wightman Cup Tennis Series 4-3 over the United States late Saturday night. Nonetheless, America's top player, Chris Evert, defended the choice to use teenagers Pam Shriver and Tracy Austin against the British. Shriver, 16, and Austin, 15, competed in a total of five matches but only won one.

"They still deserved to be on the team," stated Evert. "They are clearly the No. 2 and No. 3 players in the United States. They deserved to be here because they have had such good results all year. Don't forget that Tracy beat Virginia Wade in Phoenix, Arizona three weeks ago, and Pam reached the finals of the U.S. Open. There is no doubt they played singles here on merit.

It was Britain's 10th Wightman Cup victory compared to 40 U.S. trophies since the series began in 1923.

Allison Out-argues Petty for Dixie Title

It looked like Richard Petty won the $183,900 Dixie 500 stock car race Sunday when he apparently edged Dave Marcis by two feet at the finish line. At that time, the Scoreboard showed Donnie Allison was one lap behind the leaders. NASCAR officials agreed with the scoreboard. After two and one half hours of argument, however, Allison convinced the officials that he had made up all of an earlier two-lap deficit during caution flags. Allison was awarded the victory at 7:00 p.m. that evening, to end one of the most confusing finishes in stock car racing history.

From a country as clean and unspoiled as Canada, you'd expect a very special taste. Fresh from North America's most experienced brewery, Molson has been making friends on both sides of the border since 1786.

Our three import brands are ready to show you just how great Canada can taste.
Make it the heartiness of Molson Ale, spirited Canadian Beer, or smooth Golden.
Or all three.

EYEGLASSES OPTICAL CENTER EYEGLASSES

10% Off With Student I.D.

107 Church Street Burl. 864-7146

Random Notes

Camera Care Workshop

Having trouble with that new expensive camera? Want to learn how to protect your photographic investment? The Living/Learning Center Photography Program is sponsoring a Camera Care Workshop on Sunday, Nov. 19th at 3 p.m. in the L/LC Fireplace Lounge.

Paul Morneau, senior camera repairman from Wilson Photo Finishing, will give a workshop on camera care. Included will be segments on basic camera functions and everyday camera maintenance. Also discussed will be what to do if your camera goes on the blink and ways to take better pictures with your camera. But the best medicine is prevention, and the lecture will center on the simple things you can do to protect your camera and improve the quality of your pictures, along with a question and answer period.

The L/LC Photo Program acts as a resource for anyone interested in photography, to answer any questions or discuss photographic processes and techniques. The Photo Program is located in L/LC E-230, 240, 250 – telephone 656-4266.

Want to Party?

We are conducting a study of marijuana and alcohol consumption in a social setting. The study will be conducted between January 15, 1979 and May 1, 1979. Applicants will be required to be involved in the study one night per week for five weeks and up to five hours of pretesting. Groups of four social friends who consume alcohol and marijuana must apply together.

Apply in person, as a group, at room 106 John Dewey Hall during the following times: Mondays and Thursdays 1–4 p.m.; Tuesdays and Wednesdays 9–12 a.m. The application process takes about one and one-half hours. Please plan ample time. Telephone calls will not be accepted.

SLASH

Students Learning About Smoking and Health is a newly-formed group affiliated with UVM's Environmental Club. S.L.A.S.H. has been organized to educate the campus community about smoking and the effects it has on the non-smoker. The next S.L.A.S.H. meeting will be held at 8:00 on Thursday, Nov. 16 in the Robinson Hall lounge. We will be sharing information amongst ourselves and planning campus-wide action. Join Us!!

Call Ellen Greenberg at x3086 for further information.

The Winner Is:

The Warren R. Austin Model United Nations is pleased to announce that the winner of dinner for two at the Ice House is Beth Giron of Redstone Hall. Congratulations!

Career Spectrum

There will be a Career Spectrum in Civil Service on Monday, November 13 from 4–6 p.m. at the UVM Alumni House. A host of alumni panelists will be speaking about careers in Civil Service. For additional information please call the Alumni House at 656-2010.

"Thanks to You"...

...we are helping the United Way again.

The UVM Greeks are sponsoring a fashion show, that will be more than a typical fashion show, on Thursday, November 16, 1978 at 8 p.m. in the Ira Allen Chapel.

It will be a unique show of styles with Mayfair arranging the women's fashions and Michael Kehoe Ltd. the men's. Frank Cooper will be providing the hair styling for the show.

The models from the show will be from different fraternity and sorority houses on campus, and Mayfair will have one of their professional models working with the others. There will be a live band playing before the show. During, the music will be provided by a D.J. and there will be special entertainment to enjoy.

Tickets will be available at Billings Center starting Friday, November 10 at $1.50 each. It will be a fantastic show! Hope to see you there.

Liberate South Africa!

The North East Coalition for the Liberation of South Africa will be holding a 2-day conference in New York City November 17-19. There will be featured speakers and workshops. The purpose of the conference is to build the coalition (now over 50 campuses) and build an even stronger anti-apartheid movement in schools throughout the U.S. The Student Committee Against Racism is organizing transportation. Housing is provided. We must know by Wednesday, November 15!! For more information contact: Ellen, 862-1567, Sue 864-4145 or Marcia 863-1160.

What is IRA?

Did you ever wonder where your three dollar fee that appears on every semester's bill, for something called "IRA," went? But then again, what is "IRA?" IRA stands for the Inter-Residence Association, and it deals with the on-campus student. IRA deals with everything from recreational equipment for your hall, to the United Way drive, and even to the weekend movies at Southwick.

Now, about that three dollars. First of all, two dollars goes straight back to your residence hall. The other one dollar is used to support IRA's activities. Each residence hall is represented by at least one representative who attends weekly meetings (by the way, Chittenden, Marsh, Robinson, and Living and Learning A and C, do not have reps). There, the council decides on what services the students would most benefit from. At the present time, we are planning to recruit blood donors for the Red Cross. Another consideration for this semester was a possible on-campus linen service. A representative from Residential Life and Saga are present at every meeting to answer questions and to present new ideas. By the way, feel free to stop in at any meeting to see what goes on at these meetings (at Harris-Millis: Harris Recreation Room, every Wednesday at 6:30 p.m.)! And if you can't make these meetings, talk to your IRA representative about issues concerning you and IRA! See you there!

Men's Gymnastics Teams

The UVM Men's Gymnastic Team will officially open their season with the Home gymnastic meet of November 11, at Patrick Gym. The team is led this year by co-captains Steven Rancor and Jon McDonald. Strong performances by these two all-arounds will be supplemented by all-around freshman Tad Baum. Specialists, those gymnasts entering 1 to 3 events only, include Kevin Bartlett, Bob Krause, Greg Waters, Ray Bisset, and Jerry Lapan.

A strong performance is expected from the alumni team, which will be represented by former team captains and team members. The Meet competition will begin at 1 p.m. and should be exciting. Admission is free and everyone is welcomed.

Freshman Science Majors

Having trouble foreseeing your future? If you have any questions or concerns about programs in the sciences, policy or would just like to talk about careers in your major area, contact the Student Advising in the Sciences Program in L/L Ctr. Suites, E260 and 280, 656-4267.

A Dinner Theatre

The Living/Learning Center proudly presents the Centre Players in Joseph and the Amazing Technicolor Dreamcoat by Tim Rice and Andrew Lloyd Webber. The show will be preceded by the Scandinavian Suite hosting a Swedish smorgasbord. Dinner starts at 6 p.m. on Friday, November 10. Tickets are $4 and available at the L/L Main Desk. The show will run alone on Saturday, November 11 and Sunday, November 12 at 8 p.m. in L/L 115 Commons (as will the Dinner Theatre). Tickets are $1 and available at the door. Information at x4251.

A note of apology: To those of you who thought the show was November 3, 4, 5. The information was incorrect. Sorry, and we would like you to attend this week.

Career Hunting?!!!

The following employment interviews will be held in the Office of Career Planning and Placement the week of November 20 and November 27. You will be signing up for two weeks. Sign up on November 13, 14, 15.

Raytheon Company, Lexington, MA. Seeks BS/MS EEs. Positions: Hardware – design & Development of major electronic high tech systems. Opportunities in suburban Boston; Portsmouth, RI.

Norden Systems, (Div. United Tech.), Norwalk, CT. Seeks: EE, Comp. Sci. MBA, Finance. Positions: Design & Development Engrg for Electronic Military Systems; Financial, Mkt. Analysis, Bus. Planning.

Horizons Unlimited, Houston, Texas. Seeks: Nursing graduates. Information Booth will be set up in the Brickyard, Rowell.

Thompson, Kelly, Jacobs & Gallagher, Burlington, Vt. CPA Firm. Seeks accounting majors for staff accounting positions. Transcripts & resumes must be available before interview.

Central Foundry, Div. General Motors, Massena, NY. Seeks BS Mech. E; BS Bus. Admin. Positions: Production supervision as well as other related engrg. positions. Should be an aggressive leader type who can handle pressure.

Coopers & Lybrand, Boston, MA. CPA firm. Bachelors & Masters in accounting for Public Accounting positions.

Smith, Batchelder and Rugg, Keene, NH. CPA firm. Seeks accounting majors with GPA 3.0 or higher. Graduates with interest in smaller accounting firm.

UVM Hosts Synch-Swim Easterns

The University of Vermont Synchronized Swim Team will be the hosts for the Eastern Symposium of the International Academy of Aquatic Art on Friday and Saturday, November 17 and 18.

Swimmers from Iowa, Chicago, and all over the East will be presenting aquatic compositions for evaluation and participating in special sessions devoted to stroking, aquatic lifts and other important topics.

Highlight of the weekend will be the Saturday night performance of "Aqua Sampler," 8 p.m. in Forbush Pool. Special guests Beulah Gundling, a premier aquatic artist, and the mixed trio of Cathy and Jamie Goodwin and Tom Orlando will perform along with other compositions selected during the symposium.

The International Academy was founded in 1955 to further exploration of the aquatic medium for artistic expression and interpretation. Since that time many swimmers have participated in Academy symposiums and festivals, and some, including our guests, have been recognized for their particularly outstanding aquatic contributions by election to the Recycle your old and used newspapers, paperbags, and cardboard. Pick up at the following locations every Friday: WDW – behind Wilks Desk; Hamilton – behind main desk; Simpson – behind main desk; Christie – behind main desk; Wright – behind main desk; Robinson – on front porch; Coolidge – main lounge; Redstone – main entrance; M.A.T. – by front desk; Harris Millis – across from main desk; Living/Learning – "A" building loading dock; Wills – in cellar; Buckham – in cellar; Chittenden – in cellar; Converse – first floor; Billings – next to North Lounge; Jeanne Mance – across from main desk; Slade – first floor.

Introduction to System Dynamics

A direct consequence of the complexity of our world is the intimate interrelationships that exist among all its sectors. It is difficult to alter one part without experiencing reverberations throughout the whole. How can we relate causes and effects?

System Dynamics is a methodology that has recently been developed to simulate large, complex systems with the aid of a digital computer. If the simulation model is faithful to its real-world counterpart, the behavior of the actual system can be studied as the modeler introduces various disturbances, alters the structure, and experiments with various strategies. The method has proved useful to environmentalists, physical scientists, engineers, urban planners, business managers, economists, social scientists, and the like – those who wish to understand implications for the future of present actions.

Technology 101, Introduction to System Dynamics, is a 3 credit first course intended for students from all corners of the campus. No math beyond high school algebra is required although some experience with digital computers is desirable. The course will be offered Spring 1979, Tuesday and Thursday at 1:40, by Dr. Wilfred Roth, Professor of Electrical Engineering. Please feel free to contact him at x3330 for additional information.

Ski Equipment Sale

A used ski equipment sale will be held by the Cochran Ski Club Saturday, November 18 from 10 until 4 and Sunday, November 19 from noon until 4, at the South Burlington Middle School, Dorset Street. Anyone wishing to bring their used ski clothing or equipment to the sale, on consignment, is most welcome to do so. Hours for delivery will be 4 to 9 p.m. on Friday, November 17 at the Middle School. For more information call 862-7664 or 862-4875.

CLASSIFIED ADS

(THEY'RE FREE!)

PEOPLE WANTED

Men's volleyball. Any person interested in starting a men's volleyball club team for next semester, contact Bob Perez, 656-3809. If I'm not in, leave your name and phone number.

Typing, speedy and accurate, 75 cents a page. Call Cindy Wing, 862-4716.

Try a year at something challenging... be a part of University Year for Action (UYA) internships and get "on the job" experience while earning credit and a monthly stipend. Internships are now open in: Consumer Fraud, VNA (Visiting Nurses Assoc.) Day Care, Sara Holbrook, EASE (Emergency Alcohol Service). Call or drop in the Center for Service Learning, Mansfield House, x2062.

Men and women needed as cub scout leaders at Taft School. Only 1 hour per week. Sound fun? Call x2062 for information.

The Discovery Museum in Essex Junction, a "hands on" museum for children, needs volunteer interns as: graphic assistant, exhibits planner assistant, guide information and education programs coordinator. Credit is available. Call the Center for Service Learning at x2062 for more information.

APARTMENTS/ROOMMATES

Desperate — upper-class female, looking for an apt. within 10 minutes of campus, furnished own room preferred. Friendly and flexible. Please call Laurie, 656-3094.

Burlington — 4-room apartment available December 1, sublease til July. $350, including water, heat, utilities. So. Willard St. Call 863-2864, Sue or Brenda.

Responsible male or female needed in a beautiful farmhouse in Williston. Working person or student, transportation very helpful. Call 862-7656.

Roommates — female roommate needed for three bedroom apartment on Loomis St. available Dec. 1. $85/month plus utilities. Vegetarian preferred. Call 862-6545 after 6 p.m.

Apartment wanted — responsible, steadily-employed man (28) — clean, quiet and morally sound — seeks apartment that is spacious, clean, generously windowed and which sports a reasonable rent. Must be situated in a quiet, residential neighborhood. Prefer upper Loomis, Brookes, Henry, Weston, No. Prospect or No. Willard Streets. No exploitative landladies or lords need reply. Write Artemus Tishman, 16 Henry St., Burlington, or call 864-9377 and keep trying.

OUTDOOR EQUIPMENT

For sale — Skis, dynastar 203, 207 Rossignol Roc 195, Fischer 203, 207. Ski boots Lange Banshee, caber, Dolomite, Kastinger, all sized 7½—8. Ski poles 48", downhill racing ski poles — 54" Call evenings 899-2364.

Rossignol Smash 185 cm with Solomon 404 bindings, $100. Call Sue, 863-2864.

Earth shoes for sale — size 8, women's, dark brown laced Oxford, perfect condition, call 425-2644 after 7 p.m. Best offer accepted.

For sale — Winchester 52D target rifle (.22), redfield sights, used only 2 months, excellent condition, make an offer. Joy, x3858.

For sale: 1 pair K2 710 — 195 cm. with Look bindings, $175. 1 pair K2 810 — 200 cm with Look binding $175. Both are brand new. 1 prackticа 35 mm SLR with 50 mm & 135 mm and brand new Gossen light meter. All for $100. Call x3004, ask for Tom.

Warm and reliable Bean's down jacket (men's size small). Best offer. Call 863-5988.

Awesome freestyle combo: Olin Mark IV's, 170 cm with Burt retractable bindings, in very good shape, 3 seasons old. Snap 'em up at $120 for the set. Call Matt at x2698.

1 pair Frye boots size 6½ mens, will fit ladies 8, too small, brand new. $40. Vasque hiking boots "Whitney" 1 pair size 7 men's. 1 pr. size 5 women's, $40 each. Call 434-3297.

WHEELS

For sale — Saab 99LE 1974 mech. ex. no rust. Southern car $2900. Volvo 1971 164 mech. good. Very dependable, many new parts. $900. 434-3847 after 6 p.m.

For sale: 1973 Plymouth Satellite Custom. Good condition. Call 864-7138 after 6 p.m.

1971 VW squareback for sale $275. Runs good. Inspected, AM-FM radio, new battery, radial tires. Body fair. Call 434-2719 evenings and weekends. Keep trying.

For sale: 1974 Pinto runabout, good condition, starts well, 2 brand new snow tires, great gas mileage! $800 or best offer. Call 862-0964. Ask for Jane.

1971 G.M.C. 36 passenger bus, good condition, $1000 or best offer. Contact Chris or Marie, King St. Youth Center, 862-6736.

1968 BMW R60-US classic motorcycle, great condition. $2000 firm. Write A. Tishman, 16 Henry St., Burlington or call 864-9377. Keep trying.

1974 Subaru GL, excellent condition, easy miles $2000. Call 434-3297.

A classic '73 MGB that has a roll-bar, running lights, AM-FM radio, tonneau top, hood cover and block heater for winter. You also get two new snowtires, hard top, ski rack, MGB Handbook and fresh paint. It has had lots of TLC and is a bargain at $2500. Daytime call 863-6326 and leave number and I'll call you or call 862-7209 evenings. Keep trying.

MUSIC

Stereo components, etc. Warehouse prices. All new, all guaranteed. Call John Grapek, 862-8617.

For sale — pair brand new (never used) car stereo speakers, 10 oz. magnets, 864-4638, Bruce.

For sale: Marantz 240 stereo power amp. 125 watts/cha. 50 watt RMS Dyna chord P.A. amp hardly used. Sold for $450. Cordavox Leslie speaker cabinet for keyboards or guitar. All will go to top offer. Call 655-1400.

Guitars and amps for sale. New and used. Consignment sales. Acoustic and electric guitars. Every item a bargain. Shop us before you buy. Stay awhile, play awhile in our unique guitar parlor. All new items are warranted. Green Mountain Guitars, 65 George St. (near the post office), 864-9232.

For sale: Technics SA-300, 35 watt per channel stereo receiver. Factory unpacked, barely used condition, newest model out on line. Price negotiable. Ask for Ken, 317 Christie, x2194.

MISCELLANEOUS

For sale — handmade sweaters, turtlenecks, cardigans, vests, ski sweaters. Great for Christmas presents or for yourself. Fleece & needle designs, 862-8855, after 5 p.m.

Missed your period? Check it out. Pregnancy testing, counseling and referral. Monday — Friday, call 863-6326. Planned Parenthood of Vt., 19 Church St., Burlington, Vt.

Free horse to a good home and experienced rider ONLY! (For a year or so). He is a nine year old gelding healthy and sound, a very willing worker with excellent stable manners. Call 864-7132.

For sale: photography equipment (slightly used) Vivitar enlarger, premier 4 in 1 easel, Paterson trays 8 x 10, Gaf developing tank, Brownie dark room lamp, chemicals & more. Best offer accepted. Call 425-2644 after 7 p.m.

Lost kitty — male, black & gray tiger striped, 10-12 weeks old, S. Winooski — Maple St. area. Please call 863-6687 if you've seen him. Reward.

Lost — a 5 foot brown tube containing 6 graphite battens. Contact Peter, 863-2272, $10 reward.

Ushers needed for Royall Tyler Theatre's production of "The Wild Duck" on Nov. 15—18th. If you are interested in ushering, please call Royall Tyler Theatre or call 656-3859 and ask for Dave. The show is free to those who are ushering.

THE MILL
In Winooski

Exciting Selection of Handcrafted Items!
25th Annual
VERMONT HANDCRAFTERS
CRAFT FAIR
NOV. 16 • 17 • 18
Thurs. 12-9 • Fri. 10-9 • Sat. 10-5
MEMORIAL AUDITORIUM
BURLINGTON, VERMONT

CHEESE SPECIALS

Brie ..... $1.99/lb.
Havarti ..... $2.39/lb.
Vt. Cheddar "Ends" $1.85/lb.
Smoked Gouda . $2.99/lb.

plus many more cheeses, cheesecake "seconds," homemade quiche, yogurt in bulk, wine, crackers and mustards

CHEESE OUTLET
398 PINE ST.

Dining Hall

MENU #2

| November 10, 1978 FRIDAY | November 11, 1978 SATURDAY | November 12, 1978 SUNDAY | November 13, 1978 MONDAY | November 14, 1978 TUESDAY | November 15, 1978 WEDNESDAY | November 16, 1978 THURSDAY |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| BREAKFAST | | | | | | |
| 1)Waffles F-192)Poached Eggs3)Soft Boiled Eggs F-21Home Fries W-6Cottage CheesePastry or Muffins | 1)Griddle Cakes2)Fried Eggs3)Hard Boiled Eggs F-21Hash Browns W-6Cottage CheesePastry or Muffins | 1)Waffles2)Baked Shirred Egg3)Soft Boiled Eggs F-21Home Fries W-6Cottage CheesePastry or Muffins | 1)French Toast F-22)Scrambled Eggs3)Hard Boiled Eggs F-21Hash Browns W-6Cottage CheesePastry or Muffins | 1)Pancakes2)Fried Eggs3)Soft Boiled Eggs F-21Home Fries W-6Cottage CheesePastry or Muffins | 1)Fritters D-272)Scrambled Eggs3)Hard Boiled Eggs F-21Hash Browns W-6Cottage CheesePastry or Muffins | 1)Pancakes F-32)Poached Eggs F-103)Soft Boiled EggsHome FriesCottage CheesePastry or Muffins |
| LUNCH | | | | | | |
| 1)Fish Sandwich on Bun2)Spanish Macaroni L-313)Polenta Pie X-20 | - B R U N C H -1)Scrambled Eggs2)French Toast3)Sloppy Joe's Sausage Links | - B R U N C H -1)Scrambled Eggs2)Pancakes3)BaconSliced Ham with Cream Cheese and Chives Sandwich S-74 | 1)Hamburger on Bun2)Baked Macaroni and Cheese3)Chef's Salad Q-2 | 1)Hot Dog w/Baked Beans2)Beef Filled Empanadas L-1083)Carrot Soy Bean Loaf C-13*Super Toss Salad bar in dining room | 1)Chili & Grilled Cheese S-402)Turkey ala King/ Toast3)Meat Roll-up Salad Plate P-34)Hungarian Noodle Bake X-10 | 1)Hot Beef Sandwich w/Gravy & Whipped Potatoes2)Beef Noodle Casserole L-93)Julienne Salad Plate P-264)Cheese Veggie Medley L-121 |
| DINNER | | | | | | |
| 1)Baked Ham with Fruit Sauce*2)Taco Bar3)Ratatouille | 1)Roast Beef w/Gravy sliced to order2)Seafood Newburg3)Stuffed Cabbage | 1)Veal Scaloppini2)Baked Fish3)Cheese Fondue L-35 | 1)Fried and BBQ Chicken2)Beef Stroganoff3)Chop Suey w/Soy Beans X-27 | 1)Roast Beef aujus2)Sweet and Sour Pork3)Cheese Vegetable Bake X-3 | 1)Hamburger Steak with or without cheese w/Mushroom Gravy2)Fish K-63)Vegetable QuicheFrench Fries | THANKSGIVING DINNER at Harris-Millis Marsh Waterman, SimpsonWATCH FOR POSTERS |
| *Enjoy a build your own Taco Bar in the dining room this evening | Redstone Station | "White House" at Harris Millis Delightfully different appeal Baker's nite off: Ice cream Excursion in the dining room | "Kooky Cake Bar" in the dining halls tonight | | | |

SAGA

SKI CLOTHES: Beconta C.B. Sports Serac Cevas Alpine Designs Gerry
Skyr
Powderhorn
Swingwest
GLOVES:
Grandoe
Kombi

A Solid Edge of Performance.

Everyone needs to start with every possible advantage. In equipment. Fit. Choice. Find your solid edge at the Downhill Edge.

65 Main Street · Burlington 862 · 2282

SKIS:
Rossignol
Olin
Kastle
Hexcel
Precision
Dynastar
K-2
BOOTS:
Nordica
Dolomite
Garmont
Scott

DOWNHILL
EDGE

FREE

VERMICYNIC

FREE

VOLUME XCV NUMBER 9 "Can't Beat Their Meat." NOVEMBER 16, 1978

The Dean

Wild Rose Productions presents :

GIL SCOTT–HERON

Brian Jackson and the Midnight Band

Also appearing Southworth

Wednesday Nov. 29th

FLYNN THEATRE

Main St. Burlington

7:30 PM

ALL SEATS RESERVED

Tickets on sale today at 200 Main St.

$7.50 $7.00 $6.50 864-0288

FREEMARK ARTISTS upstairs near Hectors and Patisserie

HURRY ! GET YOUR TICKETS NOW

A Hot Item...

Fire Ruins East Wing of Davis Third

Students Criticize Lack of Communication During Blaze

By John Letteri

One room was totally gutted, and an entire east wing of Davis third suffered heavy smoke and water damage when fire struck at 3:15 Saturday morning.

No one was seriously injured as a result of the blaze, which started in a triple room at the end of the hall. But one of the occupants received minor burns on his back when he returned to rouse his sleeping roommate.

Bruce Katz, resident of the west wing of Davis third, and member of the newly formed "Davis Crispies," said when the alarm first went off, many of the people on the floor ignored it. "There have been so many fire alarms this year, we usually just sleep," Katz said.

A couple of minutes later, however, he said people were yelling and banging at his door. He got up, opened the door, and found the hall was filled with smoke. Grabbing a shirt and a pair of pants, he and his roommate, Bob Starensier, ran out into the hall and down to the second floor. Katz said some people were trying to put out the fire with fire extinguishers, while others opted to go out the windows and scale down the wall. One student, Rob McKenzie, made it down the entire three floors safely to the ground. His roommate, Tom Perrin, was pulled into a second floor room by Katz and Starensier.

Starensier, Katz, and other Crispies then went out onto the second floor roof which connects Davis with Wing and Wilks, and helped others from third floor windows safely to the roof. "It was all handled very well," said Katz. "Students, resident advisers, hall advisers, and students from Wing and Wilkes all worked together to get everybody out," he said. The "Crispies" said the students from Wing and Wilkes provided blankets, food, and places to stay for the night.

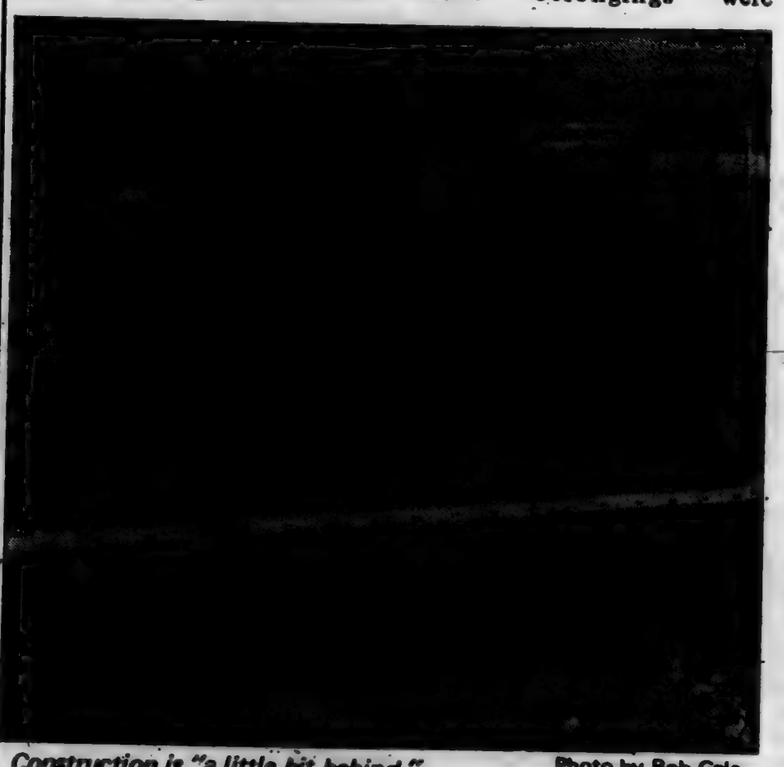
The Burlington Fire Department arrived fifteen minutes after the alarm was sounded, and had the fire under control in a short time. They also rescued one student who remained in his room after the alarm sounded. UVM Security was there as well, but according to the "Crispies," they were "wigged out." One security officer came up to Jesse Gadson, who was helping students off the third floor at the time, handed him his keys, and asked him to "hang his coat up."

Criticism from the residents of the west wing, who had to remain in the hall the day after the blaze, did not end here. The next day, those of the east wing were told they had to get their belongings out of their rooms by 4:00 p.m. that afternoon. Yet the students did all the moving, without any help from university personnel. "The attitude was you take care of your stuff, and we'll take care of ours," said Katz. Starensier said little concern was shown for the students who were burned out, yet "we're the one footing the bills," he said.

Further, some of the students whose belongings were destroyed or badly damaged in the blaze were not excused from tests they had on Monday. Resident Assistant Steve Marshall said the books "were covered with soot, they had spent a sleepless night, and another day trying to get organized, but still were made to take their exams Monday morning."

Only today did any clean-up work begin. For Saturday, Sunday, and Monday, the floors and walls were covered with soot, the halls reeked with the smell of smoke, and garbage went uncollected, said Katz. Monday night, the Crispies went en masse to see their Hall Adviser, and demand clean-up begin.

The three students who were burned out of their room were immediately taken to the hospital by Residential Life officials.



Two of them live in Vermont and were able to secure

(continued on page 8)

When the alarm went off, many people on the floor ignored it. Photos by Don Cunningham

Construction is "a little bit behind." Photo by Bob Gale

Library Construction Still Two Months Behind

By John Letteri

The construction project to expand the library is still two months behind schedule, said Norman Bishop, engineer for the University's Administrative Support Services, in an interview Monday.

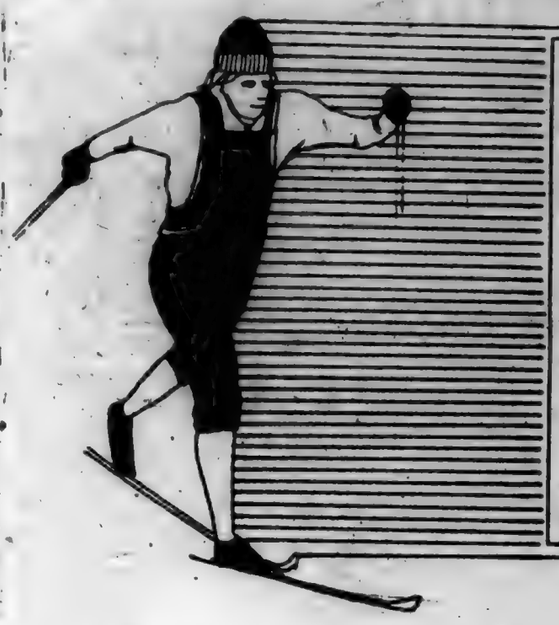
The $4.3 million venture, expected to increase seating capacity at Bailey Library by 95 percent, has a target completion date of July 15, 1979. Despite the schedule problems, the contractor, Sweet Associates of Schenectady, NY, has assured the university the project will be completed on time.

In August of this year, when the project was acknowledged to be "a little bit behind" by university officials, Sweet had taken several measures to improve the speed of construction. For example, some of the tradesmen had been put on ten-hour days and six-day weeks and additional personnel were added, both in the managerial and trade positions. Further, Sweet had postponed putting in the basement slab in an effort to get the roof completed before colder weather set in.

In August, Ray Lavigne, associate director of the Administrative Support Services, said the project would be back on schedule by December 1. Bishop said Monday if the contractors get a "rough roof" on and work all winter, the project could be completed on time.

He said, however, the contractors have a limited amount of work they can do during the cold winter months. Such things as piping, wiring and duct work can all be completed. But finishing work, including painting, plastering, laying carpets, or tile will have to be postponed until spring.

The $4.3 million cost of the addition was met by a bond issue of $2.3 million secured by student library fees, a capital appropriation of $1 million from the state of Vermont, and private funding, which has recently reached its goal of $1 million.



Currently, the Bailey Library registers 60 percent below seating capacity requirements set by the American Library Association. It was built in 1961 when the enrollment at UVM was 4,400. The university now enrolls more than 10,000 undergraduate, graduate, and medical students.

The 73,000 square foot addition is expected to ease crowding in the main building, which was built to house 500,000 volumes, but now has more than 700,000. UVM officials have said the new library will be adequate until 1990.

The university's push for expansion first began in 1972. In 1976, the board of trustees approved a plan for the expansion, and in 1977, the legislature approved the university's request for $1 million to help fund the project.

In related news, the gym construction is on schedule. The completion date for that project has been tentatively set for the beginning of May, 1979. Bishop said the foundations and wall for the expansion of women's locker and shower facilities have been completed. In addition, the project will provide for handicapped access requirements, and facilities for the elderly.

The SKI RACK

SKIERS

- For new skiers — let us help you choose from over a dozen packages at every price range. Discover for yourself our fast and efficient service.
- Serious skiers and fitness enthusiasts — look to the Ski Rack for high performance selection.
- We know how important boot fit is — best selection means best fit for you.
- Choose your Cross-Country clothing for function, style, freedom and comfort from our wide variety.

ROSSIGNOL ELLESSE ASNES trak

★ 27 different Cross Country Packages to choose form for adults & children $49.95-$138.95

★ Free Thursday night X-C clinic on waxing, where to ski and what to wear. Also, a Rossignol movie show.

HOURS:
MON. - WED. 9 - 6
THRUS. - FRI. 9 - 9
SAT. 9 - 5

SKI RACK

The SKI RACK

Outerwear from CLASS 5

ZAP VEST

65 – 35 cloth shell, Prime Northern Goose Down, Cargo/hand warmer pockets.

CLASS-5 PARKA

65 – 35 cloth shell, Prime Northern Goose Down, Cargo/hand warmer pockets, Double Snap Cuff, 2-way zipper, Drawstring.

HOURS:
MON. - WED. 9 -6
THURS. - FRI. 9-9
SAT. 9 -5

SKI RACK

Jacobson Assails American Diet

By William Devine

"American food habits have taken a definite turn for the worst," said Dr. Michael Jacobson, member of the Center for Public Science Information, during a speech at Carpenter auditorium Tuesday night.

The American diet has changed radically over the last 60-70 years, including a tripling in sugar consumption. U.S. consumption of soft drinks has also tripled and fat now accounts for forty percent of the average diet, while wheat, bread, and starch intake have declined by almost 50 percent. Further, Americans take in nearly 20 times the salt they need.

Jacobson said this turn has led to an increase in such health problems as heart disease, hypertension, and obesity. The amount of sugar Americans consume fuels a four billion dollar industry which concerns itself only with fixing "rotting teeth," he said. The overuse of salt has led to high blood pressure and hypertension, which contribute to stroke.

Yet, for the past 15 years, the American Heart Association has been issuing warnings on the dangers of a large amount of fat in diets, while the American Dental Association has been saying the same about sugar. Reductions of these two elements in diets have not come about because of government interference with the food industry practices, said Jacobson.

The food industry promotes items that will make them the most money, and these items are ones that appeal to the "sweet tooth" of the majority of Americans, said Jacobson. In addition, the major food producers spend astronomical amounts of money to advertise these products. For example, last year General Foods Corp. spent $300 million on advertising, including 10 million on Tang and 19 million on Kool-Aid. General Mills spent $160 million on ads last year, with $11 million specifically for Cheerios. "This represents the ferocity of the marketing schemes of the large food processors," said Jacobson.

Jacobson listed off some of the products marketed by these companies as "what America eats." These included "Twinkies," "Screaming Yellow Zonkers," "Ho-ho's," "Fiddle-Faddle," and "Count Chocula." The epitome of these products, Jacobson said, was a product marketed by General Foods Corp. called "Garbage." These are small, pure-sugar candies shaped in the form of pieces of garbage, and are packaged in a miniature garbage can.

When consumers and government calls such things as these "junk food," the food industry responds by calling it "fun food" or "recreational food," Jacobson said. In fact, when consumer groups, or government committee looks into the nutritional value of these products, and finds them not in the best interest of people, the food industry responds with a barrage of advertising about the benefit of the food, and employs the "rent a professor" technique.

This technique involves hiring a professor of a major university to conduct a study on the nutritional value of the food in question. Then the results, which are always positive, are used by the food industry in ads, and the professors who did the work appear at conventions and debates to defend the food industry.

Recently, governmental action against the food industry has increased. Jacobson said the Federal Trade Commission is looking into the possibility of limiting or banning totally the advertisements for "junk food" during children's cartoon programming on Saturday mornings. The Center for Public Science Information and the Boston-based Action for Children's Television have also joined the fight.

Campus Recycling Begins Again

The UVM campus newspaper recycling program is operating again, run by students from Environmental Studies and Robinson Hall. Some students are working on the program as an Environmental Studies action project, while others are involved for personal reasons.

Students working on recycling have been divided up into small groups that concentrate on one particular area of campus. Each group is assigned to a dorm complex, where it is responsible for putting up signs publicizing the recycling program and seeing that there is adequate space for the collected papers. Group members have spoken before the Hall and Complex governments to explain the program and hopefully to increase participation. Making students aware of how easy it is to leave newspapers off at a pick-up station in their dorm is one of the major goals of each complex group.

On Friday the collected paper is picked up and taken to the Burlington Paper Stock Company. This paper and metal reclamation company uses the paper to sell to recycling plants in New York State and Vermont. Old Cynics, Free Presses and New York Times are taken there and recycled into paper, paper products and building insulation. All recyclers get 35 cents per one hundred pounds of newspaper. A recent pick-up netted 950 pounds of newsprint which means a $3.20 profit for the recycling crew. The money gained for the recycled papers is used to pay for gas and publicity.

There are numerous arguments for recycling. For instance:

—Paper is 98% wood and 2% cotton.

—One ton of recycled paper is equivalent to 1.6 tons of pulpwood, which is equal to the annual growth of ½ to1½ acres of woodland, or 15-20 trees.

—It is essentially cheaper to recycle paper than to make it directly from pulpwood. However, this is underscored by the additional costs of manufacturing paper from wood: damage done to the environment by logging.

(continued on page 9)

Slippin' and Slidin' Through the Den

News Analysis

By Sarah Bailey

Complaining about the quality of food is easily one of the most over-discussed topics of converation on college campuses across the country. Nonetheless, the talk continues unabated, and often – it appears – for good reason. UVM is no exception. The main focus of student dissatisfaction is the Den – the cafeteria located in Billings which accommodates sometimes 4,000 students daily between classes. In fact, complaints of unsanitary conditions, unnutritious food, and overcrowding has become so frequent recently that the S.A. has initiated an investigation into the situation.

Attempting to serve several thousand people a day with an inadequate and inconsistent staff in a space far too small, the Den is clearly unable to adequately meet the demands placed upon it.

The most common complaints are that the line moves too slowly – it sometimes takes a half an hour at lunch time – and that the place is generally dirty or messy.

"There are just too many people going through it to keep it clean," said Ron Beaulieu, head of Saga for UVM. "The sheer number of people have a direct effect on the sanitation of the place."

According to Beaulieu, the Den is the busiest facility, yet the least equipped. The university is responsible for the upkeep of the physical surroundings, and Beaulieu said UVM cannot presently allocate funds for the Den.

Beaulieu feels that things will get worse before they get better. "We're in limbo right now. There are a great many things in a planning or building stage around Billings. When the library gets finished, that will add to the load. There are also thoughts for a new student center, which explains why UVM is not willing to invest money into a long-term renovation for Billings."

Renovation is quite unlikely for the Den because Billings has been designated a historical site by both the state and federal governments. The provisions of such a designation prohibit architectural changes without approval.

Both Beaulieu and Tom Smith, the manager of the Den, say that a major problem is a lack of consistent help. "We always have a high turnover of help, and when we're short it really shows here," explained Smith. "We still don't have enough people," added Jo Dallier, the day supervisor, "meaning that, as we switch people around, it slows other things down." On the average, eight full-time and two part-time people handle the bulk of the customers during the day.

UNSANITARY CONDITIONS

A major portion of the dissatisfaction expressed focuses on the unsanitary conditions of the kitchen area and the Den itself. One student told of seeing a grease fire on the grill, "with flames that reached the top of the hood. All that they did was put a pan over it, to smother the flames. It must have smoked for half an hour."

Smith responded to this comment by stating that the grill had been since re-wired to avoid a recurrence, but felt that the cooks had acted properly under the situation.

The response students gave most when asked about the Den was that it was generally unpleasant – floors were always dirty and there were too many people, plus a "greasy atmosphere." "It's convenient to eat there, so I do," said one person, "but I really don't like it."

Beaulieu, on the other hand, felt that the students perpetuated a good deal of the atmosphere. "The 'in' thing at the Den is for students to be grubby. It's a place that they relax in, with less care than in other cafeterias."

Smith has recently hired two more people to clean during the peak hours, but added that "sanitation is a problem, because of the lines. When someone spills things, we can't go out right away and mop it up."

HEALTH DEPT. EVALUATION

Philip McKenzie, of the Vermont Health Department, agreed that the biggest problem was general cleanliness, but nonetheless gave the Den a "very good" with a score of 89 out of 100 on his last visit on November 13. "There are rarely major complaints," he explained. "The biggest problem is that it is often dirty and greasy due to the immense number of people who come through."

"Every fall, as the school re-opens, I can expect the office (Department of Health) to get at least one complaint about the Den. Often it's simply a freshman who is unused to the army-style of eating, but sometimes it is a legitimate complaint – a hair in the food or such." McKenzie added that this year was the first in a couple of years that he did not receive such a complaint.

When there is a problem, he said that the Den is usually very good on correcting it immediately. If it is something major, such as repainting wall and ceiling, they will wait until a vacation when the place is closed to do it.

McKenzie had no complaints about the equipment. "It all works, and gets replaced as it wears out," he explained, although Beaulieu felt that the place did not have adequate ventilation.

UNNUTRITIOUS AND GREASY FOOD

Students have also voiced complaints about the food itself. They feel it is "overly greasy" unnutritious, and unappetizing. "Even MacDonalds is better than this," said one student. Many feel Saga is not fulfilling its responsibility to provide a nutritious noonday meal. The majority of the items are "fast food" types, with only the salads offering any sort of green.

In response to the complaints that they have heard, the S.A. is also investigating the Den. "We neither condone nor condemn it," said S.A. member Tricia Turner, "we just want to see what's really going on at this point."

Jesse Gadson, who is conducting the investigation for the S.A., said that he is looking into and trying to find solutions to the problems of cleanliness, inefficiency, and organization. He has no judgments on the place but discussed some of the possible solutions.

"Naturally there are problems. We're dealing with a space designed to serve 500 and serving 4,000." He cited work absenteeism as one problem, and believes the problem should ease off as people get settled in.

Gadson felt that one problem was that individual students were complaining to Saga with relatively minor things. "If the students collectively and constructively sit down with Jim Smith, maybe we can start to get something done."

"I really think the problems can be minimized," he added, "but we need the student body's help."

To ease congestion in the grill area Manager Smith said he'd like to try a faster line for non-grill orders. "At this point, it's impossible because we don't have any kind of beverage set-up out there. However, that is definitely in the works."

In anticipation of winter, Smith has also ordered black matting for the den to help cut down on the dirt. In addition, he plans on cutting down the 74 item menu, eliminating some of the "cook to order items," to speed up the line. Saga put in new, computerized registers this year, easing inventory, and allowing them to detect items that don't sell well. Consequently, these items may be dropped completely.

Employees are also unhappy with the situation. Some have quit, while others are upset with the demands being asked upon them. According to one employee, hours get switched without warning, and people are asked to do an extra heavy load of work. Also, they don't always enjoy working in an unclean atmosphere.

Dallier echoed this concern. "A lot of kids are getting sick – they're not always used to working so hard."

Smith denied that people were being forced to work extra hours. "I can't force people to do so," he said. "Granted, we do ask them if they will, sometimes, but there's no requirement."

Another problem in the den is the number of dogs that are wandering around. Under health laws, it is illegal for dogs to be in an area that serves food, yet there is rarely a time when they aren't around.

Smith explained that he is aware that there are dogs and that they are illegal, but that it is a difficult issue. "We get a lot of flack, when we haul a dog out," he said. "Plus, the employees are not allowed to come in contact with them, because of health regulations." The best he can do is to try to find out who owns the dog and ask them to remove it. "That's a student issue though, it's their center and they like to have their dogs there, but they should be aware of the laws. We'd rather not have to officially deal with it, but we may have to."

Inspector McKenzie summed up the entire Den issue by referring to it as "a sardine club." They are handicapped because of space. It's a bad size for their load. Smith illustrated this by stating that unlike some cafeterias which get weekly deliveries, the Den often gets them three times a day, because there is no storage

(continued on page 9)

"A lot of kids are getting sick – they're not used to working so hard."

"The 'in' thing at the Den is for students to be grubby. It's a place that they can relax in, with less care than other cafeterias."

-Ron Beaulieu, Director of SAGA

"Even MacDonald's is better than this." Photos by Debra Wolk

Beat the Rush before the Snow gets you

Special Cross Country Packages

Starting at $89

Rossignol and Trak Skis
Wax and No Wax
Nylon or Aluminum 3 pin bindings
Bamboo Poles

Odd Steen Ski Shop

Open Mon.-Fri. 9-9; Sat. 9-5; Sunday 12-4 862-5552
Downstairs in The Ski Shop, 388 Shelburne Rd., Burlington

FREE WATERBED!

THE FIFTH ANNUAL WATERBED GIVE AWAY

That's right, The Emerald City of Oz is giving away a waterbed absolutely free. The lucky winner will receive a complete waterbed package from the beautiful Water and Wood Collection, installed in your home. Register at The Emerald City the week of Nov. 20-25. The drawing will be held November 25 at 4:30 p.m., and will be broadcasted live on WVMT. More fun from The Emerald City, a member of the Downtown Burlington Development Association.

EMERALD City of OZ, Ltd.

71 ST. PAUL STREET • BURLINGTON, VT. • 862-4298
OPEN FRIDAY NIGHT TILL 9:00

Words Cannot Depict the Horrors of the Holocaust

By Amy Stahler
and Cynthia Letteri

Echoing noted Holocaust authority Elie Wiesel, Lawrence Langer reiterated the belief that modern language cannot adequately depict the horrors of the death camps during the Holocaust, in a speech at Benedict Auditorium Wednesday night.

"What one might say about the horrors of the Holocaust would betray the poverty of our civilized vocabulary," said Langer, professor of history at the University of Massachusetts. Yet, some artists are able to accomplish the task of describing the Holocaust and become "more interested artists" as a result, he said.

Photo by Rick Ames

Terrence Des Pres

To illustrate his point, Langer exhibited a slide of a painting by a noted Jewish artist depicting what he called a "death mask."

Photo by Rick Ames

Lawrence Langer

From the hollow, unseeing eyes, the gaunt, starved face, and the gaping mouth, Langer said the burden of the Holocaust could be felt by all. In another slide of a painting entitled "The Naked Bather," depicting a woman washing herself in a stream, Langer said a subtle form of Jewish resistance to the Nazis was shown. This being the Jewish idea to keep one's appearance as "normal and healthy looking" as possible, despite the desperate circumstances.

He cautioned, however, that through painting and writings on the Holocaust, "your mind can be swayed from one side to another." He said a person should approach the Holocaust with an open, but wary mind, because "there is no such thing as historical truth, but only interpretation."

Langer said the most unfortunate misinterpretation of the Holocaust came prior to the start of the actual violent Nazi persecution of the Jews. In effect, modern society could not believe the Holocaust could take place. The traditional religious and social values prohibited modern man from perceiving the actual inhumane motivations of the Nazis. According to Langer, this idea was exemplified when Mahatma Ghandi was asked to comment on the Jewish persecution just after Kristallnacht, the night when windows of Jewish shops in Berlin were shattered by German SS troops.

Ghandi said to suffer voluntarily at the hands of the Nazis would form a Jewish inner strength capable of resisting Nazi's attempts at persecution. To the God-fearing, Ghandi said, death has no terror. Normal death may not cause terror, said Langer, but Nazi atrocities were "a different matter."

He said Ghandi's statement revealed the hypnotic power of words by attempting to "convert a potential inhumane ordeal into a rhetorical flurry." Yet, at the same time, these words proved "impotent" and they entirely misinterpreted the events that would eventually lead to the extermination of six million Jews.

Further, words such as hunger, cold, pain and fear were written by free men in a free environment. Langer said these same words took on an entirely new meaning in the universe of death camps. Langer feels that no one has yet created a vocabulary to accurately describe the Holocaust.

After Langer spoke, Terrence Des Pres, an English professor at Colgate, offered three theories on the possible routes of anti-Semitism leading to the Holocaust: First, Des Pres said Jews were "the other" in a largely Christian world. Second, affluent Jews in Germany were made the scapegoat for all of the problems the country and its people were suffering at that time. Third, the Jews were the only part of society willing to finance state business, and the other people of Germany were thus prohibited from taking part.

Once these myths were perpetrated as reality by the Third Reich, "anti-Semitism" became part of Germany's ideology. It became all-encompassing, and the German society "released its own demonic powers and destroyed itself rather than its real enemy."

The Nazis portrayed Jews as "fat, ugly, dirty, and sexually perverse people" to further fuel the intensity of anti-Semitism. In this way, Jews were "carefully kept apart" from the rest of society, which had an enormous psychological effect on both the Nazis and the Jews. For in the minds of Germans, Jews now easily fit into the role of the trouble makers, without any "real class or nation" and allowed Hitler to aim his violence at them with little or no retribution.

VERMONT CYNIC

Clusters Aim to Improve Club Efficiency

By John Letteri

In an effort to improve co-ordination and communication between Student Association clubs with similar interests, Rob Smith has introduced the idea of organizing these clubs into separate groups.

Smith, former SA Communications Committee Chairman, is working with Student Activities director Dave Nestor on the project that is designed to group together SA clubs whose interests and goals are the same.

For example, Smith is currently working on grouping the Cynic, WRUV, Student Photo Services, and SA Graphics into a "media cluster." Smith said this will hopefully enhance the sharing of resources between the organizations. SA Graphics could use the development facilities at SPS, and the Cynic could use the artists at SA Graphics, said Smith.

Further, Smith said the clusters will provide more effective advising for the clubs involved. Presently, some of the clubs with credited staffers go to one advisor, while others go to another. With the clusters, each of the clubs would be provided with one specific faculty adviser, as well as a peer adviser for additional help. Also, SA Graphics and SPS might receive credit through the more appropriate art dept., rather than education, where they receive credit now.

Smith said the Student Community in Action program located in Residential Life is the kind of "cluster" he is looking to form between SA clubs. SCIA has one budget to finance a number of related programs including Big Brother, Big Sister, Office of Volunteer Programs, and Adopt-A-Grandparent.

The clusters might also prevent the duplication of efforts and events between clubs. Smith said SA Graphics bought a photo enlarger that, with better planning, SPS could have used as well. The enlargers SA Graphics purchased is presently too small for SPS purposes.

Smith said the plan was still in the "preliminary stages." He and Nestor are working on a presentation of the idea to be given to Keith Miser, dean of students, and other university and student leaders.

Photo by Bob Gelo

Rob Smith: Media cluster to improve communication.

No One is Excluded, Applying Swamiji's Philosophy

By Sarah Dougherty

Inherent in Swami Nisreyasananda's Hindu philosophy is a liberal tolerance of different paths and lifestyles. "You can't exclude anyone," said Swamiji (a courtesy title), in an interview last week.

Currently residing in the guest suite at the Living and Learning Center, Swamiji said the situation in South Africa is going to require the "exclusion of neither the black or white point of view. The English heritage of the Afrikaaners cannot be ignored, as can't the black contributions to South Africa." He said some nations are going to have to be silent as well as helping to alleviate the racial tensions there. "They are going to have to be clever enough at key times."

In regard to the Middle East, Swamiji said, "you can't go making sudden statements that you can't retract." These statements can only cause the situation to explode, put everyone on their guard, and make peace all the more difficult, said Swamiji.

Since Hinduism preaches the inclusion of all worldly religions and philosophies, and does not exclude any one viewpoint, Swamiji feels the life at a university offers an opportunity to "sample each discipline like foreign foods. It is good for us to select suitable good from each academic and social discipline."

He went on to say that an "atheistic scientific humanism is a perfectly legitimate "shop." But, Swamiji explained, when you see the whole of humanity, earth and heaven together, and see the spread out glory of God... you don't make distinctions between this twig, that flower, that food – it's all one sap."

But according to Swamiji, "philosophy should not contradict science" for it adds only a spiritual vibration system to the material vibration system of the universe. At the core of this "inner penetrating system" is God, he said. Communication is most effective through this medium since we all have the common keyhole of God within.

Swamiji is at the Living and Learning Center for two months in conjunction with the Asian Religion program under the direction of professor Michael McKnight. Swamiji is co-directing a Hatha Yoga class five days a week and teaching a Text and Teachers course dealing with Bhagavad-Gita. Swamiji is also giving various guest lectures.

Born in 1899, Swamiji is a native of Kerala State in southern India. A high school teacher there, he joined the Ramakrishna order (a monastic order of Hinduism) at age 25. The order seeks a "harmonious development between personal spiritual progress and the progress of humanity. This doctrine is fulfilled through preaching and welfare service at world-wide Ramakrishna missions." Work and worship are the same said Swamiji. Specific activities of the mission include the operation of schools, hospitals, recreational centers, libraries, relief and rehabilitation work, and celebration of religious holidays.

The Ramakrishan order has 14 branches in the United States from Hollywood to Chicago. Members of the order are placed in different countries much like a minister is posted to a parish. Before coming to the U.S., Swamiji had been posted for 19 years in Salisbury, Rhodesia, and Johannesburg, South Africa, as well as travelling in Zambia.

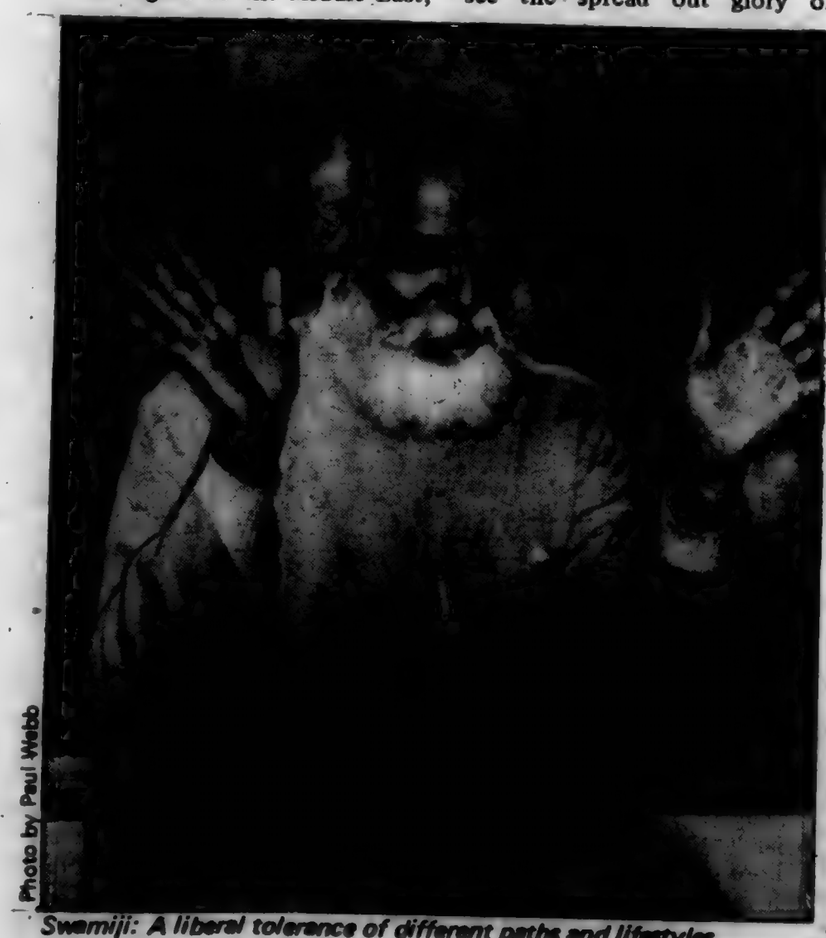

Photo by Paul Webb

Swamiji: A liberal tolerance of different paths and lifestyles.

BECK ARNLEY

IMPORTED CAR CENTER

SNOW TIRES

SEMPERIT, MICHELIN, CONTINENTAL and many others.

Full range of sizes and prices.

Rte. 2A at Taft Corners
Williston, Vermont

Never let your studies interfere with your education . . . M. Twain

weck's
WINE & CHEESE
Burlington Square Mall 658-2070

Bodybasics

for your complete body care needs :
127 College Street Burlington, Vt. 05401 upstairs

lotions, shampoos, oils conditioners, bubble baths, soaps and.... much more.

save money, save our bottles and bring them back for refills.

FRYE®

Who offers you over 30 styles of FRYE boots to choose from?

Who stocks over 700 pairs of FRYE boots?

Who sells the most FRYE boots in Vermont?

We do !

COME GET FRYED !

Open Mon. & Fri. till 9pm.
160 College St. 863—2216

CRISPIN Leather

Greenpeace Acts to Save Whales

By William Devine

"Whales are the most cruelly and unjustifiably exploited creatures in the world," said John Frizell, director of Greenpeace, an organization dedicated to saving whales from slaughter at the hands of the international whaling industry.

Speaking before a capacity crowd at the Ira Allen Chapel Thursday night, Frizell said the movement to save the whale has become a symbol for the struggle to preserve the earth's total environment from exploitation and abuse by man.

The techniques employed by the whaling industry are "ethically wrong, ecologically wrong, and totally inhumane," said Frizell. Killer boats chase the whales until they are too tired to swim underwater. A 250-pound harpoon is then shot into them, and they are left to thrash about until dead. He exhibited graphic slides of this procedure, of dead whales' carcasses aboard a "factory ship," where the whale is processed into marketable goods, and of the drain on the factory ship where the gallons of blood from the processed whales are emptied into the sea.

In some instances, Frizell said compressed air is forced into the whales, while they are still alive to keep them afloat once they expire. These hunting practices on a mammal with a brain five to six times the size and complexity of a human's, are sanctioned by the International Whaling Commission (IWC), the whaling industry's governing body.

Frizell said the IWC is staffed by executives within the whaling industry, and the scientists who work for the IWC are paid by whaling industry interests. According to Frizell, these "incestuous" relationships within the IWC render it useless. "The IWC puts the interests of a few whalers in front of thousands of whales," he said.

For example, in 1947, IWC scientists recommended that the hunting of the blue whale, the largest mammal on earth, be stopped. Yet, the slaughter of these whales continued regardless of the warnings, and by 1965, 97% of the world's blue whale population had been destroyed. It was only then that the harvest of these creatures stopped, said Frizell.

In addition, Greenpeace reported numerous violations of IWC regulations, but had little if any resulting action. Frizell noted that Greenpeace had submitted pictures of Russian "killer boats" taking under-sized whales to the IWC, only to receive notice from the commission that the pictures were not properly presented. He said the IWD issues a citation on the average of once every two years, usually involving the payment of a fine of up to $100.

It is for these reasons that Greenpeace began to fight to save the whale. Greenpeace workers actually position small rubber rafts, called "Zodiacs," in between the whale and the harpoon of the "killer boat." In some instances, they have been successful in saving a number of whales, while in others, they simply haven't a large enough staff to prevent all the killing, said Frizell.

He said they would continue their efforts "until the whaling industry dies out." This, he said, is a real goal since the whaling industry is faltering as a result of technological advances by other industries which render whaling products obsolete.

He cited one example where Chevron Oil Co. had developed a synthetic substance greatly superior to that of the oil of a sperm whale.

In addition, international pressure has slowed the industry as well, said Frizell. The United States passed the Marine Mammal Act of 1972 which makes the hunting of whales and other aquatic mammals illegal in U.S. territorial waters.

(related story on page 13)

Fire...

Continued from page three

places with their parents, while another went to the house of a relative in town. The other East wing residents slept in the lounges of Wing and Wilkes on mattresses provided by the university.

According to RA Steve Marshall, the support from the university was great for awhile, but after the first twenty-four hours, it dwindled. They adopted the "I'm glad it wasn't me" attitude said Crispy Dave Lord.

By Tuesday, most of the students forced to stay in the lounges of Wilkes and Wing were beginning to get desks, bureaus, and other living furniture. Jesse Gadson said he will propose some of the Student Association's contingency money be used to clean up the floor, and help the three students who were completely burned out get settled again.

The Crispies all expressed hope that their floor would be back together again after Thanksgiving. "We were a tight floor," said one. "We want to be back together soon." The Department of Residential Life has not determined when the students of the east wing will be able to return to their rooms.

S.A. Corner

First General Assembly November 16

By Peter Vanderbilt

General Assembly Tonight.

Tonight, November 16, at 7:00 p.m. there will be a General Assembly of the Student Association in the North Lounge of the Billings Student Center. The main topic will be the issue of UVM investments in South Africa and what stand, if any, the General Assembly should take on these investments. Other topics to be discussed will include the Student Lobby, a grievance process, and any other subjects that may be brought up.

The General Assembly is your chance to voice your opinions and to put them into action. If you don't like what the Student Association is doing, or if you don't know what the S.A. is doing, you should come to this meeting. Besides, if no one shows up, we power-hungry senators and officers are liable to do something outrageous and yet legal – power corrupts, you know! I.D.'s are required to vote.

Legislative Day is on the way!

The S.A. is looking for Vermont students to act as hosts for Legislative Day on Monday, December 11. Legislative Day is when all willing State Legislators visit UVM to get a feel for what's happening on campus, and to find out what the money that is appropriated to the university is supporting. We will be trying to match up each Legislator with a student from his/her home district who will act as a guide around the campus. Anyone interested in acting as a host should contact the Student Association at 656-2053, or come up to the office on Billings' second floor.

Student Activities Committee at work.

The Student Activities Committee of the S.A. Senate has recognized as S.A. organizations the Communist Youth Organization and the Student Committee Against Racism. The Committee requests that organizations submit materials for recognition and supporting documents to their constitution in advance of the Student Activities Committee meeting for the final decision.

Book Exchange to be considered.

An Ad Hoc committee is being set up to consider setting up a book exchange to be used by students as an alternative to the current system of selling books back to the store. The Committee will look at the present bookstore policies, the past efforts at such exchanges, and consider how and if a new system should be implemented. Anyone interested in being on this committee, or having any suggestions concerning such an exchange should contact Pat Danaher, care of the S.A. office.

Final Examination Relief?

The Academic Affairs Committee of the Faculty Senate has decided that "No student shall be required to take three or more final examinations in one day." So, if you find that you have more than two exams on the same day, be sure to contact your teacher for rescheduling.

Following Clubs to be disrecognized.

The following clubs are to be brought before the next Student Association Senate meeting for disrecognition, due to lack of any evidence that they are still active, and to clear out the S.A. files. If you have any complaints, you had best air them immediately! Come up to the S.A. office as soon as possible to find out what needs to be done to preserve these organizations. These clubs are Alpha Lambda Delta, Anthropology Club, Chi Epsilon Delta, El Club Hispanico, Friends of Geology, Geographic Forum, John Dewey Philosophy, L'Amicale Francaise, Lawrence Forensic Union, Meeting of the Ways, News and Weather, Student Advisory Committee, Student Chess Association, UVM Volleyball, UVM Table Tennis, UVM Skin/Scuba Diving.

Recycling...

Continued from Page Four

pollution from paper mills, and the dumps that are filled up with unrecycled paper.

–Finally, it takes a 46 inch pile of newspapers to equal the paper an average sized tree might yield.

The UVM environment is a wasteful one, from food to heat we students are professional un-conservationists. Clearly, we must learn to start conserving, and if we're going to continue on this planet, we must start recycling. One small contribution every college student can make is to drop daily, weekly, or monthly paper off at his dorm's recycling pick-up station.

Participation by all students is essential for the success of the program. The program urges all students to bring newspapers, loose-leaf notebook paper – any paper that is not shiny (magazines) to the collection location in their dorm. It is important to remember that no paper with a shiny surface can be used by the program. This means that most magazines are not accepted.

The Den ...

Continued from page five

space in the back.

"There are lots of things we might do to ease the "load," he continued, "but how would the students react?" One possibility he suggested was that Billings become simply a coffee shop with a very limited menu, but he was unsure what student response would be.

"At this point, I'd say that Saga could probably be doing a better job with sanitation, and the Den in general," finished Beaulieu, "but we are trying."

Stuft Shirt

A Beef & Seafood House
at
135 PEARL ST. • BURLINGTON

featuring an extensive Lunch & Dinner Menu

NEW Menu Soon

Weekday Specials

• WEEKENDS •

Prime Rib $5.95

• SUNDAY SPECIAL •

Buffet Brunch $4.95

"with seconds on us" — featuring Eggs Benedict

OPEN
MONDAY-SATURDAY 11 AM-10 PM
SUNDAY 11 AM-3 PM
Master Charge & VISA Accepted

FOR RESERVATIONS & INFORMATION — 864-9544

VT. RESIDENTS and STUDENTS

at

Smugglers' Notch

BASH BADGE

12.50 per badge

| | |
|---|---|
| Ski All Weekdays | 7.00 |
| Ski Weekends/Holidays | 10.00 |

50% OFF LESSONS AND EQUIPMENT

The perfect learn to ski package!

SEASON PASS

| | |
|---|---|
| ADULT | $165 |
| YOUNG ADULT/COLLEGE (22 and under) | 140 |
| YOUTH (17 and under) | 130 |
| CHILD (14 and under) | 95 |
| MID-WEEK PLUS | 100 |

(Save $5/day weekends)

Deadline Extended to Nov. 30th!

Conveniently available at BILLINGS STUDENT CENTER

Camera for pass and badge pictures wil be on location!

10AM to 4PM THURSDAYS and FRIDAYS

MAIL COUPON TO SMUGGLERS' NOTCH (with check)
JEFFERSONVILLE, VT. 05464, Box S.

☐ BASH BADGE
☐ VT. ADULT
☐ VT. YOUTH
☐ VT. CHILD
☐ COLLEGE PASS/YOUNG ADULT
☐ MID-WEEK

ACT NOW: Prices Increase Oct. 31st

Name _____
Address _____
_____
Age _____ Tele. _____

World And National News Briefs

Compiled By Dave Rocchio

Boost Given to Slowed Peace Talks

President Carter and his diplomats sought to save the faltering Israeli-Egyptian peace talks by phone and by meeting on two continents. The Egyptian delegation was nearly recalled by Anwar Sadat, but he decided against the drastic move.

The talks are going "not badly," according to Egyptian Prime Minister Mustapha Khahil.

After finishing a U.S.–Canada tour, Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin arrived in Jerusalem and said a review of Egyptian and American proposals would be undertaken by the Israeli government. These reviews will be on the central negotiation dispute: how to link the Palestinian issue to the Egyptian and Israeli peace plan or whether to include anything on the issue at all.

Thursday, a review of the talks will be conducted by the full cabinet and Foreign Minister Moshe Dayan, who will fly back from Washington to report. Defense Minister Ezer Weizmen will remain in Washington.

George Sherman, a State Department spokesman, said that Egypt's acting Foreign Minister Boutros Ghali would be departing for Cairo, leaving Defense Minister Kanal Hossan Ali in Washington.

President Carter stated, "I wouldn't want to start saying who is being more stubborn." In a televised interview on the Public Broadcasting Service, Carter said the talks were "bogged down" by legalism and language and that both sides were being obstinate.

Civil Defense Overhauled

More than half of all Americans would die in a nuclear war, according to the Carter administration. Many of these deaths would come because of outdated fallout shelters. In the event of a nuclear war, the Carter administration hopes to save up to 146 million people by massive evacuation of urban centers.

Bardyl Tirara, director of U.S. Civil Defense, said the shelters currently available in the cities of America are not capable of meeting the modern nuclear threat posed by the Soviet Union.

Tirara said, in case of nuclear war, the Soviet Union is better prepared to protect its citizens than we are. On Monday Tirara confirmed that Carter gave approval to the new evacuation plans on September ninth.

The official U.S. estimate is that 90 of the 220 million people in the U.S. would survive a nuclear attack. The new program's goal is to increase the number of survivors to just over half the population.

No firm details of the program would be given, since they are in the formative stages.

According to Civil Defense, the largest obstacle is determining how many Americans could be moved out of their communities and where they would be relocated. The cost of such a program was not disclosed.

Violence Surrounds Truckers' Strike

A strike in western Pennsylvania by dissident steel truckers was accompanied by random reports of rock-throwing and shooting. The police in the area are not sure if the violence is linked to the strike.

The strike, which started last Friday, was called by Pittsburgh-based Fraternal Association of Steel Haulers. The strike's aim is to show the Teamsters Union that they are not needed as bargaining agents for Steel Haulers. FASH chairman William J. Hill calls the Teamsters "mafia dominated."

A state trooper from the Somerset Turnpike barracks said, "They are having this strike, and we are having these incidents, but who's doing it, we don't know."

No injuries have been reported, and the teamster union has called the strike a publicity play. The aim of the strike is to get Truck companies to negotiate directly with FASH.

Conspiracy Contended in King Murder

In testimony to the House Assassination committee, Dr. McCarthy DeMere testified that shortly after James Earl Ray pleaded guilty to the murder of Dr. Martin Luther King, Ray told DeMere that there was a conspiracy. Dr. DeMere was responsible for watching over Ray during his eight months in a Memphis jail.

The testimony involved Dr. DeMere's recounting the jail-cell conversation he had with Ray after the March 10, 1969 guilty plea which led to Ray's 99 year jail sentence. DeMere's testimony was: "I said to him, 'Now you've pleaded guilty. Did you really do it?'." Ray replied, "Let's put it this way, I wasn't in it by myself."

Trial lawyer Percy Foreman also testified Monday. Foreman's testimony consisted of stating that interviews he had with Ray convinced him Ray had acted alone. Foreman also denied that he convinced Ray to plead guilty, saying that it was Ray's idea because he understood he would be executed otherwise.

Ray contended that he is a victim of a conspiracy, and at the time believed he was only involved in a gun-running operation. Martin Luther King was assassinated in Memphis Tennessee on April 4, 1968.

Coal Dust Explosion Injures 24

Two coal dust explosions blew out the sheet metal sides of a 120-foot high power station in Fort Martin, West Virginia Monday, hospitalizing 24 persons with burns. The Pittsburgh Burn Center said two of the injured workers were in serious condition.

The two explosions scattered sheet metal around the plant site. The community of Fort Martin had their air fouled with coal dust.

Elmer Barnett, a pipefitter with the Monongahela Power Corp., witnessed the blast from a nearby office. "It looked to me like all of the mills exploded. All you could see was black dust, coal dust," he said.

A spokesperson for one of the four companies that operate the plant stated, "It started with a small fire and a small explosion in a coal pulverizer which set off a larger explosion." The spokesperson said the second blast was still a mystery.

Coal pulverizers, also known as mills, take coal and convert it into the highly flammable dust that fires the boilers which make steam to generate electricity. At the Fort Martin plant, each boiler has six pulverizers.

The fire was quickly brought under control by firemen.

Oil Strike Ends in Iran

Iran's 37,000 oil workers went back to work Tuesday ending a two-week strike against Shah Mohammed Reza Pahlavi. Nonetheless, government troops fired on anti-Shah protesters near Teheran killing three persons and wounding 19, according to the official Pars News Agency.

During the past year, it has been estimated that over 1,100 Iranians have been killed in anti-Shah protests. Religious groups are violently opposed to the Shah's program to moderinize the backward Moslem country. These groups and other political opponents have called for the Shah's abdication and end to his 37 year one-man rule.

A spokesperson for the National Iranian Oil Co. said the strikers returned to work only after receiving guarantees that the Shah would submit to their demands. They include restoration of civilian rule, freedom of political prisoners, and an end to martial law, which was imposed Sept. 8.

The Shah promised a 22.5 percent pay increase to the oil workers last week. But the likelihood of this promise being kept is still uncertain. The end to the strike is a great relief to the struggling Shah, who at one time almost had to leave the country because of the threatening political violence.

During the strike, the Iranian government lost roughly $750 million in oil exports.

The U.S. government supports the Shah.

More Missiles

The development of two new intercontinental ballistic missiles are part of a 2.2 billion dollar supplemental budget request approved by the Pentagon, government officials said. The request will be submitted to the Congress for approval in January.

The officials further stated that development of a new land-based missile and a longer range version of the Trident submarine-launched missile would be the main strength behind the American nuclear deterrent in the late 1980's.

Commentary

Sexual Assault: The Dangers of Ignorance

By Helen Pelzman

Regardless of the small town image it portrays, Burlington is not a safe place. It is the largest metropolitan area in Vermont, complete with urban problems. One of the most critical is crime, and students who fail to realize this are taking a lot of chances – especially women.

Reports of sexually-oriented crimes in Burlington have been on the rise over the past few years. Within the last ten months, twenty incidents of sex-oriented assaults have been reported to the Burlington Police Dept. Of these twenty, fifteen have been rapes, including two UVM students. Women who think that they are safe walking the streets alone at night are wrong. They are taking unnecessary risks.

The question arises as to why female students have not been appropriately informed about these assaults?

UVM security claims that there have been no incidents of rape reported on campus this year. The theory is that UVM officials do not want to 'scare' or 'sensationalize' a problem that does not exist within the university's perimeters. Unfortunately, off the hallowed grounds of UVM, the problem of sexual assault does exist – and it is the responsibility of the university to take adequate measures to inform students of these incidents. They have not met this duty responsibly. For example, how often would a female UVM student think twice about hitchhiking? How often does an off-campus student check the locks on her window. Would she be aware of the fact that seventy percent of rapes occur indoors? Would a student infer any real sexual threat behind several obscene phone calls? The thrust of these questions center around basic precautionary methods that should be spelled out to female students through administrative or student-oriented organizations.

Understandably, these organizations can claim that they have no authority from which suggestions concerning student lifestyles should be made. They are correct in assuming that, despite this lack of authority, a responsibility to inform students of events such as crime and sexual assault should be recognized by UVM administrators. The entire community of Burlington should be concerned with prevention, and prevention can not be successful unless people are informed.

The Burlington Police Dept. has been conscientious in its efforts to inform Burlington residents about crime-oriented events and prevention tactics. But how frequently are UVM students going to actively seek the advice of their local policemen concerning effective prevention methods. Something has to happen before anyone will contact the police or security. And this theory runs counter to the whole process of prevention.

Prevention sounds like a reasonable and respectable approach to alleviating the increase of crime within the Burlington area. Unfortunately, prevention involves forethought, and very few individuals anticipate crime-related events until they are victimized themselves.

Consider first some facts about rape and rape victims. At least eighty percent of rapists know their victims. Rapists are usually characterized as methodical and calculating individuals, thus, 80% of rapes are pre-planned. Within the Burlington area, the greatest number of rapes occur between the months of January and April. Therefore the myth about rape being 'seasonal' in Vermont is completely fallacious. As stated before, seventy percent of all rapes in Burlington occur indoors; therefore the importance of securing windows and locking doors becomes paramount in prevention. Indeed, most women are aware of basic precautionary methods such as not hitchhiking, avoidance of walking alone at night, carrying whistles, walking in well-lit areas and locking car doors. However, you would have to become harassed by obscene phone calls to question the wisdom of putting your full name in a phone book, thus the prevention of such harassment becomes obsolete.

Incidents of sexual assault in Burlington does have an impact on the UVM community. Several organizations are now available for counseling services. The Women's Referral Center located in Billings and the Peer Counceling suite in E100 in the Living/Learning Center are two UVM affiliated referral groups. In addition to these services, the Burlington Police Dept. now has a Sexual Assault Unit devised especially for counseling and investigating sexually-related criminal incidents. The sexual assault unit is under the direction of Officer Stephanie Scogan, and encourages any student to contact them about questions or problems relating to prevention or actual reported assaults. These services illustrate a growing need and awareness regarding the extent of sexually-oriented criminal activity within the Burlington area.

Prevention measures must be recognized by both men and women in order to restore Burlington residents' confidence in their community. Please help yourself and your friends by showing your concern and increasing your awareness in regard to preventing crime and sexual assaults.

The Virtues of Impractical Education

By Kris Benoit

"What are you going to do with it?" "I'm going to build a space capsule," or "I'm going to make the world safe for democracy with it." The question concerns a college major. The replies are as relevant to the question as the question is to a major. Many students, however, believe that a college education is a tangible object which earns one money after graduation.

Webster defines "to educate" as "to develop mentally or morally especially by instruction." While having some sense of direction concerning a career may be admirable, even desirable, this sense of direction does not preclude mental and moral development in areas supplementary to, or even quite different from career objectives. Too often modern conceptions equate education with training and a major with a career.

If these concepts are correct, then studying literature, philosophy, art, music, or any of the fine arts is a waste of time. After all, how many of us will be able to earn a living as writers, philosophers, musicians, or artists? Unless we plan to teach in such disciplines for money, we should not bother with them. Obviously Shakespeare, Descartes, Mozart and Picasso were impractical (a horrid accusation) in pursuing their arts, until they could earn money from them.

Students of the fine arts are not the only ones subject to disapproval. A related assumption indicates that if a particular major does not provide specific job training, the student will attend graduate school. The question, "Do you plan to go on?" plagues social science majors. A psychology or political science major who answers in the negative often draws a shaking head and a knowing smirk. After all, everyone knows that since political science does not provide specific job training, pursuit of a law degree to ensure employment is essential. Presumably, understanding political processes and trends, being able to vote intelligently or read a newspaper critically are worthless skills, unless of course, they can be used for monetary gain.

Everyone knows that you cannot "do" anything with a psychology degree unless you "go on" for a further degree which will qualify you for a professional position. But what exactly does "do" mean? If it means to use specific knowledge and/or skills acquired through college courses directly to make money, then it may well be true that a psychology major will not "do" anything with his degree. A psychology degree may, however, help him "do" many other important things. When asked what one could do with a bachelor's degree in psychology, a psych graduate student recently said, "You can raise a family with it." Granted, a college education is not a prerequisite for raising a family, but studying psychology can foster a greater understanding of oneself and others in terms of motivation, emotions, and thought processes (hardly a liability when raising a family).

The educational ideas of the sixties, i.e. no grades, no books, no structure, may have been a bit far-fetched, but perhaps no more outrageous than the now prevalent career-oriented educational ideals. This is not to advocate that we go back to peace, love and guitar strings, nor that we eliminate planning for the future from college altogether, but rather that we not overlook the virtues of becoming knowledgeable in a field that may not lead directly to a job.

Specific job training is available from vocational and technical schools. In most cases it is far less time consuming and expensive than four years of college. In fact, specific training is often not at all what prospective employers seek from college graduates. When visiting a Mass Communications class, Red Martin, general manager of WCAX-TV, once said that he would hire a philosophy or history or any liberal arts major before he would hire a communications major (much to the horror of the communications majors present).

A college education should not be reduced to a consumerism, in which so much time and money is invested to earn a degree which will increase earning power. Earning power is not the only thing which improves the quality of our lives. An interest in cultural endeavors can enhance enjoyment of leisure hours. A knowledge of art or history can make someone more interesting to talk to. The Mercedes, the house in Greenwich and the chalet at Killington may be purchased with money, but the amount of enjoyment they provide is not a direct function of their owner's income. Similarly, an education need not be directly related to future economic status in order to be useful.

Woolrich

Making news... on the streets and over the hills... the canvas Woolrich anorak.

It's for him. For her. For warmth.

Featuring water repellant canvas. These jackets are hooded. Snapped. Zippered. Fully lined. And come with lots of big, roomy pockets.

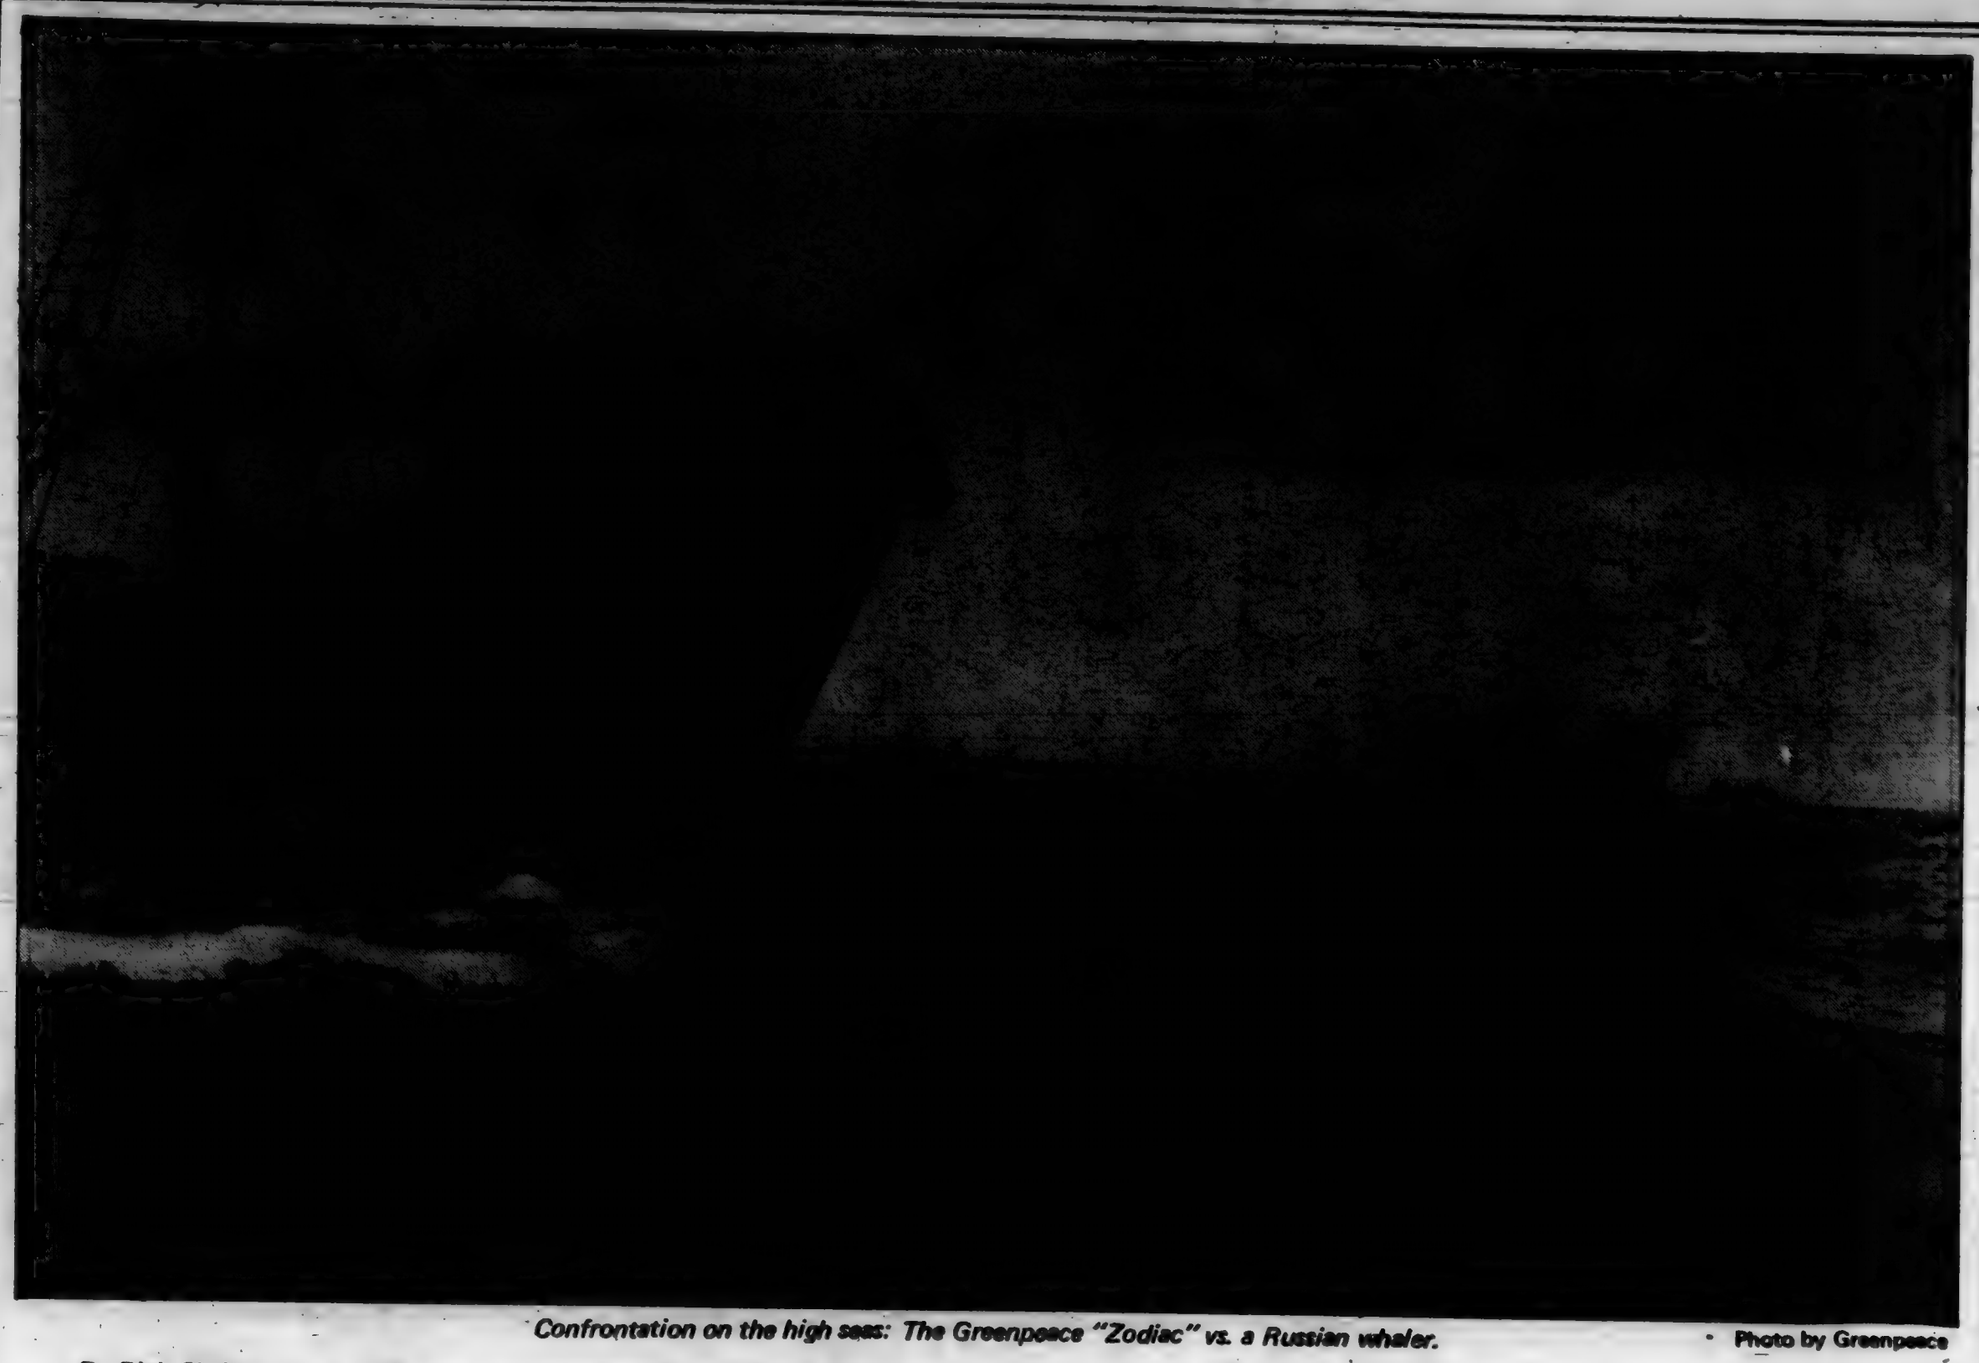
Woolrich anoraks, designed for comfort. Warmth. Freedom of movement. What more could you ask for?

Lots more.

Woolrich wool shirt. Pants. Knickers. Socks.

For the guys: the plaid or checked wool shirt. With the fully-lined Khaki pants. In poly/cotton with 100% cotton lining. Or knickers... if you prefer.

For the gals: the same plaid wool shirt, but tapered a bit for your feminine figure. And wool knickers... trouser-pleated for fashion. Warm for winter dressing. Complete with thick knicker socks.



Woolrich... giving you everything you need for a warm stuff winter. Shown: the men's anorak $65.00; sizes S-M-L-XL. The lined Khaki pant, $28.00; sizes 36-46. The wool shirt, $32.50, sizes S-M-L-XL. Men's Shop on Main.

The women's anorak $61.00; sizes S-M-L. Socks $9.40. The Knicker $38.00, sizes 8-14. The wool shirt, $29.50, sizes 8-16. Colony on Main.

ALL WOOLRICH. ALL FROM MAGRAMS

WARM STUFF

MAGRAMS

Confrontation on the high seas: The Greenpeace "Zodiac" vs. a Russian whaler. Photo by Greenpeace

By Rich Chalmers

It was late in the chase and the whales were exhausted. They could no longer dive deeply to avoid the exploding harpoons of the Russian catcher boat 150 feet behind them. The only thing between the whales and death was a small zodiac raft manned by members of the Greenpeace movement. Speeding along at 15 knots, the Soviet ship fired. The harpoon flew over the zodiac, over the whales and splashed harmlessly into the water. They had missed, but the Zodiac needed to refuel. During those few minutes without protection, the whales were killed.

It is only with great pain that members of Greenpeace—an organization committed to protecting endangered species—watch the mass slaughtering of the world's remaining whale population. "It's truly ghastly," Greenpeace spokesman John Frizell explained, describing the actual techniques used by the Japanese and Russians, who together comprise 80% of the industry. "It disturbs us to see it. It's ecologically wrong, ethically wrong and totally and absolutely inhumane."

"We regard the whaling issue as being more significant than simply bad management of a fishery. To begin with, the whales have been so badly exploited that nothing but a total end to all hunting makes any sense now. Secondly, there is every possibility that whales are intelligent and reasoning beings in a way we find completely alien because of their environment. Some of the largest and finest brains on the planet are ground up for mink feed and lubricating oil. This we find totally abhorrent!"

The beauty and intelligence of this huge marine mammal has gone unnoticed until recently, when scientists and other interested groups began probing into the life of the whale. Due to its huge size and water habitat, it has been difficult to gain concrete evidence of the whale's lifestyle. But because of experiments done on dead whales, either washed up or on whaling ships, much has been learned about the animal's physiology.

As a result of these studies, little doubt exists today that the whale is an extremely intelligent mammal. "It is not surprising," commented Frizell in an earlier interview, "when you consider that the brain of a great whale is considerably larger and more complex than our own, particularly in areas that we believe make humans so special, namely the frontal lobes, and the areas concerned with abstract thought and perception, etc."

"There is no doubt that whales do communicate," continued Frizell. "The only question is how." A number of characteristics belonging to the whale strongly support this hypothesis. Whales have a complicated social structure consisting of six to eight females and one male in a family. They show high levels of perception and are able to sense when another whale is in need of assistance. Whalers have learned to take advantage of these strong, familiar bonds by harpooning a baby and then killing the mother when she invariably appears to help her injured offspring. The whalers have also concentrated on killing the bull whales which are larger and more valuable. The loss of the only bull in a family can disrupt the entire social system, and acceptance of a new male as leader of the pod is a long and drawn out process, involving to a large extent, trust.

A whale's advanced use of sonar enables him to retain the knowledge of a cubic area of water up to 100 miles on a side. Studies have also revealed evidence of inversions two or three thousand feet down in the ocean which create, in effect, tunnels for sound. Sounds made within these inversions are reported to be able to travel up to several thousand miles. "There is some suspicion," Frizell noted, "that whales use these as sorts of undersea pipelines for their communications."

The Greenpeace organization itself began in 1971 as an anti-nuclear group called the "Don't Make a Wave" committee. Although the group met only limited success toward its goal of preventing an American Nuclear Test on a former wildlife sanctuary in the Alaskan Aleutian Islands, the time was ripe for an active environmentalist group to take the stage. Greenpeace's attempts to actually confront the problem with both their minds and their bodies got such a warm response that by 1971, the organization was officially named Greenpeace and began its work to save at least a few of the endangered species of animals throughout the world.

"We are now mostly concerned with the protection of marine mammals," Frizell remarked. "We picked marine mammals because they are such a classic example of man's exploitation of nature without any regard for the consequences. The time to protect is now, because a number of species are already disappearing quite rapidly."

Greenpeace has met such a high degree of success and public support since its beginning days that it now has major offices in the United States, New Zealand, Australia, Great Britain, France and Canada.

Although there are many environmental agencies making good progress towards ending the whaling industry through

(continued on page 18)

"Some of the largest and finest brains on the planet are ground up for mink feed and lubricating oil."

Photo by Don Cunningham

Greenpeace speaker John Frizell

FEELING GOOD.

It can make all the difference in the world.

Don't envy those folks who never seem to wear down. Join them!

Thousands of healthy, active people of all ages swear by Sunasu's unique nutritional products... comprehensive formulas containing key ingredients missing from most products sold in stores.

Find out what a difference Sunasu products can make in your life. Contact your independent Sunasu distributor today.

SUNASU International, Incorporated

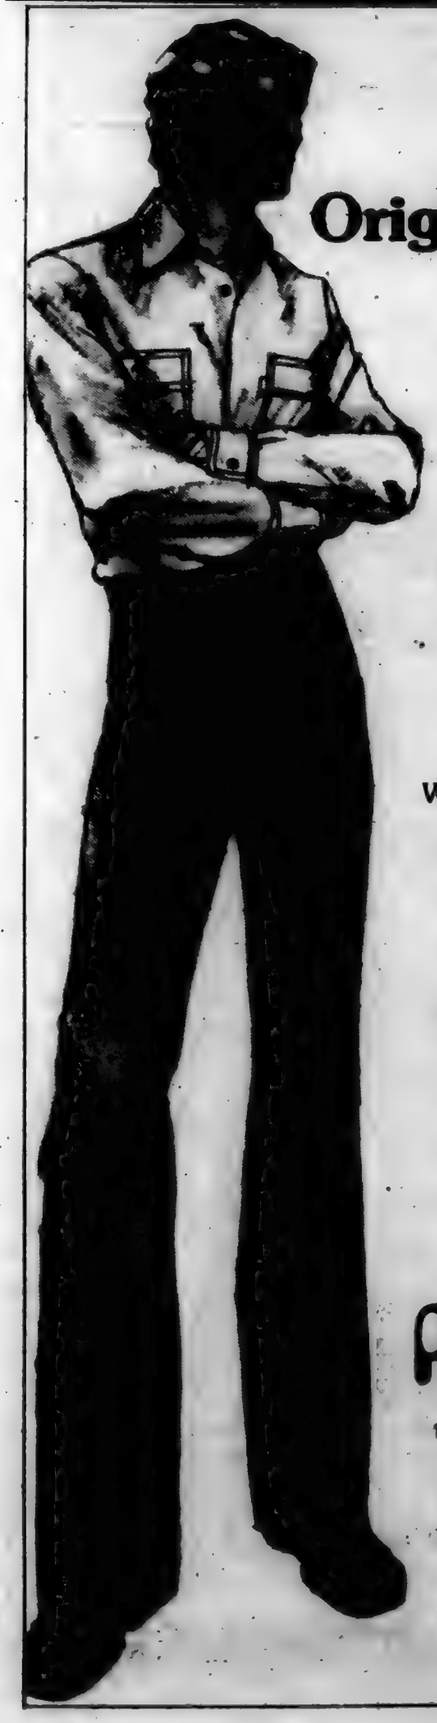
Your independent distributor is

Steve Sulzer
163 Elmwood Ave.
Burlington, Vt. 05401
802 - 862 - 1951



Bored?

Drop by the Cynic anytime.

Levi's® Original Bush Jeans Are Back

The rugged jean that'll take you anywhere from mountain adventures to back yard loafing... Levi's® Bush Jeans. With all the comfort, style, and stamina you'll need. And features like roomy flap-and-snap pockets, tunnel belt loops, a wide variety of colors, and sturdy fabrics that make you feel right at home. Anywhere.

Pants Plus

12 N. WINOOSKI AVE.
BURLINGTON, VT.
05401
802 • 864-0181

Photo by Bob Gale

Sonasu products may appear soon in Billings.

Sonawho?

By Randy McMullen

Sonasu. The name sounds like the ghost of some great Indian warrior (him walk the earth when the moon is but a toenail...), or perhaps another type of martial art. But if someone should offer to sell you some Sonasu, you needn't fear for your life, or prepare for a lecture on American history or off-beat anthropology.

Sonasu is actually a corporation that sells nutritional supplements. They presently offer three products: vitamin-mineral-herb tablets, a powdered protein mix, and time-release Vitamin C pills.

The corporation, which began in 1971, has recently found a market in Burlington. Steve Salz, Sonasu's Queen City representative, maintained that Sonasu is a business "dedicated to quality and integrity." He adds that the nutritional supplement company most wants to provide its customers with vital, yet often neglected, nutrients.

Sonasu's philosophical foundation seems to be the idea that good nutritional habits and lifestyles are rare in American society. Convenient eating habits take precedence over beneficial ones. "People just don't have the time to eat a proper diet," said Salz.

And that's where nutritional supplements like those from Sonasu come in. People who only have the time to eat on the run, Salz figured, will still have time to pop a few vitamin-mineral-herb and Vitamin C tablets, or add a little protein additive powder to their drink.

Of Sonasu's three nutritional products, the vitamin-mineral-herb tablet is probably the most noted. What is unique about these tablets is the concept of using herbs which, according to Sonasu, increase the "bioavailability" of the vitamins and minerals; that is, it gives those nutrients an easier access to the body. Paul Twitchell, who has done several studies on the role of herbs as aides in nutrition, claims that herbs could be the "missing link" in a successful dietary program.

"Sonasu's philosophical foundation seems to be that good nutritional habits are rare in America."

Vitamin C tablets are also available from Sonasu. The tricky thing about this vitamin, explained Salz, is that it isn't retained well in the body – that which isn't used immediately by the body is often lost through excretion. There are also outside factors. "For example," said Salz, "every time you smoke a cigarette, you lose 25 milligrams of Vitamin C."

Because of this, he explained, Sonasu sells time-release tablets, which cause the Vitamin C to enter the system at a slower rate, preventing a build-up and waste of that nutrient.

Sonasu's newest product is their powdered protein mix. According to the product's label, the protein is carefully balanced with all eight essential amino acids (mandatory for a good source of protein) and one teaspoon provides you with about 25% of protein's Recommended Daily Allowance.

Although new to Burlington, Sonasu products have been tried elsewhere in the northeast, with some fairly positive results. Feedback through letters and word-of-mouth have reached Sonasu, some saying that the nutritional supplements have helped their hair and skin; others have spoken of an overall increase in energy. Feedback is fairly common, too, added Salz, since salesperson and customer usually keep in touch.

Another interesting fact is that Sonasu prefers not to sell their product on any store shelf. "As soon as it goes up on the shelf," said Salz, "it loses the whole service aspect." He mentioned that it was more of a "sharing" type of set-up, where the salesperson always gets back to the customer to see if the product is doing well or being taken properly. There is also a 30-day guarantee on all three products.

Presently, Salz is trying to gain permission to sell Sonasu products in Billings. He is also looking for people to help him sell the products. He seems fairly optimistic, however, that the nutritional supplements will latch on in Burlington. After all, it's selling in Buffalo.

The Vermont Cynic wishes you a happy Thanksgiving if you can find a ride home.

Photo by Bob Gale

A Portrait of the Friends

From colonial times the Quakers have served as America's conscience. Now the Burlington Quakers maintain a low profile.

By Nelson Hockert-Lotz

"I used to be a Baptist, and he used to be a Mormon," said the clerk of the Burlington Friend's Meeting, pointing to a bearded man in his twenties.

"I used to be an agnostic," said a Jewish-looking young woman just out of high school.

"I used to be an Episcopalian," someone else spoke up.

"I used to be an atheist," said another.

All of these people now belong to Burlington's small, tightly-knit Friend's (Quaker) community. Some of the older people have been Quakers all their lives. Some of the younger people were born to Quaker parents, but have only recently discovered the Friend's Meeting in Burlington. In any case, the Meeting is growing.

Alice Wiser, the clerk of the meeting, pointed out that she had been a Catholic, a Baptist, a Methodist, a Lutheran and was almost formally accepted as a convert to the Jewish faith before she "found" the Quaker faith. She had been searching for something [illegible] she became involved with the Quakers, she went through religious conversions like designer fashions. She often talks of the "Spirit" that she found in the Friend's faith, but that wasn't what attracted her. That came later. What she had been searching for was the essence of the Friend's, in worship and in the world. She found community.

"Friends" is what the Quakers call themselves. It is particularly descriptive of the way they see themselves: they draw their strength from the community.

The Friend's Sunday morning gathering is called the "Meeting." It is a pledge of support, and not a [illegible] which includes one in the [illegible] of the Meeting.

The Burlington Friends [illegible] in the rear half of a [illegible] carriage house on the large back lawn of [illegible] on Pearmain St. To get [illegible] through the front [illegible] through the front [illegible] of the house.

The women, gathering steam from a trickle of late arrivals, discuss Mary Dyer, a Quaker evangelist hanged on Boston Commons in 1660 for preaching the faith. They speak of her courage and her sense of "mission." Someone mentions her bravery on the scaffold, her refusal of Anglican "Last Rites."

There is no formal call to worship as the meeting begins at eleven, but the room falls silent. The only sounds are the creak of the door with the coming of occasional late arrivals, and the hum of the space heater.

For an hour the silence lasts. Today no one speaks, although other Sundays several Friends may feel moved to share something with the group. There is no singing, communion, or collection taken. It is simply a quiet time for contemplation. It is the time in which the Friends strive to open themselves to the "Spirit" or "Light" or "Voice" that guides from within.

Finally, a handshake passes between the clerk and the man beside her, signifying the end of the hour. In a moment, the quiet has fled as the Quakers greet one another and their visitors.

PHILOSOPHICALLY SPEAKING

The Burlington Meeting has exactly fifty members and close to thirty "regular attenders" who are not formal members. Attendance is a personal decision, and many of the members are erratic where attendance is concerned.

Wiser, as clerk of the Burlington meeting, is both an organizer and an inspiration to the community. It is a role she gregariously fills, almost as a foil another to the more introspective Friends.

The Friends do not have ministers, priests nor experts who broadcast the doctrine to [illegible] people

(continued on page 17)

Thoughts at a Quaker Meeting

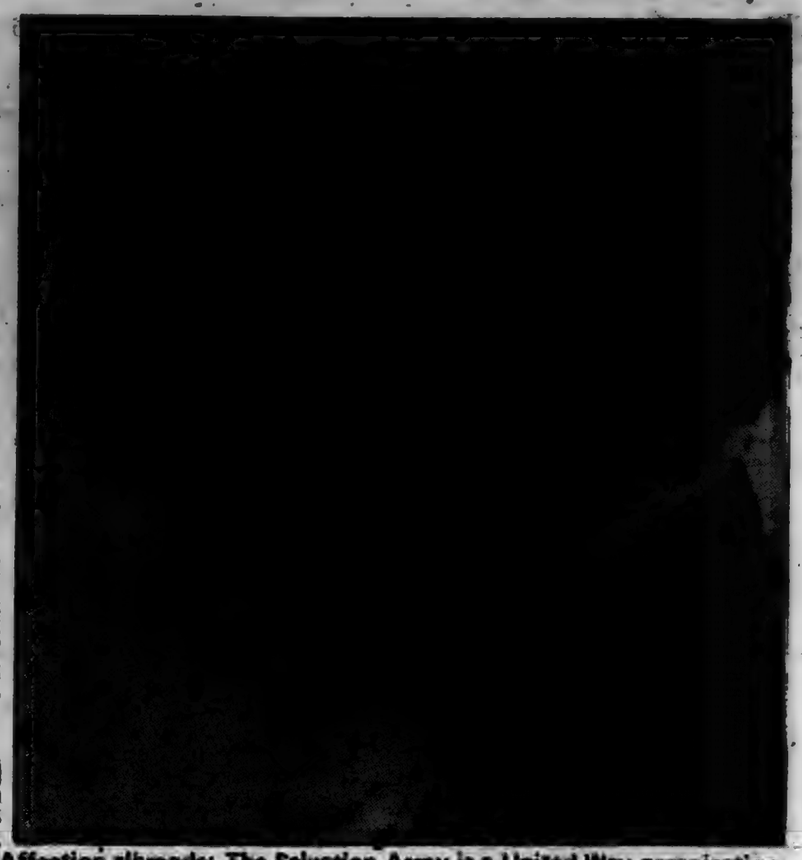
There has been almost an hour of silence now. The children file in for the last ten minutes of the meeting. They squirm, but quietly.

Some of the Quakers close their eyes to meditate, or contemplate, or simply sit and wait calmly for something, who knows exactly what?

But my eyes are open to flit about the room. I notice that I have restless eyes. They dart from quiet face to quiet face, for some intuitive reason eager to avoid eye contact with the others who have open eyes. What am I thinking?

The folding chairs are hard to sit on for an hour. I can't read the titles of the books lining the opposite wall. It is almost a family setting, people of all ages in silence together. If I can touch God here, I think, I can touch God anywhere.



I realized how cluttered my mind is, how impossible it is to sloth off my busy-ness in a short hour. Perhaps it would take months, even years.

Visions pop up

Continued on Page 19

HOMEMADE SOUPS • CLAM CHOWDER • CREPES!
UNIQUE HOT CHOCOLATES • HOT CIDER •
HOT LEMONADE • LOTS OF TEA •
• CAPUCCINO • ESPRESSO • CUSTOM COFFEES
warm!
warm!!
warm!
ben & Jerry's homemade
ON THE CORNER OF ST. PAUL & COLLEGE
BURLINGTON • 862-9620

Affection alamode: The Salvation Army is a United Way organization.

United Way Defined

By Sharon Cherry

Although many have heard the term "United Way" and associate it with some sort of charity organization, it is not unusual to find individuals that don't know exactly what its purpose is. United Way is a nation-wide, publicly funded, non-profit organization concerned with improving the "quality of life."

It was established in 1918 to satisfy the need for a common name and identity for all local community charity organizations throughout the country. By doing this, fund-raising competition amongst various charity groups could be eliminated. The money that the United Way receives is split up between the various charity groups, such as the American Red Cross, the Boy Scouts of America, and the Vermont Achievement Center, among others.

Chittenden County's chapter has been operating for 35 years but it is only recently that the "United Community Services of Chittenden County" changed their name to United Way. It is run by a volunteer 35-member board of directors and 10-member executive committee. It is commonly assumed that the organization is concerned merely with fund-raising, but, as President of the Chittenden County chapter explains, this is not so. "The United Way is not specifically identified with fund raising. Rather it is an all-encompassing term which is identified with the combined community process of voluntary planning, management of the organization, allocating of funds and fund-raising." The money earned by the Chittenden County chapter is given to 30 different local charity organizations. Thirty-two percent of the money given to the 30-member agencies is raised by the organization itself, while the remaining 68% comes from government grants, endowments and fees and payments for services.

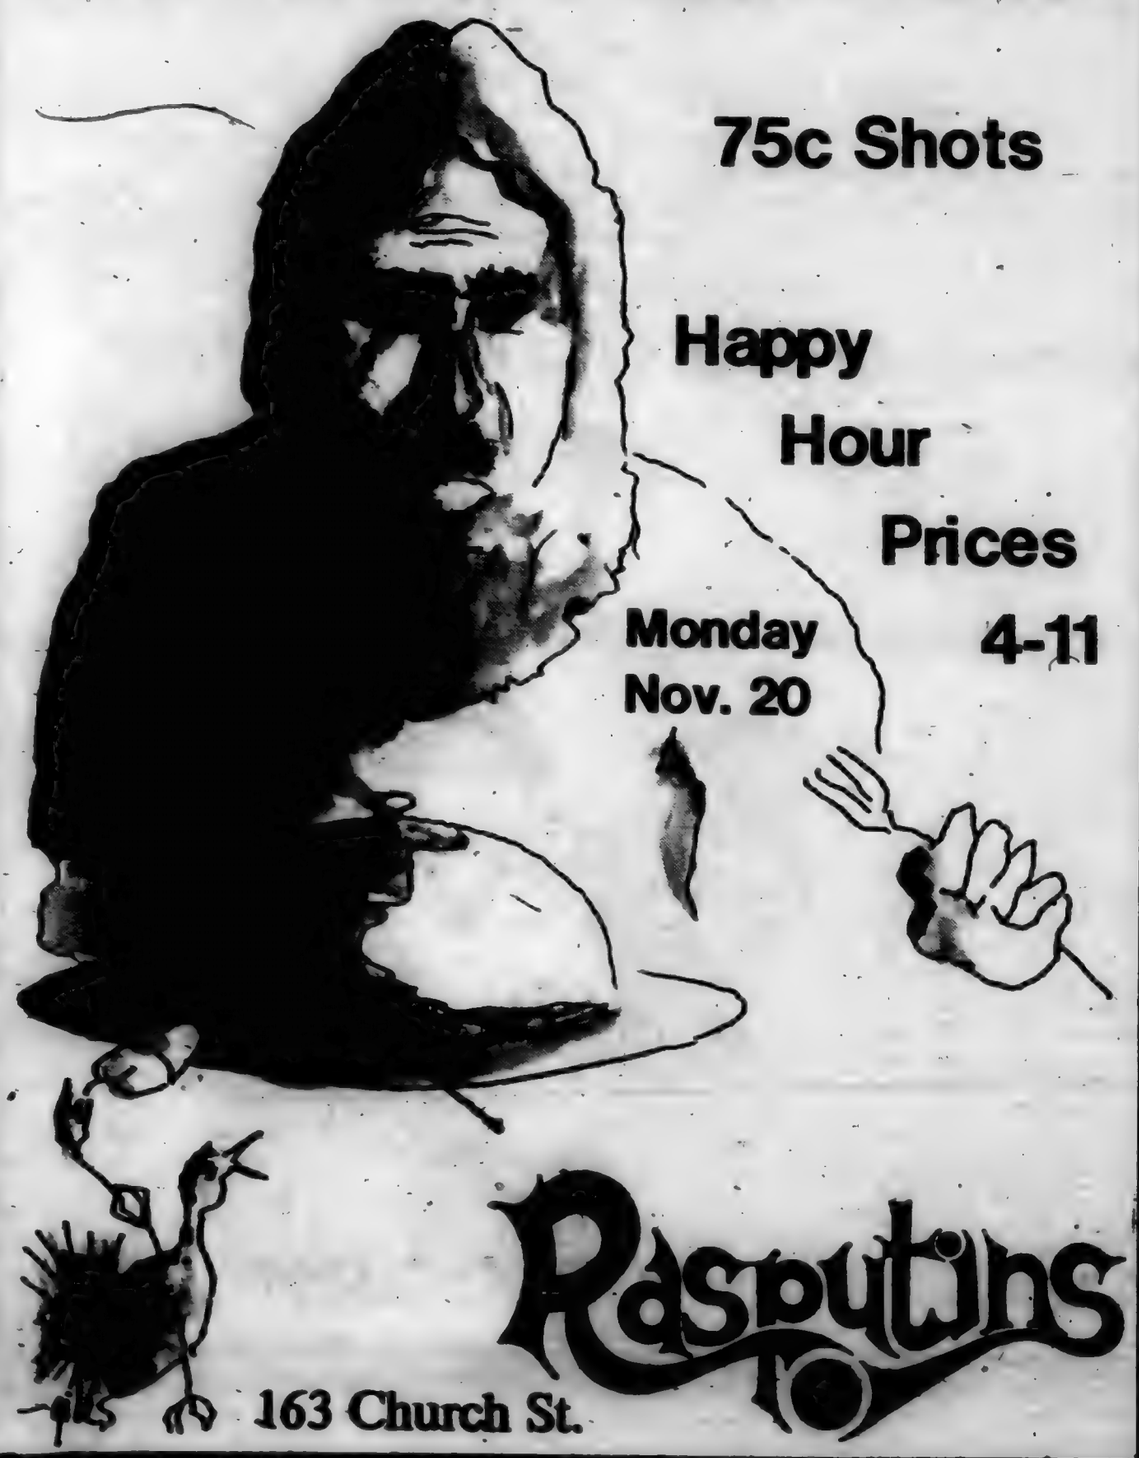
The "helping hand" logo often seen on their advertisements does more than simply identify the United Way; it symbolically expresses the basic role of the organization. It depicts a man at the center of a helping hand with a rainbow surrounding it. "The helping hand can be said to stand for the United Way and its member agencies, or it can represent the help that each and every volunteer worker and contributor provides to those in need. The rainbow symbolizes the hope and quality of life provided in Vermont through United Way services," explains Wick.

Some of the other member agencies of the local United Way include Howard Mental Health, Women Against Rape, Planned Parenthood, the Girl Scouts of America, Vermont Catholic Charities, the King Street Area Youth Program and the Salvation Army. "Spectrum," also one of the 30-member agencies, is an organization which provides comprehensive emergency shelter and support services to stray or crisis-ridden youth and their families. Another agency it funds, the Interfaith Senior Citizens, is a center for adults over sixty which provides recreation, education and health programs.

This week is the annual UVM student drive for the United Way. Although the UVM student branch of the United Way has only been in existence for four years, it raised $2,000 last year and hopes to raise at least that much during their current drive.

Todd Austin, head of the student branch, explains, "The recent establishment of solicitation rights in the dorms has allowed for an increased student awareness." Student members of the United Way, along with UVM's Greek system have set up various activities this week to help them in achieving their goal. The events include the presentation of the film Bonnie and Clyde, November 17, 18 and 19th, a fashion show November 16th at 8 p.m. in Ira Allen, an all-campus party November 17th. UVM volunteers will be doing door to door soliciting in the dorms (the dorm contributing the most money will receive two free kegs).

The money raised at UVM this week will be added to the overall Chittenden County fund. Last year the County raised $800,000 – a record. As a result of inflation, growth and expansion, they have set their 1978 goal at $950,000. Solicitation around the County has been going on for the past few months, and will end November 21st. The money raised this year will be allotted to the various charities next year. If you are interested in finding out more about the United Way, call their local office at 864-7541.



Pre-Turkey Day Bash

Wild Turkey Jack Daniels

75c Shots

Happy Hour Prices 4-11

Monday Nov. 20

Rasputins

163 Church St.

Quakers...

continued from page 15

and God.

In many ways the Friends' religion seems more eastern than western. It does not differentiate the spiritual from the social aspects of life, but likens them to the two sides of a door.

Their religion goes back to the earliest days of Christianity when God spoke through the prophetic witness of the people. They have attempted to preserve the simplicity and unity of their faith. They believe Christ to have been an outward manifestation of God, and value his teachings. Yet, for guidance they turn inward, searching for the Truth of the Spirit within.

Their faith is not as individualistic as it would seem. They mold their decisions by unanimous consent, rather than by what we know as "democratic" decision-making. They appeal to what Quaker George Fox called "answering that of God in every man." Their belief is that there is a "right" decision that they must all agree upon.

They are careful not to impose their beliefs on one another. They are a community without leaders, just as they are a "church" without ministers.

The Friends are a political as well as a spiritual religion. Their beliefs are pacifistic. Quaker Russell Johnson of the American Friends Service Committee (AFSC) spoke at UVM three weeks ago. In the traditional rubric of Quaker evangelism, he spoke on the issue of "anti-Soviet hysteria." He presented a Quaker view of our present situation in the world:

"We are living in a madhouse. Until very recently the acronym for our policy was: 'M-A-D. It stands for mutually assured destruction."

"We can kill off the Russian people fifty times over, and they can kill us fifty times over. No rational person can order a first strike, because it would end human life on earth.

"That is the strategy calculated to make us feel most secure. M-A-D."

Wiser called pacifism "the strongest witness we all share together."

"My personal belief," she continued, "is to seek God in everyone. If you look, you will find it. Therefore I have no right to kill. We have to remove the causes of war from our own lives. I think the cause of violence is abuse, both physical and verbal. Therefore, I try to lead my life without offering occasion to physical or verbal abuse."

"I ask myself, 'How can I see the other person's side? How can I learn not to use win/lose, but in transactions with others to contrive win/win situations.'"

"If we take opposite sides of a thing, then I try to find a third way, to which we can both agree."

This is the philosophy of pacifism in everyday life. It involves a constant challenge to Quakers to actualize "spiritual" beliefs which run counter to the grain of our intensely competitive society.

Whether it's Russell Johnson of the AFSC, or Wiser, Quakers reject the "SuperBowl" paradigm of American society. It is a struggle for world supremacy between the two Super-powers, between the Cowboys and the Broncos, or between marriage partners. Since someone has to lose for another to win, the Quakers see the "wrong-headedness" of conflict.

THE INDIVIDUAL APPROACH

How do Quakers, believing in political action, find their way around the militarism of American society? How do they deal with the win/lose framework of "voting" in an election?

The answers lie in the individual decision of Quakers. Each Quaker tries to come up with personal conclusions. There are trade-offs, one belief against another, and evil against other evil.

"Quakers don't throw up their hands," said an older Quaker woman. "They don't say, 'You can't...' They believe there is a solution."

There was a pause to contemplate, characteristic of conversation with Quakers. Each Friend weighs what they want to say, and waits for the comments of the others. There are long silences and periods of introspection during which the Friends re-think what has been said. The conversation seems much more personal than objective, each statement appears to have a very particular significance to the one who speaks it.

Wiser then observed that the Friends stand practically alone as "activist" pacifists. She stressed that they are "of the world," rather than withdrawn from it as, for example, the Amish are.

Since a large portion of federal income tax supports our military-industrial complex, paying the tax poses some philosophical problems. Some Quakers pay income tax and are not bothered by it. Some pay and feel guilty. Others simply refuse to pay, but in light of the consequences, few opt this route. More often, Quakers resort to tax shelters, earning too little income or relying partially on bartering.

STRENGTH AND SENSITIVITY

The Friends have been supporters of equality for women as members, in the realms of the Spirit and of the world since their formation in the mid-seventeenth century.

One Friend defined Quakerism as "a religion for strong women and sensitive men."

"It's a place for strong, sensitive people," interjected a man in the group.

"Yes, it's a place where people know that the two (strength and sensitivity) are connected," said one woman.

"Right," said Wiser, "it's a place for strong, sensitive, fragile people."

"Like all of us."

"But women still have a way to go, even here," said a younger woman. "The difference is that Quakers have women-heroes. We have women who have given their lives for their faith. We look up to them and say 'Wow! What a fine PERSON!'"

Finally, we got around to the topic of religion in the traditional sense. Do Quakers believe in God? Everyone interrupted with the same question: What do you mean by God? Well, I asked, what do You mean when you say God?

"I became a Quaker as an atheist, I believe," said Wiser. "I couldn't even say the word 'God,' but I could say 'the light within.'"

"There's an indefinable something in every human being I can respond to. It really excites me. I don't care what you want to call it..."

The Quakers agreed that God simply could not mean an all-knowing man with a long white beard lounging in the clouds. It wasn't even a man. They reject "Our Father, who are in Heaven..."

Perhaps inevitably, the subject of war came up again. Does war begin with the advent of private property? of territoriality?

Is war a recent disease of mankind?

Some Friends are vegetarians, but not a large percentage. Some are involved in a "right-sharing" of the world's resources, abstaining from particularly conspicuous forms of consumption. Some are philosophically opposed to any form of killing.

Most weren't bothered by George Bernard Shaw's assessment of the carnage of WWI – that as long as man can kill to eat flesh, he will kill other men for equally trivial considerations.

Becoming a member is a big step for most Quakers, as opposed to other Protestant creeds which baptize infants into the faith. Most I talked to became Quakers slowly, the faith seemingly being something that "grows on you."

"Becoming a member was an enormous thing for me," concluded Wiser. "It took nine years of sitting on the fence. It was bigger than marriage. It was a commitment I felt I could never back out of, because it was more of a commitment than any of the other faiths I had professed."

It was something that couldn't just be left for Sundays.

"For a long time I wondered 'Am I good enough to be a Quaker?'."

R.W. Hunt's Presents

in Concert

DAVE VAN RONK

Sun Nov 19 7:30 and 10:30

Tickets $3.00 on sale now

N-ZONES

FREE CONCERT WED. NOV. 29

ZZEBRA

THURS. NOV. 30 – SAT. DEC. 2

THE LAST WALTZ

PINE ISLAND

WED + THURS DEC. 6 + 7

101 Main St. 863-9850

M.D./D.V.M. In European Medical & Veterinary Schools

The Institute of International Medical Education offers total medical education leading to practice in the U.S.

1. Direct admission into accredited medical schools in Italy and Spain.
2. Master of Science Degree in cooperation with recognized colleges and universities in the U.S. leading to advanced placement in Spanish, Italian or other foreign medical schools or veterinary medical schools.
3. While in attendance at the medical school, the Institute will provide a supplemental Basic Medical Sciences Curriculum which prepares students for transfer into an American medical school (COTRANS).
4. For those students who do not transfer, the Institute provides accredited supervised clinical clerkships at cooperating U.S. hospitals.
5. During the final year of foreign medical school the Institute provides a supplemental and comprehensive clinical medicine curriculum which prepares the student to take the ECFMG examination.
6. IF YOU ARE NOW—OR WILL BE—THE POSSESSOR OF AN M.S. OR Ph.D. DEGREE IN THE SCIENCES, WE CAN OFFER YOU ADVANCED PLACEMENT IN A EUROPEAN MEDICAL SCHOOL.

The Institute has been responsible for processing more American students to foreign medical schools than any other organization.

INSTITUTE OF INTERNATIONAL MEDICAL EDUCATION

Chartered by the Regents of the University of the State of New York

3 East 54 Street, New York 10022 (212) 832-2089

WE'RE WHERE YOU'RE AT!

ON WILLISTON ROAD

Monday-Thursday 8:30-5:00

Fridays til 6:00

Chittenden TRUST COMPANY

Member FDIC

Greenpeace...

continued from page 13

arbitration and boycotts, only Greenpeace has actually taken to the seas in an attempt to stop commercial whaling.

Greenpeace has dealt exclusively with the Russian whaling fleets on the high seas, but the Russians and Japanese are not the only countries involved. Japan also finances a number of "pirate" whaling fleets in Peru, Chile, Spain, and Korea which kill whales without restrictions and are not bound by the laws put forth by the International Whaling Commission. Such pirate fleets are known to have killed a number of Blue Whales during the past few years in strict disobeyance of the international ban put on hunting these creatures because of their dangerously low, population. Japanese funded pirate operations deal directly with the Japanese and supply Japan with whaling products, Frizell stated.

The only restrictions put on the whalers are enacted by the IWC. "The rules of the IWC are quite strict and if they were followed, they would give quite a lot of protection to the whales," said Frizell. "But as far as we can see, the whole thing is a total farce. For example, the Japanese are supposed to have a Russian observer on their factory ship and the Russians have a Japanese observer on theirs. So right away this gives you a little scope for trade-offs. The IWC acts as a private club for the whalers, which isn't surprising, because the body was set up to regulate whaling, not to protect the whales."

"Every single year we have encountered the Russian whalers they have had undersized whales," added Frizell. Greenpeace members took full-length pictures of the whales with a man in the picture for scale and submitted them to the whaling commission. The commission stated that only pictures taken under the correct guidelines would be accepted as evidence. The correct guidelines were to hoist the whale out of the water, something which could only be done on the whaler's processing ship. The Greenpeace spokesmen then turned to the Japanese inspector on the Russian ship who stated that no undersized whales had been taken that day.

In testimony to the limited power of the whaling commission, Frizell said that only one violation of the laws is actually punished every year or two, and even these are usually no more than $100 fines for the men who fired the harpoons.

A scientific committee designed to advise the IWC on the number of whales that should be killed exists, but it took 17 years for the commission to listen to the desperate pleas made by the committee concerning the blue whale. By that time, it was almost too late. The committee advised an absolute stop to all sperm whale hunting for the last two years, but the warnings have gone completely unheeded. It seems that the whales, explained Frizell, are constantly getting

Protest and Prosecution: A Greenpeace member (left) is arrested for protecting a seal, so that business (right) can continue as usual. Photos by Greenpeace

UPSTAIRS RECORDS

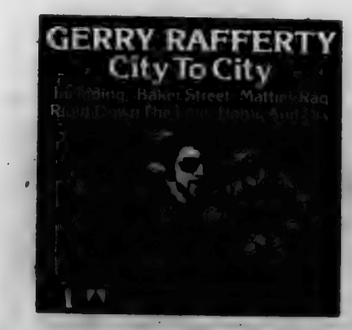
ALL THESE

SERIES 7.98 ALBUMS



NOW ON SALE FOR $4.99

OPPOSITE PENNEY'S DOWNTOWN BURLINGTON

NOEL POINTER
HOLD ON

GERRY RAFFERTY
City To City

RONNIE LAWS Flame

CHRIS REA
Whatever Happened To Benny Santini?

traded off for political concessions. In the words of John Frizell, "the IWC has put the interests of a few whalers in front of the lives of thousands of whales."

In an attempt to put an end to this heartless slaughter, the members of Greenpeace began placing themselves between the whalesland the Russian harpoons. But before the confrontation could take place, it was a long and difficult task to find the whaling fleets. The Russian catcher boats are required to be in frequent contact with the main factory ship which processes the whales and provides the catchers with fuel, food and supplies. Greenpeace was able to find the fleets by use of a radio direction finder, monitoring the inter-ship communication. "Finding the Russians in all that open water was very hard," commented Frizell. "It is an unappreciated miracle that Greenpeace has been able to do this over the last few years."

Once contact has been established, the dangers of confrontation are high for the Greenpeace members in the zodiacs. The harpoon weighs 250 pounds and is tipped with an explosive granade. More importantly, for Greenpeace, the harpoon is attached to a steel cable which can cut a zodiac or a person in half with little trouble. But the Americans think the risk is well worth it, having saved approximately 100 whales through direct intervention and up to 1000 indirectly."One just has to hope that no one will get hurt," commented Frizell. "I'm sure there would be serious repercussions, but one of the last people to have a harpoon fired over him was a close friend of mine. If he were cut in two by a cable, for me and everyone else in Greenpeace, it would be much more than an international incident. One of our friends would be dead. But that is the risk we take every time we do that. We have been lucky. We have been careful. And we have not gotten anybody killed. The Russians have also shown some really good judgment in not firing on several occasions."

Timing is an important factor. If Greenpeace can reach the chase early on, the whalers often give up, but if the whales are fired, Greenpeace's job becomes more difficult and dangerous. The Russians hunt the whales by spotting a pod and charging down on it, forcing the whales to dive. The pod can usually stay down 30 minutes to an hour, but when the whales come back up they have to take time to catch their breath. They are unable to do this with the whaling boat charging down on them so they have to dive back down almost immediately. After three hours of this, the whales are so exhausted they can't stay under any longer than a human could. At this point, the whalers harpoon them as the exhausted creatures are lying on the surface, panting.

Greenpeace tries to intervene before the last stages of the chase. On eight foot seas with Russian ships running blockades and trying to ram the Americans, this can be a very difficult task.

The most ironic factor of the whole whaling issue is that there is not one whale product which cannot be synthesized at competitive prices. Sperm whale oil was the last product to have been simulated, but the Chevron Oil company produced a superior substitute in 1972, only two years after it became illegal to import the sperm whale oil. The oil, which has excellent properties for high temperature lubrication, is now obsolete. This has been a major factor in the closing of a major whaling station in Australia set for Dec. 31st of this year.

Russia announced that they will be scrapping two of their four factory ships. The validity of this statement is being looked into, but the cutback could be just another indication of lowering whale populations. "Whaling is definitely a dying industry existing solely through inertia – the equipment is there, so they are using it," explained Frizell. "The problem is that they cut back as they run out of whales and call it a conservation measure, when actually it's in response to the fact that they're going broke running too many boats."

So the fight will go on, and Greenpeace will continue to protest the process which can turn a 60-foot sperm whale into obsolete whaling products in less than an hour. "Whaling will end only when man rejects products made from whales," stressed Frizell, whose answer, when asked how long Greenpeace will be involved in the whaling struggle, was met with cheers and clapping. "We will be working until either commercial whaling ends, or Greenpeace disappears," he said. "And we have a feeling whaling will end first."

"there is not one whale product which can't be synthesized..."

Thoughts...

continued from page 15

remembrances of going to the Episcopal Church of Granville, Ohio, where I wore short pants and starched shirts and a bow tie, and being only four, church took forever until I thought I'd die there – and then sink back into the whirring blender of images.

I think about school work, about Sisyphus, only I picture Sisyphus as very unhappy indeed.

But I remember, finally, why I am here. I think of the questions I will ask. What about Nixon, the most prominent American Quaker since William Penn? I will write that they may be ranked somewhat differently in Heaven, just to be funny. I sense what the answer will be, Nixon was never really a Quaker at all. It was the Quakers who were on to Nixon all along, though as a rule they thought Watergate was overplayed by the press. They maintained that he should have been tried for war crimes, for bombing Cambodia, for napalming babies.

I think about Mary Dyer, a Quaker woman whose evangelical fanaticism led her to be sentenced to death three times in Massachusetts. Twice the sentence was commuted to whipping and deportation, but finally in 1660 she was hanged in Boston Commons.

During those dark days, it was illegal to be a Quaker in a Crown colony.

Today, it is illegal to refrain from paying your income tax because you are a pacifist.

If these Quakers don't have criminal records, it's because they don't protest enough. They don't listen hard enough for the voice within them.

They are a sensible lot, and I can only admire them for that.

I wondered to myself, why do such sensible people follow a prophet who defended prostitutes, drunks, and socialism, a man finally executed for subversive activities?

A Pattie Smith Group line keeps running through my head like an incantation:

Jesus Christ... was a nigger...
I'm a nigger, too.

The handshake which ends our hour of contemplation begins on the other side of the room. Finally it reaches me, and I shake hands and smile. A man on my right mumbles "Peace be with you."

I walked outside with my hands stuffed in my pockets. Out in the sunlight, thinking seems so small looking into the depths of the sky. I know that I am more of a Quaker than anything else... I know I have more convictions than courage... I know too, that I will be back.

"If these Quakers don't have criminal records, it's because they don't protest enough."

When you work up an appetite . . . Come to Finast!

Finast has all your favorite snacks ready . . . we knew you would be hungry!

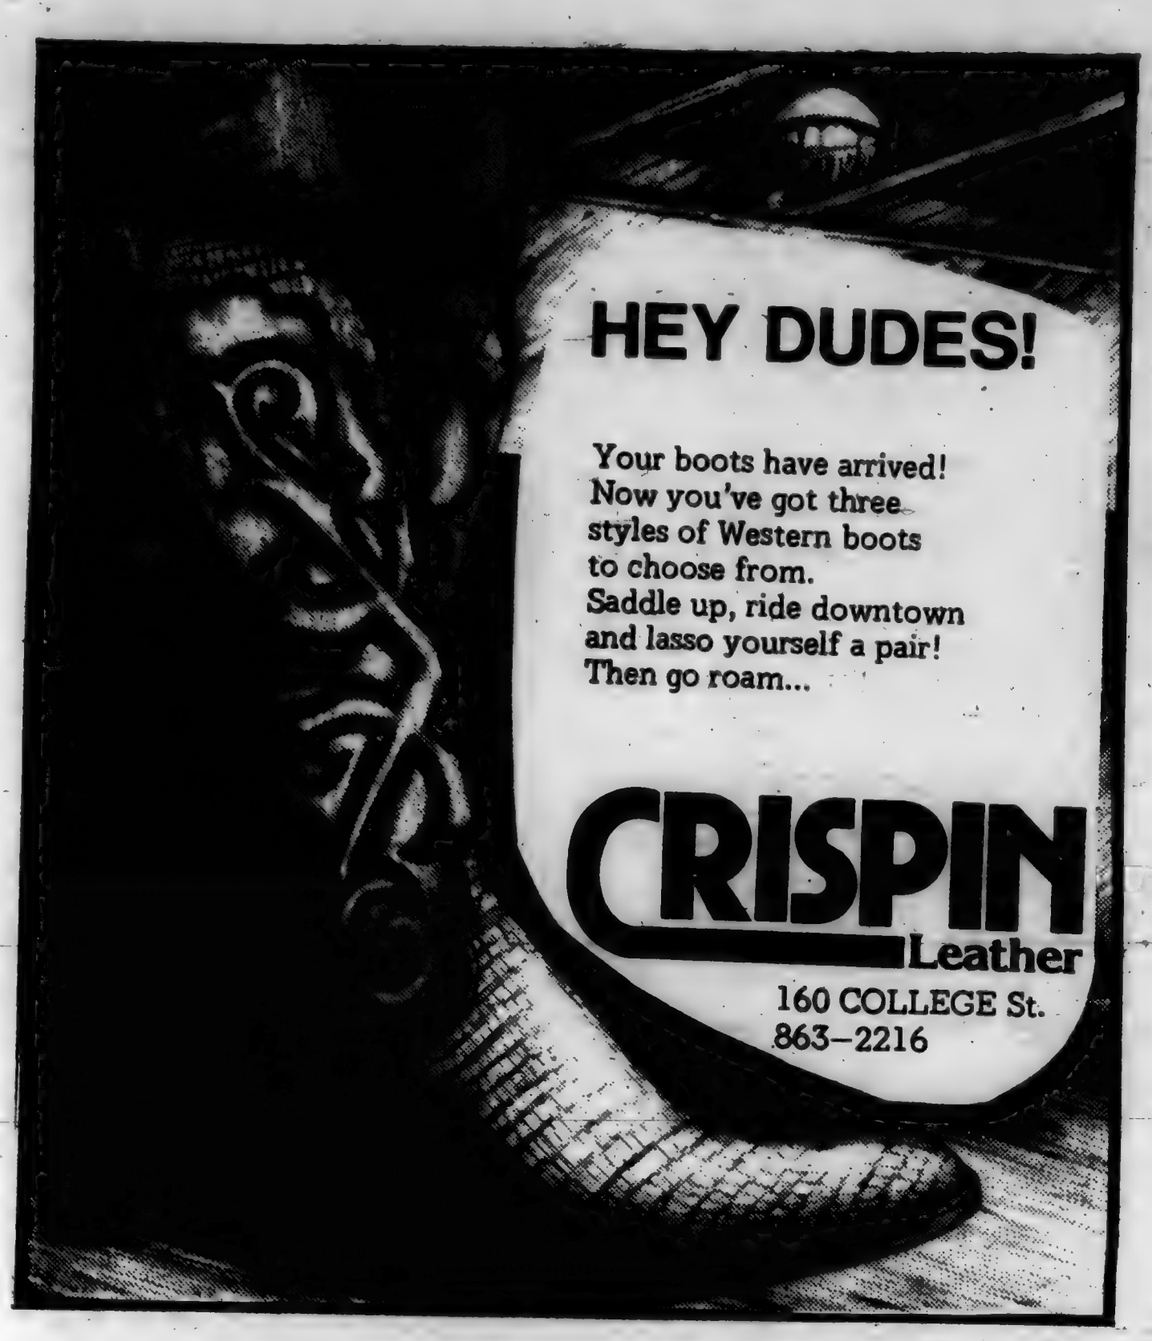
- Potato Chips
- Snack Crackers
- Fresh Fruits
- Your favorite cold beverages

and just about everything you can think of!



Visit
Mr. Deli

You'll find a world of Eating Pleasure at our own Mr. Deli Counter. You'll find Fresh Cold Cuts, Domestic and Imported Cheeses, Fresh Made Salads and Baked Goods. Our Mr. Deli experts are Ready to Serve you. Ask about our Delicious Party Platters available for your next get-together.

Finast
SUPERMARKETS

825
WILLISTON ST.
BURLINGTON,
VERMONT

HEY DUDES!

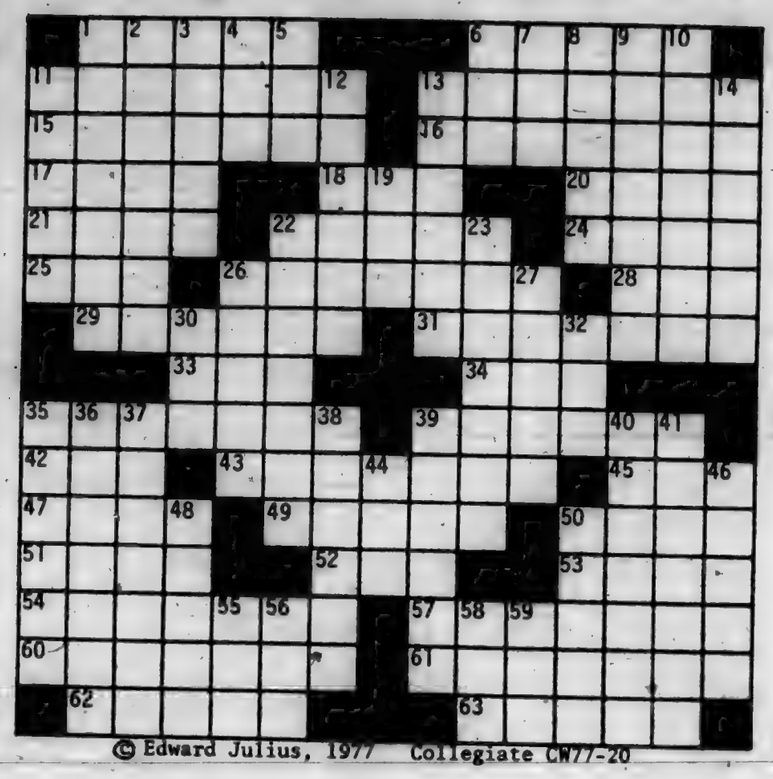
Your boots have arrived!
Now you've got three styles of Western boots to choose from.
Saddle up, ride downtown and lasso yourself a pair!
Then go roam...

CRISPIN Leather
160 COLLEGE St.
863-2216

WE ARE RIGHT NEXT DOOR TO THE CAMPUS!!

AND RIGHT OFF INTERSTATE 89 — EXIT-14W

We are a large, very well equipped service station, staffed with expert help that takes a sincere interest in you and your car.



We feature GOOD, FAST SERVICE

- Mobile Tires
- Alignments
- Oil Change
- Wrecker Service
- State Inspection
- Tune Ups
- Lubrication
- Wheel Balance
- Towing
- Brake Work
- Cold Weather Starting

Spillane's Mobil Servicenter
• 24 HOUR SERVICE •
863-2896
• Next to Gaynes on Williston Road •

collegiate crossword

© Edward Julius, 1977 Collegiate CW77-20

ACROSS

1 —— system
6 Disagree with, in law
11 Baseball hall-of-famer, —— Baker
13 Reduces in rank
15 Show excessive devotion
16 Learned
17 Govern
18 European country (abbr.)
20 Wallach and Whitney
21 Bed support
22 Lowest point
24 Fine earth
25 Fedora
26 Large grasshopper
28 Zuider ——
29 Put on a new book cover
31 What Edmund Hillary conquered
33 No ——, ands, or buts
34 Here: Fr.
35 Gave a conceited smile
39 —— Delta
42 Faux ——
43 In —— (behind in payment)
45 Dumbbell
47 Lubricates
49 Neighbor of Turkey
50 —— one's time
51 Turkish chamber
52 Snakelike fish
53 Sidekick (abbr.)
54 Newer film versions
57 One TV show
60 Most sarcastic
61 Slanders
62 Aroma
63 Physician of old

DOWN

1 Constructed with standardized units
2 Try to equal or surpass
3 Issue a new lease
4 Mr. Gershwin
5 Famous king
6 —— Fuehrer
7 Flightless bird
8 Statistical measures
9 Put into service
10 Puts in a new floor
11 Stern
12 Nullify
13 Ridicule
14 Musical group
19 Miss Williams
22 Former world leader, and family
23 Las Vegas hotel
26 Novelist Franz ——
27 Knocks down by punching
30 Abbreviation before a date
32 Dolores Del ——
35 Animal tracks
36 Certain race horses
37 Muslim
38 Most arid 39 Dispatched
40 Offensive, as an odor
41 —— Purchase
44 Before
46 Celebrations
48 Tree product
50 Fundamental
55 Golfer —— Venturi
56 Superlative suffix
58 Slangy throw
59 "—— nightingale..."

last week's ans.

| | | | | | | | | | | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| | S | P | R | A | T | | | B | A | G | E | L | | |
| R | A | R | I | T | A | N | | M | A | R | I | N | E | S |
| O | R | I | F | I | C | E | | A | B | I | L | E | N | E |
| Y | A | M | | P | I | V | O | T | E | D | | M | I | L |
| A | G | A | R | | T | A | X | I | S | | K | I | E | L |
| L | A | T | E | X | | D | E | N | | W | R | E | N | S |
| | T | E | H | E | R | A | N | | C | H | E | S | T | |
| | | A | N | O | N | | T | H | E | M | | | | |
| | C | O | N | I | C | | S | H | E | L | L | A | C | |
| T | O | N | G | A | | M | O | I | | P | I | L | O | T |
| I | V | E | S | | B | U | R | R | S | | N | E | R | O |
| L | E | T | | M | O | L | E | S | T | S | | W | O | N |
| T | R | I | B | U | N | E | | T | A | I | L | I | N | G |
| S | E | M | I | T | E | S | | S | T | R | I | F | E | S |
| | D | E | T | E | R | | | S | E | D | E | R | | |

Lattie Coor Short Story Contest

$25 First Prize
$15 Second Prize

Stories due November 29!

Don't fail our leader.

Mountaineering #4.

THE OPTIMUM MOMENT.

Mountaineering[1] is a skill of timing as well as technique. The wrong moment, like the wrong method, marks the gap between amateur and aficionado. So the key to successful mountaineering is to choose the occasions wisely and well. When, then, is it appropriate to slowly quaff the smooth, refreshing mountains of Busch Beer?

Celebrations, of course, are both expected and excellent opportunities to test your mountaineering mettle. Indeed, on major holidays it is virtually mandatory to do so. Imagine ushering in the fiscal new year or commemorating Calvin C. Coolidge's birthday or throwing caution to the wind during Take-A-Sorghum-To-Lunch-Week without the benefit of Busch. A disturbing prospect at best.

On the other hand, not every event need be as significant as those outlined above.

Small victories like exams passed, papers completed or classes attended are equally acceptable. Remember the mountaineer's motto: matriculation is celebration.

Interpersonal relationships are also meaningful times. There are few things finer than taking your companion in hand and heading for the mountains, transcending the ho-hum and hum-drum in favor of a romantic R & R. Naturally, couples who share the pleasures of mountaineering run the risk of being labeled social climbers. But such cheap shots are to be ignored. They are the work of cynics, nay-sayers and chronic malcontents.

Similarly, the ambience of an athletic afternoon (e.g. The Big Game) is another ideal moment. Downing the mountains elevates the morale of the fan and, hence, the team. Therefore, if you care at all about the outcome, it is your duty to mountaineer.

When should one not enjoy the invigoration of the mountains? Here, you'll be happy to learn, the list is much briefer.

Mountaineering is considered declassé with dessert, improper during judicial proceedings and just plain foolish while crop dusting around power lines. Otherwise, as the hot-heads of the sixties used to say, "Seize the time!"

[1] Mountaineering is the science and art of drinking Busch. The term originates due to the snowy, icy peaks sported by the label outside and perpetuates due to the cold, naturally refreshing taste inside. (cf. lessons 1, 2 and 3.)

Don't just reach for a beer. BUSCH Head for the mountains.

©Anheuser-Busch Inc St Louis Mo

VERMONT CYNIC

EDITORIAL BOARD

Editor-in-Chief: David C. Greeff
Managing Editor: Jerome E. Andrews
Copy Editor: James Oakes

News: John Letteri
Arts: Vaune Davis
Features: Randy McMullen
Sports: Rich Chalmers
Steve Larose

Advertising Manager: Peter Voll
Business Manager: Jim Wade
Photo Editor: Robert Gale
Contributing Editors: Henry Chamberlain
Russell Flannery
Diana Greene
Eric Kilburn

The Vermont Cynic is published weekly during the school year except vacations by students at UVM. Opinions expressed herein do not necessarily reflect those of the University administration, faculty, staff, or the State of Vermont.

Editorial

On Talking About Nothing

One of the least tangible yet most didactic forms of education is the verbal communication among students and community members. With such a broad diversity of people and interests contained within the boundaries of any university, the opportunities for meeting people with ideas and accomplishments that one can learn from are limitless. Just talking about politics, art, music, or whatever it may be, clearly offers one of the most natural ways a person can expand self-awareness. It is the uninterrupted flow of intellectual ideas and concepts which constitute the real foundation of any place of higher learning. The classroom provides structure, guidance and much needed self-discipline, but cannot alone help a student formulate original ideas unless he is willing to argue, criticize, breakdown and deduce conclusions from concepts which are new and need clarification. But for conversation to be meaningful, it must be motivated by a desire to learn. And for this to occur, belief in the value of and the desire to pursue intellectual growth must be prevalent.

Unfortunately, at UVM this level of motivation appears to be dangerously low. Just for reference, sit around Billings some day and soak in a little of the significant chit-chat. The experience will show that the main topics of conversation are last week's toga parties, this week's variation on the same theme, the price of cocaine, or the status of the hockey team. The few students hoping to talk about societal problems are either ignored or accused of being pedantic.

Don't misinterpret this criticism to mean that partying, drinking, hockey and other hedonistic endeavors are not important and useful — because they are. But should they be the dominant focus of the conversations and interests of a college student? If they are, why spend the $7000 a year to attend college at all?

Shoving this phenomenon aside as the result of the complacent 70's is misleading. For while other colleges across the country suffer from trivial conversation, many do not. So why UVM?

UVM proudly boasts of its reputation as one of the best party schools in the country. That being the case, students receive some of the positive benefits of an atmosphere characterized by reduced stress and less competition, but also accept an intellectual vacuum which is harmful and detrimental to mental growth.

Nuclear holocaust, environmental pollution, inflation, unemployment, mass starvation, political programs and the denial of human rights are all critical problems confronting society today. It is our generation who will lead the struggle against these problems. Talking about it seems to be the best place to start.

LETTERS

Kristina Berster Speaks Out

To the Editor:

I want to express my shocked feelings about the "trustworthiness" of United States Attorney Gray. The stipulation concerning my staying in or passing through two countries where I had not been subject to persecution, had not been made in order to hide the fact that I had travelled in those countries as Mr. Gray had known their names all during the trial. The stipulation was requested by me to protect myself from further pre-sentencing and overkill by the mass media — particularly the West German press.

In my situation — being labelled as a suspected terrorist — a mere association with countries like South Yemen and Libya would be enough to convict me on circumstantial evidence in Germany. In other words, I would be found guilty in the atmosphere of panic in West Germany where the overwhelming majority of the population, including the authorities, think about these countries only as "havens and breeding grounds for terrorists."

Now, of course, the question arises — why have I been to South Yemen? As set forth in my testimony, I have lived since 1973 as a refugee. This cut me off from all of society's institutions and forced me to do the most menial and unfulfilling jobs. Upon finding a possibility of meaningful and humanitarian work — which, given my circumstances, was impossible for me in Europe as well as in most other countries — I was given an opportunity to work for some months with the Omani Red Cross. I was responsible for organizing and assorting the medical supplies which were received from all over the world. Therefore, much of my job consisted of classifying and distributing the medical material. Libya was only a transient place and the most economical access to South Yemen, as such access is very limited and extremely expensive.

I shall continue my efforts to remain in the United States where I hope to find equally meaningful work. I trust that many people will continue to support my efforts to do so through my defense committee.

Kristina Berster
Metropolitan Correctional Center
New York, N.Y.

Looking Towards the Future

To the Editor:

As two members of the UVM student body, we are deeply concerned about student values. Where do this generation's priorities lie? It is evident that many students at UVM are unable to look towards the future with a set goal in mind. Students concentrate on fulfilling short-range goals and desires at the probable expense of their long-range goals.

Three key aspects of life which should pose serious questions in our value systems are partying, materialism and sexuality. In materialism, displaying hot new cars and clothes; in partying, hundreds of dollars in coke and bar support; and in sexuality, the female must display her slender beauty for the hunt. These values may not reflect many individual values, but are apparently enforced in public and social groups.

After serious observation and analysis of our generation — soon to be this country's policy makers and wealth holders — we find the lack of concern for national and world affairs alarming. Partly attributed to the disinterest in many college courses and absence of student motivation, and partly due to the attraction of the "good life," too many students uphold apathetic attitudes. Admiration is given to the few students concerned with racism, gay rights, and equal rights for women. Yet, most students are still more concerned in gratifying their own self-centered desires.

Apathy stems from our increased dependence on materialism, partying and sexuality. Apathy is not an individual sickness; it comes in waves caused by societal lethargy and indifference. Today students are driven towards success, but this, we feel, is a cold, artificial and materialistic form of success. We are no longer motivated to find a happiness based on human love, cooperation, and honesty. We want you as individuals to re-examine your values and priorities to see if they are consistent with your conception of success.

Dan Adams summed up our feelings last April in the Cynic: "Many students shun reality for it is difficult to take an honest look at the world and to avoid feeling that things simply must be changed; and change is difficult to handle for a crowd raised to believe in a self-protecting status quo. The result is conformity to protect that which we've been socialized into feeling is important."

Sincerely,
Jolinda Hirsch
Ned Andrews

Think Before You Eat!

To the Editor:

After years of no real on-campus dining alternatives besides Saga's dining halls and snack bars, UVM students now enjoy more extensive a la carte dining within the confines of the L/L Center and Wright.

It is time for students to reassess their eating habits; apparently some already have as evidenced by the dinner-time crowds at facilities mentioned above. The nutritional benefits of the food we ingest should be paramount. On campus at UVM, generally they are not. Students are indirectly encouraged to consume in quantity due to the existing coupon system. Unlimited amounts of food at Saga is not the solution. There is flagrant waste, not to mention the adverse physical and mental ramifications of overeating.

It is time for UVM to reorganize its dining hall operations. The objective should be quality. Students need to have their choice of food and then pay commensurately for it. This proposal reaches beyond pasta, quiche and salad bars.

The United States is known as the world's "best fed nation." Perhaps it can be more appropriately expressed as the world's most "over-fed nation."

Think before you eat.

Sincerely,
Robert S. Sherwin

Letters continued on Page 24.

The Post Election Period

By Jesse Andre Gadson with Henry Hooper Chamberlain

Democrats have been looking at November's election results and breathing a sigh of relief. Despite their inability to legislate effectively in the Congress and Carter's fumblings with the Presidency, the Republicans were only able to gain three seats in the Senate, 12 in the House, six governorships, and to take control of eight state legislatures. The off-year elections evidenced only a slight conservative trend, one that leaves power in the hands of the Democrats.

The New York Times conducted a poll recently of the Ninety-sixth Congress to be, to see where its members stood in relation to the Ninety-fifth. The poll's results showed only slight changes in the philosophical leanings of the Congressional members. That new leaning is right of center.

To begin with, sixty percent of the Ninety-sixth Congress favors a constitutional amendment requiring a balanced federal budget. President Carter has been striving in this direction, but this year's deficit is estimated for a minimum of $30 billion. With a still weak dollar, and double digit inflation a reality for 1978, the nation's legislators are ready to abandon Keysian (government deficit) spending for fiscal responsibility.

As for the effect of California's Proposition 13, forty-nine percent of the next Congress favors across-the-board cuts in the feceral income tax. These cuts are largely reflective of the increase in Republican seats in the Congress, as the vast majority of Republicans ran on the tax cut issue. President Carter has been working on such a tax cut program, one that gives moderate tax relief to the well-off.

Of additional interest is the continued lack of support for a national health insurance plan, something Senator Kennedy has been pleading for nationwide. Only forty-four percent of the Congress favors any kind of national health plan. The needy have no effective lobby.

In gubernatorial contests, the Republicans had a few impressive pick-ups. The most impressive occurred in Texas where multi-millionaire Bill Clement spent $6 million to edge his Democratic opponent. Who said big money does not still buy elections and control politics? Other big state pick-ups for the Republicans included Tennessee and Minnesota.

New England's and New York's gubernatorial seats were all contested. As expected, Dick Snelling coasted to victory in Vermont, but the flamboyant Meldrin Thomson lost his bid for re-election in New Hampshire. That mecca of radical conservatism has faded into local folklore. Democrats took the rest of New England led by a stubborn Ella Grasso in Connecticut, who handily defeated Cong. Ronald Sarrasin. To complete the region's results, Hugh Carey won re-election over Perry Duryea despite the early split in the Democratic Party.

In the Senate contests, there were five races of special interest. Regionally, two senatorial contests were spot-lighted. In Maine, Democrat Hathaway gave way to the aspirations of Republican Congressman Cohen. You may remember Cohen for his outspoken nature as the young Republican maverick on the House's Judicial Committee during the Watergate hearings. His increasing influence makes him a figure of interest in the upcoming presidential election in 1980.

As was expected, incumbent Senator Brooke lost his bid for reelection to Democrat Tsongas. This contest was marked by a clean race between the candidates, while the press, led by the Boston Globe, held a veritable political trial of Brooke on their front pages throughout October. The sole black representative in the Senate bids adieu, to be replaced by the young and potentially exciting Tsongas. Do not count Brooke out, look for him to lock horns with Kennedy in 1982.

For the conservatives, your Senate spokesmen, Senators Jesse Helms (R., North Carolina) and Strom Thurmon (R., South Carolina) handily won re-election. Those ardent supporters of continued control of the Panama Canal will be back, possibly as Republican candidates for national office in 1980. The only true victim of the Panama Canal struggle was Senator Dick Clark of Iowa. His active role in the Senate was cut prematurely short because of his support for the treaties.

What issues are going to come to the forefront as a result of these candidates and the realities of the closing 1970's? At the top of the list is the federal budget with its various effects on the lives of the public. As all appropriations originate in the House, and the public is calling for tax relief, look for a tightening of the federal belt. A trend towards increased defense spending will further strain any attempts at new social programs.

Inflation and unemployment have to be contained so the poor will have to wait for help. Across the board tax cuts as proposed by Congressmen Kemp and Roth, cuts that would benefit the poor, will not happen. Money buys votes and politicians, issues and needs alone cannot. It will take the inevitable riots by the dis-enfranchised poor, riots which were hinted at by the riots during New York's blackout, to force adequate social reform. Social issues are dead for the time being.

As for energy, it will take another oil crisis to force the Congress to act. Mileage ratings are being improved, but the attitude is essentially laissez-faire. Energy consumption must be dealt with before it becomes impossible for new technology to produce adequate fuel to prevent a crippling of the economy. The ultimate new source, fusion reactors, are decades away with little funding for needed research.

Internationally, two hot spots are ready to explode, Iran and Southern Africa. With the Shah losing control of his nation, U.S. support is a real possibility. United States interference could become a necessity to protect U.S. oil needs from that region. Additionally, our important mineral ties to South Africa, added to that country's strategic maritime location, will force U.S. efforts to prevent Russian control in that region. This is not to mention potential trouble in the Mid-east.

The Congress is slightly more conservative, consequently at the cost of the poor. If the economy cannot be brought under control, we may see wage and price controls. Budgetary considerations have to be taken into account in regards to any new policies. The Nineth-sixth Congress is not that much different than the Ninety-fifth, the difference lies in new domestic and foreign challenges which it must meet, with whatever success.

What Do We Have To Know?

By Eric Kilburn

Every semester, particularly around mid-terms, one begins to notice the familiar symptoms of grade point pragmatism in the words and deeds of students. The library is glutted with perspiring bodies, attendance at parties plummets, and the traditional and much extolled joy of learning seems to vanish. Along with the above traits, a uniquely obnoxious self-centeredness creeps into the minds of many during these times of toil, and the condition manifests itself in interesting ways.

"What do we have to know?" or "Is that going to be on the test?" are questions most frequently asked of professors just before exams. The inference behind these queries is that there are two kinds of information, that which is important (i.e., it's on the test), and that which is not on the test, and therefore insignificant. For the most part, however, teachers ignore this subtle insult to their intelligence – after all, no real educator would ever convey "useless" information – and dutifully comply with the students' requests, through hints or outright statements.

Studying that is motivated by tests and the implicit threat of failure is of dubious educational value, despite the reality of this system for many students. By examining the "what do we have to know?" phenomenon in a historical context, test-oriented learning can be put in the proper perspective.

Imagine Moses, old and gray bearded, standing on the top of Mount Sinai. He's exhausted from the climb up, and he doesn't really want to be there, but God ordered him, so he had to do it. Figuring God just wants a little conversation, Moses anticipates a short visit and a quick trip down; but no, God has other plans. These heavy marble aphorism-equipped tablets keep falling out of the sky. Sayings like "thou shalt not kill" and "thou shalt not steal" are etched into the ten individual pieces of rock and God says, "Moses, these are the ten commandments, bring them down to your people." Moses eyes the ten tablets and remembering his aching back and recent hernia operation, turns to God and says, "Thanks for the commandments, God. They're really nice, but which ones do we have to know?"

Picture George Washington, hardly into office as the nation's first President, being confronted by a group of crazies who want to change the Constitution before the ink has barely dried. The people feel that the document is too vague and want to supplement it with a series of ten amendments hyped as the Bill of Rights. Included in these articles are such nuances as freedom of speech, assembly and the press. George knows there will be a tremendous backlog in the judicial system in enforcing the amendments, yet he doesn't want to create a ruckus either, so he takes the diplomatic middle road. He says, "I really appreciate all your efforts guys, but it's a pretty long list. Which ones do I really have to be responsible for?"

Obviously, understanding the Bill of Rights or the Ten Commandments differs considerably from memorizing benzene ring structures for next week's organic chemistry test, yet the fanaticism with which students pursue information which they may never again use is remarkable. Could there perhaps be some truth in the adage that "college is college and education is education; and ne'er the twain shall meet?"

Ultimately, what people truly "need to know" will never be on any test. It is encouraging to note that increasing numbers of students are setting aside time before graduation to take internships or other educational opportunities in the outside world. Most colleges at UVM have programs where credit can be obtained for experiential education. In addition, the Center for Service Learning offers a wide variety of semester and year-long possibilities in community work. Many of the available jobs require only the initiative and interest of the student seeking them. This is not such a tough request. After all, the only real answer to "what do we have to know?" is "whatever turns you on."

HELP YOURSELF

Help yourself to a better understanding of Editing, Graphic Design, Journalism, Copywriting, Layout, Communication, Photography, and the English Language.

Help Yourself to an experience you'll always remember.

Help Yourself to working with a group of people just like yourself-interested, involved, motivated.

Help Yourself to a better job.

The Vermont Cynic is not a magical phenomenon that occurs every Thursday afternoon. The staff of the Cynic invites you to Help Yourself to anyone of the following positions (as of Spring semester, of course — we like our jobs).

Editor-in-chief, Managing Editor, Copy Editor, News Editor, Arts Editor, Features Editor, Sports Editor.

VERMONT CYNIC

Credit is Available

practically on campus

GAYNES SHOPPERS WORLD

open daily til 9 pm

gaynes pharmacy

★★ call us or stop by and check our discount prescription prices

★★ within easy walking distance of the university campus and infirmary

★★ fast, friendly prescription service

phone us: 863-1597

Williston Rd. So. Burlington

Letters Continued

It's Either Too Hot or Too Cold

To the Editor:

I was hoping that by this year the university would be taking steps towards improving the distribution of heat on campus. During the winter when heat is required, it seems as though rooms are either too hot or too cold. In Lafayette, for example, so much heat is piped into the classrooms that the windows always have to be opened to maintain a bearable temperature. The lecture hall in Votey, room 101, is another example of the excessive use of heat. The problem is magnified because there are no windows in 101 Votey to shed off the heat.

Billings is the epitome of lousy heating. Last winter when I was sitting in the round room studying, the room was so cold I remember seeing my breath. North Lounge is the only room in the building that seems to get a sufficient amount of heat. But wait. There's a problem there too. That room is always too hot. It's too bad that the heat isn't more adequately distributed. What's wrong with the thermostats in those rooms anyway?

You would think that by spring the problem would be alleviated. Not so. Last spring when the temperature was near 70 degrees outside, many classrooms were so hot that some of my classes had to be cancelled. It was hard to believe that heat was still coming out of the registers at such a late time in the year.

During finals week last May, the situation was ridiculous. There wasn't a building on campus that was cool enough for studying. I have never seen an emptier library during finals week — the library must have been 70 or 80 degrees. It was a great place for sleeping, not studying.

There really is no excuse for the inadequate heat distribution. The problem has been overlooked for too long. Excessive heat in buildings such as Lafayette and Bailey Library results in a waste of student dollars, while the lack of heat in Billings creates unsatisfactory study conditions. I think it's about time that serious steps be taken to change the situation.

Sincerely,
Sharon Cherry

On Abolishing Grades

To the Editor:

I think the system of receiving grades as an evaluation of performance should be abolished. What, exactly, do grades mean? In many cases, they are a test of how well a student can memorize facts and spit them back at the professor on an exam, without actually reflecting what the student has learned. There is so much pressure put on the individual to get A's and a high GPA, that the real reason for going to school is forgotten: to learn and, in most cases, to prepare for a career.

Without grades, students are lost. I have received very few grades in any of my classes this semester, and as a result, have no idea how I am doing. People have been conditioned since elementary school to achieve good grades without even knowing why. Such emphasis is placed on that mark at the top of a paper that the student does not know how to react if it is not there.

I, for one, feel as if I have wasted my time if only a check mark or a comment is awarded me after many hours of work on a project or paper. But why?? A grade is nothing more than a letter in the alphabet.

It is a vicious circle with no solution that I can see.

Sincerely,
Pat Santner

How About a Little Publicity?

To the Editor:

I was surprised to find no mention of Donald Hall in the past issue of the Cynic. Mr. Hall, poet, author, and former professor of English at the University of Michigan, spoke at UVM on Thursday, October 26, impressing his listeners with both a discussion on writing and a poetry reading.

In a morning session in Dewey Lounge, Hall argued that it was essential to write every day in order to become even a fair author. He also answered questions from the students and faculty who attended. During the evening poetry reading, Mr. Hall recited poems from two different collections, one of which was his newly published book Kicking the Leaves. These meetings concluded with enthusiastic rounds of applause. Numerous students and professors left inspired by Donald Hall's ideas, some of which they believed they could possibly incorporate in their own writing.

Donald Hall was the first writer in a new series of lectures entitled UVM–Middlebury Visiting Writers' Program. Authors will be guests at the two colleges sharing their books as well as their thoughts on writing. A program such as this, which was greatly appreciated by those who attended, deserves more recognition. I give my support to the lectures.

This coming spring semester, Lyn Litshin, Douglas Worth, and Bernard Malamud, are scheduled to speak. Reviews of these authors might encourage even a greater attendance of faculty and students.

Shelley Townsend

Letter Policy

The Cynic welcomes letters to the Editor from all its readers. The deadline for letters is the Monday at noon prior to Thursday's publication.

All letters should be signed and accompanied by your local address and telephone number. The Cynic reserves the right to edit any letter for precision and clarity.

Shorter letters will be given preference.

Arts/Entertainment

Aztec Two-Step Steps Out

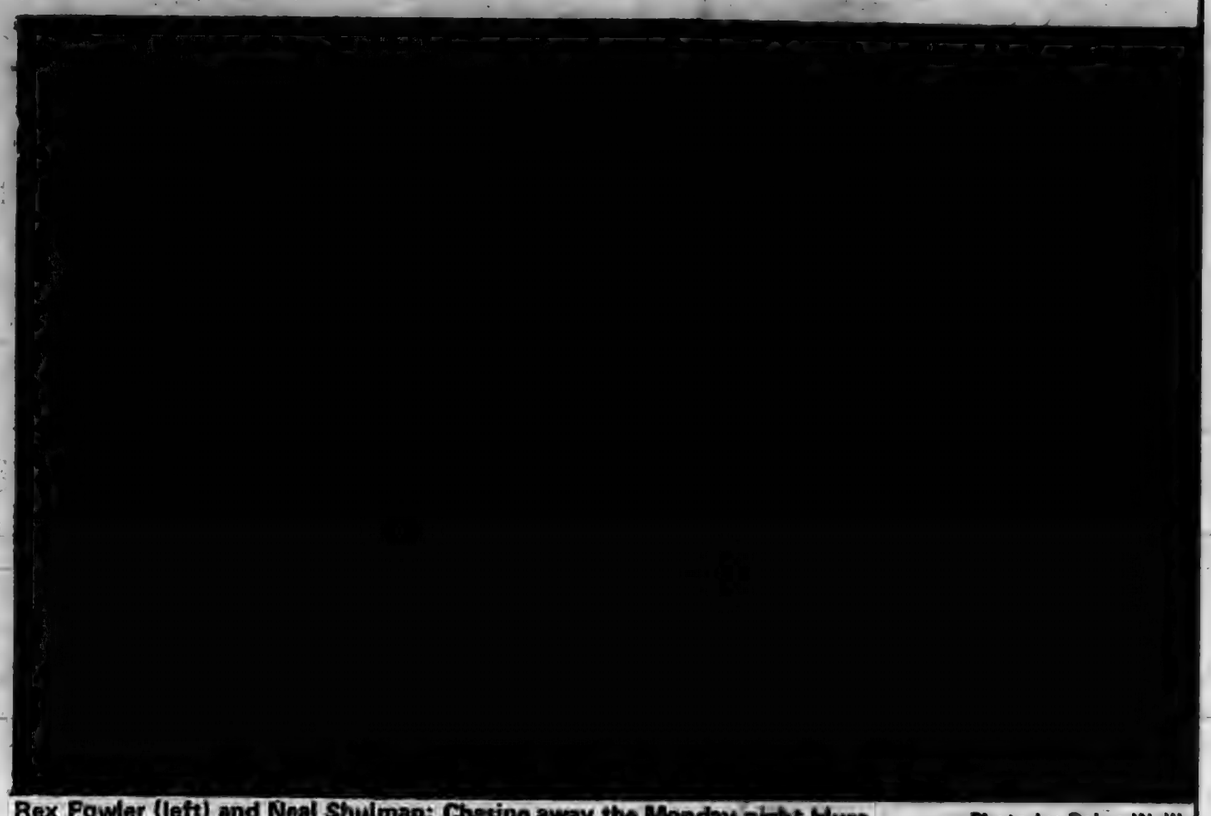
By Diana Green

Aztec Two-Step's stunning performance before a capacity crowd at Hunts Monday made the Monday night blues seem as unreal as a Saturday night in the library. The duo's uncompromising style and diversity was as captivating as their charm was appealing.

Neil Shulman and Rex Rowler, Aztec-Two-Step, began as a folk duo three years ago, and since have added a back-up band which has strengthened and implemented their remarkable talents as singers, musicians, and composers. The lyrical poignancy of its calm tune was matched by its tight energetic instrumentation.



Fowler opened up by saying, "It's nice to be in your wonderful city tonight," making the already eager crowd not only receptive but downright antsy. After a quick nod from Fowler, the band was off – playing a zealous version of "Going on Saturday," a tune off their album Second Step. This song spotlighted Shulman's veracity on acoustic guitar. As he looked down intensely at his strings, never looking up, his fingers moved quickly and effortlessly. The thrust and vigor of Shulman's strumming combined with Fowler's vocals, established Aztec Two-Step as a vivacious and venerate band immediately.

Slowing the pace down, Aztec Two-Step proceeded with an emotion-packed rendition of "Killing Me," a love song off their first album. Songwriter/guitarist, Rex Fowler's voice was smooth, subtle and sublime, and when combined with the raspy-soprano of Shulman, they created a uniquely rich quality that worked beautifully together.

Though they featured mostly their older music, one of the only tunes off their new album Adjoining Suites, "Brand New," a slightly jazzy love song, was by far the most interesting technically. "Brand New" began with a simple steady beat set by the percussionist and bass player that transformed from soft to dynamic with no hesitation – just slick professionalism.

Dressed in his native New York City garb of high waisted pants, super-tight toe-shirt, and cap, Marshall Rosenberg, the percussionist, pounded away on his congos, symbols, and drums that not only made for a firm rhythm section, but also added some good visuals. Bass player/flutist, Jeremiah Burnham's abilities as a bassist were average, however. The few times he played his flute he was sharp.

While joking with the audience about the mediocre graffiti found in Hunt's men's room, the "union players" left the stage. After Fowler told the "true" story of Humpty Dumpty and Cinderella, Shulman joined in and sang a melancholy love song "Humpty Dumpty" that delighted the audience.

Rex Fowler (left) and Neal Shulman: Chasing away the Monday night blues. – Photo by Debra Wollk

Shulman brought out his electric guitar for a few tunes and demonstrated his versatility and craftmanship as a superior guitar talent. His face grew expressive and his body contorted as he wailed out the rock and roll riffs in the song "You Look Away." The musical rapport between Fowler Shulman was conveyed through the facile expressions, smiles, and musical contact that spread good feeling on stage as well as off.

Ending with an energized version of "As We Danced," the crowd was satisfied and the band looked equally as pleased. Everyone rose for a well-deserved standing ovation. Aztec Two-Step returned for a terrific encore including two favorites off their first album. "Prisoner" and "The Persecution and Restriction of Dean Moriarty," a salute to Neil Cassidy, the protagonist of Jack Kerouac's novel On the Road.

'The Wild Duck': Flying High at Royall Tyler

By Jennifer Landry and Heidi Racht-Campbell

The UVM Department of Theatre's production of Henrik Ibsen's The Wild Duck is unique. The first all-student designed and directed production since The Knight of the Burning Pestle in the spring of 1975, it combines the efforts of Richard A. Whitmore as director, Elizabeth Feidner as the scenery and lighting designer, and P. Chelsea Harriman as the costume designer. The basic idea of the presentation of the setting corresponds to the theme of the play and to the costume design. The theme of the production, "does one have to leave the material world in order to find happiness?" is reflected in the oppressive scenery where happiness is unfulfilled.

The decision for "realistic" scenery was a collaboration effort of both the designers and the director. Elizabeth Feidner felt that the concept of the play is realistic and chose pure Victorian furniture to convey the "period" of the nineteenth century. Chelsea went to the Museum of Fine Arts in Boston to research women's fashion from 1891. "The clothing isn't exaggerated," she said, "I'm using color, style, and design to convey character." When performing a period play, many things must be taken into consideration. Rick Whitmore feels that accuracy is an element of the realistic setting which must be treated delicately. He says that the audience must be convinced of the play's authenticity.

Feidner embarked on her career as a scene designer at UVM by doing work in general theatre, "mainly acting, but I did some tech work." After that, she decided to concentrate on the technical aspect of the theatre rather than to spread herself thinly over the many areas of production. Although lighting and scene design are distinctly separate fields in the professional theatre, she feels that the two are so intricately related that she can control both. Harriman's involvement in the theatre evolved simultaneously with her major in biology. Although biology and theatre are on opposite ends of the educational spectrum, she had a double major until she decided to devote herself to her commitment in theatre. Whitmore has always wanted to direct, but did not officially declare his major in theatre until last year.

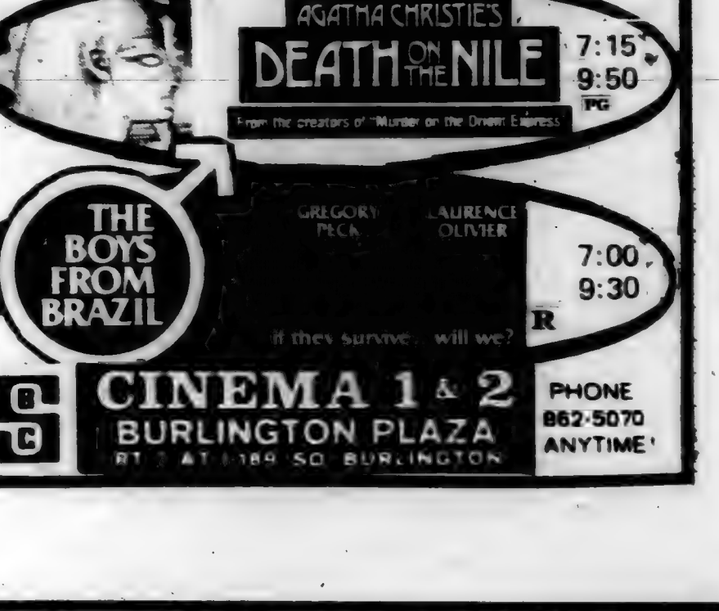
Harriman wants to give the audience a subjective idea of character through the use of colour. Hedvig, a young girl in the play, is presented as innocent and sincere, suggested by warm colours which are "more human." Mrs. Sorby's dress is more modernized which corresponds to her modern ideas. Feidner says that there are "basically two settings. The first act occurs in Werle's study which is like a private world." This microcosm of the world looks rich in comparison to the other setting which is a photographer's studio. She uses furniture to convey character. To emphasize the richness of Werle's study, the furniture in the second act is not as elaborate. The fabrics on the furniture are not as vibrant as those of the first setting.

Rick Whitmore's desire for an intimate relationship between the play and the audience is achieved through the use of beams suspended from the theatre's rafters which portray an oppressive feeling. Feidner said they are, "as if the audience were looking into the world." She says that the scenery isn't realistic in terms of structures, "but it's another form of realism, a realism with no walls." The costumes and the scenery compliment each other through common colours and styles.

As can be expected, problems were encountered during the weeks of rehearsals, and in costume design and technical work. The only problem Harriman had was "the difficulty of being a full-time student and a full-time costume designer simultaneously; time is the major problem." The scenery was originally to have walls, but Beth finally decided on open scenery with the use of beams to draw the audience into the play.

Rick background in theatre is diverse. He has directed Tennessee Williams' 27 Wagons Full of Cotton as part of last year's Festival of One-Act Plays. His major acting roles include Francis in Henry IV, Pt. 1 and Monsieur Fleurant in The Imaginary Invalid. Elizabeth Feidner has worked tech on all of the productions since 1976. She designed the lighting for Melogamie, a dancer program, in which the lights were used to create and to act as scenery; she also designed the scenery for the 1978 Playtimers' Tour and for Snow. Chelsea Harriman's designs were seen in State of Siege and in a number of recent City Company and Second Stage productions. Rockwell Cleborne, a junior with a double major in political science and economics, is the technical director, and Brenda McMullan, a junior theatre major, is the stage manager. The music is directed by Linda S. Whitmore.

(continued on page 34)



Ted Lindsay as Old Ekdal – Photo by Charles R. Trottier

PART II IS EVEN BETTER!
★★★★
HIGHEST RATING
The Godfather PART II
Friday Nov. 18
7 & 9:30 PM AT Southwick, $1.

THE ROCKY HORROR PICTURE SHOW
R a different set of jaws.
This Friday & Saturday at Midnight

AGATHA CHRISTIE'S DEATH ON THE NILE 7:15 9:50 PG
From the creators of "Murder on the Orient Express"
THE BOYS FROM BRAZIL GREGORY PECK LAURENCE OLIVIER 7:00 9:30 R
If they survive... will we?
CINEMA 1 & 2
BURLINGTON PLAZA
RT 7 AT I-189 SO. BURLINGTON
PHONE 862-5070 ANYTIME

So You Think You Can Make Quality
Photographs ?

lower Billings
call S.P.S.
X-2050

Dining Out

The Deja Vu Cafe: The scenery isn't bad, but... Photo by Bob Gale

The Deja-Vu Cafe

Haven't I Been Here Before?

By Randy McMullen

The ironic thing about Deja Vu is that it is actually the kind of restaurant where you could ask yourself: "Haven't I been here before?"

There seemed to be an all-too-familiar atmosphere there created by an over-abundance of contrived behavior; the social Darwinism of the jet set; safety through superficiality. Although I could detect the hum and healthy murmur of a restaurant on the go, there were subtle indications that the conversations at hand had all the originality of a documentary on Babe Ruth: a couple yearning to hold hands over the table but thinking better of it; a man lighting a cigarette so as to have the smoke filter over somebody else's table and not his own; an overhead debate concerning a portion of whipped cream and whether or not it has come from a cow.

It reminded me slightly of my pre-liberated, high school days when restaurants like Deja Vu were the "first date" spots, a place that I knew had to look nice and... well what did it matter if the food tasted good when I was so nervous that my bladder was on open throttle anyway?

To give due credit, Deja Vu is a restaurant with a stunning appearance. And, at least aesthetically, it is unique. The three-and-a-half years that went into its construction, though they may have drawn a snicker from Michaelangelo, seem not to have been spent entirely in vain. Deja Vu is a two-story restaurant; the bottom floor is highlighted by an immense hanging flower pot with a brick wall and window behind it somewhat akin to a French cathedral. There are also sections of booths laced with delicate wood carving, as well as L-shaped, black paneled mini-bars and an assortment of other novelties. The second floor – with its plush carpeting – has seclusion and a nice view (and offers a challenging stairway for waitresses and waiters to boot).

The total effect is one of both glamour and restlessness. Deja Vu is without question an appealing restaurant, yet it suggested to me the troubling scenario of a frantic interior decorator running himself ragged to make sure that not an inch of space is left without something to grab your attention.

Any degree of originality, however, that can be spoken of at Deja Vu is lost when the food is served. A pretty setting is all very nice, but stomachs, unfortunately, do not have eyes. All in all, the culinary offerings at Deja Vu were at best mediocre.

My friend muddled through crepe ratatouille (about 75% crepe and 25% ratatouille) with a tomato sauce that challenged Hunts for ingenuity, while I had a seafood dish that occasionally surprised me with some flavor. The side dishes were canned and undoctored vegetables and a less-than-imaginative serving of rice pilaf.

Dessert was more encouraging, and I especially recommend the Black Russian Pie.

In short, Deja Vu's decor far outweighs its cooking. I suggest stopping by there for a drink or snack, but their dinners, ranging from three to 10 dollars, not only remind you of any other restaurant, but make you long for one.

Brown's Calculated Simplicity

By Mary Landon

The stark white walls and contrasting dark ceiling of the Colburn Gallery provided a clean and simple background for the recent exhibit of Jim Brown's photography.

All thirty-two photographs are black and white and matted behind white frames. The prints are large, drawing the observers' eyes toward the subject matter quickly and directly. There are very few landscape shots: most deal with immediate, everyday objects and people, and many are close-ups.

Jim Brown has captured human emotion evident in several photographs of elderly people. By concentrating on the faces of the elderly and less on the surrounding environment, the viewer is magnetically drawn to Brown's position as photographer. The portraits are almost lifesize, showing every wrinkle and gray hair, every shadow that the light creates. And because of Brown's sensitivity towards his people and his medium, two-dimensional images take on a life of their own.

There is a simplicity in Jim Brown's work that is refreshing, rather than overwhelming. One doesn't have to stand and ponder each photograph, searching to uncover any obscure or abstract meaning; the prints are straightforward in their beautiful portrayal of faces, architecture, nudes, barns, doorknobs, shadows, light, and textures. Brown brings the camera's eye within inches of an old doorknob. The paint on the doorknob is cracked and peeling, and the rough texture is magnified sharply by the light and shadows.

In the same manner of simplicity and of searching for the "unusual" in common objects, Brown brings us a mere two inches away from the sweaty, smelling interiors of some worn-out sneakers.

There were several studies on the texture and shine of a girl's wavy hair, and one particularly beautiful photograph of the cross-cut ends of a stack of logs. Brown has found beauty, symmetry, and striking texture in objects that might otherwise go unnoticed in our daily lives.

His black and white studies of architectural lines and forms are stunning. Though these photographs are simple and certainly pleasing to the eye, they do not convey a feeling of spontaneity. Instead there is the impression that Jim Brown is the kind of artist who prefers to

(continued on page 34)

Donald Hall

Donald Hall: Writer in Constant Transition

By Don Taylor

Donald Hall, distinguished editor, interviewer, prose writer and poet, during his visit three weeks ago at UVM, described a conversation he had with T.S. Eliot years ago. Hall had asked Eliot whether he knew that what he wrote was good, since Eliot had won recognition as one of the finest poets in British and American literature. "Heavens no!" was Eliot's immediate reply, "do you?"

"As a writer you want to know you're good," Hall explained, "but you can't. When I was younger I dreamed of the day I would type out poetry and prose and be satisfied that it was the work of a great writer. But you've got to give up this dream because there is always criticism about what you write, and all artists have their periods of ups and downs." Hall said he puts everything he has into his writing, then listens to what people say about it and goes on writing more. He philosophized that "to have written is ashes in the mouth, to be writing is wonderful."

Donald Hall has written profiles for the New Yorker, and book reviews for the New York Times. He has published collections of his own poetry, edited books of many modern poets, written about baseball in Playboy and about universities in the Atlantic Monthly. In his book Remembering Poets, Hall wrote about his opinions of, and experiences with Robert Frost, Dylan Thomas, T.S. Eliot and Ezra Pound. Hall was influenced by the writing of many poets during his undergraduate years at Harvard, and knew the four in Remembering Poets personally.

When Hall began teaching at the University of Michigan, he handed out a required text on composition to a writing class. Later, when he read through the book, Hall went into a rage. "This book," explained Hall, "which was supposed to help students learn how to write, read like a medicine bottle." Hall forbade his class to read the book. He decided that year to write his book Writing Well as an "act of hostility" against other composition handbooks. Writing Well describes different types of writing and illustrates detailed examples of sentence structure pitfalls. Hall said Writing Well was a difficult book to write because it goes into many aspects of prose writing, about which Hall was not accustomed. It took him five years to write the first edition and he still edits the book as students and professors criticize it. Hall derives over one third of his income from Writing Well, but in retrospect says, "I'm glad I wasn't born a rich man; some of the things I've done for money have been the most beneficial to my own writing."

In recent years Hall has taught at Dartmouth College. Now he is writing every day at his New Hampshire farm and at night he reads. He explained that "reading critically to learn how to write is an important part of any writer's development. Style is developed by knowing great stylists, and by loving their literature. Although he reads over 300 poetry books and many novels each year, Hall said he doesn't spend as much time as he would like reading, due to the demands of his own writing.

"I like to sit down with a mug of black coffee, in front of a blank piece of paper and start writing before the confusion of the day distracts me." Hall said he does his best work between six and eight o'clock in the morning. "When I get stuck on a problem, I put the piece I'm working on away and move on to something else. Some writers spend months working on one piece until it's finished. I'm not like that. I work on perhaps five or six poems in the morning, then I'll write a page or two of prose and then stop, even if I know where I'm going. If I feel any boredom, I move onto something else."

An admirer of Hall's work once told him he envied the self-discipline he must have as a writer. But in Hall's view, self-discipline connotes doing something distasteful, out of duty, and writing for him is very enjoyable. Hall now finds that even his vacations are a part of his work. His vacations are his trips to lectures he gives and the travels on which his writing interests take him. He especially values his connections with people. "I like to talk to publishers, other writers and people I meet everywhere I go. Sometimes I stay up talking to people all night."

Hall's poetry has gone through transitions during his career. He explained that the symmetry of a poem is carried through the sounds of the words the poet chooses. "In recent years I've hit a new noise that I've pursued with enthusiasm. I'm writing longer lines in my poetry and using more rounded sounds. With these longer lines I'm bringing out details, and this helps me express my feelings more concretely."

As a boy Hall spent his summers on a farm in New Hampshire and now lives on that same farm with his wife. One thing he said he loves about living in the country is that "society isn't nearly so separated there. The wealthy and the poor are together going to the same places. There's a separation into classes and income groups today across most of America. Where you live affects or sometimes determines your income." Growing up in the country was an important influence on Hall. The titles of some of the poems he read during his reading at UVM are "Kicking the Leaves," "Stone Walls," and "Feeding the Pigs." His book String Too Short to be Saved is about his summers haying and blueberry picking, and about the country people of New Hampshire. It is also about a way of life Hall feels is rapidly disappearing in America.

At age 50 Hall finds that he now has more patience with his work than he did at age 30. However he added "sometimes I feel guilty about the happy life I lead. But I push these thoughts away as fast as I can."

CALENDAR ADDITION

Calendar addition – Nov 18-
"40–60ers" Singles, general meeting, 7:30 p.m., Sara Holbrook Ctr., 66 No. Avenue, Burlington. Open to all separated, divorced, widowed & unattached people. For more information call 863-5377.

ACT TWO
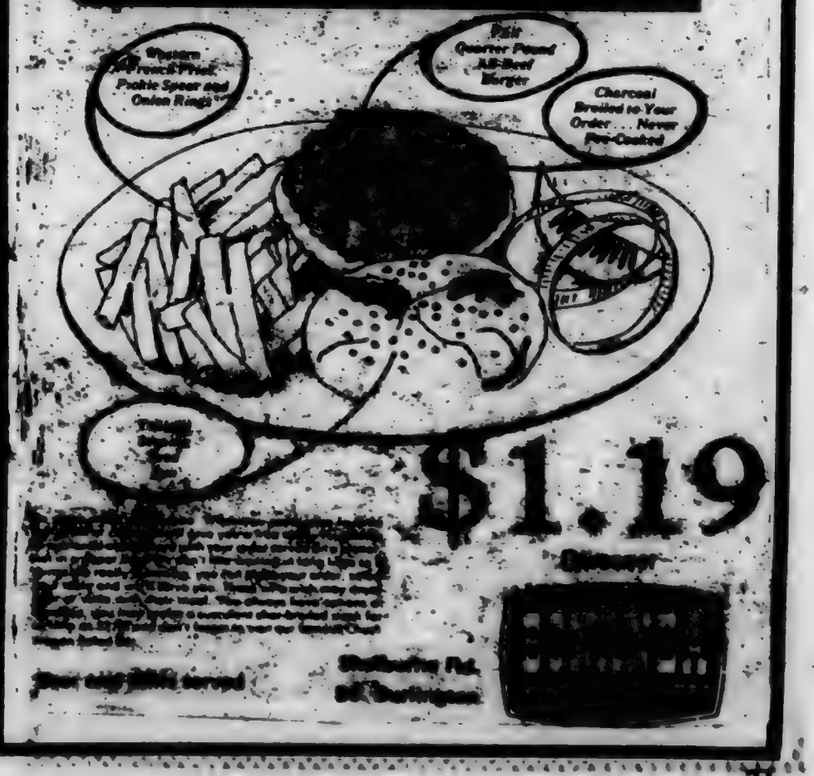
97 Church St. 658-2050

We carry the PROFILE collection:



Ski Sweaters Bib Pants & Vests

Available in Rasberry, Ice, Jade, Cobalt blue.

The Biggest Burger Buy In Town...

BONANZA-BURGER

"On Top Of Church Street"

Hawks Point

Never A Cover Charge

86 Church St.

"Just Jazz" Quintet

Featuring songs by Sam Armstrong

Fri. & Sat. Night

Mon. night football on the 8-foot screen

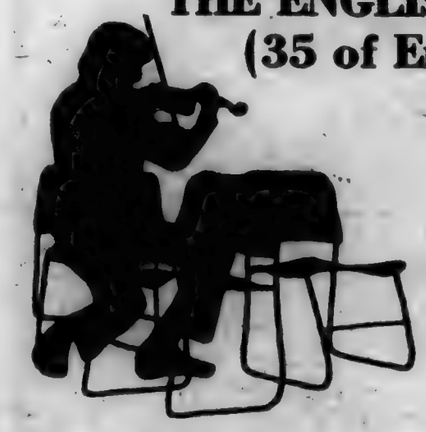
IF YOU CAN DRIVE A CAR, YOU COULD SAVE YOUR FRIEND'S LIFE.

For free information, write to:
DRUNK DRIVER, Box 2345
Rockville, Maryland 20852

Lane Series

1978-79 Season

University of Vermont



The incomparable Russian pianist

VLADIMIR ASHKENAZY

conducting and playing with

THE ENGLISH CHAMBER ORCHESTRA

(35 of England's finest musicians)

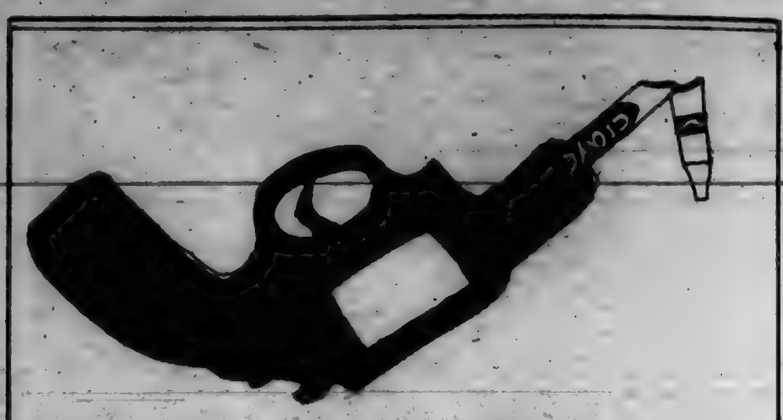
Monday November 20th

8:00 pm Memorial Auditorium

In a Program of Concertos by Stravinski, Mozart and Britten.

Tickets on sale at the door.

BOX OFFICE: The Ticket Store, Park Centre Building, 131 Main Street, Burlington, Vermont 05401 — Lane Campus Box Office, Grasse Mount, University of Vermont, Burlington, Vermont 05405



CALL: (802) 863-5966 — (802) 656-3615

HOURS: 10:00 A.M.-6:00 P.M. Monday-Saturday — 10:00 A.M.-4:00 P.M. Monday-Friday

TICKETS: $7.50 and $5.00; $6.50 and $4.00 (with UVM student ID)

RESERVATIONS: Held 72 hours— Mail Orders accepted with payment

Flicks

Whither Has Fled, the Visionary Gleam?

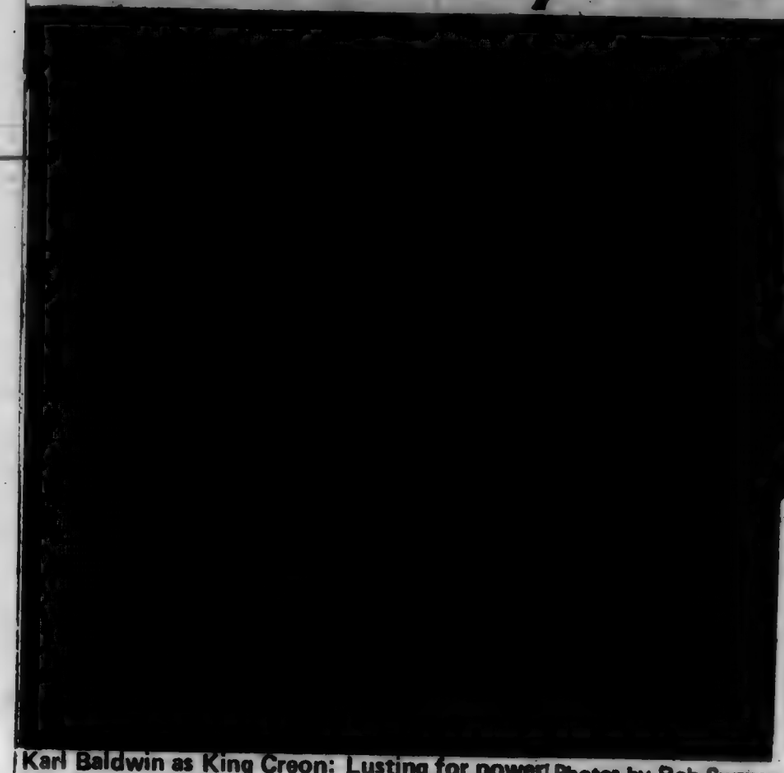
By Tom Campbell

What a difference a few years can make. In the late 1960's and early 1970's college campuses were alive with anti-war protests, draft card burnings, and human rights demonstrations. There were common enemies, common causes and colorful outspoken leaders. Now the main concerns of the young "intellectual elite" seem to seldom stray from the search for the 3.8 G.P.A. and the relevance of this attainment on the realities of the job market. So what's happened since then? Did the end of Vietnam in effect bring about the end of widespread social and political awareness? Is there less of a reason to unite for humanitarian causes? Are there no more lenders?

The Big Fix doesn't try to answer any of these questions. But it does bring them back to the surface once more for us to consider. It is a look, in a broad sense, at the radicals of the sixties and where they are today. And in more than one instance it seems to point an accusing finger and shout "sell-out."

The Big Fix is a detective comedy yarn that seldom puts us on the edge of our seats in suspense, but introduces clues and plot tangents so rapidly that the viewer can't help but be quizzically interested, as well as consistently amused. Richard Dreyfuss, who teams with Carl Borak in his first production effort, stars as a former Berkeley radical who is now a somewhat less than professional private eye. The plot centers around his search for the people behind a California political smearing case at election time. Dreyfuss becomes inextricably involved when his former girl friend is murdered in connection with it.



The key to the appeal of this film is the way Dreyfuss plays the character of Moses Wine. He is at once an idealist with few moral commitments and therefore unable, as well as unwilling, to find a more steady and profitable job, even though this is the only thing preventing his desire to take custody of his two young boys from his former wife. At the same time he is a realist who is constantly at offs with the trumped up pretentiousness that he sees around him. He barges into his divorced wife's consciousness--raising class, for instance, to tell her that their lives are in danger because of his involvement in the game.

Bur Dreyfuss' performance is not the only highlight. Susan Anspach is superb as his reunited girl friend from his Berkeley days, offering a great foil for his often inflated sense of self-esteem and accomplishment. When they are about to enter a publisher's house to gather information about the smear campaign, in an important and rather self righteous tone, Dreyfuss says, "Now remember, I'll do all the talking." "Sure," she flatly replies, "after all, you're the dick." Taken back, the camera holds on him for an extended moment as he ponders the double meaning of the phrase. Even more typical of their relationship, and of Wine as an individual, is the fact that she is the one who gets the information, while he must be content to helplessly look on. Unfortunately, she is killed off rather early in the movie, and even though her death is quite startling for both Wine and the audience, especially when preceded by a light-hearted scene in which he laboriously prepares for his first date with her since college days, it simply occurs too early in the movie to allow us to savor the richness of her relationship with Wine.

Running throughout The Big Fix are remnants, references and leftovers of the campus radical movements of the sixties. Howard Eppis is a defendant in the much publicized California-four trial and currently underground. Eppis's name is also associated with the political smear campaign, and near the end of the film it is revealed that he is living quite comfortably as a slogan writer for advertisements. In a splendid piece of irony, he states that "after all, after creating lines like 'Hey, Hey, L.B.J., how many kids did you kill today?' it's a cinch to do advertising for Magtag washers." The other defendants for the trial are also portrayed in brief but important roles, and the final solution to the case that Wine is investigating stems even more from the radical scene of ten years ago than the first intonates.

Probably the most telling scene about what could be called the true direction of The Big Fix involves Moses Wine viewing film clips about the college uprising in research for his investigation. He soon becomes totally enveloped once more in what we know is a large portion of his past. Tears begin to form in his eyes as the memories rush back, but suddenly the voice of a policeman shatters his concentration and drags him abruptly back to reality. When seen in conjunction with some of the other post-sixties images of the film — Eppis as an ad man, a lawyer that Wine virtually blackmails with the knowledge of his activist past, two California four defendants still languishing in jail, and Wine himself as a content but rather misplaced public servant — it becomes apparent that the film is neither glorifying nor criticizing the loss of identity that has occurred within the rebellions of the sixties. Instead it is merely acknowledging a fact of inevitability.

Greek Morality at St. Mike's

Karl Baldwin as King Creon: Lusting for power Photos by Rob Swanson

"No pride on earth is free of the curse of heaven."

By Karen Salzman

Moral conflict and strong acting highlighted last week's production of Antigone by the St. Michael's College drama department. Originally written in the 5th century B.C. by Sophocles, Antigone is a continuation of the Theban legend of the conflict between Oedipus' daughter and brother-in-law.

The legend, which leads up to the opening to Antigone, is as follows. Oedipus was the son of Laius, the King of Thebes, and his Queen, Jocasta. The Oracle of Delphi prophesized the son would kill his father, so the boy was given to a shepherd to abandon. Instead, the boy was brought up as a royal son by the King of Corinth. When Oedipus heard of the prophecy, he set out for Thebes, inadvertently fulfilling the oracle's words by killing a stranger, who turned out to be the King. He then solved the riddle of the sphinx, entered Thebes, and married Queen Jocasta, fathering Antigone, Ismene, and two sons, Eteocles and Polynieces.

Searching for Laius' murderer to lift a plague that had descended on the city, Oedipus discovered the truth of his parentage, blinded himself, and went into exile with his children. Jocasta committed suicide. Creon, Jocasta's brother, became the King of Thebes. Eteocles and Polynieces, each fighting for the kingship, rebelled against Creon. Brother fought against brother, each killing the other. Polynieces, one of the seven against Thebes, was branded a traitor for killing Eteocles who had become a defender of Thebes. Antigone then begins.

King Creon has declared that Polynieces' body shall lay unburied and unhonored in the desert to rot and be devoured by animals. The punishment of being stoned to death awaits he who disobeys this order. Such a decree is necessary to preserve the stability of his rule over Thebes.

In contrast with Creon's adherence to the earthly law (which he sets), Antigone decides to follow the divine law and honor her dead brother. During the night, she leaves the palace to sprinkle Polynieces' body with sacrificial wine and cover it with dirt. As Ismene listens with horror to her deed, Antigone explains that the worst of deaths is death without honor. Creon will kill her for her actions, but it is the dead — not the living — that make the longest demands.

Antigone is captured and brought before Creon as the suspect. The ensuing dialogue is the gist of the entire play: divine law vs earthly law. Challenging the king's interpretation of divine laws, Antigone argues her point like a well-practiced lawyer or preacher. Honors are due all dead. "Who of us," she asks, "can say what the gods decree wicked?" The Greek chorus, as the public, serves as a sort of Everyman; looking properly sheepish when Antigone declares that they would say she is right — if they didn't fear Creon — yet realizing that her death is necessary to keep the earthly law in order.

Reprimanded by his son Haimon (Antigone's fiance) for not showing good judgment concerning Antigone's death and Polynieces' unhonorable death, Creon's pride refuses to let him yield and change his mind. He is told that "No pride on earth is free of the curse of heaven" and that it is not reason to never yield to reason. Creon explains that Antigone's death will give him "everything" — his pride and his power over Thebes.

Antigone is sent off to be sealed in a cave, with enough food to last until she has made peace with the gods, to slowly die, another victim of the "curse" of her family. Oedipus blinded and exiled himself to appease the gods, both of her brothers died defending a cause they believed in, now she was to die for believing in the purity of her actions.

An oracle is consulted who prophesizes that more will die and reiterates that there is no sin but pride. After much debate, Creon relinquishes his pride and runs to untomb Antigone. But he is too late — she has strangled herself, Haimon stabbing himself to die beside her.

Ellen Menard as the heroine was excellent. Although she seemed afraid of using her hands in the first scene while confessing to Ismene what she had done, Ms. Menard warmed up to become a most convincing Antigone. Her voice and poise were befitting a princess with a strong sense of morality and guts. Particularly impressive was Ms. Menard's sentencing scene with Creon.

Ismene, Antigone's flighty sister, was played by Maureen Hagan. Again, the first scene was a problem — this time with a bit of classical overacting. I didn't quite believe she was willing to die with Antigone, but that type of conscience reversal is difficult

(continued on page 34)

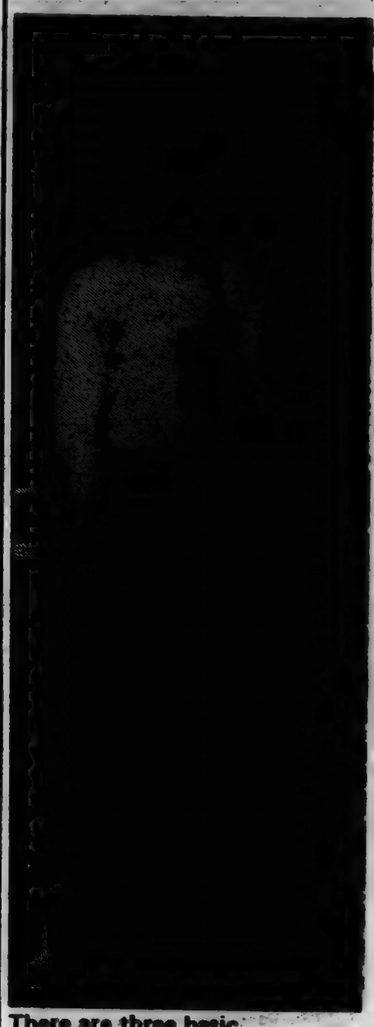
Ellen Menard as Antigone: "Who of us can say what the gods ... decree wicked?"



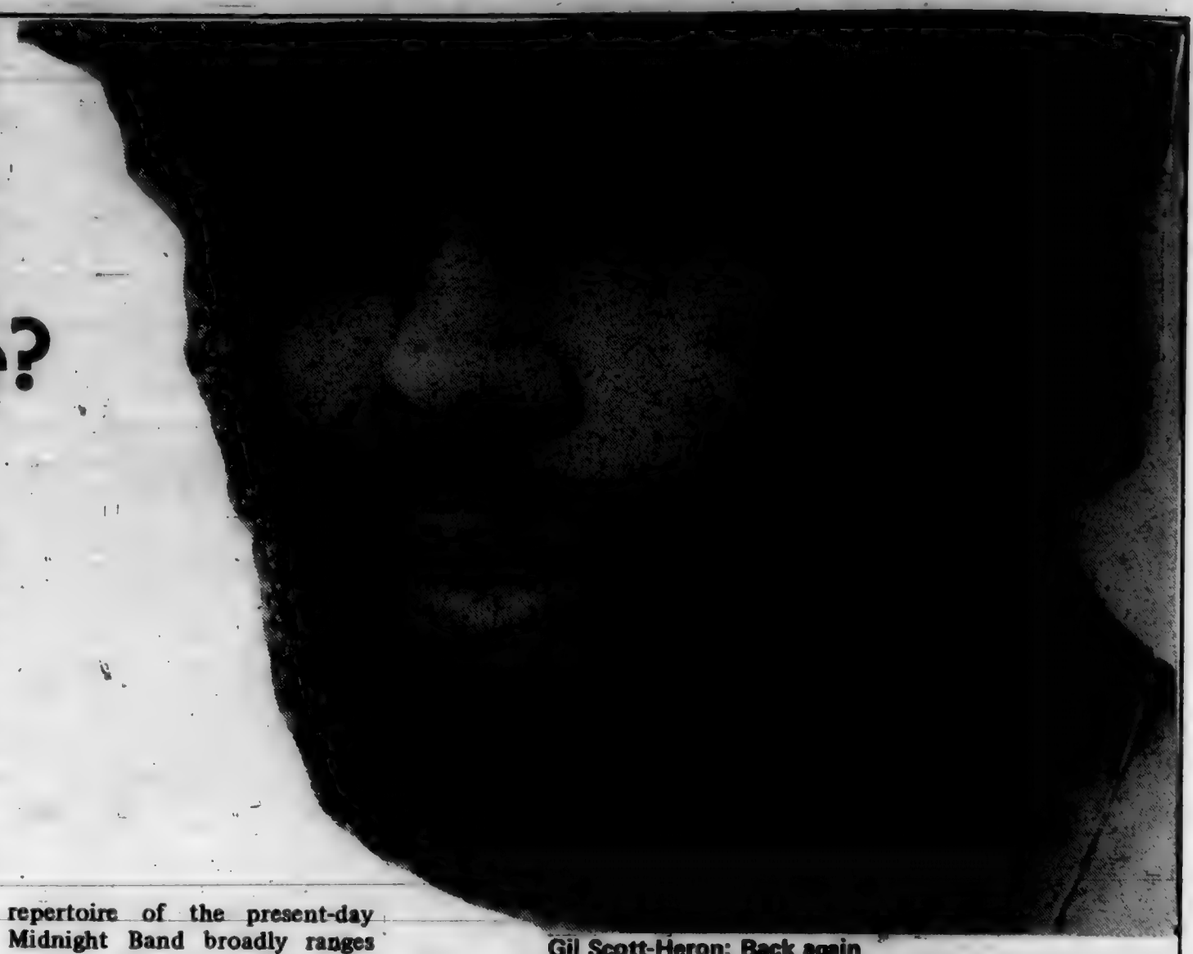
We're Playing Your Song...

Whether your taste runs from Classical to Disco- or from Jazz to Rock, we've got it all.

Bailey's Music Rooms — ...
Check our prices, check our service.

Bailey's
88 CHURCH ST
BURLINGTON

Can Gil Scott-Heron Ever Wear Out His Welcome?



There are three basic components in Scott-Heron's concerts: culture, music, and socio-political views.

By Tom Nuccio

A musical extravaganza will occur when the vocally narrative Gil Scott-Heron, compatriot keyboardist Brian Jackson and their Midnight Band return to Burlington at the Flynn Theatre on November 29. This concert marks Scott-Heron's third Burlington performance in thirteen months and his first with top-billing.

There are three basic components to every one of his concerts: culture, music, and socio-political views. In concert, he constantly renews the African griot (storyteller) tradition with an astounding smorgasbord of percussion and vocals. In Africa, the griots are drummers and storytellers who walk from village to village informing people of past history and present day happenings. The Midnight Band possesses this cultural aspect via Barnett Williams (affectionately dubbed the "Doctor of Drumology) who plays practically every known percussion instrument and a few self-invented ones, and Gil Scott-Heron himself, whose narrative lyrics weigh heavily on personal experience and aggressive reactions to society.

Due to a recent affiliation with Arista Records, it has become extremely difficult to label Scott-Heron's music. The repertoire of the present-day Midnight Band broadly ranges from pop to jazz, intermittently exhibiting qualities of funk, soul and Caribbean music. Also there have been two significant changes in Heron's present group since his most recent Burlington performance (March 3) at the Memorial Auditorium. On his latest Arista LP, Secrets, Leon Williams handles the tenor sax duties previously undertaken by Bilal Sunni-Ali. Williams appears more technically proficient than his predecessor and should play an integral role in this upcoming concert. The most outstanding renovation within the Midnight Band is the addition of three female background vocalists. Their voices effectively grace both sides of Secrets, thus adding a totally unique and novel dimension to the group sound.

Gil Scott-Heron: Back again

The third and most salient component of his concert show arises in the form of socio-political views. Gil Scott-Heron, possessing a MA in English from Johns Hopkins University, lectures frequently on topics such as political corruption and black cultural heritage. To date, he has authored three books with a fourth scheduled for upcoming publication. Although Scott-Heron transmits many of his ideas through literary and oratory practices, music has now become his most effective tool for such communication. The Secrets album consists largely of socio-musical statements: the opening cut, "Angel Dust" is an ominous warning about the dangers of this powdered drug; "Madison Avenue" criticizes the persuasive practices of advertising; "Three Miles Down" exhibits the dismal life of mining, and "Angola, Louisiana," the legacy of Gary Tyler's death.

This November 29th concert could prove quite interesting as the performance will be rated in comparison to his previous Burlington stints – thus raising the question: "Can Gil Scott-Heron continuously top himself?" In light of the changes within the Midnight Band as well as the established qualities of his music, I most definitely think he will handily surpass all previous feats.

WRUV PROGRAM GUIDE

| | SUNDAY | MONDAY | TUESDAY | WEDNESDAY | THURSDAY | FRIDAY | SATURDAY |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| 6:00 AM | | Bill Flanigen | John Paruta; Arcadian Driftwood. Soft mellow music to make love by, including rock, jazz, reggae, comedy, and acoustic. | John Dennison; Earth Tones. Modern Jazz, mild fusion | John Paruta; Northern Lights — Southern Cross. Similar to Tuesday's Arcadian Driftwood | John Dennison; Muthafusticus Modernusticus. Your basic mixed grill | Eric Mayor |
| 7:00 AM | | | | | | | |
| 8:00 AM | Mark Paulsen; Slow Motion Sunrise. Folk Rock — Bluegrass — Light Jazz | | | | | | |
| 9:00 AM | | Tom Malloni; Monday Mornin' Mood Music. Soft-core rock. | Doug Lang | Rob Resnik; Early Bird Show. Japanese koto music from 17th century England | Karyl Levinson. More on the mellow side, especially at 9 a.m. Some jazz and several new artists | Brad Hockmeyer; Safe As Milk. A little folk, a little rock, a little folk rock, | Doug Lang |
| 10:00 AM | | | | | | | |
| 11:00 AM | Mary Dewey | | | | | | |
| 12:00 AM | | Michael Barne; It's 90.1, do you know where your children are? Progressive FM stereo rock, a weekly run down on the Canterbury Tales | David Snyder; Icarus — Icarus in daylight hours. Lighter music and humorous programming with emphasis on rock and folk. | Robert Sherwin; Nineteen Forty Five. Listen... then decide (I don't really know) | Andy Levine; The Churn Session — Part II Cruising the musical spectrums, landing at Scatico around July | Jana Panarites; My Show. Jazz, contemporary, pop, folk, Tom Rush to Joni Mitchell to Earth Wind & Fire, as long as it's good music. | Shana; Direct Current. Music with a positive charge |
| 1:00 PM | | | | | | | |
| 2:00 PM | Michael Pickman; Zone V. Rock and jazz and we'll see what happens. | | | | | | |
| 3:00 PM | | Lori Goodman; Story Lori Radio Recipe. Mix together generous amounts of jazz and rock, and consume with relish. | Eric Sorensen; Enough of the Gamouth. Jazz: Essentially non-electric with a more ezz-thetic than rhythmic emphasis. | Paul Kaza; Progressions. Contemporary jazz with emphasis on progressive sounds. Special previews of upcoming artists | Tom Nuccio; Jazz Is. The full gamut of jazz from bop and blues to fusion and funk. Radio Free Jazz aired at 5:00 | Lewis Heyman | Roger Lewis; Mars Hotel. A great place to pull when you're on a trip. Mind altering music laced with Dead air. Won't you try Saturday afternoon? |
| 4:00 PM | | | | | | | |
| 5:00 PM | Goodman, Heyman, Malloni; La Fiesta de Musica. The best Latin music styles | | | | | | |
| 6:00 PM | | | | | | | |
| 7:00 PM | Ed Bemis; Jazz Workshop. | Pat Callahan; Evening Concert. Classical music. | Steve Grover; Evening Concert. emphasis on solo and chamber work! | Joanne Feldman; Vermont Minuet. A sampling of popular classical music. | Frank Wilder; Opus I Classical Music | Jay Strausser; Trenchtown Rock. Reggae, mon, and some West Indian, you know. | Matt La Sordo |
| 8:00 PM | | | | | | | |
| 9:00 PM | Eber Lambert; The Candle Eye Breeze. Light jazz to easy progressive, classical rock to the avantgarde!!! ending with the Experimental Music Hour | Brad Zeve; Jazz Now. Contemporary jazz with special feature album at 10:00 P.M. | Rich Pomerantz; Duke's Place Hear the masters as well as the roots of be-bop and swing. Foundations of jazz, but whose stories defy adjectives. | Andy Levine; The Churn Session — Part I. Spanning all the musical boundaries. Plus Strictly Rockers. roots reggae every other Wednesday 8—9 p.m. | Charlie Frazier & Midnight Rider; Cryptic Envelopment. Anything and everything from blues to jazz. | Brad Bosley; After 8. Light to heavy rock, coming from Trenchtown Rock to Sonic Slam | Marc Andrews |
| 10:00 PM | | | | | | | |
| 11:00 PM | | | | | | | |
| 12:00 PM | John Dennison; Muthafusticus Modernusticus. Your basic mixed grill. | Jay Strausser | Jan Carlee; Lunar voyage. A general survey of insanity featuring such notables as Gentle Giant, Kinks, Peter Gabriel, Little Feat, etc. | Joe Figucie; Sticks and Stones Anything goes! | Boris; Boris' Night Out. One night a week, Boris is let out of his dungeon to play in hot vinyl | Mitch Stern; Sonic Feast. The finest blend of contemporary and not-so-contemporary progressive rock available. | Mark Reyman |
| 1:00 AM | | | | | | | |
| 2:00 AM | | | | | | | |

A Technicolor Success

By Elizabeth Thompson

Delicious food, served up with fantastical singing, music and choreography, made last weekend's production of Joseph and the Amazing Technicolor Dreamcoat by the Living Learning Center a smash hit.

Presented by the Centre players and directed by Mary Krause, Joseph and the Amazing Technicolor Dreamcoat is another creation of the people responsible for Jesus Christ Superstar. The play is a lively and humorous musical depicting the Biblical epic of Joseph, son of Jacob.

The musical is divided into 17 songs, each describing a portion of Joseph's life after his expulsion into the desert by his brothers, and finally his joyful reunion with them. Although in its original biblical context, the subject matter is rather dry, the play is altogether different.

The Centre players danced, sang and whirled through each story of Joseph. The play was buoyed by the generous use of comedy while the songs and sentimental melodies effectively unraveled the tale.

In the number "Poor Poor Pharoah/Song of the King," the pharoah is seeking an explanation for a strange dream he had, and he beseeches Joseph for an answer. The pharoah, played by Ed Warfield, whirled out onto the stage in a long white satin and sequined jumpsuit, and sang his plea like Elvis Presley's clone. The Ishmaelites and other accompanying dancers sported pony tails and bobby socks while they sang a backdrop of "bop, bop, shu bop, bops."

In the song "Those Canaan Days," Joseph's 11 brothers are reminiscing about him, regretting ever having sold him off to slavery. The brothers who had suddenly transformed into Frenchmen wore French berets and were smoking cigarettes in long holders and they shed a tear or two when they "Remember Those Canaan Days."

The majority of the songs were filled with wit and humor combined with excellent choreography. But other numbers such as "Close Every Door," sung by Joseph when he was down and out in jail, were slow, touching and brought a real human element into the production.

In the closing song "Any Dream Will Do," Joseph and his family are happily re-united. The final message seemed to be: it doesn't really matter what a person dreams, as long as each person has something to believe in.

Jeff Hansen as Joseph: Any dream will do.

Photo by Mitch Sprung and L/L Photo Suite

Jensen Triaxial® 3-way Speakers

Jensen's Triaxial® 3-Way Speaker...
Quite simply, the most advanced car stereo speaker ever.

For the best sound ever in your car. The first car stereo speaker with a woofer, a tweeter and a midrange.

Identical in principle in the best home stereo speakers. Jensen's midrange picks up a whole range of tones lost to any other car speaker. Only Jensen has it.

ON SALE $49.95

Rebate $5.00

$44.95

Creative Sound

In the Mall between K—MART and MARTINS

GET NEW UNIROYAL SNOW TIRES

UNIROYAL

Before Old Man Winter Gets You!

SNOWPLOW II
BIAS-PLY POLYESTER M/S WHITEWALLS

$23.99

A78-13 whitewall, tubeless, plus $1.64 F.E.T. No trade-in needed.

| SIZE | PRICE | F.E.T. |
|---|---|---|
| E78-14 | $31.57 | $2.13 |
| F78-14 | 33.68 | 2.26 |
| G78-14 | 35.78 | 2.42 |
| H78-14 | 37.89 | 2.60 |
| H78-15 | 37.89 | 2.65 |
| L78-15 | 41.05 | 2.93 |

All prices plus F.E.T.

FOR THE NEW, 1977 1978 & 1979 CARS

UNIROYAL SNOWPLOW M/S PLUS
STEEL BELTED RADIAL WHITEWALLS

$59.95

DR78-14 or 205/70R14 whitewall tubeless, plus $2.32 F.E.T. No trade-in needed.

UNIROYAL

| SIZE | PRICE | F.E.T. |
|---|---|---|
| ER78-14 or P195/75 R14 | $58.94 | $2.32 |
| FR78-14 | 63.15 | 2.74 |
| GR70-15 P225/70 R15 | 68.42 | 3.15 |

UNIROYAL SNOWPLOW M&S PLUS
DOUBLE STEEL/GLAS BELTED RADIAL WHITEWALLS

$42.95

BR78-13 whitewall, tubeless, plus $2.11 F.E.T. No trade-in needed.

| SIZE | PRICE | F.E.T. |
|---|---|---|
| ER78-14 | $52.63 | $2.51 |
| FR78-14 | 56.84 | 2.71 |
| GR78-14 | 58.94 | 2.92 |
| GR78-15 | 60.00 | 2.99 |
| HR78-14 | 63.15 | 3.12 |
| HR78-15 | 65.26 | 3.19 |
| LR78-15 | 70.52 | 3.47 |

All prices plus F.E.T.

UNIROYAL

● Complete Prestone II Radiator Care Package

You get 1 — 22 oz. container Prestone flushing fluid
2 gals. Prestone Antifreeze
1 Pro-Type Antifreeze Tester

Reg. $2.49
Reg. 3.99 gal.
Reg. 4.49 ea.
Total Value = $14.96

All Yours For $8.95

Plus $2.00 rebate when you mail coupon to Preston.

*Includes mounting — Dealer Inquiries Invited

● All Parts & Accessories on Display ●

NORCO AUTO SUPPLY

FOREIGN & DOMESTIC CAR & TRUCK PARTS — AUTO PAINT • BATTERIES • TIRES

OPEN
8 AM to 8 PM
Sat.
8 AM-5 PM

Phone — VT. TOLL FREE — 800-642-3146 LOCAL 864-4283 — 864-7871

1776 Williston Road, So. Burl., Vt.

Anatevka in Burlington

L'chaim- To Life!

By Guy Page

One of the greatest musical hits of all time, Fiddler on the Roof's in town — performed by Lyric Theatre, Burlington's talented musical performers, at the Flynn Theatre for four more nights and a matinee Saturday.

If you have ever seen playwright Joseph Stein's show, you probably know why it ran a record 3,234 Broadway performances. Lasting six years after the opening night star, the late Zero Mostel, delighted discriminating New Yorkers with his gregarious, smile-in-spite-of-reality Tevye, the impoverished Jewish Russian peasant, forever plying the Almighty for favors while pulling his milkcart ("O God — I know it's no shame to be poor; but it's no great honor, either!") If you missed it, let Brooks Atkinson, for thirty years the New York Times' best Broadway critic, fill you in from his book Broadway:

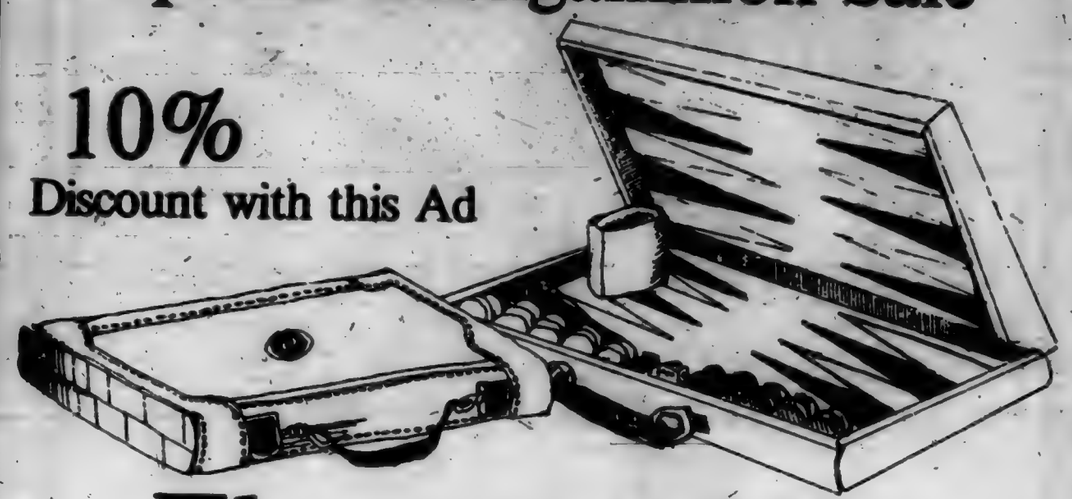
"There was nothing glamorous about Fiddler on the Roof. Tevye, his shrewish wife, his guileless daughters, and his fellow townsmen lived in a slovenly Jewish community (Anatevka) in Russia in 1905; they dressed in rags, town coats, and battered hats, and the men wore scraggly beards... all of these being the opposite of conventional showmanship.

"But there's a certain beauty in ugliness... the sounds and the movement became the portrait of a civilized people — realism tempered with common sense, valor without heroics, and all of it suffused with warmth and humor. Beneath the facade of a big Broadway show, there was a core of human truth about some vigorous people." Fiddler combines nutty musical theater with the realism of 'serious theater,' producing fun and thought-provoking entertainment.

Lyric Theatre should do justice to Fiddler. Greater Burlington, the cultural center of culture conscious Vermont, offers plenty of singing, dancing, acting and stagecraft talent. Lyric, with a reputation of success that draws volunteers, picked the best of a good crop. This, and a big budget, almost ensure a sharp production.

Lyric's biggest hit so far was My Fair Lady, staged two years ago. Fortunately for us, that show's Henry Higgins is Fiddler's Tevye: Harry Lantz, the best of Lyric's leading men. Longstanding lyricist Bob Stanfield directs his second Lyric musical (Guys and Dolls was the first). Catherine Tampas plays Tevye's irritable wife Golde, from whom he receives pointed suggestions after giving his own to God. Ruth Baskin is Yente the Matchmaker, and Lazar Wolfe, Yente's choice for the husband of Tevye's eldest daughter Tzeitel (UVMer Valerie Dorfman) is played by David Griffiths. The show starts at 7:30 tonight, 8:00 Friday and Saturday (with a 2:00 matinee Saturday) and 6:30 Sunday. Although tickets are sold out, a few usually get returned, so you might call the Flynn Box office (862-5121) to try your luck. They sell for $4 and $5.

Fiddler's music, although not quite in Oklahoma's or West Side Story's class, represents some of the best from the musicals of the sixties. Jerry Bock and Sheldon Harnick, two unknowns, collaborated on the tunes and lyrics. Every song has color — sadness, joy, or laughter — and is good, but some shine: for example, "Do You Love Me?" and "If I Were a Rich Man." If Lantz and Tampas sing them as well as they're composed, you won't forget these two songs.



After seven paragraphs, some of you are wondering when I'll mention the plot. Well, there's this family, see, and the father can't earn enough, the wife nags, and the kids fall in love with the strangest people. Nothing new here, except that despair can't win.

One day is honey and raisin cakes/next day a stomachache/Drink L'chaim — To Life!

"Fiddler combines nutty musical theatre with the realism of 'serious theatre,' producing fun and thought-provoking entertainment."

Make Your Move To A Very Special Backgammon Sale

10%
Discount with this Ad

Ebenezer Allen
Gift Shop
Burlington Square Mall 863-4215

Bluegrass and Country
Entertainment Wed. & Thurs. Nights

Monday — $.25 draft + $.75 pitchers
Tuesday — $.50 Molsons
Sunday — Ladies night $.25 off drinks

Happy Hour 3–7 daily
Football Specials — Sunday
Pitch Tournaments

sullivan's
4 NO. WINOOSKI AVENUE

Next to Domino's Pizza

Coke
Trade-mark adds life to... everything nice

"Coca-Cola" and "Coke" are registered trade-marks which identify the same product of The Coca-Cola Company.

CLIP by FRANK COOPER

Precision Haircutting for Men

115 College Street — Burlington

658-6563

Get Booted

WITH THESE FIRST QUALITY, VERSATILE BASS BOOTS FOR BOTH MEN & WOMEN, YOU'LL BE READY FOR EVERYTHING FROM CAMPUS TO CLIMBING! AT THE BASS SHOE FACTORY OUTLET THERE'S A BOOT FOR EVERY BUDGET AND EVERY PAIR IS GUARANTEED TOUGH!

WAXED, BRONZED LEATHER UPPERS. PRO LACES. VIBRAM® GOLD SEAL SOLE ONLY 39.95

GENUINE SPLIT SUEDE UPPERS/VIBRAM® CAOCIA RUBBER SOLE ONLY 28.95

THE SUPER BOOT! YOU MUST SEE THIS BOOT TO APPRECIATE ITS OUTSTANDING CONSTRUCTION. SCREW RE-INFORCED VIBRAM® SOLE & SUPERB BRUSHED LEATHER UPPERS AN UNCOMPROMISING BOOT ONLY 54.95

Bass Shoe Factory Outlet

Williston Road, So. Burl., Vt.

OPEN DAILY 9 A.M.-9 P.M.

Recent Cuts

The Dynamic Duo

By Tom Nuccio

Larry Coryell and Phillip Catherine, *Splendid

Last year jazz guitarists Larry Coryell and Phillip Catherine collaborated for a dynamite acoustic duo on their premier Electra album, Twin House. An innovatively successful concept, the disc featured the two modern masters utilizing six and twelve string guitars with technical fluency and utter brilliance, yielding a superb musical interaction. The commercial and artistic success of Twin House plus the continual association between the guitarists has given birth to a remarkable sequel — Splendid.

Splendid picks up where Twin House ended and exhibits the "Dynamic Duo of Acoustic Guitar" easily surpassing their previous feats. Throughout the album, Coryell and Catherine respond to each other with spontaneous accuracy and rhythmic precision.

Coryell, leader of the jazz/fusion group "Eleventh House," races down his acoustic six-string neck in a rapid fury while soloing on "One Plus Two Blues." In contrast, the European-based Catherine, a Mingus alumnus, cleverly arranges notes into legato sequences in his fretless electric solo on "Snowshadows." The differing styles and effective combination of various guitars produce tunes with interwoven textures, counterpoint and harmonies.

With Splendid, Coryell and Catherine have written another chapter in their acoustic guitar legacy. Future albums of this nature definitely appear on the horizon for these phenomenal musicians who have transformed an unconventional mode of instrumentation into a uniquely improvisational concept.

The Wild Duck

Continued From Page 25

Beth says "I enjoy scene design because I can sit back and look at it. You can't do that with acting." She plans to go to graduate school to obtain "some really intensive training," and she wants to spend some time as a "roadie" of a technician to gain practical experience on the road. Harriman is graduating in December and plans to continue with costume design because "it is something I really love." Whitmore has always wanted to direct and will probably continue to do so.

It's not an easy task to combine the individual efforts of all the members of the production and create a unified play: this task ultimately falls on the director's shoulders. The costumes amplify the furniture and the furniture amplifies the costumes. The scenery corresponds to the character's personalities and their personalities are reflected on stage. The Wild Duck is the production of the individual efforts of everyone involved, with the sense of unfulfilled happiness running throughout the play.

The Wild Duck runs through Saturday, November 18. For additional information, call 656-2094. Reservations may be made by phone or in person. Tickets will be on sale at the door.

Calculated Simplicity

Continued From Page 26

"calculate" his work: visualize the picture, set it up, fiddle with the camera to get it just right, and finally, take a photograph that has been thoughtfully planned out and considered several different ways. The mood of Jim Brown's show was beyond the level of photography that is merely spontaneous and entertaining.

Unfortunately, I think a great many people missed this show: it was up for only five days, and it was not widely publicized. Those who missed the show missed a beautiful collection of photographs by a very talented artist, who takes a craftsman's pride in his work.

Antigone

Continued From Page 29

to portray when your character is rarely on stage.

A progressively regal, proud, asinine, torn and hurt King Creon was compassionately brought to life by Karl Baldwin. This was definitely Baldwin's show, as he riveted the audience's attention, drawing both hatred and pity for this proud man.

Unlike many contemporary productions of Antigone, this one made use of a Greek chorus which narrated the action through dancing, singing, and chanting. One of the reasons Greek choruses are used so infrequently is the difficulty of rehearsing 10 to 20 extras into conformity and unobtrusiveness. A token old man and cute young thing are fine as long as they're not overdone, but this chorus had two attention distracting individualists — a woman with brilliant fire-engine red rouge smeared above her eyes and another woman whose body movement and voice sneered at this "acting" that was certainly beneath her. For the life of me, I can't think of any ancient Grecian disease that left the area above one's eyes bright red. As a whole, the dances were well rehearsed, the facial expressions were almost there, and the solo voice work needed more work. They almost captured the necessary unity.

The Grecian costumes designed by Judith Scelsa and Mary Pizzarelli rate special notice — they were some of the best I've ever seen, flowing beautifully with the movements of the cast.

GENUINE

Budweiser®

KING OF BEERS®

Brewed by our original process from the

Choicest Hops, Rice and Best Barley Malt

THE LARGEST-SELLING BEER IN THE WORLD

Anheuser-Busch, Inc.

ST. LOUIS NEWARK LOS ANGELES TAMPA HOUSTON COLUMBUS
JACKSONVILLE MERRIMACK WILLIAMSBURG FAIRFIELD

GENUINE

For a reprint of this page without advertising, write Anheuser-Busch, Inc., Dept. CN, 2800 South 9th St., St. Louis, Mo. 63118

CALENDAR
Week of November 10 -16

17 Friday

EXHIBITIONS

Francis Colburn Gallery – Lynda McIntyre & Joe Phelan: Painting, drawing, & fabric design. 9 a.m. – 5 p.m.

Fleming Museum – "War!" a cross-cultural viewpoint. "The Library Furniture of H.H. Richardson." "Tools & Technology."

LECTURES

"Regulation & Function of Progesterone Receptor System," Dr. W. W. Leavitt, Worcester Foundation for Experimental Biology, 12 noon, B403 Given.

"The Unmaking of a Vaccine – Experience with Primary Atypical Pneumonia," 12 noon, Dr. Norman Somerson, B-203 Given.

SPECIAL ACTIVITIES

German Folksongs – 4 p.m., C370 L/L.

Open Poetry Reading with Robert Caswell, 8 p.m., Church St. Center.

Apple Sale! Featuring MacIntosh, Mutsu, Northern Spy and Delicious. Sold every Friday afternoon from 12 – 4 in the breezeway between the greenhouses and the Hills Agricultural Science building. Please come! Sponsored by the Plant and Soil Science Club. P.S. Wouldn't you rather eat a UVM grown apple???

Military Uniform Item Sale – many items, reasonable prices. Friday, November 17, 9–4, Saturday, November 18, 9–2, SMC Receiving, North Campus.

Charlie Mac and the irresistable Funk masters will be playing at The Mill in Winooski.

PERFORMING ARTS

"The Wild Duck," Royall Tyler Theatre, 8 p.m.

FILMS

SA Film "Godfather II," 7, 9:30, 12 p.m., B106 Angell. $1/ID, $1.50/general.

STUDENT ACTIVITIES

Student Health Advisory Committee, Clinic, 9 a.m. – 3 p.m., North Lounge, Billings.

Gay Student Union, Dance, 10 p.m. – 2 a.m., Round Room, Billings.

OTHER

Registrar, Pre-enrollment, 8 a.m. – 5 p.m., Marsh Lounge, Billings.

Smuggler's, Mad River, Sugarbush Ski Pass Sales – 9 a.m. – 5 p.m., Lobby, Billings.

18 Saturday

EXHIBITIONS

Fleming Museum – "War!" a cross-cultural viewpoint. "The Library Furniture of H.H. Richardson." "Tools & Technology."

WORKSHOPS

"Handbuilding in Porcelain," 10 a.m. – 4 p.m., Church St. Center. Preregister, fee $23.50. Call 656-4221.

"Woodcuts II," 10 a.m. – 4 p.m., Church St. Center. Preregister, fee $16.

FILMS

IRA Film "Enter the Dragon," 7 & 9:30 p.m., Southwick, $1.

SPECIAL ACTIVITIES

Ski Sale, sponsored by Cochran Ski Club, 10 a.m. – 4 p.m., South Burlington Middle School. Info. call 862-7664 or 862-4875.

"Aqua Sampler," UVM Synchronized Swim Team & the International Academy of Aquatic Art. 8 p.m., Forbush Pool. Tickets UVM Athletic Ticket Office, Southwick Bldg., and at the door.

Pre-Med Information Day, Marsh Lounge, Billings Center. 9:30–10:00, Introduction by Dr. Richard Steele, Director of Admissions, UVM. 10:00–10:30, Bernie Manor, Pre-Med Advisor, UVM; Dr. Milton Potash, Faculty Advisor. 10:30–11:00, Cider Break. 11:00–12:00, Dr. Lee Phillips, Associate Dean of Admissions, College of Medicine, UVM, and a panel of students from the College of Medicine.

PERFORMING ARTS

"The Wild Duck," Henrik Ibsen, Royall Tyler Theatre, 8 p.m.

OTHER

Admissions Information Session, 10 a.m., North Lounge, Billings.

Thanksgiving Market, Capitol City Farmers Market. 9–1 p.m. Indoor/Outdoor market at old A & P, East State St., Montpelier. 20 vendors, events, musicians. Turkeys, pumpkin pie. Come on down for a good time.

19 Sunday

EXHIBITIONS

Fleming Museum – "War!" a cross-cultural viewpoint. "The Library Furniture of H.H. Richardson." "Tools and Technology."

PERFORMING ARTS

University Band Concert, 4 p.m., Music Bldg., $1/ID, $2/general.

FILMS

SA Film "Holiday," 7:30 p.m., B106 Angell, Free/ID, 50 cents/general.

IRA Film "Enter the Dragon," 8 p.m., Southwick, $1.

SPECIAL ACTIVITIES

Photography Program, 6:30 p.m., E230/250 L/L.

Camera Care Workshop, L/LC Fireplace Lounge, 3 p.m. Sponsored by L/LC Photo Program.

Hillel Deli Nite, L/L 216 Commons, 6:00 p.m. $2, all you can eat – hot pastrami, corned beef.

Old Time Country Dance with Arm & Hammer String Band at 8 p.m., Mountain Greenery (77 College St.) Beginners welcome. Information 862-2841.

MEETINGS

Gay Student Union, 7 p.m., Marsh Lounge, Billings.

20 Monday

EXHIBITIONS

Francis Colburn Gallery, Lynda McIntyre & Joe Phelan; Painting, drawing, and fabric design, 9 a.m. – 5 p.m.

Fleming Museum – "War!" a cross-cultural viewpoint. "The Library Furniture of H.H. Richardson." "Tools and Technology."

LECTURES

Vermont Seminars: "The Tricyclic Antidepressant, Iprindole, and the Amine Theory of Affective Disorders," Dr. Edith D. Hendley, Dept. of Physiology & Biophysics, UVM, 12 noon, room C219 Given Bldg.

Vermont Seminars: "Chlorophast DNA," Dan Steece, Botany Dept., UVM, 2:00 p.m., room 122 Hills Building.

Vermont Seminars: " Thyroid Gland in the Spontaneously Hypertensive Rat," Dr. Pat Krupp, Dept. of Anatomy, UVM. 4:00 p.m. Room C417 Given Bldg.

Vermont Seminars: "Preserved Stems of Tree Ferns: Tantalizing Hints About Wet Tropical Forests in the Past," Dr. David S. Barrington, Botany Dept., UVM, 4:10 p.m., Room 105 Marsh Life Science Building.

Vermont Seminars: "Futures in Water Resources: Water Law and Policy," by Mark Lapping, associate director, Water Resources Program, UVM, 7 p.m., Memorial Lounge, Waterman.

Vermont Seminars: "A.H. Davenport and Co., Furniture Makers to H.H. Richardson," with Anne E. Farnam, curator, Essex Institute, Salem Mass. 8 p.m., Wilbur Rm., Fleming Museum.

PERFORMING ARTS

Lane Series, "The English Chamber Orchestra," with Vladimar Ashkenazy, conductor/pianist. 8 p.m., Memorial Auditorium.

MEETINGS

VPIRG, 5–6:30 p.m., Conference Room C, Billings.

FILMS

Women's Referral Center, Women's film series, North Lounge, Billings, 7:30 p.m.

21 Tuesday

EXHIBITIONS

Francis Colburn Gallery, Lynda McIntyre & Joe Phelan: Paintings, drawings, and fabric design, 9 a.m. – 5 p.m.

Fleming Museum – "War!" a cross-cultural viewpoint. "The Library Furniture of H.H. Richardson." "Tools and Technology."

LECTURES

"Grand Rounds," with Dr. Wm. Woodruff, 4 p.m., 103 Rowell Auditorium.

"Recruitment Involved in Tumor Formation?" Robert Cohen, Dept. of Medical Microbiology, UVM, 12 noon, Room B203 Given Building.

"The Influence of Genetic Background on the Susceptibility of C57 B1/6J Murine Pancreatic Beta-Cells to EMC Virus Infection," Barbara Graddock, Dept. of Pathology, UVM. 12:05 p.m., Room A125 Medical Alumni Building.

WORKSHOP

"The Expert Witness," 2 – 5 p.m., Carpenter Auditorium, Given. Fee $10. Call 656-2292.

SPECIAL ACTIVITIES

Scottish Country Dancing, for beginners 7:30 p.m., for advanced 8 p.m., 104 & 109 Old Mill. Info call 862-2428 or 863-4107.

MEETINGS

Staff Council Mtg., 12 noon, Memorial Lounge, Waterman.

Christian Science Organization, 4:30 p.m., B102 L/L.

Wildlife Society, 7 p.m., Marsh Lounge, Billings.

22Wednesday

EXHIBITIONS

Fleming Museum – "War!" a cross-cultural viewpoint. "The Library Furniture of H.H. Richardson." "Tools & Technology."

LECTURES

"Safety & Maintenance for Your Home Heating System," with Paul Bortz, 10 a.m., Church St. Center. Free.

OTHER

Open House at Dharmadhatu, 31 Elmwood Avenue, the Burlington Center for Buddhist meditation and study. 7:30 p.m. Meditation instruction and talks on Buddhist practice as taught by the Ven. Chogyam Trungpa, Rinpoche. For more information call 658-6795.

THANKSGIVING BREAK – through Friday, November 24th. NO CLASSES.

Sports

Vermont Soccer Strikers Stifled By UConn Defense, 2-1 in OT

By Hart VanDenburg

Despite a goal by Larry Stone in the first five minutes of play, the UVM men's soccer team was unable to hold off the University of Connecticut and was handed a surprising 2-1 overtime defeat last Saturday in Storrs, Connecticut.

Although Stone's goal put the Cats in a dominating position from early on, the Vermont kickers were unable to control the game after their initial onslaught. The score came with two minutes gone on a corner kick by Brian Fleming. The ball fell into a mixed huddle of players standing just inside the UConn penalty area. UConn's defense was unable to clear the ball effectively and Stone managed to work himself into a clear shooting position. The Cat Striker took a soft shot that UConn goalie Bob Ross couldn't get to in time due to the muddle in front of him.

At this point the Cats fell apart and could not direct play or control the tempo of the match. The action was conducted at a break-neck pace with the ball zipping up and down the field at a rate that soon began to wear the players out. Both teams seemed to lack accuracy in their shooting ability. Vermont's Cam Diamandis, Zareh Avakian, and Jeff Merrill all passed up chances to score, while at the other end of the field UConn's Morrone, Comrie, Sullivan and Innocent all fired high and wide of the UVM goal. Late in the first half Vermont and UConn both appeared hurried and careless as they desperately tried to gain control of the ball.

The game was crucial to both teams since the winner would be in the best position to eventually win the Conference title. "To obtain the Yankee Conference Championship was our most meaningful goal this season; it's what we've built our program on," Vermont Coach Paul Reinhardt said after the game.

The Huskies bounced back into the game with their first goal nineteen minutes before half-time. A poorly hit shot came skidding across the dusty Vermont goalmouth. Vermont goalie Bart Farley went down to scoop up the ball, which seemed to be travelling out of danger. Then just before Farley was able to lay his hands on the ball, UConn striker Joe Morrone rushed in front of Farley from the right and deflected the ball with his foot. With Farley caught out of position and off-balance, the ball flew up into the top right corner of the goal to tie the score 1-1.

The first half drew to a nail-biting close with UVM giving its hosts a whole series of chances to score. The second half saw the chaos and tenseness escalate. Both teams sensed the chances of scoring were increasing, but the frustration that they experienced by not finding their mark only aided the already fraying tempers. Personal vendettas were being carried out on the field, and the officials often did not see some of the fouls that were being committed. Later many of the Vermont players agreed that the game had been "brutal" and "physical."

The nearest that UConn came to scoring as the half drew to a close came when Medrick Innocent worked himself free of a defensive tangle in front of the UVM goal. Innocent's ensuing shot beat goalie Farley. With the crowd going wild and the Vermont players hanging their heads in despair, the officials ruled the play as off-sides and Vermont was resurrected from the dead.

The Cats' threatening efforts were reduced to a whimper and only the efforts of Farley in goal delayed the fate that lay in store for Vermont. Farley had some stunning saves during the game, especially mid-way through the first half when he prevented a certain Huskie goal by diving full strength for a shot by Innocent and tipping it over the bar. Even the UConn crowd cheered him, some even standing up, for what appeared to be a miracle task completed.

The Vermont goalie was outfoxed by the winning goal that flew past him with just over six minutes remaining in the overtime period. The play was generated by UConn from mid-field. The ball was brought to the edge of the penalty area and then Dan Sullivan fired a shot just out of Farley's reach.

After the game, UConn coach Joe Morrone, the father of his team's leading scorer, was quick to praise the soccer Cats for their efforts. He congratulated every Vermont player personally and later said, "We didn't deserve to win." He went on to describe his team's tactics as "hoping to beat Vermont on corners." Morrone also described the Cats' lone goal as being a "result of our laziness."

Vermont coach Reinhardt took the loss in stride. When questioned about the possibility of poor officiating being a cause for his team's loss, he immediately dismissed the idea. "We had just as many unseen fouls as UConn," he reported. But he was also hiddenly critical of the methods that UConn used during the game. "After all," he said, "when you have full-backs that are six feet tall, and weigh 200 pounds, and they are brought down by players of much smaller size it makes you wonder what is going on out there."

The loss drops Vermont to 8-4-3 on the year and bumped the Cats out of a first place tie with Connecticut. Vermont is now 3-1-2 in the Conference while Rhode Island is 3-0-2 and Conn is 5-0-0. Rhode Island and UConn will meet later this week to decide the Conference title. A Rhode Island win will ensure a tie, while a Conn. win or tie will give the Huskies their fifth crown in the last five years.

In regular season end standings, Brian Fleming is tied for fourth in the New England top scorers, with seven goals and five assists in 15 games. Vermont's Bart Farley is also fourth in goalie rankings, with 197 saves and only an .87 goals per game average.

Vermont went onto face Brown in the NCAA playoffs at Providence Wednesday, November 15. Brown was seeded first, while UVM locked up the final No. 4 spot after major deliberation by the selection committee. UConn traveled to Dartmouth Wednesday also, and the winners of both matches will play for the New England Championship.

Many of the Vermont players later agreed that the game had been "brutal" and "physical".

Brown Clips Cats In NCAA Playoffs

By Steve Larose

Brown University capitalized on two early goals to effectively squash the University of Vermont men's soccer team, 3-1, in the opening round of the NCAA New England Soccer playoffs in Providence, Rhode Island Wednesday afternoon.

Brown went ahead 2-0 in the first half on what were characterized as "dink goals" by Brown's coach. In the second half Vermont played Brown evenly, but Brown added the insurance goal to make it 3-0 at the 25 minute mark of the second half. With 14 minutes remaining, Brown's goalie was injured. Shortly afterwards, Zareh Avakian fed Cam Diamandis from the top of the penalty area. Diamandis then blasted a shot into the lower left hand nets for Vermont's lone goal of the afternoon.

Brian Fleming almost scored Vermont's second goal, but his chip shot which cleared the goalie was deflected by a Brown defender. Vermont was outshot 21-13 with Vermont goalie Bart Farley snaring 10 saves.

Vermont ends its season with a 8-5-3 record, after its fourth playoff defeat in as many attempts. In other NCAA playoff action, UConn blasted Dartmouth 4-0 and Brown will now meet UConn for the NCAA New England Championship.

Top to Bottom: Zareh Avakian takes a shot; Bill Nedde in a tight spot; and Goalie Bart Farley makes a save.

50% off

Authentic Handmade

INDIAN JEWELRY

Don't miss this sale

3 DAYS ONLY

Nov. 17,18 &19

ALSO CARRY 14 kt. gold Italian Assorted Chains

HOLIDAY INN

Williston Road So Burlington

SUCCESS

Can You Share It?

Can You Buy It?

What Is It?

Examine your personal values in relation to "partying", materialism, and sexuality.

Do these values reflect your happiness, success, or both?

Look for the "Happiness-Awareness" pamphlet soon to appear.

Contributing Staff

NEWS: Sarah Bailey, Stacey Cushner, Mark Dixon, Morris Earle, Jr., Rich Hyland, Brooke Laffan

FEATURES: Barry Gustin, Nelson Hockert-Lotz, Valerie Vier

SPORTS: Randy Briggs, Rob Smith, Hart VanDerburg, Molly McRoberts, Tom Phillips, Lori Murch, Tom Cianciolo, Josh Reynolds, Dale Gates

ARTS: Tom Nuccio, Peter Wentworth, Judie Yuill, Ardith Denzer, Thomas Campbell, Scott Hammer, Pablo Conrad, Tom Daniels

ADVERTISING: Nat Foote, Dinah Minot, Anne Stires

PHOTOGRAPHY: Rick Ames, Debbie Wolk, Jim Otto, Don Cunningham, Bill Menning, Joe Curcio, Carolyn Holahan, Phil Nanas, Liz Dunn, Rob Swanson, Karen E. Salzman, Mitch Sprung, Mike Simays

LAYOUT & GRAPHICS: Lauren-Glenn Davitian, Jenny Landrey, Brooke Freeman, Rachael Love, Art Gorr, Laura Benjamin, Lisa Eaton, Carol Hills, Amy Lowry, Mellisa Ionta, Robert Giles, Mike Foss, John Reynolds, Jean Goldstein, Angelo Segarra, Liz Hemingway, Lorri Toppel

TYPIST: Libbet Cox, Karen Salzman
TYPESETTER: Sue Ball
PMT's: Jose Morelli

Vermont Cynic
University of Vermont
Burlington, VT 05401

Printed by
Upper Valley Press
Bradford, Vermont

The Vermont Cynic assumes no responsibility for unsolicited materials. All submissions are subject to the Vermont Cynic's right to edit. All unsolicited material becomes the property of the Vermont Cynic.

No part of this publication may be reproduced without the expressed written consent of the Vermont Cynic.

Subscription rate is $12 yearly.

Circulation: 10,000.

Bowling Green Wins 5-2,7-2

Falcons Snub Vermont Icemen to Open Season

By Nick Witte

The UVM hockey team opened their 1978-79 campaign on two sour notes as the Cats were crippled by the Bowling Green Falcons, losing 5-2 on Friday night and then 7-2 on Saturday night, in Bowling Green, Ohio.

Before anyone writes the Cats off, it should be noted that Bowling Green already had six games behind them. While last weekend's contests were regular season games, UVM does not start the all-important ECAC Division I schedule until the Cats meet St. Lawrence in Canton, NY November 28.

Friday night's game, though lost 5-2, was encouraging due to UVM's solid play. The Cats were never out of the match but Bowling Green exhibited more polish and was able to make most of their breaks.

Bowling Green jumped on the scoreboard early in the game as John Markell caught the UVM defense off guard at 6:34 of the first period. From that point on it was all downhill for the Cats. BG's John Gibb scored a power play goal to put BG ahead 2-0 at the close of the period. But the worst blow Bowling Green delivered in the first period was a tackle that separated freshman defenseman Chris Hodgson's shoulder.

Jim Duffy put UVM on the scoreboard early in the second period. While the Catamounts couldn't cash in on some excellent chances, the Falcons took advantage of their opportunities for two more goals in the period. Goalie Sylvain Turcotte was hardly culpable since the first of these goals was on a rebound and the second was a tip-in shot from the point.

With a 4-1 lead, the Falcons went into a defensive shell in the third period. Gary Prior fed Craig Homola for the Catamounts second and final goal. Bowling Green scored again late in the final period to ice the game.

UVM outshot the Falcons 43-36, but the bulk of the Cats' offense was routine for BG's goaltender. UVM lacked the crispness and ability to get clean, hard shots on net. Still, this performance turned out to be better than that of the following night.

Saturday night's game was very physical with the Cats on the receiving end of most of the hitting. With four goals in the second period, Bowling Green muscled their way to a 7-2 victory over UVM to complete the sweep. The Falcons' hard-hitting strategy, which proved very effective, dominated on the ice – and the scoreboard.

At the end of the first period, the score was even at 1-1, but Bowling Green was far ahead in heavy checks. The Falcons took the lead early in the period as Brian MacLellan steered a shot past Turcotte. Later MacLellan plowed into defenseman Mark Brown so hard that he required stitches. The Cats couldn't score on a five-minute power play and had to wait until Murphy scored Vermont's first goal.

Bowling Green erupted for four goals in the second period while shutting down the Catamount attack. Hodgson's replacement, freshman Dave Hungerford, sustained a shoulder separation to further deplete the UVM defensive squad. The Falcons scored early in the period on the battered Cats. But the decisive blow was a four-minute stretch in which Bowling Green stuffed in three goals.

Bowling Green racked up two more goals in the third period off Burkhardt Hoene to complete the Catamount smear. Craig Homola managed to score Vermont's second and final goal between the two Falcon goals, but BG had clearly flattened any Vermont attempts. UVM had 43 shots on the Bowling Green goal, most of which were handled easily. The Falcon offense was far more effective scoring on seven out of 24 shots.

UVM will have plenty of time to hone their attack before Ohio State comes to town over Thanksgiving. Last weekend was, hopefully, a learning experience that will prepare the Cats for their ECAC schedule. Vermont hockey has the resources, but work is necessary to maximize its potential.

Violence: A Growing Trend In Intercollegiate Hockey

By Henry Hooper Chamberlain

The growing trend of violence in college hockey was exemplified this past weekend as Bowling Green used its crippling "Western Style Hockey" to twice upend the University of Vermont hockey team, 5-2 and 7-2 at Bowling Green, Ohio.

There is a distinction between the Western and Eastern teams. The west employs a very physical, sometimes brutal brand of hockey to intimidate their opponents, while in the east, the players are big and tough, but the emphasis is on skating and puck control.

In the past, checking in all college hockey was restricted to a totally defensive role. The offense was not allowed to take players out of a play outside of their defensive zone. Any excess force resulted in mandatory penalties. This non-physical brand of hockey was entertaining to watch, but it was unable to compete with the excitement of Canadian hockey, which prepared players for the physical abuse of upper-level competition.

Within the past ten years, Division I hockey became more physical. First checking was expanded to include a team's side of the red line. Presently, a team is free to forecheck as well as backcheck. Hockey has evolved into a free-wheeling, physical event, and fans are packing league rinks.

With the new liberties, players are using more violence to get the puck. Crunching checks, occasional elbows, and upending body checks are commonplace. As happens when physical strength becomes an attribute, bigger free-swinging players who enjoy using their bodies dominate Division I hockey.

Last weekend presented a classic match-up of the western and eastern schools of hockey. Bowling Green was big and aggressive while Vermont was fast and efficient, though young with its contingent of freshmen. It was a case of whether or not Bowling Green could put it to the Cats.

The first match saw Bowling Green capitalize on their own aggressive play. As they already had six games under their belt, Bowling Green's offense was in gear to the tune of five goals. For the Cats, only two goals were scored, while numerous Catamount opportunities sailed wide. The only casualty of the night was Chris Hodgson, out with a separated shoulder.

Round two, on the next night, was a different affair. As

(continued on page 39)

Editorial Comment

Lack of J.V. a Serious Flaw In Vermont's Hockey Program

By Richard Casner

In last week's Cynic, a letter to the editor entitled "Hockey Tryouts?" by Jeff Sisitsky raised some interesting questions concerning the hockey program at UVM. Sisitsky was concerned that he was not allowed to try out for the team because he had not received the physical required for intercollegiate competition. Well, Mr. Sisitsky, I'm afraid I can't sympathize with you on that point. It is common knowledge that every student trying out for the team must have his physical forms in before he steps on the ice. To put this off to the day of the tryouts merely signifies laziness on your part. If there's one thing I've learned at college, it is that nothing gets done for you; it's up to you – and only you – to go out and get the necessary things done.

Nonetheless, Sisitsky's letter started some questions stirring in my own mind in regard to the program here at UVM. There are some faults in the current Vermont hockey program, the major one being the absence of a solid J.V. program. At last year's hockey banquet, Coach Jim Cross announced the liquidation of the J.V. team. Two reasons were given for this: the lack of money and the low level of player dedication. I find it hard to accept that money is holding back a program that, if developed properly, can only benefit the system. As to the lack of dedication, the answer can be found in the nature of the program. No one on the J.V. team of last year was willing to make large sacrifices for something that offered no reward. Upward mobility and development of strong players is what a J.V. program is all about. Most colleges and universities have such a program in which the coaches of both the varsity and J.V. team work together to develop young players who need experience. Coach Cross took little interest in the former J.V. team.

Let us look back to last season's game against Cornell; the Cats suffered a loss mainly because they ran out of good players and were forced to replace their fourth defensemen with Randy Koch. With a J.V. program to fall back on, that move would have been unnecessary.

A hockey program that involves both a varsity and a J.V. team can be used not only to make players better, but also to recruit high school players. The idea is to invite quality hockey teams from around the area to play against our J.V.'s. Coach Cross would then show up at the game and save himself a trip to the team's area. Vermont is not like B.U., where one need not go any further than South Boston. Instead, Cross must travel at great lengths to find good players – I think you could count the number of Vermonters that have played Division I hockey for UVM in recent years on your left hand. Don't misinterpret me, Cross has done a fine job, with what little time he has, recruiting for the Catamounts, but why not make it easier on himself and beef up the program at the same time with a solid, supported J.V. team. Instead of frustrating players on a fourth or fifth line on varsity, give them a chance to play and acquire the proper experience on a lower team. As it now stands, they don't have that alternative and the varsity team is the only one that suffers.

Richard Casner is a UVM student who tried out for, but did not make the Varsity Hockey team.

Above and on previous page: Photos by Huse/IDC
UVM's Sylvain Turcotte defends the nets against Boston in a contest last year.

Women Icecats Clobber Panthers

By Sarah Dougherty

The UVM women's ice hockey club opened the 78-79 season by trouncing Middlebury College 9-1 in an exhibition game last Saturday at Gutterson Field House.

Vermont clearly played a more solid and controlled game, racking up nine goals in just two periods. The two teams agreed to use third period time to practice and played a controlled scrimmage instead of a game situation.

Errant passing and scrappy goals characterized the opening period. Vermont's Ellen Gray opened the scoring at 3.59. Unable to effectively defend against its stronger skating opponents, Middlebury gave up goals to Sarah Dougherty, Margot Huber and Katie Dunbar. Middlebury scored its only goal of the game off a rebound at 7.11 of this first period.

Use of defensemen on the points enabled UVM to open up play in the second period. Middlebury was helpless, getting no shots on goal due to good forechecking by Vermont. Better communication on the ice allowed the Cats to net five goals, including three by newcomers Alix Manny, Jeanne Gaudreau, and Tammy Randall.

First year coach Andy Woolford of Middlebury commented: "We are still feeling out the talent on our team. Right now we're concentrating on the basics: skating, passing, etc... We have quite a few freshmen on the team and some good veterans back next semester which will help."

Vermont coaches Tom Kiley and Davis Fansler were pleased with their squad's showing. The team played "good position hockey," according to Fansler. "When the team gets in shape and hustles, then we'll play all better."

The Women's Ice Hockey Club has 20 games scheduled for this season including a January tournament at the University of New Hampshire. The Women's Ice Hockey team's next home game is against Dartmouth on November 18th. Game time is 5:30 p.m.

Hockey Violence

Continued from previous page

it became apparent that the Cats could skate with Bowling Green, the "western style" of hockey was used. Bowling Green wailed on the Cats with repeated crunching checks. Cat players were lined up for heavy checks accompanied by an assortment of loose elbows. Bowling Green's rationale for the violence was to wear down and intimidate the opponent, then worry about the puck.

Within the first minute, Bowling Green's Mike Cotter threw a blatant elbow for a penalty. No problem, the Cats would now be worrying about the cheap shots ahead as they handled the puck. A little later, a free-wheeler by the name of McFellan unloaded an amazing boarding sequence against UVM's Mark Brown. Brown needed stitches, while McFellan got a five minute penalty for his flagrance. Later in the second period of play, freshman Dave Hungerford received a separated shoulder from another hard Bowling Green check. The Cats were beaten to a 7-2 loss.

What Bowling Green had shown was their need for punishing physical play to compensate for their lesser hockey skills. The violence, and its effect of breaking up the flow of play, is not enjoyed by fans of good hockey. Fans want fast-paced, aggressive hockey with some puck handling. The violence takes away from hockey, and while closer officiating would help, the reality is that the east skates, the west hits, and the fans love it.

Wanna be Sports Editor? Drop by the Cynic

beer wine

THE ONLY

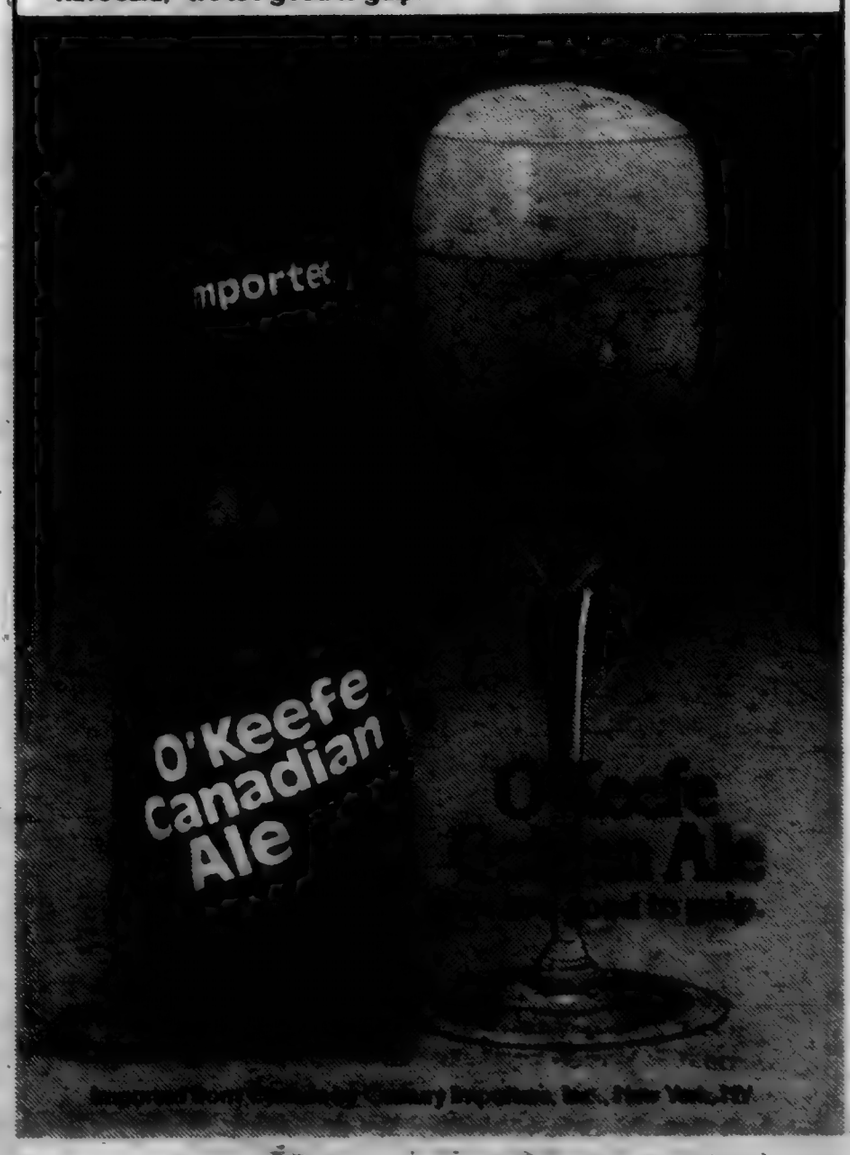
BEVERAGE WAREHOUSE

IS IN WINOOSKI

Lowest Prices Largest Selection

kegs soda

THE APPALACHIAN GAP



20% Off Levi's

Village Sq. Waitsfield Langdon St. Mont. College St. Burlington

Would Newton gravitate toward O'Keefe?

Like the apple gravitated toward Newton.
You see, Newton was the beneficiary of a bump of enlightenment. Undoubtedly, he would have been amenable to other enlightening stimuli. For example, the hearty, full-bodied flavor of O'Keefe. The smooth and easy swallow. The fascinating, long-lasting head. As thousands of others after him, it is only logical that he would have said, "It's too good to gulp."

SPORTS PHONE!

Dial New York direct for national scores and features!

| | 1st Min. | Add'l Min. |
|---|---|---|
| Mon.-Fri. 8a.m.-5p.m. | 46¢ | 32¢ |
| Sun.-Fri. 5p.m.-11p.m. | 29¢ | 21¢ |
| Sun.-Fri. 11p.m.-8a.m. | 18¢ | 13¢ |
| All Day Sat. | 18¢ | 13¢ |
| Sun. 8a.m.-5p.m. | 18¢ | 13¢ |

Tax not included

SPORTSPHONE is a service mark of Phone Programs, Inc.

1-212-999-1313

New England Telephone

Smugglers' Notch

1st Annual

WELCOME TO WINTER BASH

at the Village Sat., Nov. 18th 8p.m. -1a.m.

featuring :

Music by DOWNPOUR

PASS HOLDER'S HAPPY HOUR

raffle for new pr. K2 SKIS

Ski Films

Dance Contest:

1st Prize: Season Pass
2nd: Weekend at the Village with meals
3rd & 4th: Bash Badges

Season Passes & Bash Badges on sale at door
$1.00 cover charge for non-Pass/Badge holders call 644-8851 for more information

TPI EXPRESS

24 MAIN ST. WINOOSKI

655-3005 655-0977

... FAST, FREE DELIVERY!

also 23 Park St. Essex Jct. 879-6333

In-House Pitchers of Draft only 50¢

with purchase of a large pizza

Fresh Whole Wheat Pizza upon request

Inexperience Rules Vermont Volleyball; UConn, Springfield Come Away Victorious

By Rich Chalmers

The University of Connecticut and Springfield defeated the UVM women's volleyball squad 15-10, 15-7, 15-1, and 15-4 respectively last Thursday. The Catamount's erratic efforts showed good serving but a lack of crucial defensive skills.

Vermont opponents were scrambling well, blocking Catamount hits and making powerful offensive blasts which the inexperienced Vermont squad was unable to combat.

"Springfield is a very strong team," said Coach Cathy Schiller. "They placed third in the URI tournament, which hosts a number of really tough teams."

Schiller pointed to Vermont's serious lack of experience as a reason for the Cats' disappointing 6-22 season. "Seven of the 12 team-members have never played collegiate volleyball before," explained Schiller. "You can see flashes in which the women play very well and show a lot of potential, but it hasn't stabilized."

"Every team we have played has been taller than us," Schiller continued. "I know there are tall women on campus because I've seen them. But they aren't going out for volleyball."

Schiller also stressed scheduling as an important factor in the team's level of success this season. "We're going to have to revise our schedule. If you consistently end up with a losing season there's something wrong. I would like to get us into a group where we could at least break .500. Frankly, we're out of our league. When you don't have scholarship players, academics are more important to the team. Our location is another problem. We have to drive three hours to find good competition when many of the teams we are now playing only have to travel for half an hour."

Vermont Volleyball spikes earlier this year. Photo by Huse/IDC

"Overall it's been a discouraging season if you look only at the record," admitted the coach. "But the players have made some great improvements. We started the season, for example, with no serving skills. Now our serving is consistently good. We also aren't afraid to hit the ball like we were in the beginning. Next year should hold a lot of improvement."

Women Swimmers Surprise Mass

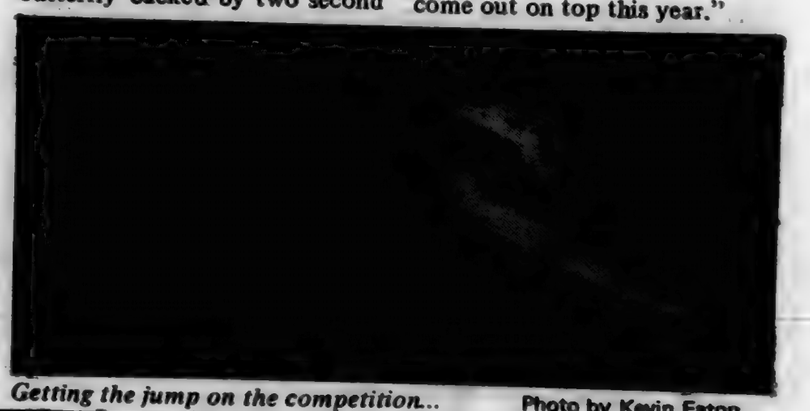
By Rich Chalmers

The UVM women's swim team dominated the University of Massachusetts for the whole meet as the Cats came away with a surprising 69-62 victory last Saturday at Forbush pool after earlier losses to Middlebury (65-66) and UNH (46-85).

"The meet against Middlebury was one of those meets that could have gone either way," commented Coach Sandra Farrell. "We swam really well and came very close to taking the meet."

Adrienne David was one of Vermont's most successful swimmers, grabbing firsts in the 50 and 100 yard butterfly as well as second place in the 50 yard free style event.



Linda Hill swam impressively, grabbing first in the 100 yard individual medley with a time of 1:11.75 and first in the 500 yard freestyle in 6:08.3.

David again had a good day against UNH, capturing second in the 100 yard butterfly and first in both the 50 yard freestyle and the 50 yard butterfly. Joyce Bates grabbed first in the 200 yard freestyle and Cathlene Leahy raced to first in the 100 yard breast stroke.

The team reached its peak against UMass, coming away with an inspired 60-62 victory. "Our win against UMass was a pleasant surprise," explained Farrell. "They beat us last year, so I didn't figure we would beat them. But we swam exceptionally well."

Vermonters Kim Brown, Leahy, Tracy Stewart and David combined to grab first in the 200 yard medley relay in 2:04.8. Stewart went on to win the 100 yard backstroke and the 50 yard butterfly backed by two second places by Joyce Bates in the 500 and 200 yard freestyle races. Sarah Moore won the meter required diving competition with 129 points and the optional diving with a score of 183.55. Jenny Bunker, Molly Mason, Bates and David also combined to take the 200 yard freestyle relay with a time of 1:50.4.

"After what I saw against UMass, we should be a lot stronger than we might have thought before," said Farrell. "It was a good team effort. Middlebury proved that even with good individual top scores, we will need a lot of depth to come out on top this year."

Getting the jump on the competition... Photo by Kevin Eaton

Sports This Week

| SPORT | DATE | OPPONENT | PLACE– TIME |
|---|---|---|---|
| Synchronized Swim | Nov. 17-19 | International Academy of Aquatic Art – Eastern Symposium | Forbush Pool |
| Women's Cross Country | Nov. 18 | at AIAW Nationals | |
| Men's Hockey | Nov. 24-25 | Ohio State | 7:30 p.m. |
| Women's Basketball | Nov. 29 | at Boston University | 7:30 p.m. |
| Men's Basketball | Nov. 29 | Plattsburgh St. | 7:30 p.m. |
| Women's Gym | Nov. 28 | at Plymouth State | 6:30 p.m. |

Bobby Orr: Knee Injuries End A Legendary Career

By Rob Smith

"Maple Leafs 1 – Bruins 1. Five minutes left to play in the game. Boston defenseman Bobby Orr collects the puck behind the net and starts slowly up the ice. As he reaches the Bruin blueline he sees that the Leafs are charging on the fly. He immediately turns on the jets, avoids a Dave Keon check and sees teammate Derek Sanderson streaking down the left wing. He fakes a shot at the net, and then as he slides a perfect past to Sanderson, Toronto defenseman Rick Ley crashes Orr into the boards. The crowd silences as Orr lies deathlike on the ice. They had all seen this terrible sight before and wonder if it could possibly be another knee injury. Bobby, grimacing in pain, gives them the answer they feared most. Lying on his side, he aimlessly reaches for his left leg... and grabs his knee."

The story I've just depicted is familiar to anyone who follows sports, and in particular pro hockey. To all football, basketball and hockey players, the ability to avoid serious knee injuries often determines the extent of their success. Such great athletes as Joe Namath and Gayle Sayers have had their careers shortened because of damaging knee injuries. And last Wednesday, the greatest defenseman in NHL history, Bobby Orr, was forced to retire at the young age of 30 because of the irreversible damage his left knee had suffered over the last 12 years in the NHL.

"It was Orr who brought to hockey the perfect blend of speed, stick handling and defensive prowess, unmatched by anyone previously in the NHL."

With Orr's retirement comes the end of a legend. It was Bobby Orr who brought to hockey the perfect blend of speed, stick handling and defensive prowess, unmatched by anyone previously in the NHL. Others tried to copy Orr, and some succeeded (most notably Brad Park and Denis Potuin) to play with the deftness and speed of "Vintage Orr." But as good as these defensemen became, Bobby was still the standard by which all others were compared. Never before had defensemen been known as offensive threats until Orr came on the scene in 1966 at the tender age of 18. His ability to rush the puck up the ice with the grace of a Jean Beliveau and the speed of a Yuan Connoyer brought a whole new dimension to the game of hockey. For 10 years with Boston and a short stint with Chicago, Orr's presence on the ice brought to his teams the offensive threat of a fourth forward, combined with uncanny defensive instincts which usually held opponents at bay. But after six operations in ten years on his left knee, Orr's ability to skate with the quickness and grace which had so often left opposing forwards skating in circles was gone.

Thus, with tears in his eyes, Bobby Orr, the three-time league MVP and first defenseman to ever win an NHL scoring championship, announced that his sixth comeback and his career as an active player, were over. "Before the season I saw I could not do some of the things I wanted to do. But I was concerned about what I could contribute to the team. I worked hard, but I now know for sure that my leg cannot handle playing," Orr stated Wednesday as reported by the Associated Press.

Bobby Orr's personal achievements become even more impressive when one remembers that in only two of Orr's twelve seasons did he play in every game. In his rookie season (1966-67), Orr compiled 41 points, was named Rookie of the Year, and was chosen to the second All-Star Team. From 1968 through 1975, Orr was named the league's outstanding defenseman and was awarded the Hart trophy as the league's Most Valuable Player in 1970 through 1972. He led the NHL in scoring in both 1970 with 120 points and in 1975 with 135 points, the most points ever achieved by a defenseman. In 1971 he compiled an incredible total of 102 assists in a season which lasts only 76 games. These 102 assists constitute only one of the 12 NHL records which Bobby Orr holds or shares individually.

By the time he was 22 years old, Orr had achieved all the goals every hockey player dreams of. He led his team to their first Stanley Cup in 29 years in 1970, had been chosen to the All Star team three times, been selected the league MVP and had become the first defenseman in NHL history to win a scoring title. Even with all this glory, Mr. Orr remained a humble, private man who spent as much of his free time as possible either hunting or fishing in order to stay out of the limelight. He obtained little satisfaction from the glorification the press endowed upon him,

(continued on page 43)

Doolin's

Soups & Stews Salads Sandwiches

SERVING FOOD 'TILL 11:00 PM

159 Main St. – Next to the Flynn

For YOUR Convenience we're extending HOURS!

The Burlington Savings Bank is pleased to announce that new hours are now in effect.

Check below for your local branch.

| | MONDAY - THURSDAY | FRIDAY |
|---|---|---|
| MAIN OFFICE (Burlington) | | |
| Lobby | 9:00 am - 3:00 pm | 9:00 am - 6:00 pm |
| CHURCH STREET | | |
| Lobby | 9:30 am - 6:00 pm | 9:30 am - 6:00 pm |
| NORTH AVENUE | | |
| Lobby | 9:00 am - 3:00 pm | 9:00 am - 6:00 pm |
| Walk-up | 8:30 am - 9:00 am3:00 pm - 5:30 pm | 8:30 am - 9:00 am |
| WINOOSKI | | |
| Lobby | 9:00 am - 3:00 pm | 9:00 am - 6:00 pm |
| Drive-up | 8:00 am - 6:00 pm | 8:00 am - 6:00 pm |
| ESSEX JUNCTION | | |
| Lobby | 9:00 am - 3:00 pm | 9:00 am - 6:00 pm |
| Drive-up | 8:00 am - 6:00 pm | 8:00 am - 6:00 pm |
| SO. BURLINGTON (Shelburne Rd.) | | |
| Lobby | 9:00 am - 3:00 pm | 9:00 am - 6:00 pm |
| Drive-up | 8:00 am - 6:00 pm | 8:00 am - 6:00 pm |
| PINE STREET | | |
| Walk-up | 8:00 am - 6:00 pm | 8:00 am - 6:00 pm |
| Drive-up | 8:00 am - 6:00 pm | 8:00 am - 6:00 pm |
| ST. ALBANS | | |
| Lobby | 9:00 am - 3:00 pm | 9:00 am - 6:00 pm |
| Drive-up | 8:00 am - 6:00 pm | 8:00 am - 6:00 pm |

PLUS...24-hour Automatic Teller Machine Service EVERY Day

Burlington Savings Bank

Main Office 658-1810

Call free from any Vt. telephone 1-800-642-5154

Member FDIC

See Our
Superb Selection

SKI WEAR
SPORTSWEAR
SKI EQUIPMENT

SKI PARKAS $35-$175

by Roffe, Gerry, Bogner, Alpine Design, Comfy, Ski Levi, White Stag, Head, C.B. Sports, Profile, Cevas, Woolrich, Beconta.

SKI SWEATERS $20-$86

by Vermont Originals, Stowe Woolen Weavers, Meister, Demetre, Lido, Sportif, Irish Hand Knits, Icelandic Imports, Beconta, Bogner, Head, Knut and Knut.

SKI VESTS $27.50-$100

by Bogner, Roffe, Skyr, Woolrich, Beconta, Gerry, Alpine Design, Head, C.B. Sports, Ski Levi.

SLACKS.
SKIRTS-DRESSES $18-$70

by Glen of Michigan, Leap, John Meyer, Lanz, Point of View, Cos Cob, Gordon, J.B.J., Garland.

LANZ SLEEPWEAR $16-$38

Pajamas, Nities, Robes

SKIS $21-$278

by K2, Dynastar, Trak, Jarvinen, Karhu, Rossignol, Olin, Hexcel , Head, Kastle, Yamaha, Elan, Kneissl, Fischer, A&T, Hart.

SKI BOOTS $37-$235

by Garmont, Nordica, Dolomite, Hanson, Raichle, Lange, Technica, A&T.

ALPINE SHOP

Williston Road
So. Burlington

OPEN DAILY
9 A.M. — 9 P.M.

Corner of So. Winooski and Cherry Downtown Burlington

Sports Profile

Brian Fleming: Added Spice on the Soccer Cat Offense

By Randy Brigge

The UVM men's soccer team has relied on its strong defense and superb goal tending for success this season. Although the Catamount offense has not been as explosive as in past years, it has come up with the clutch goals at the crucial moments. The play of junior midfielder Brian Fleming has typified this opportunism.

Fleming, a native of Essex Junction, Vt., has played soccer since sixth grade, including four years of high school varsity play with former UVM stars Geoff Greig and Carl Christensen. His excellent high school training enabled him to jump right into the Vermont program where he has had a great deal of success.

The lack of Vermont's scoring punch this season forced Fleming to take a more offensive role than before, resulting in seven goals and four assists. These impressive statistics have enabled Fleming to be near the top of the Yankee Conference scoring race. "I felt more pressure this year to score. I also realized that the scoring would have to be balanced this year," Fleming remarked. The Cats have achieved this balance: Stone and Fleming each scored seven goals and Zareh Avakian five.

Fleming's forte is his extreme quickness and hustle. "My determination makes up for my lack of size and skill deficiencies," said Fleming. "Staying healthy has also been important. I've been fortunate."

"I've really worked on my dribbling," he added, stressing the importance of hard practice. "My shot is also improving, because I've been working on that more this year."

"My determination makes up for my lack of size and skill deficiencies."
—Brian Fleming

Fleming is extremely pleased with the way the team has been performing. "It has been my most satisfying season. We have a great bunch of guys who all work together really well," he explained. "Bart Farley and Danny Bryant are our only stars. Last year's team had more talent, but this year's team has a better sense of spirit and togetherness."

Fleming recognizes the fact that Vermont lost a few games this season that should have appeared in the win column: "The Plattsburgh State game was a fluke. We completely dominated them" noted Fleming. "Against Bridgeport we played a man down for seventy minutes and only lost by one goal. This shows that with such an outstanding defense we will never be out of a game."

Fleming is pleased with the important role that the freshmen have played this year. "Bill Nedde has had a super season. He's a real battler and hustler out there," said Fleming. "He has been a pleasant surprise." The quick improvement of freshman forward Cam Diamandis has also been an important factor in Vermont's success. The solid reserve strength of Flint Willey and Fred Ward has given the Cats the best bench in New England.

Many fans have criticized the Vermont offense for trying to finesse too much, instead of shooting the ball when they get in reasonable scoring range. "I agree," answered Fleming. "It's easy to say that from the stands, but on the field it's a different story. We don't have any really accurate shooters so we have to hold on and arrange for as good a shot as we can."

Fleming likes the competitive aspect of soccer and feels that inner team competition brings out the best in the squad as a whole. Fleming is hoping that Vermont's best will be good enough to host a first round NCAA playoff game next year. "I also want to play in the finals of the New England Championships before I graduate," he added.

According to Fleming, a member of the Campus Crusade for Christ, his belief in God is instrumental in his soccer performances. "I'm a Christian athlete. What pushes me is that I'm playing for the glory of God. I used to be nervous before games but not anymore. If I had a bad game I always used to be in a bad mood for a long while after the game was over. Winning is important, but if I give 100% out on the field I know God will be happy."

If Fleming continues to supply the mature leadership that he portrays on the soccer field, his goal of a New England Championship for Vermont might possibly become a reality.

Peabody & Berry Named Field Hockey All-Stars

By Steven Larose

Field hockey team members Linda Peabody and Alice Berry were selected to compete on the Northeast All-Star Field Hockey team as a result of their standout play at the Northeast Tournament, held last weekend in Orono, Maine.

Peabody and Berry will travel to Boston this weekend to try out for the All-Star team, which actually has four squads, the top three competing in the National tournament to be held at Central Washington University after Thanksgiving.

Peabody scored two goals to lead the 'B College Division' team to a 5-1 romp over the 'A Division' first team in the opening round of the Northeast Tournament. Berry also played on the first team, which tied the Hampshire first team, 1-1. The Vermonter's team dominated in this contest, and the two UVM'ers were selected afterwards. Berry played on the Northeast's third team in the Nationals last year, while this will be the first year in National competition for Peabody.

Vermont's Lisa Fernandez competed on the 'B Division' second team, which defeated its 'A Division' counterpart 1-0 but lost to Boston, 2-0 and Stuyvesant, 2-0. Amy Perkins and Alison Barber were part of a winning third team, who whipped Nutmeg 4-0, Mohawk, 3-1, and Maine, 3-0. Chris Benoit rounded out the Vermont representation by competing on the fourth team, which tied with 'A Division's' fourth team, 1-1 and won 2-1 over Stuyvesant. The Fourth team also played New Hampshire's second team and was defeated 3-1.

Vermont Coach Janice Lange later remarked "Linda (Peabody) and Alice (Berry) did really well to be selected for the All-Star team and they have a good chance to compete in the Nationals."

Vermont finished the regular season with a 10-1-1 record, and had two wins and a tie in the post season tournament. Peabody set a record by scoring 26 goals, shattering the old mark of 10 in a season.

Conditioning to be Key in Women's Gymnastics Season

By Molly McRoberts

Bouncing back from a 19th place finish in last year's Eastern League rankings, the UVM's women's gymnastics team will open its full season on Tuesday, November 18 at Plymouth State.

"We expect to win this meet," said Coach Debby Kosciusko, who is starting her first full year as coach, after a half-year last season. "Thirty people showed interest in joining the team in September, and the ones who have stuck with it are dedicated. It's a small team that works well together, and I feel like I'm getting a lot accomplished as far as coaching goes." Coach Kosciusko, who recently underwent leg surgery, commented, "It was a good feeling to see how the team pulled together while I was out. Everyone was helping each other."

The women's gymnastics team has been concentrating heavily on conditioning during their practice sessions. There have been some injuries, yet Coach Kosciusko hopes for a strong season as a result of the emphasis on conditioning. Vermont will travel to the Cornell Invitational on December 2, and according to Coach Kosciusko, "Once we've participated in the invitational against different schools, that's the time when we should be set up for the season. We have a lot of freshmen who really help the team depth. Gabriel Forgays is one of our strong all-around freshmen. They are all learning how to discipline their time, in and out of practice."

"The upperclassmen are consistent," Kosciusko continued, "and have the experience behind them. One strong hold from last year is Ann Barry, a junior, who qualified for the Eastern Regionals last year." "This year we'd like to go as a team," added Kosciusko. "We have Chris Costello and Lisa Duff, who are both talented." Co-captain Kim Chugg is presently student teaching, but will compete when she returns.

The Vermont women gymnasts performed an exhibition at this year's Oktoberfest, and they will perform a one hour exhibition at Winooski High School this Thursday.

"It should be a challenging season, with ten meets in all. The girls enjoy the satisfaction of working together as a team," said Kosciusko.

Bobby Orr

continued from page 41

preferring to see his team and not himself applauded for the success which the Bruins attained during Orr's healthy years. Confirming Orr's humility and team leadership, former Bruin coach Harry Sinder stated, "He didn't have any interests except the welfare of his team and his teammates. He took the whole load on his shoulders. At times he hated the press because they criticized his teammates – not him, his team." Orr's concern for his team's success overshadowed his need for personal accomplishments. It was this attitude that gained him the respect of all players and coaches throughout the NHL.

Bobby Orr is sure to go down in sports history as not only the greatest overall defenseman to play the game, but also the most innovative. His unique ability to "wheel" around opponents with the greatest of ease, along with his awesome full rink rushes changed the whole outlook of coaches, players and fans concerning the role a defenseman should play in a team's offense. His impact on hockey can be witnessed today in the styles of defensemen like Dennis Potuin and Larry Robinson, and it surely will be present in the future when coaches and fans alike compare their favorites to the man who could do everything with excellence – Bobby Orr.

GO CRAZY!!

TUESDAYS 25¢ Drafts
$1.00 Mixed Drinks

WEDNESDAYS LADIES NIGHT
25¢ DRAFTS
50¢ MIXED DRINKS

THURSDAY
ROCK OUT
TO Rock N' Roll
5¢ DRAFTS 8-9
10¢ Drafts 9-10
15¢ Drafts 10-11
20¢ Drafts 11-12
25¢ Drafts 12-2

HAROLD J's
165 Church St.
Burlington, Vt.

THE FACTS:

1 HUNDREDS OF THOUSANDS OF WOMEN USE ENCARE OVAL.

Encare Oval™ was introduced to American doctors in November 1977. Almost immediately, it attracted widespread physician and patient attention.

Today, Encare Oval is being used by hundreds of thousands of women, and users surveyed report overwhelming satisfaction. Women using Encare Oval say they find it an answer to their problems with the pill, IUD's, diaphragms, and aerosol foams.

2 EFFECTIVENESS ESTABLISHED IN CLINICAL TESTS.

Encare Oval™ was subjected to one of the most rigorous tests ever conducted for a vaginal contraceptive. Results were excellent—showing that Encare Oval provides consistent and extremely high sperm-killing protection. This recent U.S. report supports earlier studies in European laboratories and clinics.

Each Encare Oval insert contains a precise, premeasured dose of the potent, sperm-killing agent nonoxynol 9. Once properly inserted, Encare Oval melts and gently effervesces, dispersing the sperm-killing agent within the vagina.

The success of any contraceptive method depends on consistent and accurate use. Encare Oval™ is so convenient you won't be tempted to forget it. And so simple to insert, it's hard to make a mistake.

If pregnancy poses a special risk for you, your contraceptive method should be selected after consultation with your doctor.

3 NO HORMONAL SIDE EFFECTS.

Encare Oval™ is free of hormones, so it cannot create hormone-related health problems—like strokes and heart attacks—that have been linked to the pill. And, there is no hormonal disruption of your menstrual cycle.

Most people find Encare Oval completely satisfactory. In a limited number of cases, however, burning or irritation has been experienced by either or both partners. If this occurs, use should be discontinued.

4 EASIER TO INSERT THAN A TAMPON.

The Encare Oval™ is smooth and small, so it inserts quickly and easily—without an applicator. There's none of the bother of aerosol foams and diaphragms. No device inside you. No pill to remember every day. Simply use as directed when you need protection.

You can buy Encare Oval whenever you need it...it's available without a prescription. And each Encare Oval is individually wrapped to fit discreetly into your pocket or purse.

5 BECAUSE ENCARE OVAL IS INSERTED IN ADVANCE, IT WON'T INTERRUPT LOVEMAKING.

Since there's no mess or bother, Encare Oval gives you a measure of freedom many contraceptives can't match.

The hormone-free Encare Oval. Safer for your system than the pill or IUD. Neater and simpler than traditional vaginal contraceptives. So effective and easy to use that hundreds of thousands have already found it—quite simply—the preferred contraceptive.

©1978 Eaton-Merz Laboratories, Inc.
Norwich, New York 13815 - EA 1617

The most talked about contraceptive since the pill.

United Way All Campus Party

at

Delta Psi Fraternity, 61 Summit St.

Friday November 17th

Mixed Drinks
25 Kegs
Starting at 8:30 p.m.

Donation $1.00
All Proceeds Benfit United Way

Coming to SUNDANCE
Friday Nov. 17 9:30 AM to 9:00 PM
SATURDAY Nov. 18 9:30 AM to 5:30 PM

SPECIAL EXHIBIT AND

SALE!

OF INDIAN JEWELRY BY THUNDERBIRD INTERNATIONAL

A large and distinctive collection of unusual American Indian Pieces. Select now for Christmas giving.

SUNDANCE
A Heritage of American Crafts
CHURCH ST. (Across from Woolworths) Burlington

National Sports Briefs

Louis Tiant Signs with Yankees

Louis Tiant signed with the New York Yankees late Tuesday. Boston's captain Carl Yastrizemski was upset. George Scott was shocked. Tiant was adamant.

"I didn't want to go into the draft," he explained. "They made me go. The way they treated me was not fair. After all the years I pitched for them they did not treat me fair."

Mets Offer Rose $1.5 Million

The New York Mets offered former Cincinnati Reds outfielder Pete Rose $1.5 million early this week as one of the twelve clubs interested in signing Rose on for the 1979 season. "I've had conversations with almost every one of those clubs and no one has eliminated themselves yet," commented Reuven Katz, Rose's attorney. Mets Manager Joe McDonald said he was dead serious about the offer.

Rose listed eight teams he would like to play with, including the Boston Red Sox, who did not draft him. The Mets were not on Rose's list, but the $1.5 million is expected to keep them in the running.

Rose is presently on tour in Japan with the Reds.

Sparky Lyle Traded to Texas

The New York Yankees and the Texas Rangers concluded a ten player deal last week in which N.Y. gave the 1977 Cy Young Award winner Sparky Lyle in exchange for Ranger pitcher Dave Righetti.

The Yankees also handed over catcher Mike Heath, pitchers Larry McCall and Dave Rajsich, utility outfielder Dimingo Ramos and an undisclosed sum of money. Ranger centerfielder Juan Beniquez, outfielder Greg Jemison and pitchers Paul Mirabella and Mike Griffin will go to N.Y.

Lyle, unhappy with the way he was used this past season, was elated with the trade. "Sparky seemed elated," said Yankee president Al Rosen. "He hopes they work his butt off. That's what he wants. He is one of the greatest left-handed relief pitchers the game has ever known."

"We're in love with Righetti," added Rosen. "He's a left-handed power pitcher and we've had great reports on him. One of our scouts said he thinks he's another Ron Guidry. I don't think that's possible, but it's nice to know he's considered in that class."

Wounded Runner Finishes Marathon

Dennis Rainear was shot in the head while running in the Grand Valley Marathon in Michigan earlier this month. Nonetheless, he finished the race in three hours and nine minutes. Police are unsure who shot Rainear, who ran 16 miles with the bullet lodged in his head.

Will Cloney, director of the Boston Marathon, sent him a special invitation to enter that race. Rainear accepted the offer and will be one of many competing in Boston on St. Patrick's Day.

Holmes Holds on to WBC Title

Larry Holmes held on to the World Boxing Council heavyweight championship last Friday, knocking out Spanish Alfredo Evangelista with a right to the jaw at 2:14 into the seventh round.

Holmes' jabs landed hard and accurately while there was little Evangelista could do but back away and try to block the stabs. It was a one-sided bout, with Evangelista never gaining enough control for his punches to have any serious effect.

Evert Explains Four Month Vacation

Two time Wimbleton champion Chris Evert commented on her four month vacation from the pro tennis circuit earlier this year, saying emotional problems became too much for her and she needed a break.

"I was crying two or three times a day for no reason," explained Evert. "I couldn't help it. There were a couple of times when I almost cried on court, and it hit me: 'Chrissie, you're not yourself.' I had to take time off."

"Maybe I was winning too much," she added. "Night after night, it was just too much of a strain to get psyched up like that. It wasn't just four months since I turned pro, it was four years! My personal life was repressed and everything else was pushed aside — meaning people, my family, and friends."

Ivery Sets NCAA Rushing Record

Georgia Tech's tailback Eddie Lee Ivery set an NCAA single game rushing record last Saturday, charging for 356 yards in a 42-21 Georgia romp over Air Force in 25 mile an hour winds and light snow.

Ivery broke for 75, 80, and 57 yard touchdown plays to match the record away from Michigan State's Eric Allen who rushed 350 yards in one game in 1971. The six foot, 200 pound senior holds the school's career rushing lead with 1300 yards this season. Ivery attributed much of his success to excellent blocking by the offensive line.

"I USED TO HAVE VISIONS OF A LESS FILLING BEER. I ALSO HAD VISIONS OF GETTING RESPECT. OH WELL, 1 OUT OF 2 AIN'T BAD."

Rodney Dangerfield
Famous Comedian

LITE BEER FROM MILLER.
EVERYTHING YOU ALWAYS WANTED IN A BEER. AND LESS.

©1978 Miller Brewing Co., Milwaukee, Wis.

Random Notes

Career Hunting

The following employment interviews will be held in the Career Planning Office, 322 S. Prospect Street during the week of December 4-8. Sign up for these companies on November 27, 28, 29 at 109 S. Prospect.

Peace Corps & Vista, Boston, MA. Seeks Bachelor level Engineers, Sciences, Agriculture, Education, Liberal Arts. Positions: 2 year volunteer overseas in 62 different countries — Peace Corps. 1 year volunteer positions in U.S. (50) Vista. All students must be seniors for a personal interview. Information Booth will be available also, in the Billings Center for other interested students. Pick up application to be filled out in advance of your interview.

Dept. Navy, Civilian Personnel Service, Arlington, VA. Seeks BS/MS EE, ME. Positions: Project engineering, program mgmt, logistics engrg, R&D, Test & Evaluation.

U.S. Army Material Development & Readiness Command, Philadelphia, Pa. Seeks BS in EE, ME, IE, Chem. E. Positions: Quality Assurance & Reliability Engrg, Prod. Engrg, Maintainability Engrg, Safety Engrg. See CPP for more detailed information.

New England Telephone & Bell Laboratories, Boston, MA. NE Tel. Seeks BS/MS EE, ME, CE, Math, Comp Sci. Positions: Applications/Implementation Engrg leading to Gen Mgmt. High GPA, leadership ability. Bell Labs: Seeks BS/MS EE with interest in systems engrg, etc., Comp. Sci for hard and software, Operations Research & Mechanical Engrg (physical design). Transcripts required for interview. BS Degrees must be grad school qualified. See CPP for more information.

P.F. Jurgs, CPA, Burlington. Seeks BS in Accounting. Positions: Entry level accounting. Resumes and TR for interviews.

GRADUATE SCHOOLS — Boston University School of Public Communication. SUNY at Albany School of Graduate Studies.

Camera Workshop

Learn how to protect your photographic investment. The Living/Learning Center Photography Program is sponsoring a Camera Care Workshop this Sunday, November 19th at 3 p.m. in the L/LC Fireplace Lounge.

Paul Morneau, senior camera repairman from Wilson Photo Finishing, will give a workshop on camera care including segments on camera functions and everyday camera maintenance. Also discussed will be what to do if your camera goes on the blink and ways to take better pictures using your camera. But the best medicine is prevention, and the lecture will center on the simple things you can do to protect your camera and improve the quality of your pictures. Morneau will also answer any questions you might have on cameras or photography in general.

The locture is free and open to the public. Members of the L/LC Photography Program, which acts as a resource for anyone interested in photography, will also be on hand to answer any questions or discuss photographic techniques. The Photo Program is located in L/LC E-230, 240, 250, telephone 656-4266.

Disco Dance

On Friday, November 17th the Gay Student Union of the University of Vermont will hold its monthly Disco Dance. The dance will be held in Round Room of Billings Center from 10 p.m. — 2 a.m. Admission is $1.50. Soda and chips will be served. Everyone is invited to attend.

GSU general meeting will be held on Sunday, November 19 in the Marsh Lounge of Billings Center at 7 p.m. Everyone is invited to attend.

Blood Pressure

Take five minutes and have your blood pressure checked! Blood pressure readings are a quick and reliable way to check your health status. Are you a smoker? Do you exercise regularly? Does someone in your family have high blood pressure? How do you handle stress? Your answers to these few questions could effect your blood pressure.

The Student Health Advisory Group will be running three blood pressure screening sites on Friday, November 17, from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. The screening clinics are open to students, staff, and faculty and are free. They will be located in the Living/Learning Fireplace Lounge, Bailey Library, and Billings North Lounge. Stop by between classes, on your way to lunch, or anytime, and find out about your blood pressure.

Scholarship Search

It was announced today that college students may now get virtually all scholarship sources available to them from participating in the computerized search service of R.E.A.D.S., a college-service company. (R.E.A.D.S. sponsored the 1976 Collegiate Bike-centennial).

Steve Danz, Program Director, stated that the service would give each student only those sources for which the student is personally qualified, thus saving hours of leafing through literally thousands of scholarship sources. Danz noted that this program is currently in the set-up stage with computer programming in progress. Students who agree to participate by filling out the search questionnaire will be given the program "at cost" for $15 while the program is still being developed. (He estimates regular cost after this school term to be $35.) The company guarantees each student at least $100 in aid.

Students (grads, undergrads) wishing to participate in the program should send $15 and a stamped self-addressed envelope to Scholarship Bank, 10100 Santa Monica 750, Los Angeles, CA 90067.

Africa Work/ Study

During the past 21 years, Operation Crossroads Africa, Inc., a non-profit organization focusing on international development and educational exchange, has sent more than 5000 volunteers (students, professionals, and others) to 34 English-speaking and French-speaking African countries to spend their summers helping rural village communities. Projects involve art, oral history, and archaeology; ethno-musicology; agricultural development; tutoring; public health and medicine; journalism and media development; and construction of schools, clinics, and needed community facilities.

This unusual experience provides a brief but intense immersion in traditional and modern African life and pushes individuals to re-consider basic attitudes, standards, and beliefs in relation to people with contrasting values and life-styles. Most volunteers arrange to receive academic credit for their summer experience, and many find that they are helped into professional careers in international relations, higher education and business.

Persons interested in participating in Crossroads' Summer 1979 Work/Travel/ Study Program must apply immediately. Contact Crossroads Africa, Inc., 150 5th Ave., New York, NY 10011 (212-242-8550).

Educational Toys

The Fleming Museum is the recipient of a $54,400 grant from the National Endowment for the Humanities for an exhibit on the History of Educational Toys. The grant will be administered by Karen Hewitt and Louise Roomet, who last year received a grant from the Endowment to plan the coming exhibition.

Ms. Hewitt and Roomet would like to borrow for the Exhibition toys made by Ideal, Holgate, Playskool, Reed, Doepke, Halsam, Childcraft, Creative Playthings and other toy makers, circa 1920-60. People having toys to lend should call the Fleming Museum, 656-2090, or write to K. Hewitt, L. Roomet, Robert Hull Fleming Museum, Burlington, Vermont 05405.

The exhibition will open at the Fleming on March 12, 1979, and run through April 23. It will then travel to other museums throughout the Northeast.

Greeks Give to Handicapped

The Greek Coordinating Council recently donated $300 to the Oreithyia School in Monkton, Vermont. Oreithyia will be a non-profit, tax-exempt school serving elementary age children from violent homes, who have either been beaten or have been exposed to violence in their homes. Oreithyia's main educational goal is to provide these children with basic skills and tools necessary for meeting their emotional and physical needs. Hopefully this encouragement and guidance will enable these children to develop their full potentials as self-sufficient, productive members of our community.

Child abuse is a serious problem today in many communities and unfortunately the Burlington area is no exception. However, with everyone's support, Oreithyia will be able to open its doors for the 1978-79 academic year and strive to aid those in need.

Pictured left to right: Brian Lessard — Greek man at large; Carol Heilshorn — Greek woman at large; Joanne Johnson — G.C.C. treasurer; Martha Abbott — Oreithyia school representative.

For further information contact Brian Lessard, 658-2461 or 862-1544.

Thinking & Drinking

Are you a recreational drinker? Would you like to see some changes in the alcohol policy here at UVM or are you satisfied with the way it is now?

Come join us in Art's Place in the basement of Harris Hall every other Wednesday at 7:00 p.m. to discuss such issues as kegs on campus, Rathskellar, new ideas for functions involving alcohol, and more. Come help the Thinking and Drinking Committee to think about drinking here at UVM. Next meeting to be announced on Cynic Calendar.

SCAR

SCAR, the Student Committee Against Racism, is sponsoring a day of education concerning divestiture and the struggle for liberation in So. Africa. Wednesday, November 15, North Lounge, Billings, 9:00 — 3:30. The keynote speaker will be David Sibeko, the Minister of Foreign Affairs of the Pan Africanist Congress (PAC) of Azania (So. Africa). The PAC is the leading body of the liberation movement in So. Africa. It is a great honor to have Mr. Sibeko visit our campus. Other speakers will include Greg Williams from the American Friends Service Committee, speakers from the CYO, CPML, Women's Referral Center, SCAR, faculty, and others. Films will also be shown. We encourage you to announce this exciting event in your meetings and to participate with messages of support to SCAR and/or the PAC, assistance in putting on the educational, and money to help pay for speakers, etc. All participating organizations are welcome to set up informational booths in North Lounge the day of the educational. If you are interested in participating, please let us know by Thursday, November 9. For more information please call Philip Fermonte, 658-6257, Ellen Furnari 862-1567, Sue Underhill 864-4145; or Marcia Goldstein 863-1160.

Wanna Party?

We are conducting a study of marijuana and alcohol consumption in a social setting. The study will be conducted between January 15, 1979 and May 1, 1979. Applicants will be required to be involved in the study one night per week for five weeks and up to five hours of pretesting. Groups of four social friends who consume alcohol and marijuana must apply together.

Apply in person, as a group, at room 106 John Dewey Hall during the following times: Mondays and Thursdays 1—4 p.m.; Tuesdays and Wednesdays 9—12 a.m. The application process takes about one and one-half hours. Please plan ample time. Telephone calls will not be accepted.

Advising

Are you having difficulty choosing a major? Are you looking for a tutor? Are you interested in transferring in or out of the University? If you have similar concerns, stop by the Advising Referral Center, we are located in 337 Waterman, and talk with us.

CLASSIFIED ADS

(THEY'RE FREE!)

OUTDOOR EQUIPMENT

For Sale — new men's medium down vest; men's Frye boots 9½D; tire rims for Saab 95-96, Jon 863-2664 eves.

For sale — pair of women's Zodiac tall winter boots, golden brown leather, crepe soles, size 7m, excellent condition (still new). Were $70, will sell for $45. Call Ellen, 862-6545.

For sale — K2 810, 204 cm (used 3x), with marker bindings (Rotomat heel & m4 toe) and brakes, $180.00. Olin Mark II, 190 cm, good condition, $25. Lange ski boots, size 6, good condition, $20.00. VW ski rack fits four pairs, $20.00. 1 pair of snow tires, 5.6 — 15, fits on VW $30.00 and 1 rim same size, $10.00 Call Michelle, x2282.

For sale — Skis, dynastar 203, 207 Rossignol Roc 195, Fischer 203, 207. Ski boots Lange Banshee, caber, Dolomite, Kastinger, all sized 7½—8. Ski poles 48", downhill racing ski poles, 54." Everything top quality racing equipment. Call evenings 899-2364.

For sale — Rossi Strato 207's and Head Master 205's, $35 each or best offer. Call Cindy at 656-2695.

For sale — 160 cm Blizzard skis with Salomon 444 bindings and poles, $45 for set. Call x2545 or 863-4450.

Wanted to sell 1 pair women's hiking boots, vibran sole, size 8-8½ medium. Used only 1 season. If interested call Debbie A, 863-4060.

For sale — ski bindings, Geze Olympic SE w/brakes, Brand new. List price $115... selling for $75. Call 658-4383 after 5:30 p.m. or on weekends.

For sale — Frostline mountain parseen down jacket. 65-35 shell and taffeta lining with down insulation. Men's small to medium or women's large to x-large. Only worn 6 months. Going for $50 (negotiable). Call Betsy 656-3305 evenings or leave message.

Wanted to buy — used English forward seat jumping saddle. 16—16½ inch seat. Fittings need not be complete. Must be in good condition! Please call Bev 656-2192. Leave message if I'm not in, keep trying.

For sale — 1 pair Nordica GT ski boots size 9½, good condition, asking $75. Nikko 7075 stereo receiver, 45 watts per channel power. Immaculate condition, many features. Sells new for over $400, asking $250. Call 863-9881. Ask for Phil Beliveau.

AUTOS

For sale — 1968 Olds Cutlass, 350 Rocket, fair but running condition, brand new carburator, snow tires, excellent for someone who knows his shit. Only $200 or semi-reasonable offer. Call Phil 862-7114.

1968 Chevelle Malibu 307 V-8, good condition, 2 new snow tires, $350 or best offer, 862-3973.

MISCELLANEOUS

Beautiful blue eyed, long hair white mother cat and her kitten, need loving home. Take one or both. I will deliver FREE. Please call 425-2384.

Minalta pocket camera, new. Wilson steel frame 2300 tennis racket, new. Tennis bag, new. Price negotiable. Call Wendy days 863-6323 or nights 862-1119.

Want to find out more about the field of law? Chittenden County Public Defenders need a student to help investigate factual matters for cases and interview clients and witnesses. Credit can be earned for this experience. If interested, call the Center for Service Learning at x2062.

Lost Vivitar instamatic camera in vicinity of Harris-Millis Hall. Reward offered, even for just returning the film. If found please call 656-3897 (Patsy). No questions asked.

Esalen/Swedish Massage with Polarity Pressure Points, 95 Kennedy Drive, Twin Oaks Tennis Ctr. Temporary student rate $10/hr. $6/½hr. Possibilities include (1) polarity "tune-up" to open, release, & balance energy, (2) Esalen massage, (3) foot reflexology, (4) back-neck-shoulder massage, (5) headache treatment. Sauna included. 658-0001 (best calling 10—2 p.m.)

Reward offered, lost pair of antique round Trotsky glasses on or near campus. Senbiwenbal, please call 864-6109, leave number.

MUSIC

12-volt D.C. regulated 3 amp running 4 amp surge, pace power supply. Run your car stereo or CB indoors off 120 V wall current. Was $50, now $25. Call Tom 656-4243.

Time to have some new sound in your room? Most major brands of stereo equipment all at low prices. Call or stop by, Danny. Wilks 214. x3444.

For sale — microphones, two Turner mikes, $100 for pair. New Sure mikes, all models near wholesale prices, call 862-0769.

For sale — Gemeinhardt flutes, near wholesale prices direct from factory. Call 862-0769.

For sale — Kodak pocket instamatic camera, focusing lens, $45. Call 862-0769.

For sale — new stereo equipment, same day delivery on Sony, Sanyo, Craig, Jensen. Near wholesale, call 862-0769.

For sale — stereo receiver, Technics SA-300, 35 watts per channel. Newest model on the line. Factory unpacked, barely used condition. Must sell because I have another one. Price negotiable. Call Ken x2194, 317 Christie.

For sale — used hollow body electric guitar, thin hollow body, two pickups sunburst finish with case, asking $150. Call Dave at 862-2257.

For sale — used FENDER, Coronado II, thin hollow body electric, two pick-up, bright red color, with hard-shell plush lined case. Asking $250. Call Dave at 862-2257.

For sale — used flat-top acoustic Gibson J-50 with hard-shell plush case, new price $710. Make an offer. Call Dave at 862-2257.

SALE — Now until Christmas, special holiday savings on musical accessories: everything from harmonicas to director's batons. Examples: reeds for clarinet and sax 40% Discount, on Rico and Van Doren reeds, metal folding music stands, $5.80 (reg. $7.75), mouthpiece brushes for woodwind and brass 58 cents, many other items guitar strings, straps, pitch pipes, capos, polish at Discount. Polishing/cleaning clothes for silver and lacquer, band instruments and pianos at 30% discount. See our special "music grab bag" music solo and song books at 40% discount. Call or write for our complete list of holiday savings on musical merchandise. Presto Music Company, Guptil Rd., Waterbury, 05676. Or call 864-0767 (this is our Burlington pickup and delivery phone — near Redstone campus).

FREE — yes a FREE case (soft-shell) with every new guitar purchased before Christmas from Presto Music Co. Many models to choose from: Guild, Guild Madeira, Yamaha, Aria. In addition to the FREE case you receive a 30% discount on the guitar. Also, several used electric and acoustic guitars: Gibson, Fender, etc., at bargain prices. Presto Music Company, phone 864-0767.

1 pair Criterion speakers, 12 watts per channel, in excellent condition, $40. Alan Aldag, 323 Christie, x2194.

Guitars and amps for sale — new and used. Consignment sales. Acoustic and electric guitars. Every item a bargain. Shop us before you buy. Stay awhile, play awhile in our unique guitar parlor. All new items carry regular warranties. Green Mountain Guitars, 65 George St. (near Post Office). Phone 864-9232.

Wanted to buy — FM tuner. If you have one you want to sell, call Debbie A, 863-4060.

Music instruments at 30% discount, guitars, amps, drums, pianos, drum sets, band instruments, music self-teaching books for all instruments. We buy, sell, trade used instruments too. Need an instrument repaired, we have a factory trained repairman convenient to UVM campus. We also carry a complete line of accessories from strings (at discount) to cork grease, mutes, harmonicas, music stands, etc. Presto Music Co. 864-0767.

APARTMENTS/ROOMMATES

Person to share cooperative country house in Charlotte. Own room, collective living. Call 425-2384. Keep trying.

Efficiency apartment available end of December. One person occupancy, heat & hot water included, off-street parking. Close to downtown and campus, 863-2143.

House for rent in Hinesburg, overlooks Lake Iroquois, two bedroom, wood stove. $225 monthly, 863-1548

Exciting Selection of Handcrafted Items!

25th Annual

VERMONT HANDCRAFTERS

CRAFT FAIR

NOV. 16 • 17 • 18

Thurs. 12-9 • Fri. 10-9 • Sat. 10-5

MEMORIAL AUDITORIUM

BURLINGTON, VERMONT

CHEESE SPECIALS

Parmesan $3.59/lb.

Mozzarella $1.89/lb.

Rocotta $1.19/lb.

plus many more cheeses, cheesecake "seconds," homemade quiche, yogurt in bulk, wine, crackers and mustards

CHEESE OUTLET

398 PINE ST

Dining Hall

MENU #3

| November 17, 1978 FRIDAY | November 18, 1978 SATURDAY | November 19, 1978 SUNDAY | November 20, 1978 MONDAY | November 21, 1978 TUESDAY | November 22, 1978 WEDNESDAY |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| BREAKFAST | | | | | |
| 1)Griddle Cakes2)Easy Riser3)Hard boiled EggsHash BrownsCottage CheesePastry or Muffins | 1)Waffles2)Omelets L-483)Soft Boiled EggsHome FriesCottage CheesePastry or Muffins | MANAGER'S CHOICE | 1)Texas Style French Toast F-22)Baked Shirred Eggs F-233)Soft Boiled EggsHome Fries W-6Cottage CheesePastry or Muffins | 1)Waffles2)Scrambled Eggs3)Hard Boiled EggsHash BrownsCottage CheesePastry or Muffins | C L O S E D |
| LUNCH | | | | | |
| 1)Sandwich Bar in dining room2)Chef's Choice3)Vegetable Chow Mein w/Fresh Bean Sprouts over Brown Rice | - B R U N C H -1)Scrambled Eggs2)Waffles3)Tuna Salad SandwichBacon | - B R U N C H -1)Scrambled Eggs2)Pancakes3)HoagiesSausage Links | 1)Hamburgers2)Baked Macaroni and Cheese3)Fruit Plate P-47 | 1)Beef Biscuit Roll2)Grilled Ham & Cheese3)Tomato Quiche | C L O S E D |
| DINNER | | | | | |
| 1)Pork Chops2)Fried Fish3)Vegetarian Stuffed Green Peppers | 1)Pizza Nite Create your own Pizza's2)Quarter Pounders3)Egg Foo Yong with Oriental Sauce | 1)Baked Ham with Fruit Sauce2)Chinese Pepper Steaks3)Brown Rice and Cheese Bake4)Liver and Onions | 1)Spaghetti with meat AND meatless sauce*2)Corned Beef and Cabbage3)Pancake Excursion4)Deep Dish Veggie Pie X-4 | 1)Baked Chicken2)Beef Stew with Biscuit3)Hot Vegetable Plate L-61 | C L O S E D |
| | Redstone Station | White House | *3 different sauces. Tomato Sausage Ground Beef | | GIVEN OPEN FOR BREAKFAST AND LUNCH |

SAGA

A Solid Edge of Performance.

Everyone needs to start with every possible advantage. In equipment. Fit. Choice. Find your solid edge at the Downhill Edge.

65 Main Street · Burlington 862 · 2282

DOWNHILL EDGE

VERMONT CYNIC

VOLUME XCV NUMBER 10 "A funny thing happened on the way to the press..." NOVEMBER 30, 1978

UVM SEVERS TIES WITH STATE

Arab Investors To Support Transition

By David Greeff

In a special session yesterday the UVM board of trustees voted 13-12 to sever the university's ties with the state and become a private institution. The move will become effective July 1, 1979.

"There comes a time when you have to reevaluate your economic status," said Louise Swainbank, chairwoman of the board of trustees. "We cannot continue to maintain a quality educational institution if the state repeatedly denies us the operating funds we rightly deserve."

(This is the first in a series of three articles on UVM's transition from a state to a private university.)

The 13-12 decision came after one of the most heated and emotional debates any of the trustees could recall. In fact, many members voting against the decision threatened to resign in protest, but so far none have done so.

The central concern of those opposed to the move is that UVM will be forced to increase tuition for in-state students to levels equal to those paid by non-resident students. The reason for the increase will be the almost 16 million dollar budget gap that will be created without the state appropriation. But UVM President Lattie F. Coor, an original sponsor of the move to go private, said, "We don't believe this will be a problem as we have several investors in the wings who have agreed to finance the transition."

Coor refused to give a list of investors but did say that potential contributors included wealthy individuals from OPEC (Oil Petroleum Exporting Countries) and might even include the Shah of Iran, whose niece is a member of UVM's sophomore class. The Shah's niece is reported to have rented the bridal suite at the Radisson Hotel for the entire Spring Semester.

Football Returns

New Arab investors have also expressed dissatisfaction that there is no football team at UVM and have decided to fund its reinstatement. An anonymous Arab donor has reportedly already written out a check for $1 million to the Athletic Dept. to find a coach and start recruiting a squad for next fall. "I can't tell you how thrilled we are to have football back at UVM," said Athletic Director Dennis Lambert. "We just couldn't afford to field a team before, but now the sky's the limit. Watch out Big Ten." Soccer Coach Paul Reinhardt is said to be disappointed that his team will no longer have exclusive rights to Centennial Field.

Arabs Sweep Vermont

Arab investment in UVM can be seen as one link in a long chain of investments throughout Vermont. Earlier this fall, an Arab consortium purchased Smuggler's Notch Ski Area for $14 million, three times its declared book value, and several thousands of acres in the southern part of the state. While no exact data is available, high state officials believe that Arabs and other foreigners may own up to 20% of Vermont's land.

The large influx of Arab investors has caused consternation among native Vermonters. "They're pushing us right out of the market," says John Belville of Swanton. "Vermonters can't afford to buy land anymore because Arabs have driven up the prices so high." On the other hand, several current land-owners are very pleased with the recent increase in real estate prices.

Oil in Vermont?

Why Arabs have invested so heavily in Vermont is unknown but believed to be oil related. Apparently, preliminary seismographic studies have shown that the potentially oil rich great northern Atlantic Cavern runs directly through the Green Mountains. And the Arabs are taking no chances. One group of investors recently purchased the mineral rights to Lake Champlain for an undisclosed amount believed to be in the tens of millions. The Vermont State Resources Agency refused to comment on the accuracy of the studies.

UVM President Lattie Coor outlines transition goals with Student Coordinator, Chris Agee.

Governor's Reaction

Recently re-elected Governor Richard Snelling had a milder than anticipated reaction to the board's vote. "I think it's sad that UVM has decided to sever its tie with the state, but it's probably better in the long run. People who go to UVM aren't really part of the state anyway." On the issue of Arab investment Snelling said, "Mid-eastern investors now own a large part of the state. We are implementing plans to limit foreign purchases of Vermont land but nothing is finalized yet."

Lieutenant Governor T. Garry Buckley, who recently lost his re-election bid, had a more fierce response. "The move is illegal and unacceptable. They'll never get away with it; UVM going private is tantamount to a state seceding from the Union. Why it's downright treason." Buckley further stated that his office is investigating the right of UVM to make such a move and will present a report to the Governor within the next two weeks.

Legal Implications

Legal implications of the move are not fully known but the UVM board feels confident that they had the right to do it. "There's no question that we are within our rights," said chairwoman Louise Swainbank. "And we are prepared to fight this to the finish."

The biggest problem in this case seems to be the issue of who owns the campus. The state claims it does, while the board also claims complete control over the land's future. A potentially bitter legal battle is brewing over this question.

(Continued on Page 5)

ALL GOOD THINGS COME FROM···

CRISPIN LEATHER

160 COLLEGE ST. DOWNTOWN 863 2216

News

UVM Sells South African Investments

By Paul Miller

Citing an abhorrence of apartheid and the need for "determined action," the UVM board of trustees will vote to sell the university's $2.5 million investments in corporations with holdings in South Africa at their next meeting on December 2nd.

Speaking on behalf of the trustees, UVM President Lattie Coor said, "We believe the South African system of racial oppression to be morally bankrupt. What they need is the American system of racial oppression, which is much better. Because companies that operate in South Africa directly or indirectly help maintain the status quo, and have made no significant attempts at engendering racial equality, we find no other choice but to divest our holdings in these firms."

When questioned about the Sullivan Principles, a U.S. corporate manifesto calling for equitable treatment of black workers, Coor said, "It is clear that the principles have not been adequately adhered to. It seems that their (the principles) primary purpose has been to mollify the guilty consciences of the companies' shareholders, rather than to accomplish any significant changes." Furthermore, said Coor, "even if the Sullivan Principles were meticulously followed, U.S. companies employ only 1% of the black South African workforce, which means only 1% of blacks will benefit from the Principles. What kind of effective change is that? It's like saying that all people born on Fridays with warts on their asses can have better salaries and working conditions."

Coor's announcement came in the wake of widespread student activity supporting divestiture. When asked if the trustees felt this influence in their decision, Coor said: "While I can't speak for everyone, I would have to say that the students had a definite effect. I particularly commend the Student Association and the Student Committee Against Racism for raising the consciousness of the university community. Speaking philosophically, Coor explained that "many people – especially when dealing with money matters – tend to put their morals in their back pockets, and I'm grateful to these organizations for helping us to remember our democratic ideals."

The trustees' decision was by no means unanimous however, and one board member was heard to remark "those f___-_ _ kids! We build 'em a bigger library, expand the gym, even shell out 600 G's for Coolidge Hall! Why can't they just study, get drunk, play sports and shut the fuck up. South African investments are none of their business."

The trustee, who refused to be quoted by name, is also a major stockholder in one of the disinvested companies.

"... they (SAGA) are actually aiding the black struggle for liberation. You see, SAGA serves food only in all-white cafeterias."

In a related occurrence, SAGA Food director Ron Beaulieu was recently pelted with lasagna and Russian dressing as he entered Simpson dining hall, in what was seen as a reaction to SAGA's alleged holdings in South Africa. Hooper Chamberlain, one of the organizers of the incident, later apologized to Beaulieu saying "the attack was a mistake. We've since learned that, although SAGA does have operations in South Africa, they are actually aiding the black struggle for liberation. You see, SAGA serves food only in all-white cafeterias."

The prospect of UVM's divestiture of $2.5 million in stock has generated considerable discussion as to where the money will be reinvested. Brokerage firms have advised purchasing stock in large corporations that have no business connections with South Africa, while individuals in the Burlington community believe the money could return an equal or greater divident if invested in Vermont development programs. While divided as to the orientation of future investments, both factions agree that the minimum expected premium should be at least ten percent annually.

However, student trustee Galen "Butch" Crandall believes that the $2.5 million could be even more profitable if invested in a company he owns shares in. Explained Crandall, "I own $1000 stock in Douleur Enterprises, a French company that makes torturing devices. With the escalation of torture on a worldwide scale, countries are always looking for newer and better methods, and Douneur enjoys a virtual monopoly of the market. Next year, they'll also be marketing a new line of low-priced devices in the U.S., aimed at bringing quality sado-masochism into the home. My stock has averaged a 35 percent return annually since 1976, and with this new line, I

(continued on page 4)

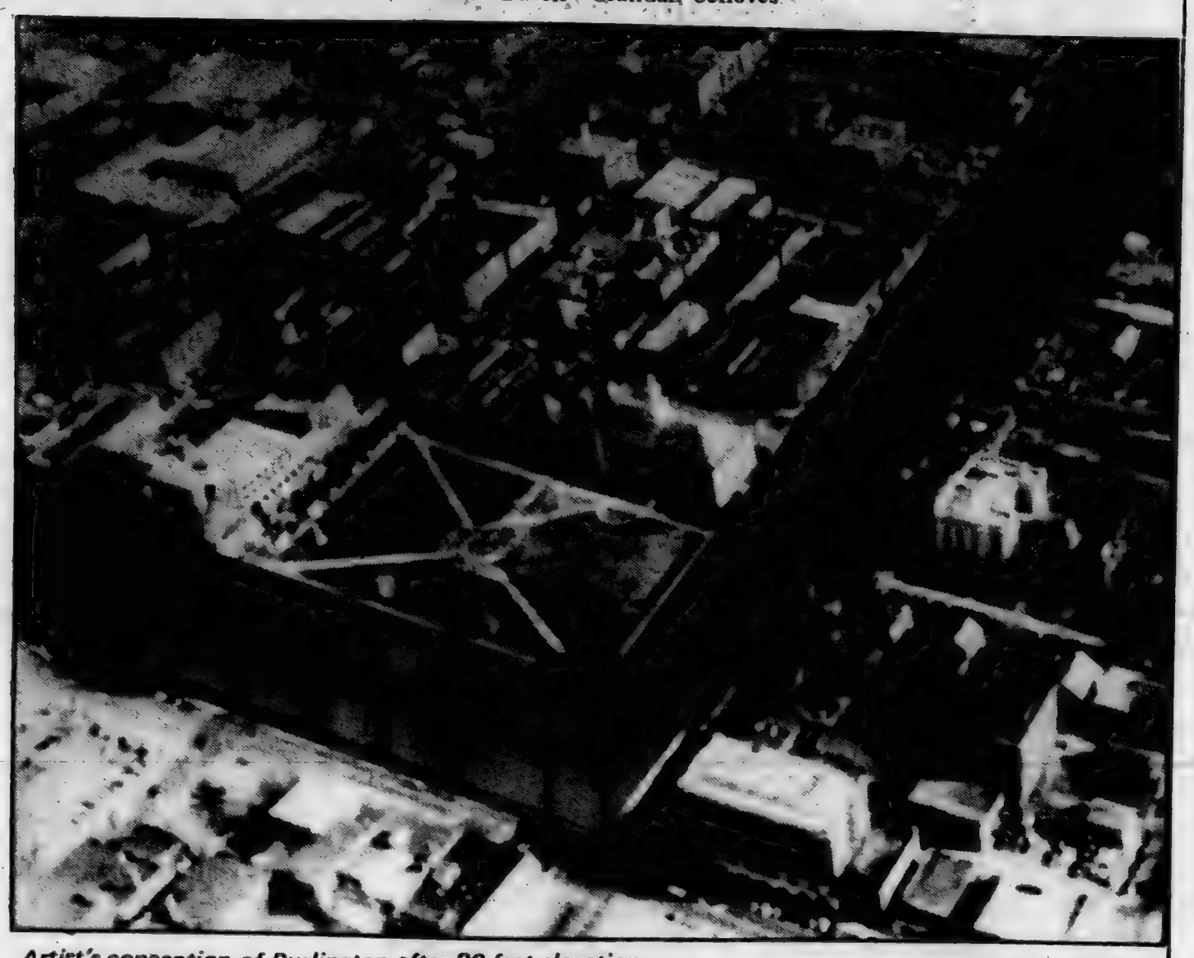
Burlington To Spend $3 Billion to Put Entire City Underground

By John Litteron

By 1983, the entire city of Burlington will be underground, said Planning Director Randall Langernose.



The project, to be handled by Mondeviani Corp., Infidelity Inc. or Pizzagallery or all three, or two of the three, or any of the above, is expected to add six million dollars annually to the city's coffers.

"It's the greatest thing to happen to Burlington since the Vanguard Press came to town," said Burlington mayor Gordumb Briquette, "We are going to have consulting work and feasibility studies done first, of course, but I'm sold on the idea already."

Vermont's GOP governor, Ricardo Smellsioso, is also pleased. "I think placing the city underground will be great for the state, create jobs for Vermonters, provide help to farmers, be environmentally safe, economically sound, reduce taxes, limit government spending, and keep UVM's appropriation as low as possible."

The plan calls for a 65 foot ditch to be dug around the perimeter of the Queen City. Then, with six hundred cranes, Burlington will be lifted up 80 feet. With the city suspended, the Army Corps of Engineers will scrape all the dirt out from under the city, and cart it to the Burlington Electric Department. BED plans to use the dirt to fire their new $600 million sludge-fired energy plant.

Once this is completed, called Phase I by Langernose, the city will be dropped into the 65 foot hole. "Slowly, of course," said the Castleton State graduate, "we don't want to hurt anybody." A glass dome will then be placed over Burlington, "to provide an ariel view for tourists," said Langernose.

Artist's conception of Burlington after 80 feet elevation. Photo by Bob Gale

The General Services Administration has guaranteed Burlington $1 billion, pending kickback approvals, to help cover the 3 billion dollar price tag. The state of Vermont has pledged an additional 20 million, and the city fathers plan to garner the additional 1.98 billion by floating bonds on Wall Street.

"That's the kind of money those men fool around with everyday, so what should it matter?" said Langernose, who majored in sanitary engineering while at Castleton.

Pyramid Co. will still appeal the recent denial of an environmental permit to build an 82-store mall in Williston. "We don't care how much of the state they put underground," said Pyramid partner Rory Gig. He said Pyramid Co's mall will be above ground making it "unique," by 1983, the time Pyramid estimates it will take to re-apply after they lose another five appeals.

Aldermen are "ecstatic" over the idea, according to alderwomen Nanette Polesitter, the glass will keep the students more quiet, and being underground, "where they all came from anyway," they'll be less noisy, and won't disrupt the Queen City.

Index

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| News | 3 | Arts | 3 |
| News Briefs | 3 | Calendar | 3 |
| Commentary | 3 | Sports | 3 |
| Features | 3 | Sports Briefs | 3 |
| Good Health | 3 | Random Notes | 3 |
| Editorial | 3 | Classified | 3 |

We're Playing Your Song...

Whether your taste runs from Classical to Disco- or from Jazz to Rock, we've got it all.

Bailey's Music Rooms — [illegible]

Check our prices, check our service, [illegible]

Bailey's

88 CHURCH ST
BURLINGTON

Toke, Toke, Toke That Cigarette

Lite 'Em Up! It's Legal!

By Toke Alot

In response to increasing pressure from the campuses throughout Vermont, Governor Richard Snelling has legalized the use and sale of marijuana.

The sale of the drug will take place through state liquor stores and will cost $25-$45 per oz., depending on quality, officials said. "We'll also be selling nickels and dimes," said Snelling.

The move, seen by many here as a pacifier for the lowest UVM appropriation ever, was received with open arms by students, but local legislators were unimpressed. "What the hell is marijuana?" said one Republican representative.

Student Association President Chuck Cluck was neither for or against the governor's action, citing the need for students to become "educated" on the issue before making a decision. Cynic features editor, Randy McMullen, said the move was "just what the doctor ordered."

The executive action will be effective Jan. 1, 1979. The growing, drying, distribution and sale problems of the evil weed have yet to be worked out. It is expected, however, that Peter "Broads" Smith will be made Marijuana Czar.

" 'What the hell is marijuana?' said one Republican Representative. "

This speculation has been opposed by lieutenant governor-elect Madeline Kunin, who feels Smith does not have the experience to run the state's marijuana sales. She said her three terms in the legislature and lifelong devotion to herbal problems makes her a more appropriate candidate for the job.

Taxes generated through the dope sales will go to help fund the state colleges. "They all smoke it, so why shouldn't they benefit?" said Snelling.

VPIRG Turns Pro Nuke

By Ann Seidenberg

In a surprise move earlier this week, the Vermont Public Interest Research Group announced a reversal in its position on nuclear power. The Montpelier based advocacy group, long known for its stance against nuclear power, shocked Vermonters with its decision to roll the bandwagon the other way in favor of the controversial energy source.

In a press conference Monday, VPIRG Director Barry Steinhardt explained some of the reasoning behind the group's decision. "We finally realized we've been looking the wrong way in our position on nuclear power. After looking at other sources of energy such as coal, solar power and wood energy, and comparing them to nuclear power, the choice became obvious."

Steinhardt explained that nuclear power was a "clean, safe, and inexpensive" source of energy as compared to some others. He cited coal as an example. "Burning coal, besides polluting the atmosphere, could increase its temperature, which would in turn have unknown side effects on the climate. Nuclear fuel, on the other hand, does not create any pollution whatsoever," he said.

It was noted at the press conference that human beings are fallible, and there was always the chance of an error that could cause a nuclear accident. "The chance of a nuclear accident is so slim," said Steinhardt, "that it's really not worth thinking about. The strictest precautions are taken in every step of the process, so at this time, nuclear power is much safer than driving your children to school. Using the proper procedures," he added, "nuclear power can be one of the safest forms of energy we have today."

One reporter, in questioning the VPIRG staff about the problem of storing spent nuclear fuel, asked for comments on a quote by Garret Hardin, who equated going ahead with atomic energy without resolving the storage problem to a man jumping off a tall building. Hardin asked, "What would we say if a man jumped off the World Trade Building in New York with a bag of hardware in the hope that he would figure out a way to build a parachute on the way down?" Steinhardt said, "If he wants to live, he will find a way to build a parachute. Likewise, since we need the power, we'll solve the storage problem. I am confident of that."

"Steinhardt explained that nuclear power was a 'clean, safe, and inexpensive' source of energy ..."

VPIRG Assistant Director Charles Skeketoff, when asked what made him change his mind about nuclear power, stressed that it was a more viable alternative than others on the drawing board. "The solar technology, for instance," he said, "has many serious problems that still need to be ironed out. A way must be found to prevent people from falling off ladders while installing solar panels, and we don't know yet how to make the sun shine during the night. We have the nuclear technology today," he said, "and we can build these plants and benefit from them today. We can't wait around for solar, wood, or hydro to be developed. We need the power now.

Both VPIRG staff members were questioned extensively on their previous stand against the Vermont Yankee Nuclear Power Plant on the Connecticut River in Vernon, Vermont. This past summer, Vermont Yankee had had extensive problems with a principal safety system, causing it to shut down 45 days for repairs. It has been shut down numerous other times during its life for repairs.

Sheketoff commented, "It's true that Vermont Yankee isn't the best operating plant in the country, but Stacey Weaver (of the Vermont Yankee Nuclear Power Corporation) has assured us that they are working hard to rectify that. She said they are trying hard to get the Nuclear Regulatory Commission and other government agencies to relax some of the standards so the Vernon plant can increase its efficiency."

Divest ...

continued from page three expect the dividends will increase."

Crandall, who also disclosed that he will soon be undergoing treatment at Mary Fletcher hospital for what experts describe as "pedantic diarrhea of the vocal chords," stated that "although no one on the board of trustees is in favor of torture or torturing devices, we still have a fiduciary responsibility to the students of UVM. A thirty-five percent return is nothing to spit at either."

The UVM investment committee is currently investing Crandall's suggestion.

Learing exactly what we have to. Photo by Bob Gale

Invisible Professor to Join UVM Faculty

By Louie Lefkowitz

Dr. Betcha Cantseame, distinguished intellectual knowing just about anything, will become the newest member of UVM's faculty next year.

Dr. Cantseame has reportedly been teaching at Boddard, Vermont Technical College, and Harvard before coming to the university. He will take Dr. Bliss' place, who quit.

A unique part of Cantseame is that students can't see him while he's in class. This, of course, has been well received by the majority of UVM students, since the professor doesn't matter much anyways. Several said without seeing the professor, all they'll have to do is concentrate on watching what's written on the board.

As a result, they'll be able to learn exactly what they have to, and nothing more. "It's wonderful," said one large-breasted co-ed. "Finally a professor I don't have to make to get my A."

More serious students feel the advantage of not seeing the professor are that once he's in the room, they won't know it until he speaks, so they can take their notes, read what he put on the board, and "not have to worry about his looking at us when we don't answer any questions."

In an interview last week, Cantseame said this will enable him to perform more important tasks, such as publishing articles in journals to keep alive at the university.

Cantseame was allegedly booted from Boddard, VTC, and Harvard for "not doing a god-damned thing," while he was at the three prestigious schools. However, the faculty senate, in between naps, approved his appointment 3-1-2, whatever that means.

In related news, when Dr. Cantseame stepped off his plane at Burlington International Airport, local photographers threw pies at him to try to outline his form and face. But aids to Cantseame said the pies that came near the professor were quickly eaten by him, as he is reported to have a very big mouth.

Geeks Get Down for United Way

Horton Snivling

In yet another exhibition of community spirit, UVM Greeks have announced they will hold a disco-toga beer blast to benefit the United Way.

Spokesperson for the Greeks, Charlie Musclewhite, said, "We are going to 'get down' to help out the United Way again." When asked about the Greeks' commitment to the principles of the United Way, Musclewhite replied, "Personally, I don't know anything about them. But they like our money, and we think their name sounds swell."

"As a group, the Greeks are genuinely interested in helping disadvantaged people however we can," said Musclewhite. "We're willing to model expensive clothes, and even run around the block to help out. But we feel we can contribute the most by doing what we do best: drinking, fucking, and building obscene ice sculptures. So we came up with the idea of a disco-toga."

Musclewhite noted the success of the recent Greek fashion show held in Ira Allen Chapel Nov. 16, and said disco-toga should net even more funds for the United Way. "After coughing up for the 100 kegs of Heinekin and the remodeling of Sigma Nu's "passion pit" for the party, we would like to have more than $100 to give to the United Way." Musclewhite noted, as is customary, Greeks would be able to attend the party for free, and all other women would be welcome. "We've decided to not invite any non-Greek men this time because they have caused so many problems in the past. When asked how they plan to turn a profit with so many restrictions and freebies, Musclewhite answered, "Yeah, ah, well we're working on that. We might be able to get a break on the kegs at the Beverage Warehouse, and there will be T-shirts on sale that say – I got down for the United Way.

Activities will begin with an obscene snow sculpture contest on Saturday, Dec. 2 to be held in front of Delta Psi at 2:00. Following that, after the sun goes down, there will be prizes awarded for the most destructive snowball car window combination, with moving and parked automobile categories.

"The real fun, however, will begin later in the night," noted Musclewhite. "But I can't reveal what that will be because we don't want to spoil the surprise or scare any sweet young things away. We're looking for as big a turnout as possible, because the United Way really needs our help." At the climax of the evening, Musclewhite hinted that there might be a John Belushi look-alike contest for any would-be fat boy comedians, and for the girls, Musclewhite guaranteed "fulfillment of their wildest fantasies."

From the days of the kake walk, UVM Greeks have had the reputation for putting out for every worthy cause, and this weekend should be no exception.

Privates

continued from cover

Immediate Effects

One immediate effect on the transition to private status will be the forced resignation of the nine members of the state legislature who are statuntory members of the board of trustees. They will likely be replaced by some of the new Arab investors. The new members will be voted in this weekend when the trustees meet here on campus.

Other immediate effects will be the change in status for all UVM staff from state to private employees. This will have an effect on pension plans and employee benefits, but in what way is still unknown.

Reactions Around Campus

General student reaction to the trustees' decision was varied but most seemed to support the move. UVM Student Association President Charlie Clark lauded the decision: "The state has failed for several years now to meet its financial obligations to

(continued on page 6)

...SNUGGLE UP WITH YOUR LANZ or DIOR Nightgown tonight....

ACT TWO
97 Church St. 658-2050

HAPPY HOUR
Afternoons at Rasputins
4-8pm
Bottle Beer 50c and up
Spirits 75c and up
Rasputins
163 Church St.

The SKI RACK

SKIERS

- For new skiers — let us help you choose from over a dozen packages at every price range. Discover for yourself our fast and efficient service.
- Serious skiers and fitness enthusiasts — look to the Ski Rack for high performance selection.
- We know how important boot fit is — best selection means best fit for you.
- Choose your Cross-Country clothing for function, style, freedom and comfort from our wide variety.

ROSSIGNOL SUN /ONES trak

★ 27 different Cross Country Packages to choose form for adults & children $49.95-$138.95

★ Free Thursday night X-C clinic on waxing, where to ski and what to wear. Also, a Rossignol movie show.

HOURS:
MON. - WED. 9 - 6
THRUS. - FRI. 9 - 9
SAT. 9 - 5

SKI RACK

The SKI RACK

Outerwear from CLASS 5

ZAP VEST

65 — 35 cloth shell, Prime Northern Goose Down, Cargo/hand — warmer pockets.

CLASS-5 PARKA

65 — 35 cloth shell, Prime Northern Goose Down, Cargo/hand warmer pockets, Double Snap Cuff, 2-way zipper, Drawstring.

HOURS:
MON. - WED. 9-6
THURS. - FRI. 9-9
SAT. 9-5

SKI RACK

"we use socks if we can spare 'em, or nothin' at all."

Sex As a Rural Option

By Elmer Gumple

"When the frost is on the pumpkin,
Then it's time for dicky dunkin."

—Irving Warner, Jr.

"Yesirre, when it gets cold, what else is there to do?" said Irving Warner, Jr., who lent his expertise to the Rural Options seminar Tuesday night.

Speaking before a packed house at Ira Allen Chapel on the University of Vermont campus (OK, Andy?) the IBM employee said worrying about farmers' land, technological and financial problems are "pretty much worthless." Warner said "high brows" should leave the farmer to solve his own problems like they've been doing "since farming started."

Farming in Vermont is dying out, he admitted, but "that don't put a damper" on what farmers and any red-blooded American knows how to do. What Warner referred to as "varnishing your pole" was still one of the most performed artistic activities in rural America.

Pointing to statistics showing that for every five rural couples, an average of forty children appeared in six years time, Warner said federal and state meney should be channelled to more family aid programs. "Farmers can't make enough to say so any more," said Warner and supporting the rural way of life should become a higher priority on HEW's assistance list.

Currently, HEW is more concerned with people who don't work for a living, rather than people who do. He said farmers work from sunup to sundown and then wind up paying "almost half of it" to support social programs that assist people who don't do a damn thing. He said the backbone of American society is being broken by this "horse's ass philosophy."

Warner proposed several programs to cure what he called the "continued douchebag" attempts by the federal government to help the farmer. These included:

—a tax deductible long underwear purchase form that would allow farmers to buy as much underwear as they deemed necessary to keep warm during the winter.

—free contraceptives to farmers and any rural child over 12 who wanted them, since today, according to Warner, "we use socks if we can spare 'em, or nothin' at all."

—comprehensive national hay insurance. This would provide the farmers with enough hay to eed approximately 150 dairy cattle for six months if fire, water, or excessive use of hay for purposes other than feeding, spoiled it.

—guaranteed manure income. Through this Warner said the government would owe farmers 25 cents for every ton of manure they put on the fields. "Hell, that's recycling, and the aluminum companies pay for old aluminum, so..."

Warner has worked for IBM for the past 18 months, where he examines computer parts for defects. He has served on several of Vermont's farming-related boards.

Privates ...

(continued from page 3)

UVM which has caused us to have among the highest tuition levels in the country. Now, with support from our Arab brothers, we will no longer have financial problems." Clark is also happy to cancel what would have been an intense and most likely futile lobbying effort for funds in Montpelier this spring.

Dean of Students Keith Miser felt he needed more time to evaluate the decision. "I must admit it comes as quite a shock. I certainly never expected the board to make a drastic move like this. It will be a while before we can tell what the long-term implications of the decision will be. Also, I can see a fight from the state on this — possibly a long legal battle. Generally, however, I think it was a good move. The state has been screwing us for almost ten years now."

In any event, the decision to break ties with the state is the most dramatic move ever made by a state university in this country. Even if, for some reason the move is prevented on legal grounds, the very attempt indicates how serious the university feels about the way the state has treated it.

VERMONT CYNIC

S.A. MEDIA FAIR DEC. 5th
MARSH LOUNGE BILLINGS

ARE YOUR PHOTOS BETTER THAN THIS????

If They Are, the

STUDENT PHOTO SERVICE

Needs You!!

Come See Us At The S.A. MEDIA FAIR

WRUV
90.1 FM

Vermont's Jazz Authority

Come Here Our Live Broadcast
Dec. 5th 10 to 4
Billings Marsh Lounge

'HANG IT IN YOUR EAR'

WE NEED YOU AT S.A. GRAPHICS

World And National News Briefs

Carter Pardons Manson

Claiming that he received "unfair" pretrial publicity and that he has been a model prisoner, President Carter pardoned mass murderer Charles Manson from the remaining part of his life sentence yesterday.

"I'm pleased to be free so I can get all my old buddies together and resume activities," said Manson. "We really had a lot more to do before I got arrested."

Several law enforcement officers are angered over Manson's release because they feel he is not yet ready for the outside world. But the President brushed that aside saying that Manson's early release will show other inmates that good behavior will be rewarded.

Heatwave for Burlington

Student meteorologists at St. Michael's college in Winooski have predicted that the winter of '78/'79 might be the warmest ever in Vermont's history. An examination and intensive survey of past weather trends conducted by St. Michael's meteorological students have led to the prediction.

"I think many people in Vermont are going to be in for a few surprises this winter," said Thaddeus Gwertzman chairman of the meteorological department at St. Mike's. "We have solid evidence that the weather patterns in the months of January and February will be radically different. We foresee a major heat wave occurring toward the end of January and leading into February." Gwertzman and his students believe the warm weather will trigger flash floods, a sudden end to the ski season, and unusually high morales in the people of Vermont.

Cirrus McFork, student spokesman of the meteorological study, says he is psyched for an early summer. "It should be great," said McFork. "The students here at St. Mike's are already set for an early summer. They've left their ski equipment and winter clothes at home. Right now, we're organizing an outdoor concert to take advantage of the hot, February days."

If all goes as expected, Vermont schools will save substantial amounts of money from the heat wave. School buildings and dormitories will not have to be heated. Already, UVM is looking into the prospects of installing air conditioning units in the administrative buildings so that in February everyone will be able to stay cool.

Cirrus McFork feels certain that his predictions are correct. "It will certainly be a cold day in Hell before I could be convinced otherwise," said McFork.

Thomson/ Nixon Ticket

Former New Hampshire governor Meldrim Thomson Jr. announced yesterday his plans to join forces with former President Richard Nixon and Manchester Union Leader publisher William Loeb to form a reactionary ticket in preparation for the 1980 presidential elections.

During the special press conference held at the seashore travel lodge in Nashua, N.H., where Thomson is presently recovering from his unexpected loss, the staunch Republican expressed his views that America has been waiting for a combination like this one for a long time. "I am very optimistic about our chances in 1980," Thomson said. "All those damned Democrats will see how politically weak they really are after Nov. 7th." Thomson smiled and added, "We even have plans to get Howard Jarvis to join us. After we've made proposition 13 national and no one has to pay taxes at all, the democrats will really be in trouble. Wait and see."

Bourne OD's

Dr. Peter Bourne, who resigned from the White House staff for allegedly signing for a prescription of valium under false pretenses, was recently seen floating above the White House lawn.

FBI agents herded Bourne into a helicoptor, and quickly brought him to the Mayo clinic. Doctors there said Bourne was suffering from an overdose of helium gas. "I was just trying to sound like Mickey Mouse for his 50th birthday," said the deflated Bourne.

Berster Breaks Out

Aided by darkness and near blizzard conditions, a small group calling themselves the Green Mountain Boys, sprung Kristina Berster from the Chittenden County Corrections Center, where she was being held. Authorities confirmed the incident last night, and said at least two people died in the audacious pre-dawn move.

Prison guard Mike Moskovitz was brought down by a hail of bullets fired by Burlington police as he pursued the gang into the woods surrounding the facility. He is in critical condition in the Medical Center Hospital with 13 gunshot wounds in his back. Left dead at the scene were two of the gang which sprung Ms. Berster. One of the victims is reported to be leftist writer Greg Guma, a member of the Kristina Berster Defense Committee, and another body has been temporarily lost by police in the snow drifts in Tuesday's storm.

When notified of the incident, the FBI immediately issued a "shoot to kill" order and are reported to be very interested in the case.

Police also acknowledged that Berster and the Green Mountain Boys are seeking asylum in the closely guarded estate of exiled Soviet author Alexandor Solzenytsyn in Cavendish. Although being held hostage by the gang, Solzenytsyn appears sympathetic to their cause. Police have taken no action yet.

William Kunstler, Berster's defense attorney in her recent Burlington trial, says he will again defend her if she isn't killed: "I will use the defense of necessity for Kristina. She was being mis-handled in jail and had no choice but to escape. Maybe this time Judge Coffin will listen to me."

Animals Strike at Boston Zoo

For the past five days, animals at the Franklin Park Zoo in Boston have staged a hunger strike to protest the inhuman conditions they are living in at the zoo.

The Boston animals want larger, "roomier" cages, more nutrition in their food to meet the Recommended Daily Allowances of such animals, two feedings a day as opposed to one meal, and a stronger voice in the zoo's decision-making process. Yackie the duck, spokesbird of the ducks, believes that the birds are being "blatantly" discriminated against. "We're practically sucking pond water at present," said Yackie. "The lions and the hippoes are getting red meat and cold water, but what do us birds get? Purina Duck Chow and no water. We must drink the water in our pond, water which we wash in every day!"

Many of the animals feel that many discrepancies exist in the manner that the animals are taken care of. The food is unequally distributed, and some animals have much nicer homes than others. "I don't know what all the roar is," said Led the lion. "I am very happy with the present conditions at the Franklin Zoo, and I swear, I'll devour Yackie the duck if he threatens my ration of meat! This sit-down strike has been instigated by damn agitators. The demonstrators should be put to sleep!"

All are not content at the Franklin Zoo, but many are in disagreement about their situation. Some believe that the country is amidst a nationwide unionization of zoo animals, while others feel that the animals are too unorganized to launch an effective campaign for "animal rights." Zoo officials are not worried. The Director of the Franklin Zoo, Don Klidesdale says that his men will prevent any open conflict. "If trouble arises from the animals, we will simply open hunting season a bit early," said Klidesdale

Brain Transplant

The world's first successful brain transplant was completed in Cleveland last week, as the brain of a pig was implanted into the skull of a municipal policeman who had been wounded during a bank hold-up.

The policeman, Hamlish Porquereind, is reported to be suffering no ill effects, except that he can't say "frying pan," or sing the Oscar Meyer theme song. Doctors say these effects are merely the result of "loose connections."

Dr. Paul Slauderhause, who supervised the operation, explained that it was relatively unchallenging. "The two brains are basically the same," he said. "After we tightened the distributer cap and changed the plugs, it was all downhill."

Slauderhause added that the most difficult aspect of the operation was finding a pig who would willingly donate its brain to a human being.

Jimmy and Rosalyn Separate

President Jimmy Carter and his wife Rosalyn are now legally separated, the White House reported today.

Reasons for the surprised separation of the nation's first couple are unknown but believed to be related to the President's dissatisfaction with his wife's performance in bed. "For Christ sake," said the President, "after a 14-hour workday all I really want is some good sex, and Rosalyn just can't provide that anymore. Maybe if she took a crash course from Master's and Johnson, there will be a chance for reconciliation." Asked who will relieve his horniness now that Rosalyn is gone, the President said it will most likely be Commerce Secretary Juanita Kreps, who reportedly gives great head.

Mrs. Carter, who is believed to be looking forward to her new life, said, "Jimmy ain't so great either, and if Juanita is as good as they say, she'll probably dump him soon anyway."

P.R. Gets Bomb

Puerto Rico announced Monday that with Cuban aid they have successfully constructed a small atomic bomb allegedly powerful enough to destroy approximately half the state of Florida.

The announcement came shortly after a trial use of the bomb, which demolished nearly all of the small island. Reliable sources state that the 27 survivors have no immediate plans for the instrument.

Pedro Nomanana, who is largely responsible for the bomb's development, claimed that Puerto Rico's atomic bomb is the end result of some 16 years of study and experimentation, most of which was done in the United States. Nomanana said his efforts were aided by "all sorts of Cuban grants and loans," as well as trained technicians who told him "how this thing should be built."

Nomanana is a dual citizen of Puerto Rico and the U.S., and resides in Manhattan, where he sells fresh fruit in a street-side market.

Commentary

In Pursuit of Pertinent Issues

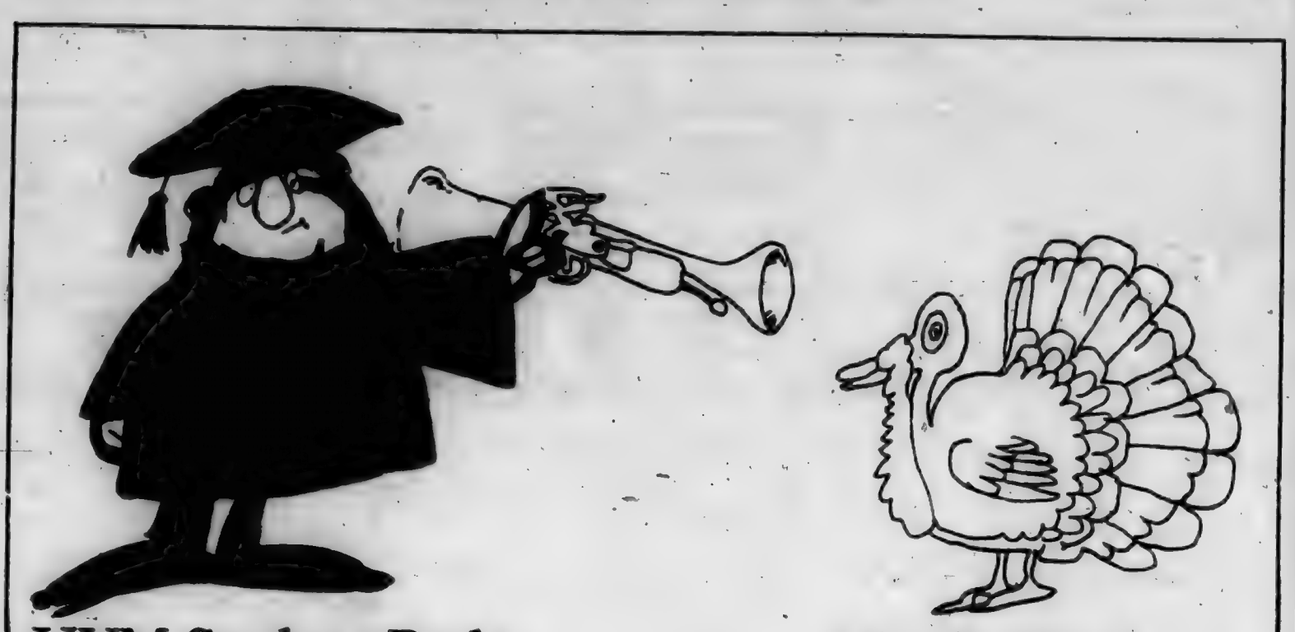
By Larry Purdy



Following an inept and lackluster performance by last year's S.A. President Jeff Liggett and his cronies, the administration of current S.A. President Charlie Clark was elected with widespread expectation of political effectiveness.

Unfortunately, Clark's inability to recognize genuine student concerns has reached the lowest point of any UVM student government official. Consequently, his ouster should be considered.

"I have seen our victories in the holy water," choked an emotional Clark to thousands of supporters after his landslide election last April. "I will lead all my brothers and sisters to bathe in the temple of the Lord," promised the currently infamous "Chuck Cluck" at his ensuing inaugural ball. To date, however, the only "holy water" Clark has led anyone to is that offered by Lambda Iota at the Friday Afternoon Drinking Club. "He usually does a good job leading us down the hill to Rasputin's afterwards — just in time for the end of Happy Hour, too," offered one S.A. Senator. "He never gets lost on the way," she added.

Somewhat to his credit, President Clark has organized student research committees to investigate the plight of both South African blacks and UVM minority groups. Yet these efforts certainly fail to consider the immediate concerns of most UVM students. After all, UVM shares no technological or political concerns with South Africa, and in our own democratic society where majority rules, the minority loses. Possibly the most appropriate advice here is "If you don't like the weather, move."

As a minimal effort to pursue more pertinent issues, Clark could consider the following proposals: Subsidation of Burlington Cocaine Dealerships: Cocaine is currently being sold for $80 per gram, a price reflecting a 40% profit margin. Given the popularity of usage by UVM students S.A. should either subsidize 'select' local dealers who, in turn, would offer a 40% discount to all customers holding a UVM ID; or oust the Greek Coordinating Council from their upper Billings offices in favor of an on-campus "drug store." Current SA involvement here is obviously at an unacceptably low level.

UVM Student Body — Chuck Cluck

Conversion of the Redstone Campus Area to a Country Club: Since exorbitantly high tuition rates paid by out-of-state students are primarily responsible for the continued existence of UVM, S.A. should compensate these students' financial sacrifices by offering membership at an exclusive "Redstone Club," a proposed 15-acre golf course, which would replace the dormitories currently located on the southern campus. Clark could justify this action to his in-state constituents by offering open house for "in-state" students on Mondays, as well as reduced draft beer prices at that time.

Furthermore, Clark should direct responsible S.A. Senators to instruct weekly lectures in their respective area of expertise. For example:

Senator: Jesse Gadson
Program: Southern Folk Songs of the Civil War Era
Activity: Group 'sing-a-longs' of old Confederate favorites
Qualifying Experience: Gadson's great, great grandfather wrote "Grandma Moses."

**********

Senator: Helen Pelzman
Program: "Female Sexual Aggressiveness"
Activity: Discussion and experimentation with the "Last Call" pick-up.
Qualifying Experience: Pelzman is a close friend of U.S. Commerce Secretary Juanita Kreps, who reportedly gives exceptional head.

*********

Senator: Henry Hooper Chamberlain
Program: "Beyond the Panama Canal."
Activity: Group discussions of Ronald Reagan's 1976 campaign speeches.
Qualifying Experience: Chamberlain is an advocate of apartheid, gun possession, the Lord's Day, mom, and apple pie. Hooper is also opposed to premarital sex.

******

In any event, Clark should seriously re-evaluate his goals and habits. Otherwise, his overthrow and possible execution is imminent.

Galaxy Five: Planetary Demise

By Hooper Chamberlain

Galaxy Five was not without its political intrigues, nor its political surprises. Galaxy Five was controlled by numerous planetary self-interest groups, and by numerous diametrically opposed ideologies. As a consequence of this inherent friction, a planet's relative political and military might was subject to drastic change. Ulsta, the pre-eminent planet of the mid-7400's A.C. (after planetary colonization), fell victim to these galactic frictions, becoming an insignificant political force by the mid-7500's.

Following the Second Inter-galactic War of 7440-7445, Ulsta was the mightiest of all the planets of the galaxy. Its military-industrial complex was by far the largest of any planet. Ulsta supplied the galaxy with most of its dicrotic reduction units, most of the intra and inter-planetary solar cruisers, and had a monopoly on radioactive planetary pulverization units. What the planet Ulsta wanted, the planet Ulsta got — no other planet could oppose its will.

Ulsta's economic might was so great that its unit of currency, the rallod, became the standard of inter-planetary trade. With its massive resources, Ulsta rebuilt its two principle foes in the galactic war, Napaj and Mangery, along with its allies. The planet was building a galaxy in its own image.

However, galactic reality was such that intra-planetary forces quickly began to erode Ulsta's pre-eminence. To begin with, there was a political cancer in the galaxy called Lenstal, an ideology in direct conflict to Ulsta's democracy. Lenstal's mighty promoter was the planet Sursia, the former mighty ally of Ulsta.

First, Sursia grabbed political control of the eastern planets of the Euron Solar System. Those once sovereign planets became puppet states as the Lenstal scurge began to expand its sphere of influence. Then in 7449, the huge agricultural planet of Anich, in the East Rafterian Solar System also fell victim to the spreading Lenstalian ideology.

Ulsta's political influence was declining proportionately to the Lenstalian increase. A defensive battle began as the democratic planets led by Ulsta tried to contain Sursia and the Lenstalians. Unfortunately, much of the galaxy was tired of being exploited by the democratic planets, and Sursia with Anich began to gain acceptance. In 7459, Sursia and Anich split over policy, so the galactic political confrontation pitted the two Lenstalian planets against Ulsta and its allies.

Then came the 7480's, and Ulsta had lost its pre-eminent planetary position. The reasons were many. For one, the economy of Ulsta could no longer compete with the rising economic giants, Napaj and Mangery. Napaj's ney, and the Mangerian kram, replaced the Ulstan rallod as the stable curriencies of exchange.

Further, the Ulstan economy, one that had been the leading innovative force in industrial technology, lost its edge. Its industry was in a post-industrial decline, a tailspin it could not overcome. Because of the decline, its productivity per humanoid hour decreased, causing products to lose their competitive nature in regards to inter-planetary trade.

To complement the weakening economy, Ulsta began to pull out of its role as the protector of galactic freedom. Ulsta no longer fought the spread of Lenstal, planet by planet, but tried to act as galactic mediators. A sign of the weakening Ulstan presence was apparent as Sursia gained military superiority over all else. A strategy formed which pitted the once opposed Ulsta and Anich against Sursia.

The Third Intergalactic War began and ended in the year 7487. It began as the Sursian star force began to sweep across the Euron Solar System resting control of the overwhelmed democratic planets. With no conventional way of combatting the attack, and because of treaty obligations, Ulsta launched a massive attack with its inter-planetary ballistic missiles (IPBM's). Sursia, while economically destroyed, was able to launch a second strike against Ulsta to destroy that planet. It also destroyed Anich, before that planet could launch its own attack.

Zones one, two, and six of Galaxy were all but obliterated. With their industry destroyed, and their governments in ruin, those planets headed back to more primitive times. The Dark Ages had returned to those once mighty leaders of the galaxy.

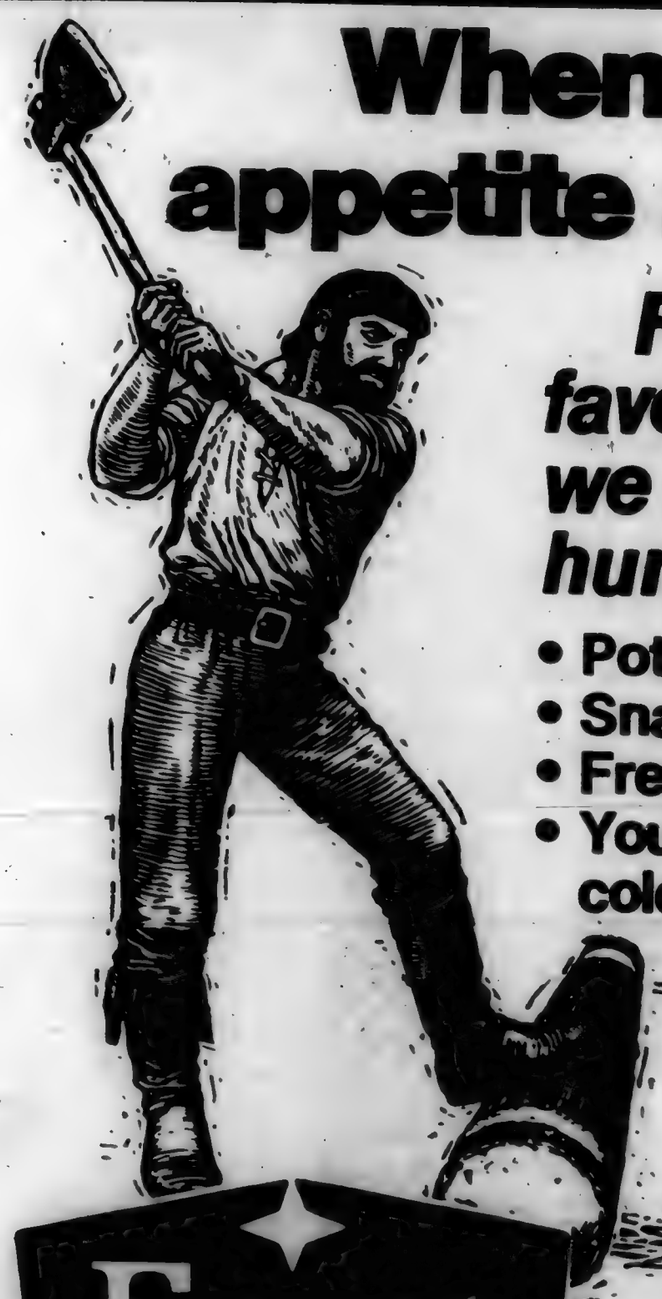
Remaining were the less industrialized nations of zones three, four and five, including the only remaining industrial giant, Napaj. It was time for a new galactic order. Zone three was a region composed of planets dominated by military regimes that had to deal with awesome population increases. The leading planet of the region was also the largest planet, Bazil.

Zone four featured a region of black planets, that had once been dominated by the white planets of zones one and two. Their northern planets controlled the galaxy's supply of penton crystals, crystals which supplied most of the galaxy's power. While this region was not united behind a single strong planet, as a cartel it was very powerful.

Finally, zone six was led by Napaj. This planet had become the industrial giant of the galaxy by 7490, and immediately became the dominant planet following the war. Fortunately, it was not military in nature, totally dependent on cooperation and mediation. The arms rivalries were over, the galaxy began an era of cooperation.

Ulsta, the once pre-eminent force of Galaxy Five, had returned to its early agricultural economy as had Sursia and Anich. The 7500's featured a rivalry, industrial in nature, between Napaj and Bazil. Military might had been removed as a pre-requisite for galactic peace.

L/LC Programs Recruiting for Spring Semester



Living/Learning Center faculty and student designed programs have vacancies for spring semester. Programs are actively recruiting (and maintaining a waiting list in case unexpected vacancies arise). To obtain a program description and application, stop by the L/LC Director's Office or call x4200.

1978-79 L/LC PROGRAMS

American Cluster Experience
Architectural & Environmental Design
Asian Religions
Bilingual Education
Braille
Business Administration
Cycling
Early American Crafts
Emergency Medicine
Environmental Communications
German House
Green Mountain Design
Green Thumb
Get YourSelf Together (GYST)
Horse Sense
Integrated Humanities
International Business Journalism
Joy of Cooking
Learning About Living
Mime
Modern Dance
Natural Foods
Nineteenth Century Vermont
Noah's ARC (Animal Related Careers)
Outdoor Recreation Management
Panhellenic
Photography
Pottery
Resource Awareness Program
Rocks Running
Russian House
Scandinavian Suite
Special Education
Strummin' and Pickin'
Student Advising in the Sciences
Sunshine on a Cloudy Day
(Peer Counseling)
Theatre-Centre Players
Tropical Plant Biology
Visual Astronomy
Wilderness Sports
Worldwide
Written Way

JOIN US
LIVING/ LEARNING CENTER

When you work up an appetite . . . Come to Finast!

Finast has all your favorite snacks ready . . . we knew you would be hungry!

- Potato Chips
- Snack Crackers
- Fresh Fruits
- Your favorite cold beverages

and just about everything you can think of!

Visit
Mr. Deli

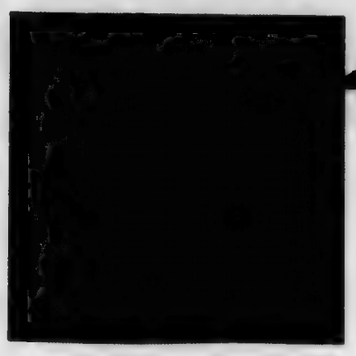
You'll find a world of Eating Pleasure at our own Mr. Deli Counter. You'll find Fresh Cold Cuts, Domestic and Imported Cheeses, Fresh Made Salads and Baked Goods. Our Mr. Deli experts are Ready to Serve you. Ask about our Delicious Party Platters available for your next get-together.



Finast
SUPERMARKETS

825
WILLISTON ST.
BURLINGTON,
VERMONT

UPSTAIRS RECORDS

OPPOSITE PENNEY'S DOWNTOWN BURLINGTON

Alice Cooper
From The Inside
7.98 Series
Now $4.99 LP, $5.19 Tape

Jerry Jeff Walker
7.98 Series
Now $4.99 LP, $5.19 Tape

ATLANTIC

Todd Rundgren
Back To The Bars
Double Record Set
12.98 Series
Now $8.49 LP, $8.69 Tape

Yes TORMATO
7.98 Series
Now $4.99 LP, $5.19 Tape

ELP
Love Beach
7.98 Series
Now $4.99 LP, $5.19 Tape

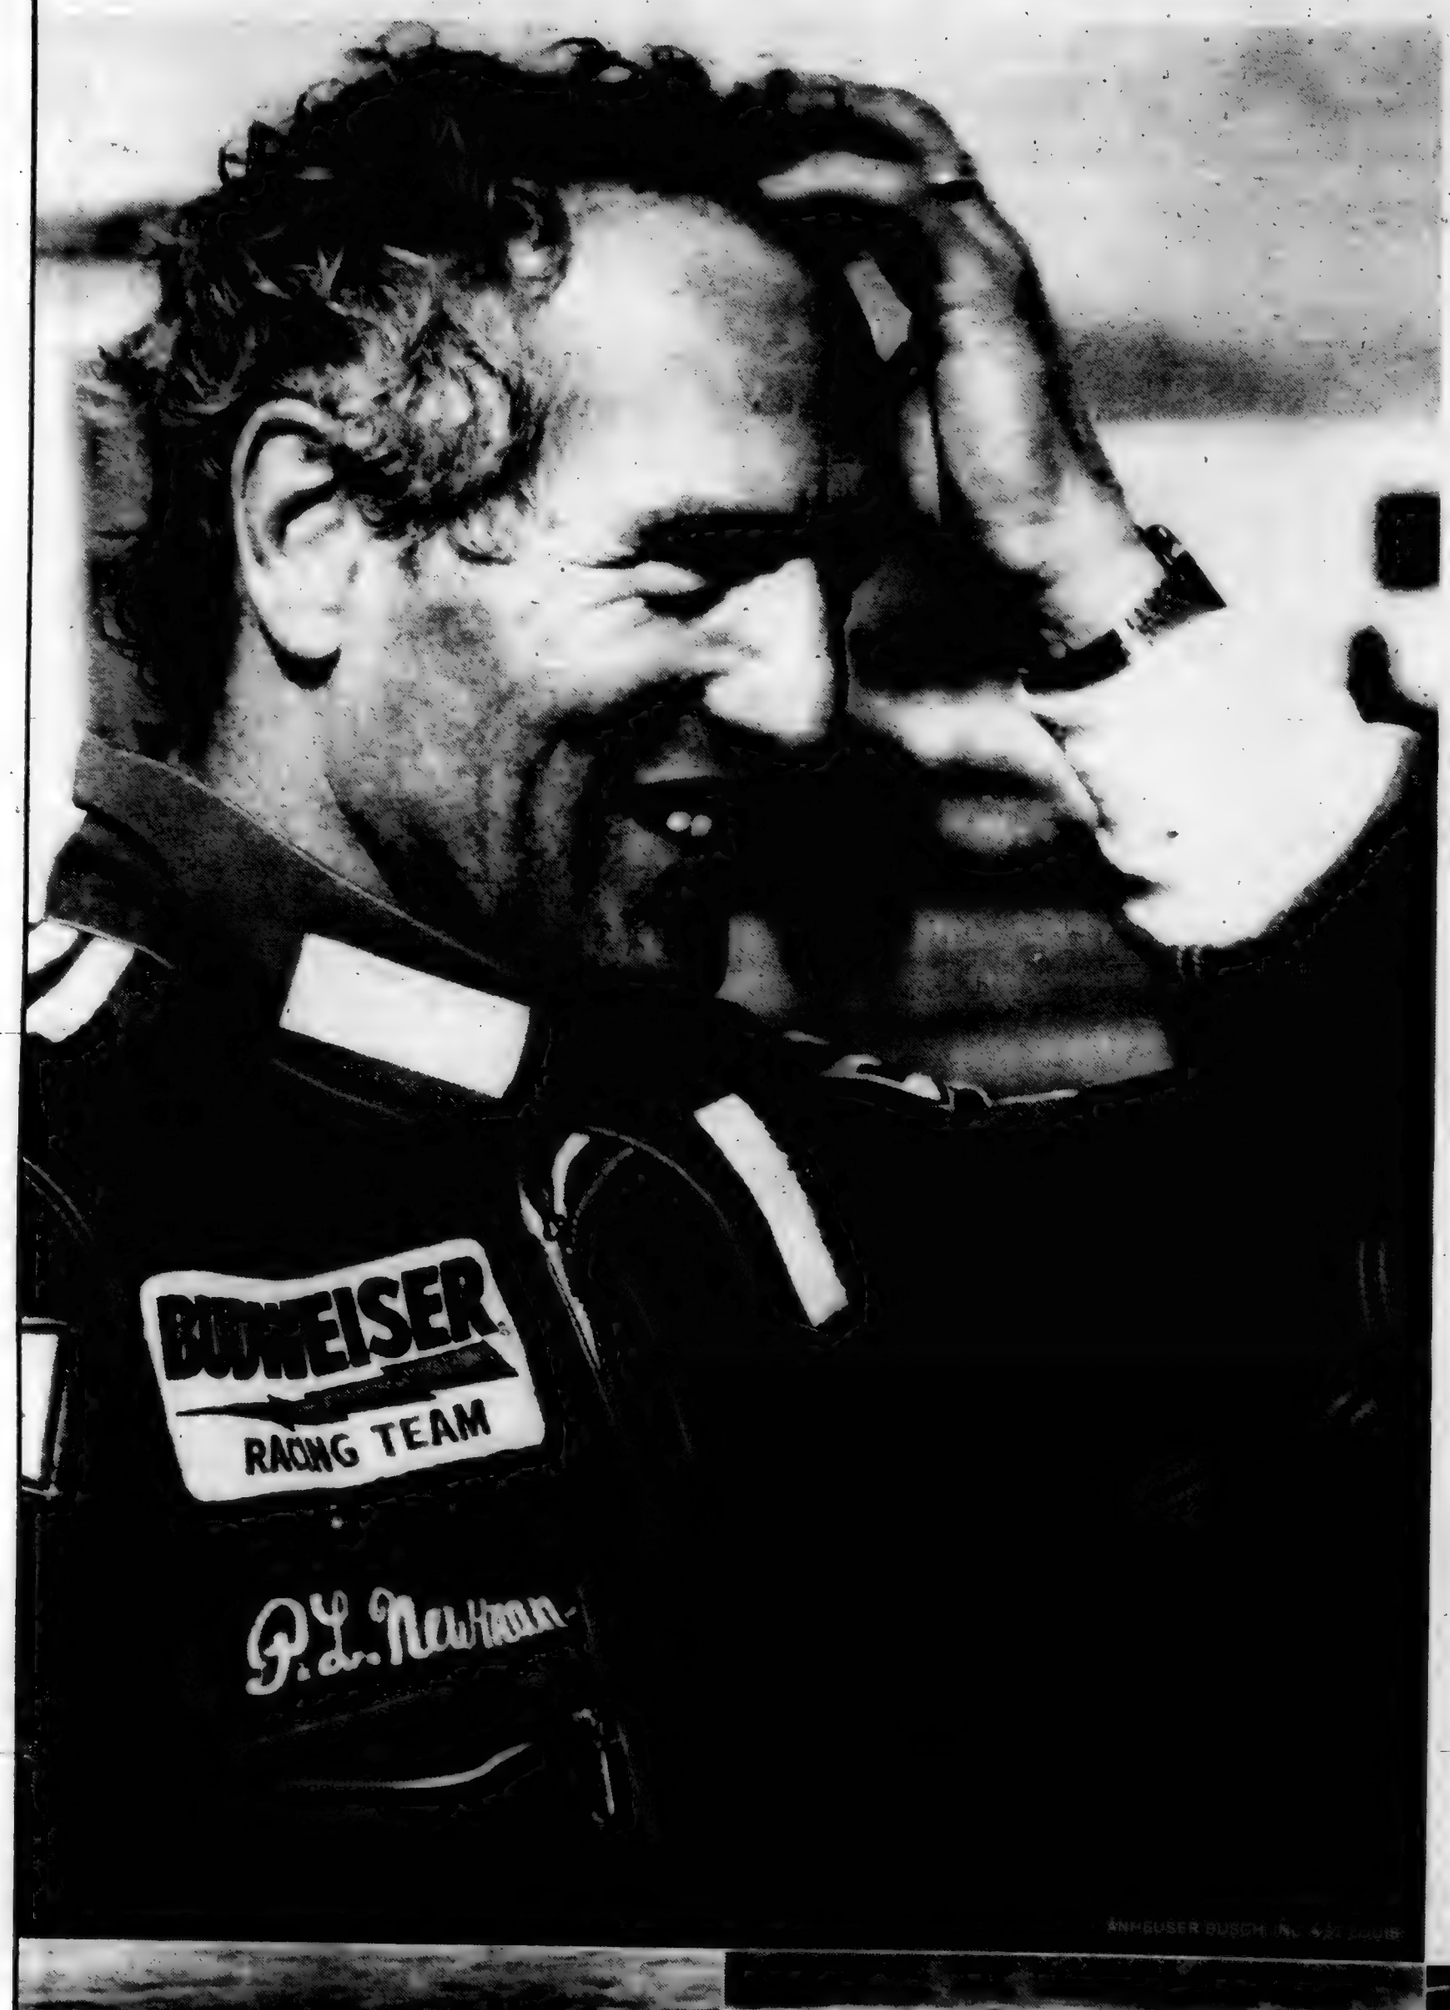
WE'RE WHERE YOU'RE AT!

ON WILLISTON ROAD

Monday-Thursday 8:30-5:00
Fridays til 6:00

Chittenden TRUST COMPANY

Member FDIC



Keep Your Eyes On Your FRYES

FRYE

SUNDANCE
A HERITAGE OF AMERICAN CRAFTS
38 Church St. (Across from Woolworths) Burl.

WHY IS THIS RACE DRIVER GRINNING?

Some say it's because he gave up a promising film career to head up the Budweiser Racing Team!

But the real reason is that he just likes to win. And he did plenty of that this past season in a pair of Budweiser-sponsored, Bob Sharp-prepared Datsun race cars.

Fifteen races. Twelve wins! On the pole eight times! Three track records!

And in the SCCA National Championships at Road Atlanta, he took a second place in his C-Production Datsun 280-Z . . . and a third in the B-Sedan category with his Datsun 200-SX.

Naturally, we congratulate him for his super season and wish him even greater success in '79.

"Way to go, Paul!"

From your friends at Budweiser

For a 2'x3' color poster of the Budweiser Datsun in action, send $3.50 (check, M.O.) to Bob Sharp Racing Inc., 021 South St., Danbury, CT 06810

Features

It's a Bird, It's a Plane . . .

The Windsor Lounge, where God shared his holy presence with a dozen social drinkers, and put them all to sleep.

. . . No, It's Our Savior

By Haven Moses

"I always considered myself an atheist," said Don Samoan, a Burlington taxi driver, "but I don't know what to think anymore."

Samoan has lived in Burlington all his life, and has driven a cab here for the past 35 years, but never has he been so astounded as he was last Saturday afternoon. "I was just sittin' around in the office," he said, "and this super-bright blob came hurtlin' out of the sky. It came right into the office, and then it kind of hung there for a while. All of a sudden, everything started feeling kind of sacred-like, you know? It was like I'd had too many beers, and I fell asleep right there. The next thing I know, I'm waking up, and the thing is gone."

Samoan is one of many Burlingtonians to witness the "super-bright blob" on Saturday afternoon at about 3:00 p.m. and like the others who reported the incident, he fell into approximately five minutes of spiritually induced slumber.

When it was determined that as many as 56 people were affected by this incident, a special ad-hoc committee was called together. Leading scientists, parapsychologists, and religious authorities from across the country were rushed to Burlington's Ramada Inn to discuss the sleep-inducing white tornado. And when every last committee member confirmed the decision on Monday morning, it was announced that Burlington's strange visitor had been none other than God.

BEYOND ALL REASONABLE DOUBT

The Committee was first accused of making a hasty decision. After all, they had been in session for only 27 minutes. But according to Stephen Crobarr, a parapsychologist from Denver, the decision was "thoroughly discussed and proven beyond all reasonable doubt."

The clincher, he added, was when a blackboard in the meeting room disintegrated, with the ensuing dust spelling "It's God, you fools!" on the carpet. "The decision was quickly agreed upon, and then we got the hell out of there!" he said.

Crobarr, who has won international acclaim from his book, Things That Go Bump in the Night, and Other Phenomena, does not believe that any foul play was involved. "It was definitely God," he maintained, "we were all too afraid to consider any other possibility."

The matter was again confirmed when a Cynic reporter, Tim Leerie, was able to get an exclusive interview with the alleged deity. Leerie was also quite sure of the identity. "It was God, all right," he said, "but I never blow an interview. I may blow my mind a few times, but I never blow an interview."

AN ABBREVIATED VISIT

God's visit to Burlington was a short one, an estimated 20 minutes. Not surprisingly, it raised many more questions than it answered. It is reported that scholars around the world are pouring through the Bible and other religious documents, in attempts at finding a passage that forewarns God's seemingly unwarranted visit at this time.

It is also wondered why God chose to contact only 56 people. The diversity of the economic, social, and cultural backgrounds of the people suggests that they were chosen completely at random; but why then did God make an appearance at all?

"I don't have any ideas about any of this," said Burlington Mayor Gordon Paquette, "but I'm kind of ticked that he didn't come and see me. After all, I'm the mayor of this damn town!"

God's largest audience at any one point was said to be at the Windsor Lounge on Main Street, where 12 people witnessed his entrance. One of them, Baba Snelling, an administrator for the University of Vermont, said that most of the people there were asleep anyway, and that "some didn't even notice the occurrence."

Lattie Coor, UVM President, was with Snelling at the time, and he remembers the event vividly. "The white omnipresence entered the bar," he said, "and I grabbed Baba and cried 'what in God's name is happening?' And then I was out cold."

Another of those present at the Windsor was the bar's organ player, Koris Barloff. Not a man of strong religious convictions, Barloff remains skeptical of the incident and its implications. "God Schmod!" he said, "I don't know who the character was, but I think he sprayed mace in my face. If I ever see that s.o.b. in here again, I'll blacken both his eyes."

A CHEAP PRACTICAL JOKE

Also disappointed by his contact with God was Reverend Paul Sedanko of the Burlington Methodist Church who claims he may give up his religious practice entirely. "He didn't even offer any advice!" said Sedanko. "He put me to sleep out in the cold, and mentioned that I should 'keep up the good work'." Sedanko recalls that upon awakening, he found a silver dollar at his feet. He referred to the incident as a "cheap, practical joke; not something one would expect from the likes of God."

There are others, however, who feel that their experience with God was beneficial, if not glorious.

Mrs. Stanley O'Mally, a widow from Burlington's North End, describes her life since the encounter as a "peaceful state of bliss." She spends the majority of her time sitting in her North Street apartment, on her favorite couch, looking out of the window and thinking about flowers, children, and eternal happiness. Her state is trance-like, and she mechanically utters such fragments of sentences as "Glory be..." and "My savior..." Questioning her is difficult, and only briefly will she snap out of her inner zone of pleasure to talk rationally.

"I used to be a nasty old coot," she stated at one point. "I used to do my drinking too. But not any more, mind you."

A local Burlington teenager, who prefers to remain anonymous, also feels that God

continued on page 14

An Interview With God

By Tim Leerie

This was perhaps the most challenging interview I've ever done. Obviously, God doesn't make many appearances on earth, and he's rather a difficult character to pin down as well. His ultra-bright illumination was strongly annoying, and his sleep-inducing tendencies might have overcome me had I not previously taken three tabs of LSD. He was, however, quite candid, and he never gave the impression that he was putting me on, or saying something just for the glory of the press. Above all, he was an intelligent and sensitive person to talk to.

********

Cynic: First of all, why did you come to Burlington, Vermont, of all places?

God: Well actually I was looking for New Hampshire; but you know how it is with these New England states; they're all alike.

The Author as a Believer

Cynic: What were you looking for in New Hampshire?

God: I was looking for the guy they call Meldrim Thomson. I had heard a few things about him through the grapevine, and I figured I'd better check him out. just to make sure that he wasn't actually Satan in disguise.

Cynic: Do you still think that might be the case?

God: No, Thomson's not intelligent enough to be Satan. In fact, while people like Thomson are still around, Satan can take a vacation. His job is being done for him.

Cynic: You speak of Satan's "job," so it seems that you must have one also. Can you tell me the nature of the two jobs?

God: Basically speaking, my job is to ensure that Satan doesn't incorporate a lot of his views into the world society. It's kind of vague, but generally this means that I have to prevent people from living a life that they accept as sinful. That's where Satan comes in: through his deviant nature, he tries to convince people that what they're doing is wrong or sinful. Then he attempts to make them justify it so they'll spend all their time doing things that others will think is bad. Thus, in the long run, Satan is trying to promote disharmony, while I am trying to do the opposite.

Cynic: You make it sound as if morals are completely manipulated by the two of you.

(continued in two pages)

GIVE SOMETHING
OLD FOR CHRISTMAS!!

Bygone Books

Old books, like old wines, improve with age.

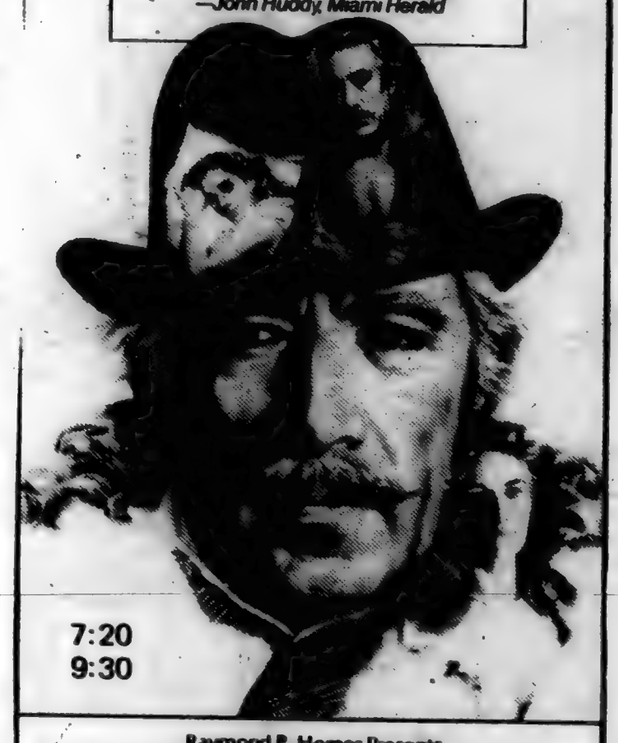
Surprise an old and special friend, with an old and special book.

Try us for hard-to-find, out-of-print books.

For that old and special Christmas gift

91 College St.
(Between Pine & Champlain)

Burlington, Vermont 05401
Tel. 802 862-4397



"SEXUAL. ELEGANT. A SUSPENSE SHOCKER."
—Rex Reed

"SIZZLINGLY EROTIC. A MOVIE WORTH CATCHING."
—Toronto News

"SEDUCTIVE. EXPLOSIVE. PACKED WITH PASSION."
—CBS

THE INHERITANCE

FASCINATING
THE SCENES BETWEEN SANDA AND QUINN ARE CHILLING AND UNFORGETTABLE...FUSING TREACHERY AND ADULTERY. A PROVOCATIVE FILM.
—John Huddy, Miami Herald

7:20
9:30

Raymond R. Homer Presents
ANTHONY QUINN
DOMINIQUE SANDA

"The Rocky Horror Picture Show" is no longer playing.

Also at Cinema 1 & 2 "The Boys from Brazil." 7:00 & 9:20

CINEMA 1 & 2
BURLINGTON PLAZA
RT 7 AT I-189 SO. BURLINGTON

PHONE
862-5070
ANYTIME

Good Better Health

Let's Get Things Straight

By Barely Lusty

A lot of people these days are getting the idea that fat, sugar, salt, additives and cholesterol are bad for you, or at least unhealthy in excess quantities. These myths are propagated by the legions of "health food" faddists, and other screwballs who have no training in proper nutrition. Given the current wealth of information on food, it is shocking that so little of it really addresses the virtues of a diet well balanced in fat, sugar, and other essential nutrients. Hopefully, this article will set the record straight.

Shake It Sugaree: Jerry Garcia of the Grateful Dead recently won the Rolling Stone Healthy Rock Star Award

Fats, which comprise 40-50% of the average American's diet, are absolutely essential for good health. Fats supply over twice the calories of carbohydrates and proteins, and provide valuable insulation to the body tissues. Have you ever noticed any of the 70 million overweight Americans? These people, by heavily insulating their bodies, are actually helping to solve the energy crisis! They should be praised, even given a tax rebate (just like the rebate for home insulation), instead of ostracized by society (See Journal of American Insulation Association – 12/76).

When you eat fat, try to get lots of animal fats, particularly from beef or dairy products. Raw hamburger or beef tallow tastes great on Ritz Crackers. A stick of butter or lard coated with sugar and cinnamon is a rich and tasty snack food. If you must try vegetable fats, stick to the exotic fats such as coconut and palm oils, which like animal fats are high in saturated fat. (Journal Amer. Diet. Ass. 5/73)

But why saturated fats? With all the hullabaloo about polyunsaturated fats, a phenomenon propagated mainly by the margarine companies, we've forgotten many of the virtues of saturated fats. Saturated fats are by far the best insulators for your stomach, rear end and arteries. America is a nation plagued by cold-bloodedness, and if we insulated our arteries with saturated fat, this would not be as big a problem.

Sugar and salt, two widely used additives in our food have also been subject to a mass-smear campaign by misinformed dentists and heart specialists. In their myopia, these "professionals" have neglected the fact that without sugar and salt, our food would taste like cardboard! Thank goodness we get over twenty percent of our calories from sugar, and eat lots of salt (which helps the body maintain water balance), for now our food tastes like sweet, salty cardboard!

There are over 2,000 food additives in our food supply, and we can thank our lucky stars for every one of them. Food additives make our food tastier, healtnier, and cheaper, and we should hope that more will be available in the future.

In the Journal of American Scatology, Dr. Scheister of Cornell University points out that "Food additives have been more safely tested than many chemicals in the so-called "natural foods" we eat." Clearly, if all foods were as thoroughly researched as the additives on the market, we'd probably have banned most of the staples in our diet. So eat those additives, folks, and enjoy them.

The cholesterol in our food, in addition to insulating our arteries, helps with several other bodily functions. Cholesterol in our skin reacts with ultraviolet light to make vitamin D (which helps prevent rickets) and our endocrine system produces hormones from cholesterol. Sex hormones are synthesized from cholesterol. Could you imagine what it would be like if we ate no cholesterol? Why, we'd be a nation of eunuches with rickets and cold blooded arteries! Dr. Faust of the American Pedantic Association explores the catastrophic consequences of a cholesterol-free diet, but I've forgotten the reference, so you'll have to look it up.

In choosing a good diet, remember the "basic five" of good nutrition – fat, sugar, salt, additives, and cholesterol. You'll be a happier, healthier, more productive person for it.

(Barely Lusty is a staff member of Lusty Funeral Services, Inc. and is the Cynic's Good Health columnist. He is currently working on a book with UVM Nutrition Professor Dr. Carew).

Savior... continued from Page 3

did him a good turn.

"I was walking the street alone," he said, "and I was all bummed out because I had nothing to get high on. Then all of a sudden this white dude comes at me, and gives me the meanest buzz I ever had. I mean I was wasted! Too bad I had to crash so quick." He added that he was surprised to learn that his temporary sugar-daddy was actually God. "I didn't know he had it in him, man. But that's all right, he can do me any time."

When asked if his brush with God would put an end to his drug use, the youth replied "No way! But I might give up flowners for awhile. It was a real bummer crashing in the middle of that buzz."

God's visit to Burlington obviously has large scale ramifications. For one thing, it proves his existence. It also lends possibilities to another – perhaps more global – visit in the future.

And on the other hand, some are quick to point out that if God exists, then his antithesis, Satan, must also be a reality. Sedanko warns that this could indeed be the case. "The devil is close at hand," he said, "I can feel him. That's why God was here, because Satan is among us. We must all fear for our lives."

A Burlington police officer, however, maintained that everything is under control. "We've got our eyes open," he said, "but so far, everything's rodger-dodger." He also said that Burlington's terrorist prevention squad – through many hours of intense training – is all but invincible. "We can handle anything," he claimed, "we can deal with your Idi Amins, your Kristina Bersters, and we can deal with Satan; no sweat."

NO POPE, RADIO

Pope John Paul II was contacted for comment, but it was reported that he has a difficult time speaking to anyone outside of Europe. Finally, through short wave radio, he was able to announce his stand: "I feel that people all over the world should prepare for judgment day," he said, "it seems that the time has finally come for all of us to move to another plane of consciousness. Let us pray that God is the forgiving man we have all assumed him to be."

The Pope went on to say that he does not believe his being Polish has anything to do with God's appearance. "He nailed the other turkey, not me," he said, referring to Pope John Paul I, whose heart attack after only thirty days of service shocked the world.

The Pope also maintained that it is time for people of the world to become a bit holier-than-now. "Let's clean up our acts," he said, "let's boogie with virtue!"

Meanwhile, Burlington continues to boogie with God. High-beam flashlights are selling significantly higher than before; and posters bumper stickers, and buttons have hit the streets with slogans like "I love Burlington, and God," and "he came, he saw, he left."

If Satan is around, he no doubt is laughing at all of it.

Yes We Have No Uranium

By Hooper Chamberlain

As had been rumoured, the addition to Bailey Library will contain a small prototype nuclear installation, confirmed the Sweet Corporation, the company in charge of the construction, late last week. When in full operation, the reactor will be able to power all of the main campus and the University Medical facilities. The project is being funded by the Atomic Energy Commission, with technical help from Vermont Yankee.

Early this Fall, students began to notice that the foundation of the library addition was octagonal, an unusual shape for an essentially square building. Also, the foundation was dug extremely deep, with a cube in the center. To complement this, the center was being encased with metal.

The reason for this novel construction technique is that the foundation is to encase a small nuclear reactor. For security and health reasons, the facility had to be sealed off from public exposure. With four foot thick cement walls, and a six inch lead plating, no significant radiation will be discernible.

Why and how the project came together follows. The why behind the reactor is multi-fold. For one, energy and electrical costs are rising faster than any institution of higher learning can handle. Over the last five years, UVM has had to accommodate an annual energy increase of eight percent.

With that data the Department of Residential Life and the board of trustees decided that alternative sources of energy had to be found. Last year, President Carter stressed that he would like to see nuclear power expanded to fulfill diverse energy needs nationwide. With that in mind, the board of trustees contacted the Federal Atomic Energy Commission. The agency jumped at the chance for a new nuclear role in the United States, so plans were drawn up for a model reactor to be built under the new library addition. Safety for the facility is guaranteed by future technology.

The site of the reactor: if there's a meltdown? There's always the tunnel.

Once completed, the nuclear reactor will save UVM an estimated $11.2 million a year in both fuel and electrical requirements. By 1984, it is planned that all of main campus and related facilities will be hooked up to the facility. Further, it is planned that East and Redstone Campuses will become part of the system by 1990. The projected savings by 1990 are $25.3 million.

This leads us to the final reason for the installation of a nuclear reactor. Anyone who is familiar with the university's physical plant is aware of the need for new heating facilities. The boilers on Redstone Campus were targeted to be replaced by 1974. However, the financial crunch of the 1970's prevented that. East Campus is all right with its Living/Learning Complex, but main campus is in much the same shape as Redstone. A new heating complex was urgently needed.

The financing of the project is coming from the federal government, which is going to showcase the Vermont facility to the rest of the nation. Once underway, the reactor will be an independent plant, with no external connections.

It was released that the facility will only operate between September and May because the facility is primarily air cooled. With Vermont's northern, cool location, the plant does not require a massive water supply. The technique of air cooling a nuclear reactor is only currently being done in a few reactors in the upper Midwest, so the plant is novel in being the first to be air cooled in the east. A changeover from the Burlington electrical system will be no problem, as all connections to Green Mountain Power will be left intact.

As for potential protests from the Clamshell Alliance, and other anti-nuclear groups, the board of trustees says "So what?" Uranium for the reactor will have to travel up Interstate 89, and up Route 2 to the facility. The reason for the delay in reporting the reactor was to avoid construction delays which protestors could have created.

Nuclear power will make UVM a much more economically competitive school in the future. As the energy crunch makes itself felt by the year 2000, UVM will be enjoying an economical electrical and heating system. Perhaps, such university arrangements will become commonplace before the turn of the century.

OOPS!

ROTC students test flew their F-14 recently, ran into some "turbulence," and, well you can see what happened. They are waiting for federal funds to remove the plane.

R.W. Hunt's Presents

in Concert

ZZEBRA

Thurs, Fri, Sat Nov 31-Dec 2

"Last Waltz"
PINE ISLAND

Wed & Thurs Dec 6&7

PAUL ASBELL QUARTET

Fri & Sat Dec 8&9

101 Main St. 863-9850

ELVIS LIVES!

The KING. Now at rest forever in Memphis... OR IS IT ALL A LIE!

Can it be that Elvis is alive under another name or guise?

Was he CLONED before he died?

Find out this Monday nite, Dec. 4. It's ELVIS PRESLEY TALENT NIGHT at The Treaty of Yorktown! The entertainment begins at 9:00 p.m. but you'll want to come early for seats. First Prize of $25.00 and a bottle of champagne goes to the one most like Mr. Rock 'n Roll himself.

So dust off the guitar, get the white sequined jumpsuit from the cleaners and take the geraniums out of the old blue suede shoes! Get up and gyrate your socks off, baby!

ELVIS LIVES on Monday Night at The Treaty of Yorktown.

The Treaty of Yorktown
156 St. Paul Street
Burlington, Vermont

Bluegrass and Country

Entertainment Wed. & Thurs. Nights

Monday — $.25 draft + $.75 pitchers
Tuesday — $.50 Molsons
Sunday — Ladies night $.25 off drinks
Happy Hour 3–7 daily
Football Specials — Sunday
Pitch Tournaments

sullivan's
4 NO. WINOOSKI AVENUE

Next to Domino's Pizza

SEE THE SNOWMASTERS

SNOWMASTER $24.95

WOMENS HIGH LEATHER BOOTS $38.95

Other Boots from $29.95
Available for Men and Women;
Work Boots, Hiking Boots, and Pile-Lined Slippers

dunham FACTORY OUTLET
161 Church St. Burlington 862-6089 Open Daily 9:30-9:00, Sunday Noon-6

God
Continued From Page 3...

God: Morals are worthless, as far as I'm concerned. Everybody's morals are based on the supposed morals of others. If you can be led to believe that everything you do is morally wrong, then you can be led into Satan's trap. If everybody would just act according to their natures, while not directly disturbing others, then Satan wouldn't have a chance. Then we Gods could take a vacation, for a change.

Cynic: "Gods?" You mean there is more than one God?

God: Oh Hell yes! Every solar system has a god. We periodically get together for meetings to discuss issues, new plans of attack, that sort of thing. Just like everything else you mortals are used to, there's a committee at the top of it all.

Cynic: Have you ever actually met Satan?

God: Many times. Of course there isn't just one Satan, but I've talked to a number of the employees who work under that general name. They're pretty nice fellows, but a job is a job, you know. It's like a football rivalry: on the field we'll grit our teeth and hate each other, off the field, who cares?

Cynic: How would you view the general state of mankind? Do you think we've progressed in the right direction?

God: Are you kidding? I'm the laughing stock of the General Assembly of Gods (GAG). The earth has the most fucked over civilization any deity has ever seen. We've got world-wide terrorism, global pollution, religious fanatics slaughtering 900 people in South America, Popes running in and out like they were Women's Auxillary Chairmen... everything is crazy. Mine is the only solar system where Satan is actually a box office sell-out. People are really scared of him, and they get their jollies watching him throw up all over priests. And that's because of the world's mentality. People assume they've got to hurt others to succeed, and that gives Satan a very workable framework. In other systems, people think the whole concept of Satanism is a joke, something to tell their grandchildren about. On earth, he's a powerful anti-hero. If it wasn't for Watergate, he might even be in the White House! To make matters worse, some solar systems have gone Utopian and disregarded the whole idea of religions, gods, and demons. The Gods of those systems have really got it made. And they're beginning to get cocky, throwing their weight around, thinking that they can take over my position. They think that just because they're God, they can push people around. If I don't watch out, I might get my ass impeached!

Cynic: What do you believe to be the cause of all these problems?

God: Without a doubt, it's money.

Cynic: Money?

God: Definitely. Money is the element that transcends morality and religion and anything else in life you people depend on. It is the most powerful weapon that Satan has. If he defeats me, it will be through money.

Cynic: You mean Satan is responsible for money?

God: Oh yeah. There are a lot of clever sons of bitches that work under the name of Satan. If you think those Madison Avenue boys are creative...

But money is the most effective thing they have ever come up with. Money is actually the perfect personification of Satan; it causes more disharmony in earth than anything. And it's easy to justify one's guilt feelings on money. If you rip someone off, it's good business, good money ethics. Wars, corruption, and killings are all based on money, and those who commit such acts know that they are guilty of sin, yet they can pass it off as manifestations of economic determinism.

But what it all comes down to is Satan. When people knowingly do wrong for the purpose of obtaining money, they are actually following the way of Satan, without even knowing it. That's why money is such an effective medium, and such a dangerous one: it's a tool of Satan as well as an addictive narcotic, used or desired by practically everyone on earth.

Cynic: Do other solar systems have the same problem with their currencies?

God: Ha! No other solar systems even have any sort of currency. Most follow something similar to the philosophy you would call Taoism that flourished on this planet a long while ago. The problems of other systems resemble what you would call alcoholism and drug abuse. Most of the people have time to waste, and they rather enjoy wasting along with it.

Cynic: What kind of drugs do they have?

God: Many kinds, since they have spent so much time studying them and experiment with them. What seems to be the most popular is a drug that resembles your LSD, only much stronger, I imagine.

Cynic: Oh wow!

God: Yes, it's fun stuff, all right.

Cynic: You've tried it?

God: Of course, I've got a curiosity too, you know. Besides, I figure if anyone can take the stuff to see me, I can use it to forget about them. It doesn't really seem to have a strong effect on us Gods, though.

Cynic: Besides money, what is the one thing about earth's society that bothers you the most.

God: Well, on a personal level, I despise it when people use my name to carry out some ridiculous crusade. The best example I can think of is the phenomena you would know as Anita Bryant. Her entire anti-homosexuality campaign, which used some passages from the Bible, is one of the most insulting things I have ever witnessed. Everyone knows that homosexuality isn't a disease. It's gross, but it's not a disease. If that lady thinks she's going to make it to heaven with that kind of attitude, she might as well try moving into San Francisco.

Cynic: What exactly is heaven?

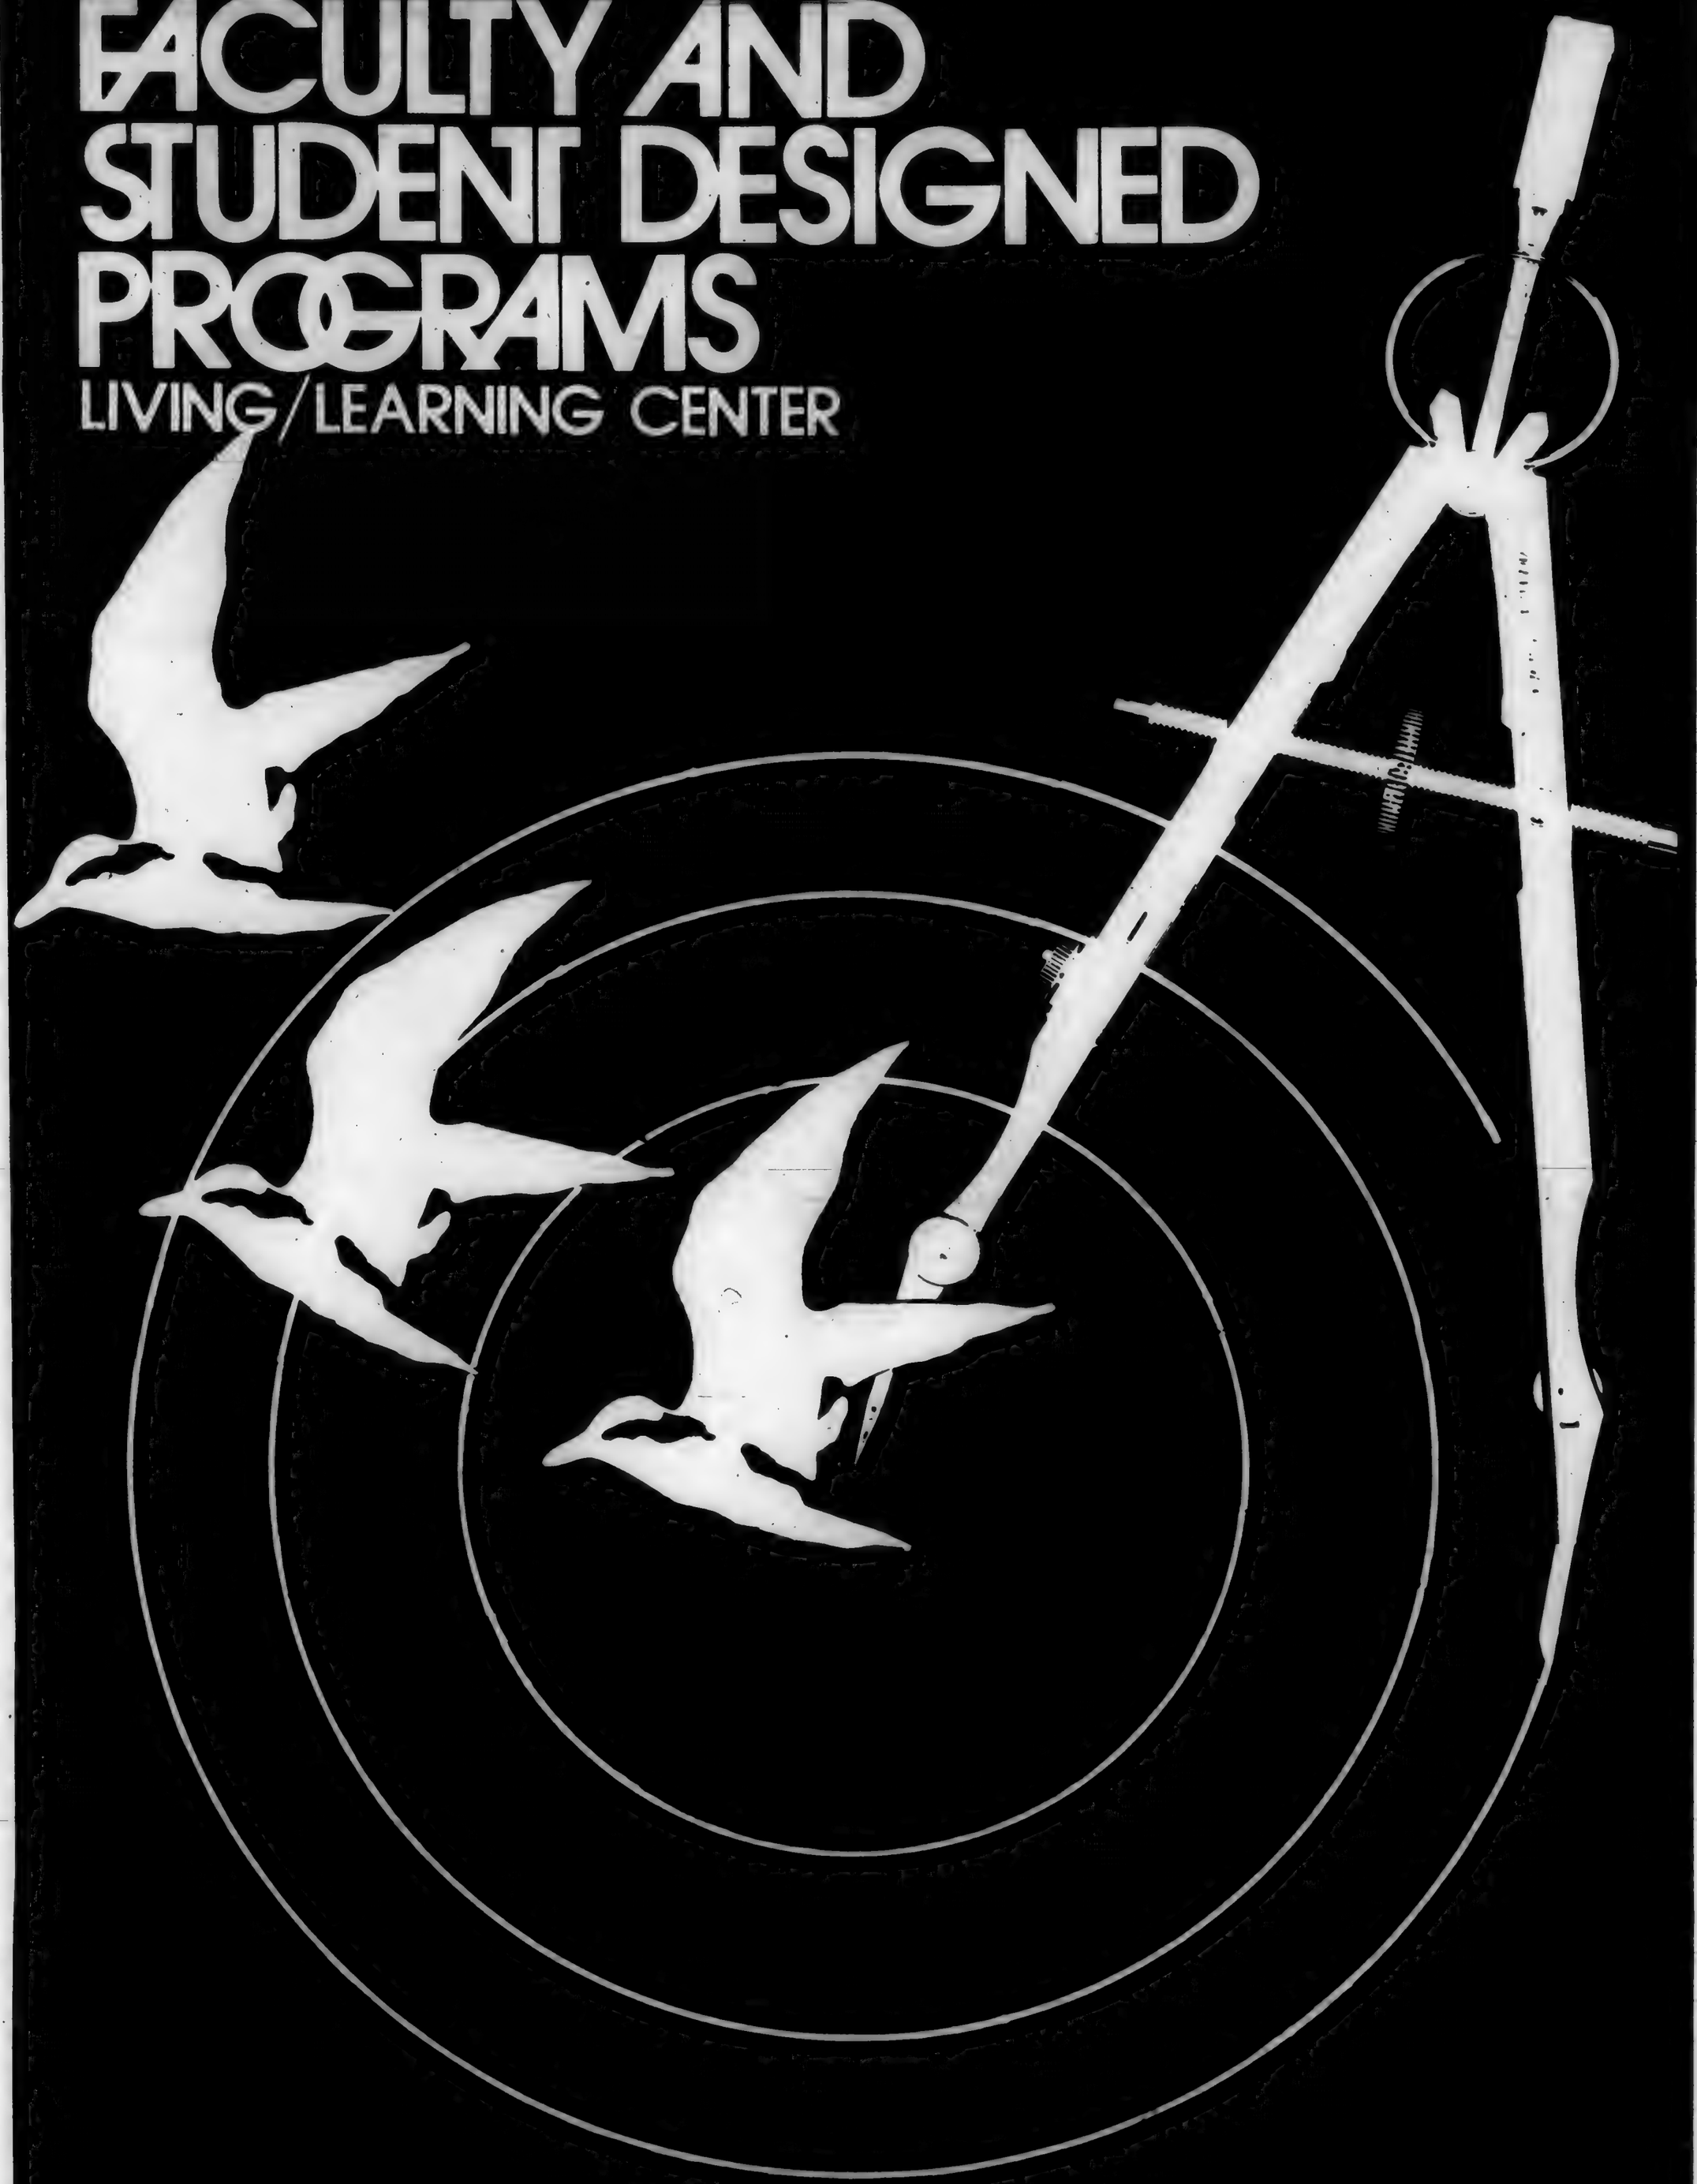
God: It's a semi-alabaster den of nirvana-searching, where folks kind of sit around and get artsy.



Some paint, some write buddhist poetry, some just can't escape from the nine-to-five routine, so they hang out and do paper work for GAG.

Cynic: What then, is Hell?

God: Well, I don't know where they hang out, but I imagine that they spend a lot of time plotting or acting out their plots. They have to work harder than we do, since it's essentially easier to prevent disharmony than to create it. The Avis routine.

FACULTY AND STUDENT DESIGNED PROGRAMS

LIVING/LEARNING CENTER

now forming for "1979-80" for more info. or program guidelines drop by the l/lc director's office or call 656-4200

VERMONT CYNIC

EDITORIAL BORED

Editor-in-Chief: Disco Dave
Managing Editor: Nedly Android
Copy Editor: Bones

News: Juke Joint Giovanni
Features: Stone-Head McMullen
Arts: Von Davis
Sports: Richy Rich Chalmers
Steve Ayup Larose

Advertising Manager: Peter Toll House
Business Manager: Jim Spade
Photo Editor: Click-Fail
Contributing Editors: Henry Regan
Fussel Brewery
Diana Screene
Eric Kiljoy

The Vermont Cynic is published weakly through the school rear except during vacations by students of UVA, except when we're too high to get it together. Opinions expressed herein do not necessarily reflect those of the University administration, faculty, staff, writers, or the state of Virginia.

For The Record

We wish to inform our readers that all articles in this week's Cynic are fictitious and should not be considered factually accurate, either partially or in full. All quotes, attributions, facts and other editorial content has been created solely from the imaginations of the staff. Our intentions are lighthearted and we wish to emphasize that we have not intended to hurt anyone's feelings or damage their reputations in any way.

It has been customary for each year's board to publish one spoof during its 24-issue tenure. Usually, it's done on April Fool's Week. Last year, however, since we felt that the first week of April had an inordinate amount of important news to be reported, the spoof was postponed. Last week, we decided that because we have only one more issue before Christmas it was now or never. Also, we felt it was timely considering that many students take life far too seriously when exams are approaching. So, we hope you have a good laugh; we sure had a good time putting it together.

******

We also wish to inform you that we are not planning to publish next Thursday or the following one but have tentatively scheduled an enlarged Christmas issue which should hit the streets sometime early in the week of December 11. The issue will include an expanded calendar section which will list events up to and through the last exam. Problems of scheduling at the press however, may alter this plan and force us to come out next Thursday as regularly scheduled. Either way, the next issue will be the last.

Editorial

LETTERS

God Bless America, Guys!!

To the Editor:

I would like to draw your attention to the horrible moral situation of today's college student. The atmosphere of decadence that prevails on today's campuses is deplorable. Access to alcohol, free contraceptive dispensaries, co-ed dorms, and rampant use of marijuana plagues our next generation of leaders. I am appalled at this blatant deterioration of our youth and the only way to erradicate this problem is to get to the root of this insipid disease: homosexuality.

Yes, just one word. Very simple... very clear. This sickness pervades the soul of vulnerable hearts that fire this confused ideology. There is hope, in the forgotten ideal of our society: the Word of God. The God of this country's foundation, through some gross oversight, has been neglected. Enclosed are 500 copies of "The Good Book" which put the Bible into layman's terms and has beautiful 3-D pictures of the major miracles.

Also, you will find a book by my very good friend Anita Bryant: God, My Country and my Man with 5x12 glossie of her and God in Disney World. I am leaving it up to you as an upstanding member of your community to spread the good news and eradicate this evil seed from our midst. I will be in touch very soon, hoping that you are pressing on in the struggle to save your fellow students.

Truly yours,
Skip Mitchell
7th district of the State of Georgia

Buckley: On the Farm

To the Editor:

I am writing to voice my support of the University of Vermont's vote to become independent of the sniveling bureaucrats in Montpelier. During my entire tenure as president of the Senate I urged those old farts to give you kids more money – but Fat Dick is such a scrooge that he just wouldn't give in. Face it, all the turkeys were doing was giving UVM the shaft.

I hope everyone knows that I really was in the favor of students at UVM, especially when I got the Rathskellar bill through. But that asshole senator that said dope screwed up his kid's mind killed the legalization of pot and there was nothing I could do to pull it through.

As far as the recent elections go, my Daddy didn't buy me a bank and I'm not a millionaire so I couldn't win, but as long as Fat Dick can keep pulling the wool over people's eyes he'll keep on fucking over the state.

But right now I'm just sitting down on the farm spouting off at the mouth about all the corruption in this state. I'll keep you posted.

T. Garry Buckley

Responsible Praise

To the Editor:

I would like to commend you and your brilliant staff on publishing by far the most well-written and informative newspaper in our great nation. Nearly every article is astute, lucid, succinct, informative, and newsworthy. I only wish that amateurish publications like the VT Vanguard Press and the Burlington Press would follow your example of polished and professional journalism.

Every week, it never ceases to astound me how you manage to seek out the most important news and present it in such a concise and unbiased manner. Also, your editorials are unfailingly brilliant polemics advocating the most logical view of the question.

I find the one liners on the cover of every issue to be philosophical truths of the most profound degree and will continuously look to them for spiritual enlightenment.

In light of your great achievements in the most honorable field of journalism, I have requested that my father have excerpts of the Cynic be part of his daily news briefing. He agreed wholeheartedly, and further has recommended that the Cynic be named "Newspaper of the Year."

Amy Carter

Cynic Sickees

To the Editor:

After reading Rich Chalmers' story on Greenpeace in your last issue, I have finally come to the conclusion that the Cynic is obsessed with feature articles concerning lunatics. Anyone with any kind of intelligence realized that Jim Frizell and all those other whale lovers are sick in the head. Their efforts to stop massive whaling boats with rubber rafts are at best humorous, but more likely the work of former college students who feel they have nothing else to do now that we've saved Vietnam from the grasp of the communists. Only flunkies like those members of Greenpeace would sacrifice their lives for stupid, fat whales.

Also, I've noticed other sickees in the Cynic lately, most notably your article on that asshole socialist lawyer William Kunstler and CYO czar Roy Smith. What gives, Cynic? Why do you insist on "getting off" on these fascist radicals instead of covering great Americans like Richard Nixon and James Kilpatrick!!

I hope the message is clear, Cynic. Start featuring those people representative of UVM and Vermont (like Calvin Coolidge or Dick Snelling) instead of those political idiots you've been writing about lately. In fact, maybe you should feature me.

Meldrim Thompson

What Would You Say Yaz?

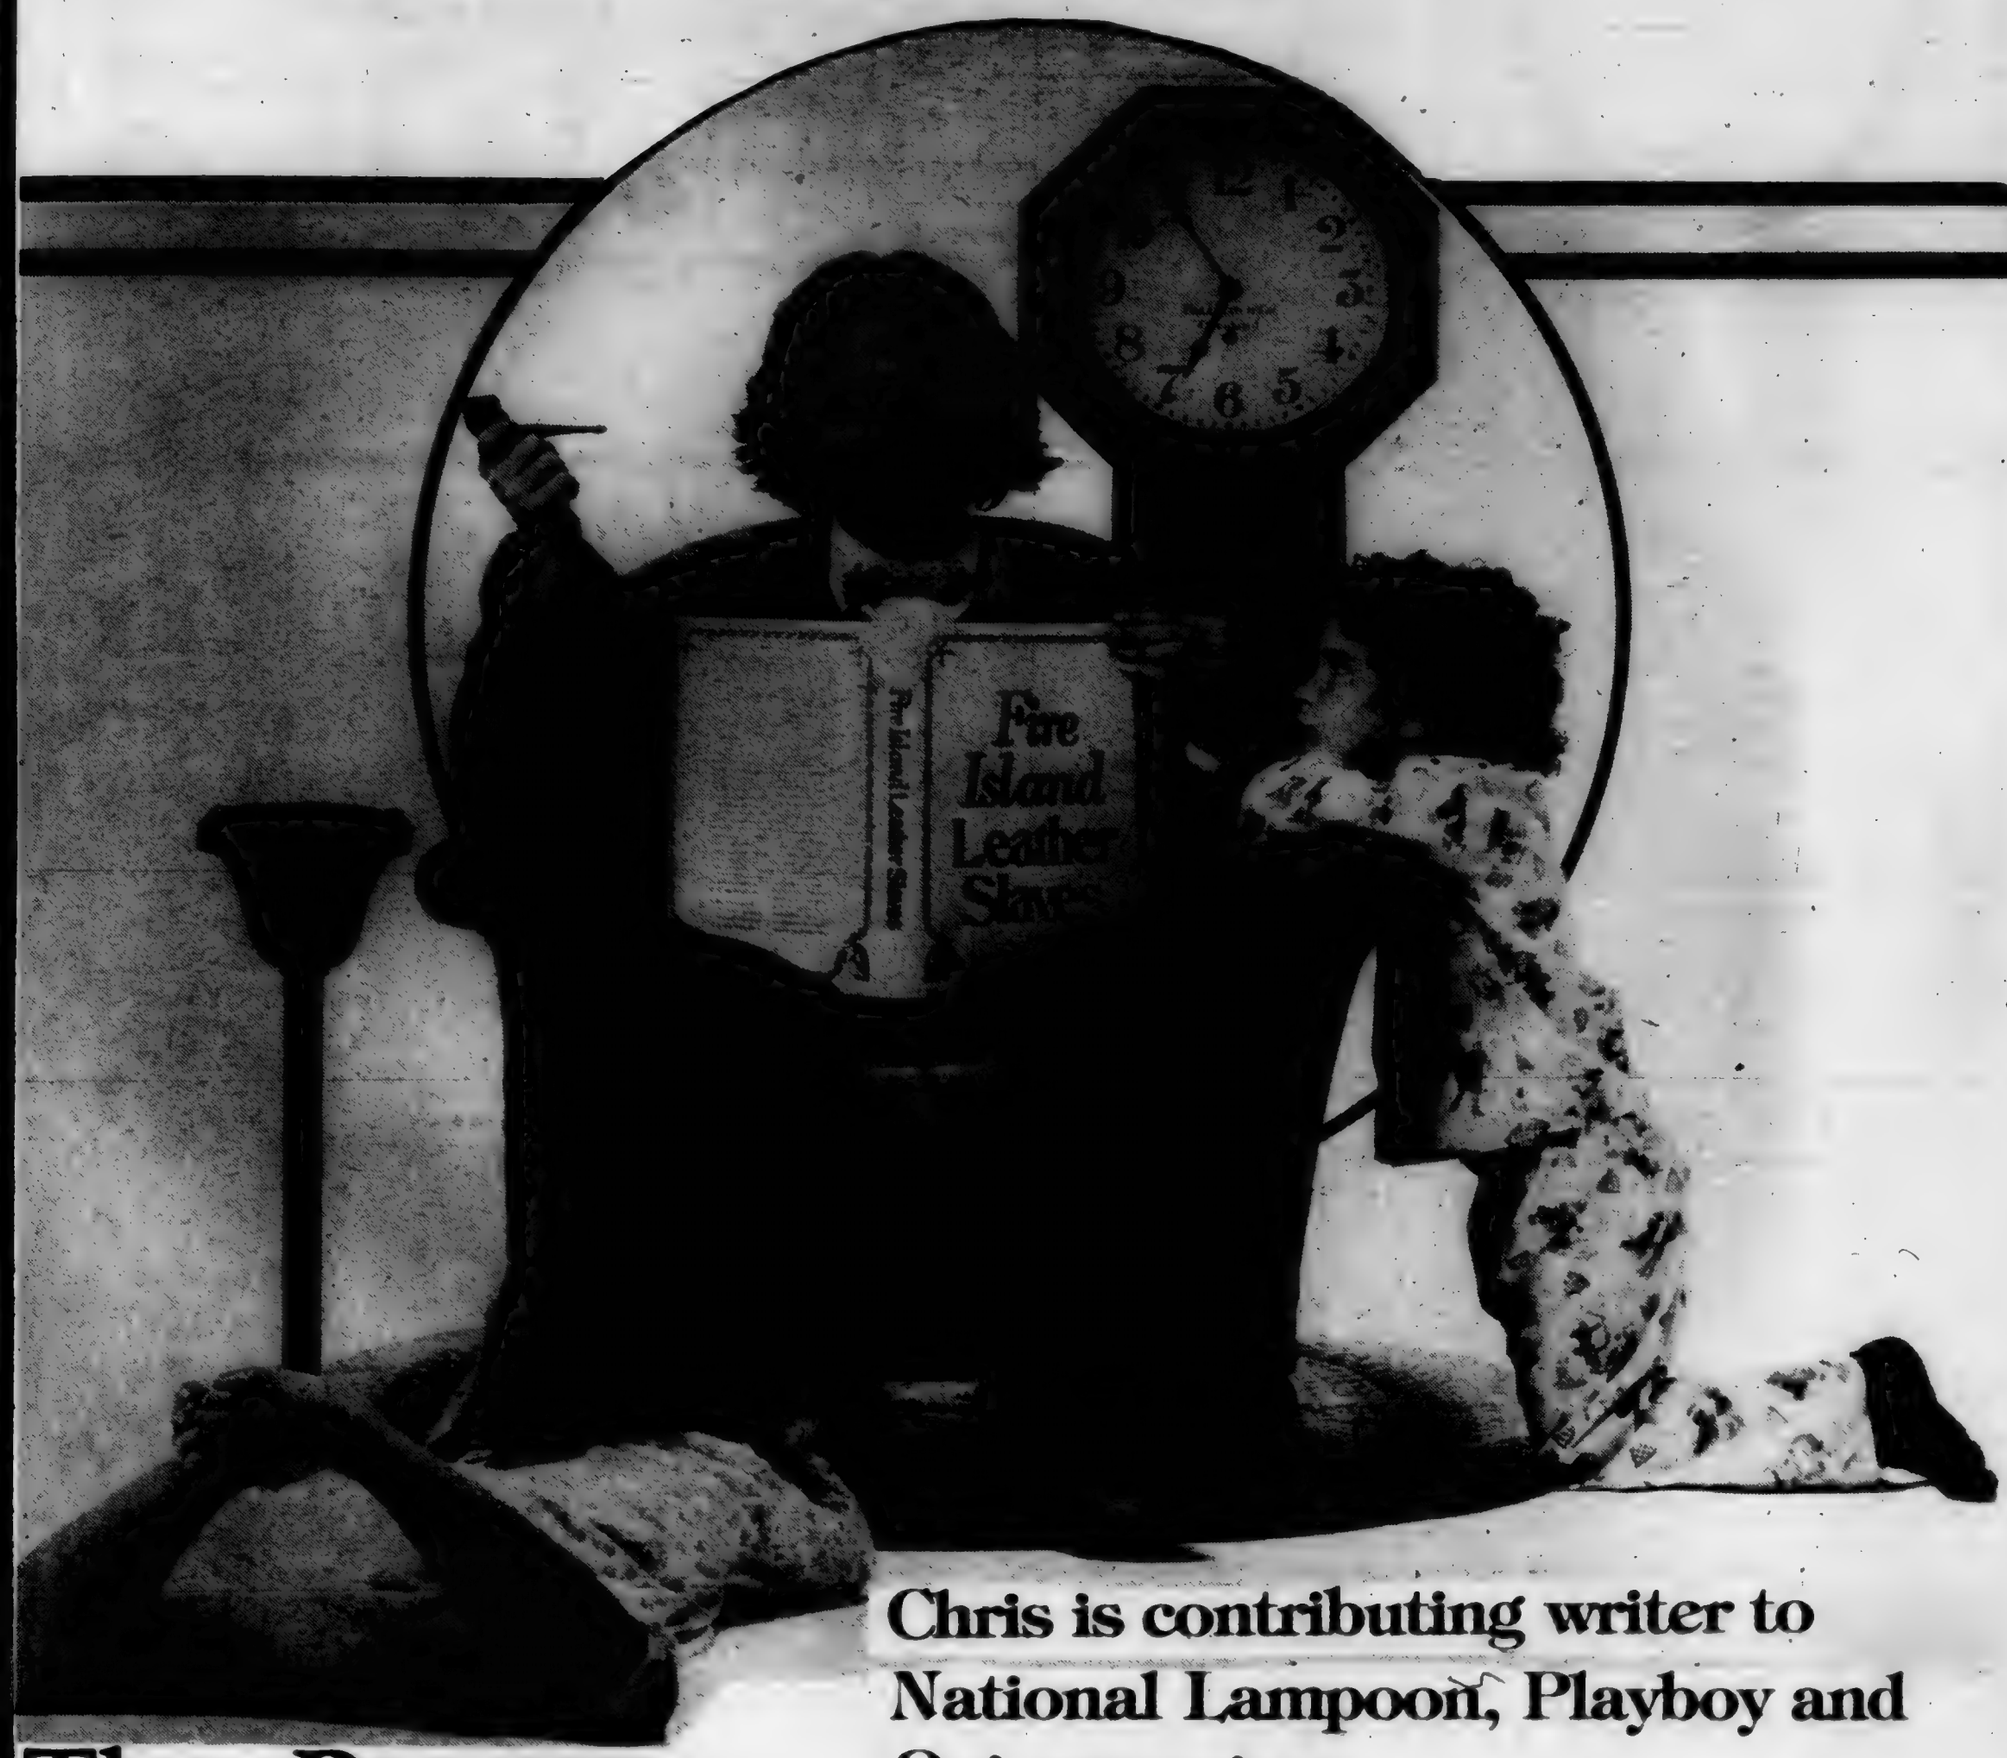
To the Editor:

I was sure I'd never write another letter to the editor but then I asked myself, "Why the hell not?!" Jeff Peckerman wrote two obnoxious letters last fall in which he ridiculed two very good friends of mine – Henry Chamberlain (who he referred to as Henry Chambermaid) and Carl Yaztremski whom he called a "second rate" outfielder.

Then Mr. Peckerman told us he was offended because I called him, and some other New York Yankee fans, "loud, obnoxious, illogical, and ignorant." Well I don't know, Jeff, but if you asked Mr. Yaztremski what he feels in the matter, he would probably agree with me. (Henry certainly does.)

Then, Mr. Peckerman informed the public that I should "verify my facts" because New York fans are not "fair-weather fans." Well Jeff I say they are; you say they aren't. There ain't no good guy... there ain't no bad guy... there's only you and me, and you're still wrong.

Another point Jeff. The football team that plays in New Jersey is called the New York Giants. If you don't think so, then write ABC Sports, and they will tell you personally. Why don't you get your facts verified before presenting your views to the public?



Well, Jeff, the season's over; the Yankees acquired Louis Tiant; Yaztremski got traded to St. Louis (see National Sports Briefs), and Fenway Park is on the market. Rumor has it that the Braves are returning to Boston to begin a "Braves Dynasty" that should last into the twenty-first century. The manager of the team will be Ted Williams; Lou Gehrig will play right field. And if you don't agree with my opinions, Jeff, then why not write a letter to the Cynic. They might need the filler.

Thanks sincerely,
and forever
Head And-Booze

SA Speakers Presents:

Chris Miller's Story Hour

IS SEX FUNNY?

Chris is contributing writer to National Lampoon, Playboy and Oui magazines.

The Program

Since the dawn of man, human beings have been finding their procreative activity hilarious. Read a Greek play, a Roman epic, a Chaucerian poem—chances are you'll find it full of sly references, double-entendres and bawdy, imaginative suggestions. In fact, the "dirty joke" is so old it was probably invented by cave men, or even monkeys. So what's so funny about sex?

Chris Miller, today's heavyweight champion sexual humorist, has several theories. Fortunately for him, most of them are unprintable, so you'll just have to hire him to come talk if you want the straight scoop. In addition to the lecture portion of his presentation, Chris will read from his body of stories, including such favorites as Groin Larceny, The Toilet Papers, Caked Joy Rag, Stacked Like Me, Tales of Nozzlin High School, and Pinto's First Lay. He will also engage in a question and answer session.

December 6
9:30 PM
Ira Allen Chapel
$1.00 w/ UVM I.D.
$2.00 General Admission

Tickets on Sale Now !

BOX OFFICE:

The Ticket Store 863-0466
Park Center Building
131 Main St. Burlinton
10:00 4:00 mon.- sat.

Tickets
Also Available at The Door

The Box Office
Grassemount
UVM Burlington
10:00-4:00 mon.- fri.

The LAST CHANCE
Saloon
Wednesday
Is Ladies Nite
147 Main St

Lanz of Salzburg

Lanz Nighties...
Because it takes more than love to keep her warm...

Love... it sure is a good start. Yet, keep the above thought in mind when you shop for her for Christmas.

When it comes to keeping her warm... we've got just the thing to do the trick. Lanz Sleepwear. All in 100% brushed cotton flannel.

Pick a granny gown. A short night shirt. 'Jammies.' And top your pick with a cozy Lanz robe. All in signature plaids and sweetheart prints. Sixed XS-S-M-L. The Lanz of Salzburg sleepwear collection. Priced from $14.00 to $32.00.

She'll revel in the warmth... of your love.

—Lingerie on Main

ARTS/ OBSCENITIES

Dr. Richard Daddle to Head New Procrastination Program at UVM

By Diana S. Greene

Next semester for many students will be the first opportunity to develop the familiar yet unspoken of art of procrastination. The College of Arts and Sciences has finally, after lengthy debates and bureaucratic delay, recognized the necessity for a course which will improve students' skills in procrastination while cultivating an appreciation for fine procrastination.

Now, UVM not only acknowledges procrastination as an essential art form, but also has made The Quintessence of Procrastination (FA 24) a requirement for all students enrolled in the College of Arts and Sciences — regardless of year, major, or intelligence. The following is an interview with Dr. Richard E. Daddle, the professor and acclaimed expert on the subject, who will be heading the program next semester.

Cynic: On behalf of the UVM student body let me begin by saying welcome Dr. D. We all are very excited and elated to see procrastination get the respect and attention it deserves.

D.D.: Thank you Diana, I must say it is an honor as well as a reward for me to be heading the program here at UVM and I must add that I find UVM not only progressive in thought but advantageous in spirit.

Cynic: Having never studied the art of procrastination before, many students, including myself, are wondering how this course will betray it; more specifically Dr. D, will you be using lectures, discussions, or both as your mode of education?

D.D.: I cannot honestly say because as of yet I have found myself so busy with my new office, home, and wife that I have put off writing a course description and the like, which reminds me it's due at the dean's office tomorrow — so if you could possibly stop by tomorrow I'll have a much better idea.

Cynic: Is there a certain method or style of procrastination that you profess?

D.D.: Let me see here... hmmm... I'd expect the style one uses is a personal choice that corresponds to a particular lifestyle. The form of procrastination practiced works in accordance with a person's physical environment and mental state of mind. Let me explain. Here at UVM for example there are basically two types of students — on-campus and off-campus students. Now when a dorm-dwelling on-campus student decides to procrastinate he may visit a buddy next door, down the hall, or across the commons. People, card games, drug taking, ping-pong, and general socializing are the most accessible and viable means of procrastination here. However, for the off-campus people these are not as available as a diversion though household related procrastination methods are plentiful. The household related methods require more imagination and are generally measurably productive — i.e. cleaning dishes, cooking a bit to eat, reorganizing the kitchen cabinets. There are, however, innumerable ways in which everyone can procrastinate which have no limitations, discriminations, or requirements such as the widely practised area of list-making, or the more specified ones of sleep, dining out, exercise, bathing, telephoning, and spacing out. All these methods are easily accessible and therefore are a firm basis for any and all procrastinators.

Dr. Richard Daddle at home

"Since procrastination is indeed an art form, it follows that just as dance, music painting, and literature have been influenced and modernized by automation, lack of religious faith and infinite cosmos- so, too, has procrastination." -Dr. Richard Daddle

Cynic: Can contemporary procrastination compare to modern — perhaps even existential art of today?

D.D.: Since procrastination is indeed an art form, it follows that just as dance, music, painting, and literature have been influenced and modernized by automation, lack of religious faith, and infinite cosmos — so, too, has procrastination. I ask you could we have modern procrastination without TV, tapedecks, strobelights, or McDonalds — the answer is simple — no.

Cynic: Many professors I have spoken with here at UVM seem to think procrastination over the past year has flourished — what with extensions and incompletes being given out as easily and as frequently as uncalled-for advice. Dr. D., do you feel that procrastination is indeed on the upsurge and if so why?

D.D.: Unequivocably yes — the art of procrastination has, after years and years of practice, reached its peak — not only on UVM's campus but nationally as well. I myself have been involved and dedicated to the promotion of procrastination for nearly 20 years and am overjoyed to see procrastination as popular and as widely practiced as it is today.

The reasons for its increase are infinite though impossible to pinpoint. I think with the times changing as they are — what with the social, political, and economic catastrophes that have occurred over the last 50 years, with the last 10 years being particularly discouraging — Watergate, liberation, paraquot, inflation, and red dye no. 2 — people, especially the youth of today, are making conscious attempts to procrastinate as a form of silent revolution as compared with the older form of revolution — namely organized opposition. I strongly believe that if more people procrastinated we would have a more peaceful and harmonious country.

Cynic: Some psychologists think the acceptance of procrastination will improve students' self-esteem and sense of worth, — do you agree or disagree?

D.D.: I agree wholeheartedly. You see students are notorious for their procrastination techniques and I am happy and relieved to see not only the educators of the country, but society at large accepting and understanding the import and value of procrastination. It seems ridiculous for anyone to deny and repress the gift of procrastination endowed to them by heaven above.

Cynic: I notice you are not wearing a watch Dr. D. and there is no clock in your office. May I ask why not?

D.D.: Being that I consider myself a professional procrastinator, I am constantly seeking to perfect my style and in doing so I've discovered giving up all reminders of time is extremely helpful in my pursuit to kill time.

Cynic: I see from your diploma here on the wall that you received your doctorate from Harvary Mudd University in 1953. I wonder if you might describe your college experience briefly.

D.D.: If you are not familiar with Muddy as we call it — it is hard to explain really because it is so unique in approach. I learned through my many years at college that I was talented — something I had never thought myself to be. After my first semester I knew I was a prodigy of procrastination. Overwhelmed is the only word that can come close to describing how I felt to have found my purpose in life at such a young age.

Cynic: In the years previous to college?

D.D.: I forgot to say how delighted my parents were. I wrote home after a titilating evening and afternoon of solo procrastinating without someone else's company. I was devastated by the tremendous feeling of independence, maturity, and strength that possessed my total being.

Cynic: Oh I see Dr. Daddle — Do you have any last comments?

D.D.: Yes — just one. I feel that those who do procrastinate do it intentionally, and not only do they do it intentionally, also they do it habitually. So if any students are receiving guilt signals from their super-egos, I suggest that they fess up to the fact that not only is procrastination a legitimate talent, but it's also hip.

LEVI'S

JEANS

AND CORDS

$12.90

Levi's

Pants Plus

12 N. WINOOSKI AVE.
BURLINGTON, VT.
802-864-0181

ENGINEERS

Federal Government agencies are involved in some of the most important technological work being done today....in energy fields, communication, transportation, consumer protection, defense, exploring inner and outer space and the environment.

Some of the jobs are unique, with projects and facilities found nowhere else. Salaries are good, the work is interesting and there are excellent opportunities for advancement.

Our nationwide network can get your name referred to agencies in every part of the country.

For information about best opportunities by specialty and location, send a coupon or your resume to Engineer Recruitment, Room 6A11.

U.S. Civil Service Commission
Washington, D.C. 20415

An Equal Opportunity Employer

Name _____

Address _____

City _____ State _____ Zip _____

Degree level and Engineering speciality _____

Univ. Col. _____ Yr. Grad. _____

Geographic Preference(s) _____

_____

Tel. no. _____

Getting Ready for the format change: (Left to Right) WRUV directors Doug Fang, Lori Goodperson, and Jay Schnausser practice a little B & D down at the station.

WRUV Goes Disco- Punk

By Andrew Levine

Following weeks of criticism, WRUV-FM has decided to make a drastic change in its programming by abandoning its progressive orientation and moving into a disco-punk format.

In the middle of September, WRUV started a campaign for student and community feedback. The station wanted to know how it could improve its air quality and what its listeners wanted to hear. At first, responses were slow, but when the Nov. 15 deadline arrived, listener sentiment was clear – more disco and punk.

The decision was not an easy one to make. The executive board, the decision-making vehicle for the station, hadn't met in over a year, and some people did not even know it existed. Usually the board does not consider the desires of its listeners. Instead, it tries to offer a comprehensive program of all types of music. But with pressures from S.A. to conform to the students, the station initiated a survey to discover student tastes. Surprisingly, rock and country music were not as popular as believed, with punk and disco well ahead of all other categories. A separate, undefined category of Queen and Kiss was a distant third.

Station manager Doug Fang was shocked. "We (station executives) started the feedback program to find out what our listeners liked. Although we thought some people enjoyed our progressive style, obviously we were wrong. In light of the decision, WRUV will just become a non-commercial WQCR."

The new format will necessitate many changes at the station. Most of the disc jockeys at WRUV have little or no music. "I always knew WRUV knowledge of disco or punk, and have no desire to learn the new was off the wall, but I never expected them to go this far. If they expect me to learn that new crap, they're crazy," said one DJ who wished to remain unnamed.

Jay Schnausser, program director at WRUV, sees a long struggle to perfect the new format. As program director, he faces the problem of finding new disc jockeys and placing them in appropriate time slots. "Burlington, or UVM, has never attracted the kind of disc jockeys the new format calls for. We could bring in computers and be as boring as WQCR, but we would rather find "progressive" disco and punk DJ's. By progressive, I mean DJ's that could mix "The Dead Rats" (a well-known punk group), David Bowie, and Blondie with such famous disco names as the Commodores, Sylvester, and John Revolting. The optimum DJ would even find room for some Grateful Dead or Oscar Peterson (a jazzy pianist)."

Another problem at the station is to get disco and punk albums. Previously, the little punk or disco sent to the station was used as ashtrays, frisbees, studio decorations, or objects to practice karate on. The record library, which contains over 15,000 records, was recently purged of all disco, punk, and John Denver albums to make room for the hundreds of new releases issued each month. Hopefully, the UVM art department has not started their project to turn the albums into a sculpture entitled, "The Garbage of the 70's."

One of the two music directors, Bob Chenhead, was noticably upset at the change. "I've been busting my hump trying to make this station the best jazz station in New England. Then, just when I reach the pyramid of success, some zone comes around and says that we're going disco and punk. Ever since I came here a year and a half ago, I liked working in the insane atmosphere of the station. But things have gotten out of hand. Asked what will happen with the station's jazz albums and incoming new releases, Bob answered, "Well, I'll just fill in my collection with whatever seavenger comes around." As of this printing, Bob was resting in a local hospital, recovering from a large intake of drugs due to sudden shock, a hospital spokesman said.

Lori Goodman, the other music director, was pleased at the change. "I've loved disco and punk ever since I started living over the Soap factory disco in Fort Lee, N.J. I can finally come out of the closet and let everyone know how I feel. Fortunately, I have been stockpiling disco and punk albums since I began working at the station two years ago. Now I can bring all the albums to their rightful home, the WRUV record library."

As the news circulated, disco jockeys and WRUV supporters expressed surprise and disgust. On the other hand, S.A. president Charlie Park said the change to South African congo rifts was a move in the right direction. After he was informed that the new format called for punk and disco, Park replied, "Well, whatever."

To fill the gap for progressive music which WRUV will leave, many former disc jockeys plan to open a new station below Billings, since the Den was just closed for health reasons.

Rolling Stones Roll Burlington: 2 Dead, Countless Injured

Mick Jagger: "Even though most of you believe I'm God, faith healing is definitely out of the question."

By C.C. Gonzo

All around me the audience was going completely crazy. Everytime Mick Jagger contorted his old body like a spastic cripple in heat or licked Keith Richard's nose for lack of anything else to do, there were raving banshee cries all around me. The Rolling Stones captured the hearts and lungs of everyone in the Patrick Gym last Friday night, but the whole story of the unbridled emotion was only apparent when the house lights went on. To the left and right of me from the first row on the floor until the beginning of the bleachers was a wave of white, plastered bruised and battered bodies that resembled, more than anything else, a huge collection of war casualty cases.

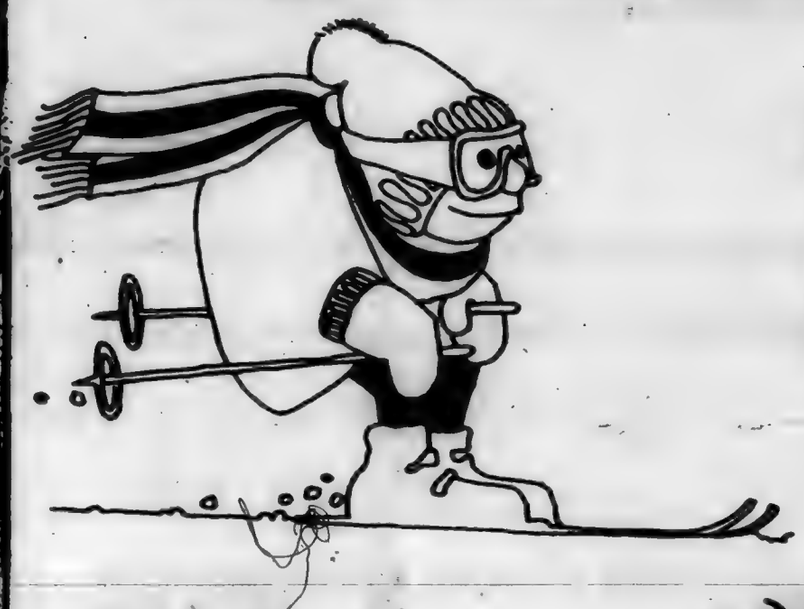
"I tell you, it was hell, sure hell," said a petite lady next to me with a bandaged hand and a white gauze patch over one of her eyes. "I was waiting in line last week, but when the doors opened I might as well have been sleeping in a buffalo stampede. I only managed to get to the ticket booth by getting wedged between two three-hundred-pound brothers who screamed "Satisfaction! Satisfaction!" as they plowed over the poor people in their path."

Is there a better way to distribute concert tickets except to make students wait all night in line only to face almost certain annihilation in some cases? Gortje Bortonklas, one of the fifty four students now facing major surgery in the critical ward of the Mary Hitchcock Hospital, was fairly adamant in his demands to the student concert bureau. "If Butler (Pat, the concert director) would spend more time looking into these matters instead of listening to all those punk records he has, things like this might get corrected."

A definite highlight of the show occurred about halfway through the first set when the Stones broke into "Shattered," a popular cut from their most recent album. As Jagger teased the crowd with "I'm tatters — I'm shattered" a group of seven or eight people to the left of the stage began ripping off their bandages and hurling them at the band. One girl even tried to pull the cast on her arm off but soon fell to the floor in agony as the pain became too intense.

Overall, the Rolling Stones seemed rather undisturbed about the medical mishaps that were assembled in front of them. Right before the first intermission though, Mick did remark to the crowd that "even though most of you must believe that I'm God, faith healing is definitely out of the question."

Were all the pain and problems worth it just to see five men play music for two hours? The general concensus seemed to be a resounding 'yes.' "What's a few broken fingers and a smashed nose when you can leave your work behind for a couple of hours and achieve electric nirvana?" one student told me as he limped out of the gym after the show.



But what about those who lost their lives in expectation of this event? "At least their parents don't have to worry about paying for their school bills next semester," joked Pat Butler.

WE WANT YOUR OLD SKIS AND BOOTS

We will give you top trade in dollar towards new equipment!

Both Alpine Shops Open 9-9

Skis
$21 to $278

Ski Boots
$37 to $235

Ski Poles
$5 to $42

Ski Parkas
$35 to $175

Ski Sweaters
$20 to $86

Turtlenecks
$11 to $16

DOWNHILL SKI PACKAGES
$149.95
Includes skis, bindings, poles, mounting, engraving

CROSS COUNTRY SKI PACKAGES
$99.95
Includes skis, boots, bindings, poles, mounting

FREE Gift Wrapping at Both Alpine Shops

ALPINE SHOP

Williston Road So. Burlington

OPEN DAILY 9 A.M. — 9 P.M.

Corner of So. Winooski and Cherry Downtown Burlington

STUDENT LEGAL SERVICE
-Student Seminars-

LANDLORD-TENANT RELATIONS
&
CONSUMER PROTECTION

WHEN: Wednesday – December 13th

WHERE: North Lounge – Billings Center

TIME: 6:30–8:15 Landlord-Tenant Relations
8:15–10:15 Consumer Protection

WHY: To provide Legal Information
To Answer Questions

FORMAT:

LANDLORD–TENANT RELATIONS
a) Leases
b) Eviction
c) Deposits
d) Housing Codes
e) Rent Witholding

CONSUMER PROTECTION
a) False Advertising
b) Guarantees
c) Mail Orders
d) Sources of Repayment

IF YOU HAVE ANY QUESTIONS, PLEASE CALL THE STUDENT LEGAL SERVICE: 656-4379.

REDWOOD IN THE ROUND
HOT TUBS

THIS WINTER STEP INTO AN EXPERIENCE YOU WILL NEVER FORGET!

For More Information: or call: 802-863-1478

Redwood in the Round
c/o Jim Oakes
75 Grant St. Burlington Vt.

Quick Flicks

'Deep Throat': A Symbolic Masterpiece

Existential symbolism in "Deep Throat"

By Rex Reed

Many of my friends have returned from Deep Throat and mumbled words like "trash," "garbage," "filth," "listerine." This only shows their sheer ignorance. Like that old cliche says, "you can't judge a cook by his cupboard," neither can you call Deep Throat a bad film because it has more bare breasts than a Kentucky Fried Chicken Franchise. I liked Deep Throat; the book, the play, the baseball cards, the rain jackets, the tear-away popcorn bottoms and now the film.

Lovelace portrays a confused, shattered girl who, through her own naive nature is force-fed facts she is not ready to swallow. Led on by domineering men who hold their own indecisiveness in such a manner that Linda is caught with a foul taste in her mouth regarding males. These facts are explicit enough for even the most ignorant filmgoer but how about really probing deep into the film's message?

To begin with, Deep Throat is made with twenty-four sprocket holes per second. Twenty-four is not only Linda Lovelace's age when the film was made but also the age Linda's mother was when she was Linda's age. We find the connection where 24 sprocket holes per second is symbolically related to the second Lovelace reaching twenty-four. This mother/daughter conflict is rarely found this explicit in any American film.

Secondly, the film emulsion used in Throat, Cellulose tri-acetate, is the substance found in California celery! This at first seems insignificant but think about it. Everybody at one time or another has had that age-old fantasy of spelling FUCK in their Campbells Cream of Celery Alphabet Soup! Some one in Hollywood is finally making films geared towards intelligent people!

Next time you watch the audience enter Deep Throat remember they're not going for the free rain coat given compliments of the theatre. Deep Throat is a film for the viewer who is looking for symbols. In this aspect alone Deep Throat has more symbols than the Buddy Rich story.

"To begin with, Deep Throat is made with twenty-four sprocket holes per second. Twenty-four is not only Linda Lovelace,s age when the film was made but also the age Linda's mother was when she was Linda's age"

Your Horoscope

Aquarius Jan 20- Feb 18

You have an inventive mind and are inclined to be progressive. You lie a great deal. On the other hand you are inclined to be careless and impractical causing you to make the same mistake over and over again. People think you are stupid.

Pisces Feb 19- Mar 20

You have a vivid imagination and often think you are being followed by the CIA or FBI. You have a minor influence over your associates and people resent you for your flaunting of your power. You lack confidence and are generally a coward. Pisces people do terrible things to small animals.

Aries Mar 21- Apr 20

You are the pioneer type and hold most people in contempt. You are quick tempered, impatient, and scornful of advice. You are not very nice.

Taurus Apr 21- May 20

You are practical and persistent. You have a dogged determination and work like hell. Most people think you are stubborn and bull headed. You are a communist.

Gemini May 21- June 20

You are a quick and intelligent thinker. People like you because you are a bi-sexual. However, you are inclined to expect too much for too little. This means you are cheap. Geminis are known for committing incest.

Cancer June 21- July 22

You are sympathetic and understanding to other people's problems. They think you are a sucker. You are always putting things off. That's why you'll never make anything of yourself. Most welfare recipients are Cancer people.

Leo July 23- Aug 22

You consider yourself a born leader. Others think you are pushy. Most Leo people are bullies. You are vain and dislike honest criticism. Your arrogance is disgusting. Leo people are known thieves.

Virgo Aug 23- Sept 22

You are the logical type and hate disorder. This nit-picking is sickening to your friends. You are cold and unemotional and sometimes fall asleep while making love. Virgo's make good busdrivers.

Libra Sept 23- Oct 22

You are the artistic type and have a difficult time with reality. If you are a man, you more than likely are a queer. Chances for employment and monetary gains are excellent. Most Libra women are good prostitutes. All Libras die of venereal disease.

Scorpio Oct 23- Nov 21

You are shrewd in business and cannot be trusted. You shall achieve the pinnacle of success because of your total lack of ethics. Most Scorpio people are murdered.

Sagittarius Nov 22- Dec 21

You are optimistic and enthusiastic. You have a reckless tendency to rely on luck since you lack talent. The majority of Sagittarians are drunks or dope fiends. People laugh at you a great deal.

Capricorn Dec 22- Jan 19

You are conservative and afraid of taking risks. You don't do much of anything and are lazy. There has never been a Capricorn of any importance. Capricorn should avoid standing still too long as they tend to take root and become trees.

Doolin's

COME RELAX IN AN INTIMATE ATMOSPHERE

Friday 5-7 Complimentary Cheese & Crackers

159 Main St. — Next to the Flynn

VT. RESIDENTS and STUDENTS

• ski for less •

at

Smugglers' Notch

| BASH BADGE | SEASON PASS | |
|---|---|---|
| 12.50 per badge | ADULT | $165 |
| Ski All Weekdays 7.00 | YOUNG ADULT/COLLEGE (22 and under) | 140 |
| Ski Weekends/Holidays 10.00 | YOUTH (17 and under) | 130 |
| 50% OFF LESSONS AND EQUIPMENT | CHILD (14 and under) | 95 |
| The perfect learn to ski package! | MID-WEEK PLUS (Save $5/day weekends) | 100 |

This is your Last Chance!!!

Prices go up Dec. 1st!!!

Conveniently available at BILLINGS STUDENT CENTER

Camera for pass and badge pictures wil be on location!

10AM to 4PM THURSDAYS and FRIDAYS

MAIL COUPON TO SMUGGLERS' NOTCH (with check)
JEFFERSONVILLE, VT. 05464, Box S.

☐ BASH BADGE
☐ VT. ADULT
☐ VT. YOUTH
☐ VT. CHILD
☐ COLLEGE PASS/YOUNG ADULT
☐ MID-WEEK

ACT NOW: Prices Increase Oct. 31st

Name _____

Address _____

_____

Age _____ Tele. _____

Mountaineering #5.

REGULATION GARB

You, a faithful follower of this space, have been a mountaineer for some time now. You've studied the fundamentals, selected your gear and experimented with methodology. In short, you are nobody's fool. Nonetheless, you also know a little knowledge is a dangerous thing. So you want to learn more. Smart thinking.

First, you must realize that once the basics of mountaineering are mastered, it is only nuance which distinguishes the true artists from the merely adequate. Therefore, attention to detail, especially in matters of clothing, is vital.

Always protect the head according to seasonal fluctuations. In winter, a warm hat is mandatory. (The head, after all, is the chimney of the body. Avoid cerebral heat loss – it diminishes your psycho-physio abilities.) In summertime, a sun visor or a billed cap will guarantee crucial visibility among the craggy peaks.

Pay particular regard to your footgear. Shoes should be sturdy and stable. A secure footing is of utmost importance. Without it, you're asking for trouble. Point of order: while mountaineering is pursued for fun, it is nevertheless serious business. If you are going to down the mountains, rather than vice versa, you must be confident of your standing.

Between the head and the feet lies the area known to pros as "the body." Mountaineering bodywear is usually based on personal preference. However, keep a keen eye out for one common criterion. Your clothes should be comfortable and flexible, allowing for open movement, specifically in the vicinity of the arms. A free and responsive arm is a mountaineer's best friend.

Certain accessories, of course, complement and complete the regulation garb. Expedition flags to mark your territory in public places, connecting ropes for those who prefer the security of mountaineering in tandem and backpacks filled with beer nuts, mugs, bottle openers and other paraphanalia. Beyond these standards, wardrobe styles range from the rustic to the refined. And well they might, for mountaineers are a rugged and individual lot, joined only by a common taste for excellence.

Don't just reach for a beer. BUSCH Head for the mountains.

© Anheuser-Busch, Inc. St. Louis, Mo.

Come Tune up with

The Rolling Stones

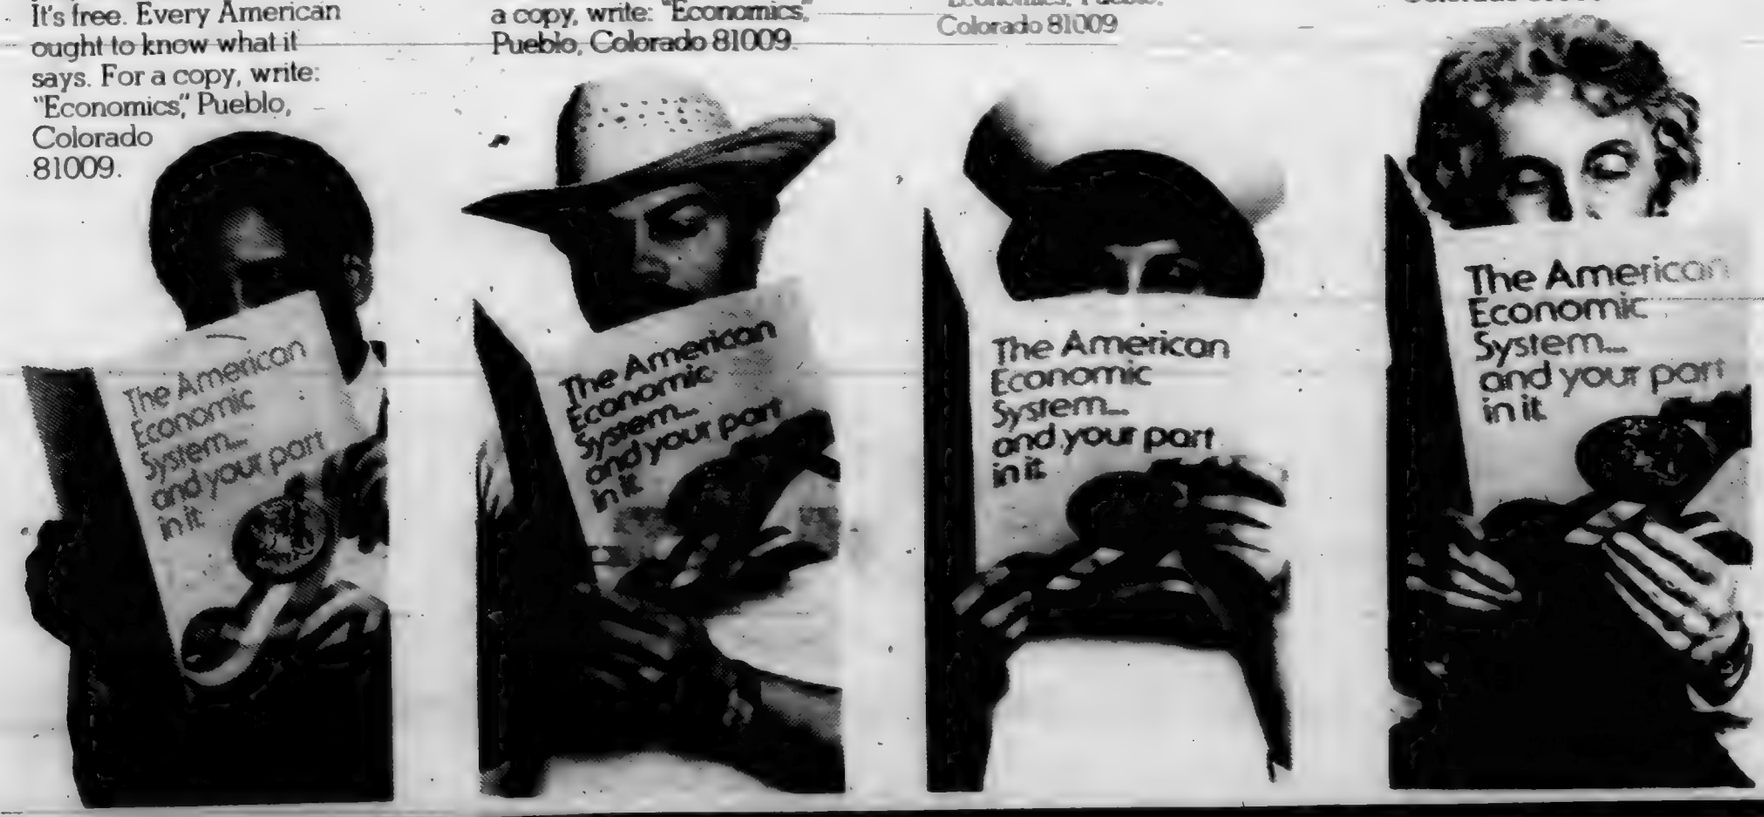
at Gordie's Texaco

They bought these Vermont T—SHIRTS for only $4.85
You can too ! practically on campus Williston Rd.

Who makes our American Economic System work?

Business? Labor? Investors? Government? If we don't understand who makes our system work, and how, we'll never be able to improve it. That's why we've prepared this special booklet. It's free. Every American ought to know what it says. For a copy, write: "Economics," Pueblo, Colorado 81009.

Do you really know what happens when business profits go up or down?



If we citizens don't understand the basic workings of our American Economic System, how can we make intelligent decisions about it? Every American ought to know what this booklet says. It's easy to read, interesting—and free. For a copy, write: "Economics," Pueblo, Colorado 81009.

How much change does our American Economic System need: A lot? A little? None?

The more we all know about our system and how it works the better we can decide what to preserve, what to change in the years ahead. That's why this special booklet has been prepared. Every American ought to know what it says. For a free copy, write: "Economics," Pueblo, Colorado 81009

Does America need more government regulation? Or less?

Your informed opinion is important. That's why we're offering a free booklet that explains the American Economic System. It is interesting and easy to read. Every American ought to know what it says. For a free copy, write: "Economics," Pueblo, Colorado 81009.

CALENDAR
Week of December 1-7

1 Friday

EXHIBITIONS

Francis Colburn Gallery – Catherine Hall: Fiber/paper/wax. 9 – 5 p.m.

Fleming Museum – "Tools & Technology." "Holiday Craft Show."

LECTURES

"Partial Purification and Characterization of Musde Cerboypeptidase A," J. Bodwell, 12 noon, B403 Given.

"Biomaterials – The Surgeon's Perspective," Dr. David Seligson, Bioengineering Seminar, 3:30 p.m., 224 Votey.

Poetry reading by William Corbett, 8 p.m., Church St. Center.

"Living in the World," an exploration of the Buddhist attitude toward earning one's livelihood. Given by David Nichtern, Director, Karme-Choling Buddhist Meditation Center, Barnet, Vermont and writer of "Midnight at the Oasis" and other songs. 8:30 p.m. FREE. Unitarian Church, head of Church St.

FILMS

SA Film "Cousin Cousine," 7:00, 9:30 & 12 p.m., B106 Angell, $1/ID, $1.50/general.

Church St. Center film and discussion, "What If You Couldn't Read," 7:30 – 9:30 p.m., free.

SPORTS

Men's hockey vs. Boston College, 7:30 p.m., Gutterson Field House.

OTHER

Cycling Club shirt sale, 9–3, Billings lobby.

Modern Dance performance presented by the Centre Dancers, 4 p.m., Royall Tyler Theatre.

2 Saturday

EXHIBITIONS

Fleming Museum – "Tools & Technology." "Holiday Craft Show."

WORKSHOPS

"Letting Go," 10 a.m. – 5 p.m., Church St. Center. Fee $12, pre-registration required, call 656-4221.

"Basketry Twining," 10:30 a.m. – 4:30 p.m., Church St. Center. Fee: $12.00. Pre-register, 656-4221.

Personal Growth Minithon with Nan Gurowitz and Susan Norris. 9:30 a.m. – 5:30 p.m. at the Vermont Institute for Transactional Analysis, 362 Main St. Tel. 862-6589. Fee $40. Pre-registration required.

Workshop 9:00 a.m. – 6:00 p.m. at Dharmadhatu, 31 Elmwood Ave., 658-6795.

"Transactional Analysis for Adolescents," with John Secor. 9:30 a.m. – 5:30 p.m. at the Vermont Institute for Transactional Analysis, 362 Main St. Tel. 862-6589. Fee $25. Pre-registration required.

WEEKLY EVENTS

Admissions Group Information Session, 10 a.m., North Lounge, Billings.

PERFORMING ARTS

Lane Series – "The Vermont Symphony Orchestra," 8 p.m. Memorial Auditorium.

Green Mountain Volunteers will hold a contra and square dance, 8 p.m. at Mountain Greenery, 77 College St. Partners aren't necessary, instruction provided and refreshments will be served. Admission $2.00. Any questions call Ben Bergstein, 863-6686.

FILMS

IRA Film "The Goodbye Girl," 7 & 9:30 p.m., Southwick, Admission $1.

SPORTS

Men's hockey vs. Clarkson, 7:30 p.m., Gutterson Field House.

Synchronized Swim, UVM Figure Invitational, 1 p.m. Forbush Pool.

This Page Is Totally Non-Fiction

3 Sunday

EXHIBITIONS

Fleming Museum – "Tools & Technology." "Holiday Craft Show."

PERFORMING ARTS

"A Festival of One-Act Plays," 8 p.m. Royall Tyler Theatre. Information 656-2094.

FILMS

SA Film, "A Star Is Born," 7:30 p.m., B106 Angell. Free/ID, 50 cents/general.

IRA Film "The Goodbye Girl," 8 p.m., Southwick. Admission $1.

4 Monday

EXHIBITIONS

Francis Colburn Gallery – Jeannie Campbell: weaving and ceramics, 9 a.m. – 5 p.m.

Fleming Museum – "Tools & Technology." "Holiday Craft Show."

LECTURES

"Structural Interpretations of Skeletal Muscle Diffraction Patterns," Dr. William Halpern, 12 noon, C219 Given.

"Chemotaxis in Rhizobia," Dr. Wm. Currier, 2 p.m., 122 Hills.

"Ultrastructural and Biochemical Analyses of Lymphocytes from Immune-deficient Patients," Dr. Jerry & James Schwaber, 4 p.m., C417 Given.

"Sex Induction in Hydra," Dr. John A. Davison, 4:10 p.m., 105 Marsh Life Science.

"Futures in Natural Resources: Land, Water, and People," Dr. Hugh H. John, 7 p.m., Memorial Lounge, Waterman.

"Wood Technologies: Vestigial & Adaptive Uses," Chester Liebs, 8 p.m., Wilbur Room, Fleming Museum.

WORKSHOP

7 – 8:30 p.m., 5th floor Waterman in the Center for Bilingual Education. "Dealing with End of Semester Stress: Coping with Pressure" with Alice Outwater and Steve Kalisch. Pre-registration required, call 656-4174.

PERFORMING ARTS

"A Festival of One-Act Plays," Royall Tyler Theatre, 8 p.m. Information, call 656-2094.

Guarneri String Quartet, 8 p.m. First Congregational Church, So. Winooski Ave., Burlington. Tickets $6 and $4.50 (students).

MEETINGS

VPIRG 5–6:30 p.m., Conference room C, Billings.

OTHER

Peace Corp. Vista, Billings lobby, 9–4 p.m.

VPIRG sweater raffle tickets on sale Billings Lobby, 11 a.m. – 1 p.m. Thru Friday.

5 Tuesday

EXHIBITIONS

Francis Colburn Gallery, Jeannie Campbell: weaving & ceramics. 9 a.m. – 5 p.m.

Fleming Museum – "Tools & Technology." "Holiday Craft Show."

FILMS

SA Film "Murmur of the Heart," 7:30 p.m., B106 Angell, Free/ID, 50 cents/general.

LECTURES

"Cytoplasmic vs. nuclear control of transformation," Barbara Israel, 12 noon, B203 Given.

"Characterization of cell line derived from fetal rat liver," Linda Shonk, 12:05 p.m., A125 Medical Alumni Bldg.

PERFORMING ARTS

"A Festival of One-Act Plays," Royall Tyler Theatre, 8 p.m. Information 656-2094.

WORKSHOP

"Middle East Issues – A Palestinian State?" 7–9 p.m.

"Smoking Legislation Workshop," 7:30 – 9:30 p.m., Church St. Center. Free.

MEETINGS

Christian Science College Org. 4:30, B102 L/L.

Wildlife Society – 7 p.m., Marsh Lounge, Billings.

SPORTS

Men's Swimming vs. St. Lawrence, 3 p.m. Forbush Pool.

Women's swimming vs. St. Lawrence & St. Michael's, 5 p.m. Forbush Pool.

OTHER

Peace Corp Vista, 9–4 p.m., Billings lobby.

SA Media Fair – 10 a.m. – 4 p.m., Marsh Lounge, Billings. Representatives from WRUV, Cynic, SPS & Graphics.

6 Wednesday

EXHIBITIONS

Francis Colburn Gallery – Jeannie Campbell: weaving and ceramics. 9 a.m. – 5 p.m.

Fleming Museum – "Tools & Technology," "Holiday Craft Show."

LECTURES

"Are All Roots Created Equal?" Dr. Frederick Magdoff, 12:10 p.m., 17 Hills Bldg.

FILMS

Asian Religious Program – part III of Louis Malle's film Phantom India ("Indians & the Sacred") 115 Commons. 50 cents donation.

Lunch Bunch Film – "Occurence at Owl Creek," 12:15 p.m., Church St. Center. Free.

PERFORMING ARTS

"A Festival of One-Act Plays," 8 p.m., Royall Tyler Theatre. Information 656-2094.

Lane Series – "The Harry Blackstone Jr. Magic Show," 8:30 p.m. Memorial Auditorium.

MEETINGS

SA Student Activities Committees, 3:10 – 4:10 p.m., Conference Room C, Billings.

SA Finance Committee, 5–6:30 p.m., Conference Room C, Billings.

Outing Club, 7:30 p.m., North Lounge, Billings.

SA Communications Committee, Conference Room C, Billings, 7:30 – 11 p.m.

OTHER

Peace Corps Vista – Billings Lobby, 9 a.m. – 5 p.m.

7 Thursday

EXHIBITIONS

Francis Colburn Gallery – Jeannie Campbell: weaving and ceramics, 9 a.m. – 5 p.m.

Fleming Museum – "Tools & Technology." "Holiday Craft Show."

LECTURES

"Estimating the Costs for Home Weatherization," 10 a.m. – 12 noon, Adult Basic Education, 110 East Spring St., Winooski.

PERFORMING ARTS

"A Festival of One-Act Plays," 8 p.m., Royall Tyler Theatre. Info 656-2094.

SPORTS

Women's swimming vs. Middlebury, 5:30 p.m., Forbush Pool.

FILMS

SA Film "Stalag 17," 7:30 p.m., B106 Angell. Free/ID, 50 cents/general.

Spurts

Arabs Finance Return Of Football to Vermont

By Amanda Miller

Varsity Football will return to UVM next year as a result of the failure of the soccer program, alumni pressure and private financing of an undisclosed nature, according to UVM athletic director Dennis Lambert.

The return of football was spurred after wealthy alumni refused to donate money to UVM, citing the lack of a winning athletic squad. Al Overton, president of the Catamount Club, remarked, "The fat cat alumni got really disgusted when the soccer team fucked up for the fifth season in a row. How can they come out and get excited with no violence going on out on the field. And with no winning team to root for, they said 'screw you' when we asked them for money."

UVM dropped football in 1974, after the administration determined it a waste of money. In its place, the soccer team was introduced as the major fall sport. But the soccer team has remained a bunch of losers and spectator support has dwindled to zero.

Soccer Coach Paul Reinhardt regaled, "They say we're a bunch of whimps who have no chance of ever being a national power. Well, we're trying, but those hot headed alumni want blood and guts and we can't give it to them."

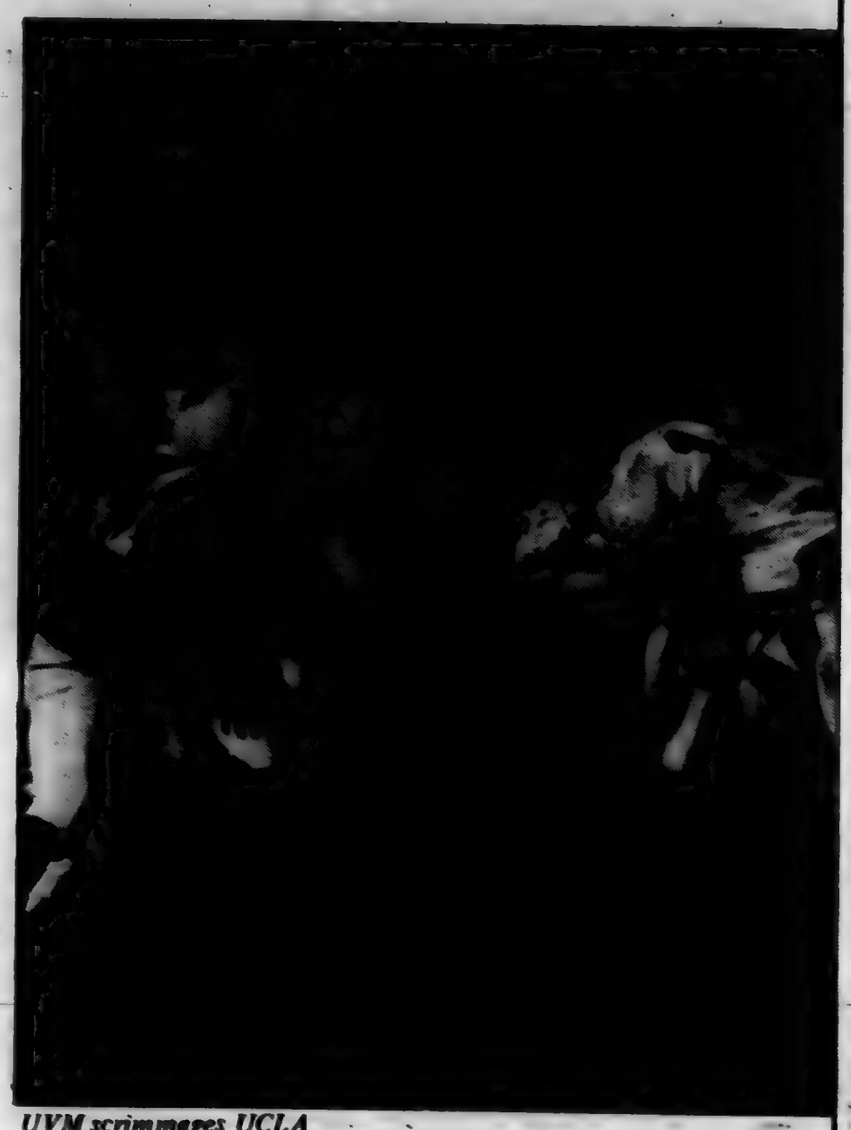
Lambert elaborated on the decision to bring Football back: "We received so much flack about having such a bunch of losers that we had to do something or the alumni would stop donating funds."

"We tried everything but couldn't field a team that could please the fans like football. The hockey team is getting the shit beat out of them, nobody wants to watch women play sports, and the basketball team has trouble tying its sneakers. So what could we do, we had to bring football back from the dead."

The only question was how could Vermont support a football program? It takes a lot of money to create a winning team out of nothing. So when foreign investors expressed interest in supporting the university's separation from the state of Vermont, Lambert was sent to talk to representatives.

After 24 straight hours of deliberation, Lambert returned with a signed contract which solved Vermont's problems. The agreement stated that the investors, rumored to be connected with the Shah of Iran, would fully support any actions needed to obtain and train a powerful, competitive football squad. The investors would also finance the construction of a $120 million 75,000-seat astrodome in which the team could play.

Lambert's surprising level of success is thought to be related to the personal preference of the Shah, who has reportedly expressed specific goals which he plans to accomplish. His main aim was reportedly to provide an ideal university setting for his daughter, who is presently a UVM sophomore. A university without football did not fit his idea of an ideal setting for his daughter's education, so he corrected the situation with a minimum of paper work.



In a telephone interview the Shah stated, "In America football is a tradition. The hard-hitting violence is a modern expression of ancient instincts. And a football-less university of Vermont, with no major sport to root for, depressed my daughter so badly that she asked me to give her a football team to cheer for."

The Shah is reported to have given Lambert an unlimited budget to recruit new coaches and buy the best in equipment and facilities. Lambert also will hand out complete scholarships to fifty of America's top football stars, giving Vermont an instant checkbook football team, comparable to the New York Yankees.

The Vermont Cynic has learned that George Allen, former Washington Redskin helmsman, has been hired as Vermont's new football coach. Allen reportedly was offered $10 million by the Shah, an offer far surpassing his current $2 million contract to be giddy with CBS' Phyllis George on national TV during pro-football broadcasts. Assistant to Allen will be the Redskin's Mr. Duke, famed for his enlightening use of medication in increasing athlete output. Reached at his Georgetown home, Mr. Duke remarked that he is looking forward to working with the new Vermont team, who he vowed to have flying high by their first game. "I have big plans for those boys. I just got in a new shipment that will really get them charged up."

Coach Allen commented that he is already hard at work scouring the nation's schools for the best athletes to recruit for the new Vermont squad. "I've promised all the money, cars, parties and gut courses that any jock could want. After all, the Shah's daughter deserves to see only the best head smashing on Vermont's field."

Vermont's fall 79 schedule includes the likes of powers UCLA, Nebraska, Notre Dame, Army, Penn State, Michigan, Yale and Oklahoma. Lambert concluded, "With this kind of money, we should have the greatest football team in the East. With a winning team the alumni can finally root for, the sky is the limit."

UVM scrimmages UCLA

UVM Coach George Allen and Mr. Duke

UVM Quarterback Ol Simpleton on the move

New—Casio's super slim pocket calculator, the LC-78 Mini-Card.

UNIVERSITY STORE
ON THE CAMPUS

Side View-only ⅛" thin

$28.75 As thin as two quarters!

At first glance, it seems impossible that Casio could have packed so many big functions into such a thin, compact case. But Casio has done it, as you can see:

- 4 function calculator (+, −, ×, ÷) plus constants for ×/÷
- Independent memory (M+, M−, MR)
- Perfect percentage—regular, ratio, add-on, discount, mark-up, profit, increase/decrease.
- Comes in leatherette card-wallet case.
- 8-digit liquid crystal display also shows function command signs to help you operate it easier.
- Super thin horizontal design.
- Only ⅛" H × 3½" W × 2⅝" D and weighs just 1.4 oz.

CASIO®

beer wine

THE ONLY

BEVERAGE WAREHOUSE

IS IN WINOOSKI

Lowest Prices Largest Selection

kegs soda

APRIL'S ATTIC

antique clothing & accessories

for ladies, gentlemen, and children

✻NOW OPEN✻

at the Warehouse

77 College St. Burlington

Please come in and visit us.

10:30-5:30 Mon.-Sat.

Vermont Gymnastic Steroid Scandal Uncovered by NCAA

By George Batchelor
Special Investigative Reporter

The UVM Women's Gymnastics team has been disqualified from NCAA competition this season and put on probation for the next five years for violating strict regulations concerning the taking of steriods by athletes.

The investigation, begun six months ago by NCAA officials, charged women's coach Debbie Koschiusko with the "direct and knowledgeable administration of illegal drugs to athletes in an attempt to hinder their physical development, thus increasing the length of time during which they could be athletically effective."

Coach Kosciusko was unavailable for comment. Her lawyer, Mr. John Martin, denied the charges but would not comment further.

The investigation stemmed from a doctor's report which stated that Vermont's leading gymnast, Jane Trombley, was suffering from the effects of an abnormally high level of the hormones projesterone and estrogen. This hormone, when injected into a young woman's bloodstream, prohibits the arrival of menstruation almost indefinitely, thus keeping the woman's bodily weight distribution in the pre-pubertal stage.

"There were only two possibilities," explained Doctor Bernhard Miller. "Either the girl's body was having serious natural problems controling the production of estrogen and progesterone, or their levels were being controlled externally. We checked deeply into both possibilities and it turned out to be the latter. Then it was just a matter of stopping the injections of the drug and letting the woman's body procede as normal."

A total of 13 out of 20 women on the team have been given steroids for a period of at least two years during their athletic careers. The six Vermont Gymnasts have been under the effects of the drug since they were 12 years old.

The Federal Bureau of Investigation is looking into the possibility that Dr. Miller has disclosed a widespread violation of the law by high school as well as college athletic coaches.

"There is no question that there is more to this than meets the eye," stated FBI detective Bob McLiverty. "What we have uncovered here may be one of the biggest high school–college athletic scandals in the last 50 years."

"I'm afraid," UVM director of athletics Dennis Lambert added, "that this will not only be a setback for Vermont's athletic reputation, but also for women's athletics as a whole."

Lambert Shot While Jogging

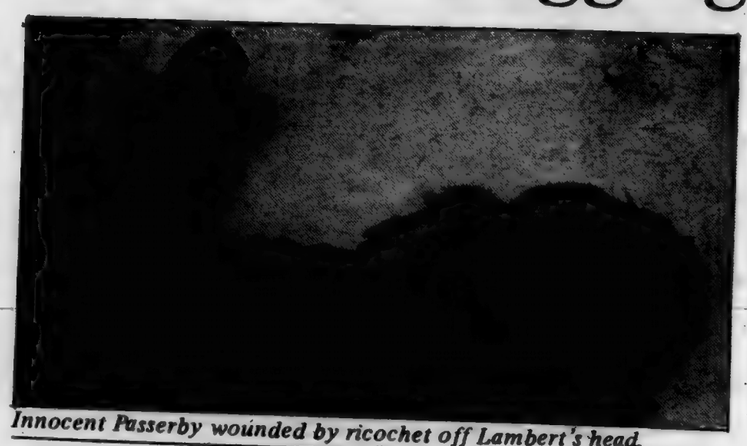
By Tom Cianciolo



Director of Athletics Dennis Lambert was shot in the head at 6:00 a.m. Sunday morning while jogging on the UVM joggers' course.

Lambert, although shocked at finding himself shot, rested only a moment and then continued running, finishing the three-mile course in record time. Afterwards, Lambert jogged down to the police station, where he reported the crime while his wound was attended to.

"We have no clues as to who could have shot Lambert," admitted Burlington Police Chief Arthur J. Gazebo, "but we believe that it was a deer hunter with very bad aim."

It appears that Lambert, who frequently runs the jogger's course in the early morning, was not wearing the advised fluorescent green Nike running shoes which usually distinguish joggers from deer.

"It's not surprising when you really think about it," commented one jogger when asked if the accident would cause him to stop using the trail. "I've seen a lot of hunters hanging around the trail waiting for deer. They must have heard Dennie coming, figured no one in their right mind would be out that early on Sunday, and shot him without really looking."

Innocent Passerby wounded by ricochet off Lambert's head.

The police have put an extra detective on the case in hopes of coming up with some concrete evidence before the season ends.

"I can't believe it!" exclaimed Lambert from his hospital bed where he is recuperating well. "It's gotten to be so a man can't take a jog before breakfast any more. I was stunned."

Upon hearing of Lambert's outstanding effort, Will Cloney, chairman of the St. Patrick's Day Boston Marathon, offered Lambert a complimentary entry in the race.

"The standards are normally much stricter," explained Cloney, "but I figure Lambert deserves some reward for his efforts. It's absolutely amazing."

Upon hearing the news, Lambert smiled and winced, "I'll be there," he said.

Lambert will recover in less than a week with no serious complications, but the Burlington police may never find the near-sighted hunter who almost bagged a prize buck.

Waterman Olympics

By Eve Goldstern

In one of the most exciting Waterman faculty olympic contests in its 62-year history Dean of Students Keith Miser edged out Vice President for Academic Affairs Bob Arns in the high jump with a spectacular leap of 7 feet 4 inches.

Miser's jump broke his previous longstanding record of 6'11" set in the 1972 meet. Arn's second place showing was quite an upset considering his low handicap.

In the Waterman Olympics contestants are handicapped based on size and age. In the high jump, the older, bigger and less agile the contestant is, the higher on the platform he gets to jump from. For example, Miser's handicap was 6½ feet, so he actually only had to jump 11 inches. This was no small feat for the Dean, however, as it took him three tries before he cleared the bar. Miser later complained of a sprained ankle suffered during his record-breaking performance. He remarked, "It's been a strenuous day."

Dean Miser takes a big jump off the platform

In other Olympic results, Treasurer Gordon Peterson edged out Baba Snelling in the 100 foot dash, with a time of 5 minutes, 13 seconds. Dean Frank Manchel won the shot-put with a lob of three feet 10 inches and Director of Student Activities Dave Nester shoveled 20 tons of bullshit in 67 minutes.

Coor Gets Sex Change To be Richards' Partner

University of Vermont president Lattie Coor revealed his recent sex-change operation today, remarking that he will quit his job to become Renee Richard's new tennis doubles partner.

The petite blond underwent surgery at the University Health Service after being invited by Richards to form a formidable doubles combination. Coor, who has changed her name to Lattiette, commented, "I was getting bored of Vermont and just sitting around the office, so I wanted to do something wild and crazy."

Lattie and Baba Snelling's secret romance is rumored to be on the rocks, now that Coor is no longer the strong administrative type. Baba fumed, "Now I'll have to settle for Fat Dick. I can't stand it when he eats crackers in bed."

Coor will join Richards at her Los Vegas training camp where the pair will hone their game to perfection before going on the Pro Tennis circuit later this month. Coor reportedly will gross $5 million from her first year on the courts, which according to Lattiette, "beats the hell out of the chicken feed I used to make chained to a desk in Waterman." Meanwhile Coor's wife has left home and is currently living with Lattiette's apparent successor Robert Arns. Said Arns, "That queer Coor dumped his wife and children just to play tennis. What kind of sportsmanship is that?" Mrs. Coor is suing for divorce, and 5% of Lattiette's income over the next ten years."

Lattiette 'After'

Renee Richards, contacted by phone, remarked, "I'm glad to have Coor aboard. She'll be just one of the guys. Who knows, maybe we'll get a whole team together now that Lattiette has paved the way."

Coor 'Before'

Sports Scene

Yaz to be a Cardinal

By Vladamir Polski

Under extreme financial pressure stemming from the current negotiations with Jim Rice's attorneys, the Boston Red Sox announced Tuesday that they had sold 38-year-old left-fielder Carl Yaztremski to the St. Louis Cardinals for a reported $3 million.

Commenting on the transaction, Red Sox General Manager Haywood Sullivan stated, "We've opened up our checkbooks for Rice, telling him he can have whatever he wants. He has indicated that he wants a 10-year, no-cut, no-trade contract for approximately $7 million, plus a clause which states that Yaz would have to be traded. We felt that the importance of keeping Rice in Boston, along with Yaz's old age, made the deal favorable for us. We regret losing Yaz as he has provided all of Boston with much excitement and leadership year after year."

According to Rice there were other factors besides money which led to Yaz's sale. "I want to prove to everyone in baseball that I'm the best leftfielder in the world. As long as Yaz is in Boston, he'll take away some of the recognition I deserve. Besides, everyone knows that Yaz despises me because I'm a Red Sox and I'm black. Scotty (George Scott) and I are the only two blacks left on the team, and I know that Polock has a lot to do with the Red Sox having all honkies in their organization."

Yaz to be converted

Commenting upon these developments, Yasztremski stated, "Although I hate to leave Boston, the money I'll be getting from St. Louis is three times as much as that Irish S.O.B. Haywood Sullivan was willing to give me. As for Rice, I hope his new contract has a clause for unlimited supplies of watermelon and chicken, because that's all he's really worth."

After learning of the deal, Pope John Paul II sent fellow Polak Yasztremski a telegram congratulating him on the deal. He stated, "My sincere congratulations on your move to St. Louis will be echoed throughout the Vatican and all of Poland today. It's warming to know that another Polak has finally been promoted to become a cardinal."

"I really enjoy my life as an Army Nurse. And the salary is super."

—CAPTAIN JOANNE HOPKINS

"I think I have a lot more opportunity to take a leadership position here. I feel special being in the military."

If you'd like to join Joanne Hopkins in the Army Nurse Corps, here are a few facts you should know. Army nursing is open to men and women under the age of 33, with BSN degrees.

Every Army Nurse is an officer. Your pay is excellent, and you get 30 days paid vacation each year. And your initial tour is three years—just enough to try the job on for size.

For more information about opportunities for Registered Nurses in the Army Nurse Corps, write Army Nurse Opportunities, HQ NERRC, Fort Meade, MD 20755. Or phone collect to 301-677-4891.

The Army Nurse Corps

HOMEMADE SOUPS • CLAM CHOWDER • CREPES!

• HOT CIDER •

BURLINGTONS BEST HOT CHOCOLATE

• HOT LEMONADE • LOTS OF TEA •

UNIQUE HOT CHOCOLATES • HOT CAPUCCINO • ESPRESSO • CUSTOM COFFEES

ben & jerry's homemade

ON THE CORNER OF ST. PAUL & COLLEGE BURLINGTON • 862-9620

SAGA'S CHRISTMAS SPECIAL

No Lines? Enough Seats? Yes! Saga's CHRISTMAS BUFFET, Wednesday, December 13th will be by Seating Arrangment Only. You must purchase a PRE-PAID TICKET in order to be let in. No one without a seating ticket will be allowed in. NO ticket sales at the Door. Pre-payment and pick up of your seating ticket can be made at the following locations, at these times beginning December 1, 1978:

For Redstone Campus - Simpson Dining Hall

Cheryl Rascoe - Secretary - Simpson Dining Hall ext. 3234
11:00a.m. to 1:00p.m. - Monday through Friday

For East Campus - Harris-Millis - Marsh

Linday McClintock, secretary - Living/Learning Food Service Office ext. 4375
11:00a.m. to 1:00p.m. - Monday through Friday

For Main Campus - Waterman

Eunice Sheldon - Secretary - Waterman Food Service Office ext. 3155
12:15p.m. to 1:30p.m. - Monday through Friday

SEATING TIMES:

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Waterman Dining Hall | | |
| 1st Seating | 4:30 - 5:25 | 325 limit |
| 2nd Seating | 5:45 - 6:15 | 325 limit |
| Marsh Dining Hall | | |
| 1st Seating | 4:30 - 5:15 | 150 limit |
| 2nd Seating | 5:45 - 6:15 | 150 limit |
| Harris/Millis Dining Hall | | |
| 1st Seating | 4:30 - 5:30 | 320 limit |
| 2nd Seating | 6:30 - 7:30 | 320 limit |
| Simpson Dining Hall | | |
| 1st Seating | 4:30 - 5:30 | 560 limit |
| 2nd Seating | 6:30 - 7:30 | 560 limit |

NOTE: Before 2nd seating tickets are sold - 1st seating tickets must be sold out.

Arab Oil Sheik Buys Smugglers Notch

Arab Oil Sheik Muhammad Epenshade has purchased the financially troubled Smuggler's Notch Ski Resort for a reported 14 million dollars, according to the Vermont Office to Boost Income. The new resort will be known as the "Camel Spit Ski Area."

Smuggler's was just one item on the Sheik's shopping list. Informed sources say Epenshade is negotiating to purchase "substantial sections" of the surrounding valley in anticipation of record profits when gasoline prices are raised to $1 a gallon. But it didn't take much to get Smuggler's to sell out, since the Jeffersonville Ski Area was on the brink of bankruptcy, after failing to draw enough UVM skiers to their slopes. Smuggler's was also in hot water due to the competition from glamourous Stowe and Jay Peak which both attract most of the rich Canadians from Montreal.

Smuggler's President Sepp Rupp said, "We pleaded and scraped to get UVM students to come here — we offered all the skiing one could want at a real low price, but we couldn't compete with all the booze, drugs and sex Mad River has to offer the UVM'ers. All the student trade went to the other areas, so we had no choice but sell out to the Arabs."

Smuggler's Notch has a history of being the 'backside of Stowe' with bunnyslopes, a plywood shack for a lodge and a frayed towrope. UVM student Joe Whitt, your typical seven day a week UVM ski-bum, said "Smuggler's sucks!"

But the dismal days for the Smuggler's ski area are over. A spokesman for the oil baron outlined plans for enlarging the mountain, making it 2,000 feet higher than Mt. Mansfield. with 69 trails, 20 lifts, three gondolas and a giant base lodge with saunas, pools, hot tubs, massage rooms, indoor tennis and a grand "snowroom." Total capital investment will reach 100 million, but Epenshade remarked "I have to do something with all this money and Muhammed Jr. wishes to learn how to ski."

Charles Cluck, UVM student association President, accepted a "commission" from the Arab shiek to set up skiing junkets to the new ski resort. UVM students will get 28% discounts on lift tickets, plus other deals on various services.

When queried, Mad River owner Jake Fealy vowed to step up his area's apres ski offerings to fight the new competition. The Camel's Spit Resort will open for the season December 10th. For lift ticket reservations, call 1-800-642-1212.

Present day Smuggler's Notch: A Frayed Tow Rope & Shack

Astrodome to Replace Centennial Field by '80

By Jamie Webb

In a special press conference held yesterday UVM President Lattie Coor announced the university's plans to replace Centennial Field with a 75,000 seat astrodome in order to provide sufficient facilities for Vermont's new football program.

The project, to begin this spring, is scheduled for completion by fall of 1980 and will cost a total of $120 million. Funding for the construction will come from members of OPEC (Oil Producing and Exporting Countries) of which the Shah of Iran is the leading contributor.

Although presently encased in political turmoil, the Shah has expressed an urge to make sure his daughter, now a UVM sophomore, will be able to watch competitive football in a suitable atmosphere.

The Shah's daughter was unavailable for comment but a spokesman stated that she was "pleased that her father is so concerned with her well being."

"It's the greatest moment UVM athletics has ever known," said athletic director Dennis Lambert. "There is no question about it. This is the beginning of a new era for Vermont's athletic program."

The main problem now confronting Lambert is finding a suitable football coach and then assembling a team good enough to fill the 75,000 seat stadium.

"At first I thought they were crazy," admitted Lambert, "But then I started really thinking about it and it might just work! With the money the Arabs have, we could whip up a top ranked team in no time. People will come from miles around to see Vermont play football. Surprise, Surprise, I told all those Cynic's out there that Vermont was destined to be a football superpower, but no one believed me. Thank God for oil."

Contractors have already begun bidding for the massive project, expected to be started by April 1st next year.

Sweat Inc., presently building the library addition, was the only corporation to be ruled out immediately. "The Arabs were not at all impressed with the way the Sweat people have been sticking to schedules," explained Lambert.

University President Lattie Coor commented, "This is part of an overall effort by UVM to create a really well-respected reputation for its athletics. As I see it, this is just the first stage in a process of continuously rising athletic and academic standards. I have no fears about filling the astrodome. Once we have the team, people will watch it."

CLIP

by

FRANK COOPER

Precision Haircutting for Men.

Clip is a special place with special people. People trained to cut men's hair with careful consideration given to hair texture and growth patterns, facial detail and especially to life style.

We are conveniently located in downtown Burlington in a spacious contemporary setting with views of Lake Champlain.

Call for an appointment or walk

115 College Street 658-6563 Burlington

Sports Profile

Larose & Chalmers:
Distorting the UVM Sports Picture

By Andy Phiggs

Every newspaper relies on solid coverage by its sports department to report the thrill of competition, the joy of victory and the agony of defeat. But the Vermont Cynic has been crippled for the past year by two bumbling sports editors, Rich Chalmers and Steve Larose, who have twisted every inch of sports coverage into a dimented pack of lies.

The tandem has been doing so poorly that athletes have boycotted the Cynic and have displayed signs at all games telling the fans to read the Burlington Free Joke's boring but unbiased account of the match, as an alternative to the Cynic's dribble.

Larose and Chalmers got off on the wrong track right from the start. Chalmers dreamed of becoming a priest all through high school, until he wrote a letter to the Banguard Press condemning the use of rubbing alcohol in the school infirmary. From there on he was hooked on writing, and joined his school paper as a certified lackey.

"If Chalmers weren't such a Flatlander he could swear and drink like me....."

Photo by Jim Otto

Larose stumbled upon the world of sports writing after being suspended from Missooski High for betting on earthworm races. Always an unorganized loser, Larose finally managed to hold down a spot on the student publication, the Prancer, covering local turkey shoots.

From high school it was a short stagger into the big time of the Cynic. Outgoing sports editor Bert Agree turned over the leash to the newly formed odd couple with the fatherly advice "Do Bongs." The high quality of the sports section immediately plummeted and has been sliding downhill ever since.

As Cynic Chief Dave Grief pointed out, one can clearly see that this sluggish duo is totally unskilled and unorganized. To date they have misquoted every member of the athletic department and slandered Athletic Director Denis Lambert by calling him "a whimp who got his job because he wouldn't cry when they dropped football." The disasters continued when Chalmers insisted during a post game interview that soccer coach Paul Reinhardt's real name was Sally. Larose had his press pass revoked for omitting the women's ice hockey team from "Sports This Week," and the dynamic editors have so outraged basketball Coach Peter Salzberg by calling him "slow-paced" and his team "lazy slugs," that they have been banned from Patrick Gym.

"Larose is such a slob that all the copy gets lost and I have to fabricate most of the stories."

In a recent interview, Chalmers remarked "Larose is such a slob that all the copy gets lost and I have to fabricate most of the stories." Larose retaliated with "Well, if you weren't such a flatlander you could swear and drink like me and still have some creativity left to do a decent Volleyball story." Our interview concluded when the conversation bloomed into a fist-fight between the pair of dedicated journalists who must spend hours together each week in co-operative teamwork.

Sally Guerette, Women's Athletics Director, was outraged when the sports editors used the term "jockettes" to describe UVM female athletes. She remarked, "If I ever get my hands on those two creeps, I'll twist their tools into knots."

In light of all this, if Chalmers and Larose ever get their shit together, the Cynic might produce at least one good sports section before the end of the semester. But if past performances are indicative of the future, they'll be turning out bullshit forever.

GET HIGH

We are conducting a study of marijuana and alcohol consumption in a social setting. The study will be conducted between January 15, 1979 and May 1, 1979. Applicants will be required to be involved in the study one night per week for five weeks and up to five hours of pretesting. Groups of four social friends who consume alcohol and marijuana must apply together.

Apply in person, as a group, at room 106 John Dewey Hall during the following times: Mondays and Thursdays 1–4 p.m.; Tuesdays and Wednesdays 9–12 a.m. The application process takes about one and one-half hours. Please plan ample time. Telephone calls will not be accepted.

FOR FREE !

VERY RANDOM NOTES

Ready to Party?

SCAE, the Student Committee Against Education, will have a massive orgy to protest any attempt by the faculty or administration to educate UVM students.

Festivities will begin with a showing of Cheech & Chong's Up in Smoke in the Billings Center. Afterwards, there will be a Bong-a-thon and a keg party at the Den. Speakers will include Professor Harley Walter Kidder, who will lecture on the importance of "Relaxation in Education." Other topics will include how to "Pick a Gut Course" and the "10 Best Ways to Cheat on Exams." Charles Clark will be impeached as Student President on the grounds of promotion of an academic atmosphere. Workshops will include "The finepoints of Frat Parties," "A Drinker's Guide to Down Town," and "How to Party and Still Stay in School."

Career Planning

Do you enjoy killing? Do you like to see good blood spilling all over the place? Do you relish kicking people's teeth in or smashing their heads in with rifle butts?

If so, the Marines are waiting for you. Come down to the Burlington recruiting office at 16 Beat Street, and sign up today. We're looking for "a few real assholes."

Defense Strategy

The Defense Department announced it has plans for a weapon that will outdo the neutron bombs, and put us back ahead of the Ruskies in the arms race.

The weapon called the "Synthesizing Heads in Traction" (SHIT) will not cause any major damage to buildings, like the neutron bombs, said officials. The unique feature of the bombs, however, is that only the heads of people will be blown off, leaving the rest of their bodies intact. The weapon development costs run just over 9 billion, and SHIT has been hailed by NATO as "an equalizer against the red horde from the East."

Witch Hunt

The UVM Religious department will sponsor an all-campus witch hunt scheduled for Dec. 8th. The festivities will begin with the performance of a member of evil deeds by renounced area witches and will lead through the trial, culminating with the famed water-test and burning at the stake.

Luther H. Martin, acting dean of the religion department, is very optimistic concerning the day's activities. "I'm pleased with what we have in store for the UVM students," said Martin. "I think it's important to have a good understanding of American history, and the witch hunts were without a doubt an exciting period in the religious development of America. The trial will begin in Billings North Lounge at 12:00 noon on Dec. 8th."

Suicide Suite

Unhappy members of the Campus Crusade for Christ are looking for more people to fill out a proposed "suicide suite" at the Living Learning Center.

Citing the Mickey Mouse antics of Crusade mentor "Josh" when compared to the dynamism of the late Reverend Jim Jones, student organizer Steve Augustine stressed the need for constructive action. He said, "Some people need to belong to an organization that confronts the realities of life head-on. Socrates realized this, and we hope to convince enough people at UVM to form a new suite. Augustine said – there would be a kool-aid and cookies get-together on Sunday at 3:00 p.m. in 115 Commons for anyone who is interested.

Greek/ Gay Dance

The Greek Coordinating Council and the Gay Student Union have announced that they will sponsor a dance at Simpson Dining Hall on December 1, 1978 from 8 p.m. – 2 a.m.

The dance will feature live music provided by "The Tongues" and will cost $1. Beer and mixers will be included.

SCAB

The Student Committee Against Blacks (SCAB) will hold its first meeting on December 25, in front of Ira Allen Chapel, at noon.

Mussa Leenie, who is organizing the committee, states that anyone who is white and comes from a middle or upper class background is welcome. "Our goal," he said, "will be to diminish the blatant over-diversification of this campus. I hope to banish all coons, chinks, wops, and kikes from this university. Since most of these people are communists, they are better off dead anyway."

SCAB will also sponsor a kite-flying contest, to be held on December 28, on the Redstone Green at 8:00 p.m.

Golden Fleece Award

They're not bragging about it in the Plant and Soil Science Dept., but PSS Professor Magdoff received on Nov. 1 the prestigious Golden Fleece award given by U.S. senator William Proxmire.

Magdoff was understandably reluctant about accepting the award, which acknowledges what Senator Proxmire feels to be the most worthless waste of taxpayer's money on a research project.

Magdoff's study is certainly an eye catcher. Basically, he has piled manure on a concrete slab and collected the liquid runoff to analyze for fertilizer purposes. The research project, an innovative approach to recycling a resource plentiful in Vermont, has the potential for a real contribution to farm economics, and if Senator Proxmire weren't such a shit he'd realize it!

Saga Room Service

The Inter-Residential Association (IRA) is responsible for providing you, the on-campus student, with conveniences and luxuries. We already provide you with refrigerators, recreational equipment, movies at Southwick, and many useful governmental services. But we want to do more to improve the living conditions in the residence halls.

Saga has recently presented a proposal to offer the on-campus student with another choice of where to eat. IRA is initiating a "Residence Hall Room Service Plan" in which any student may phone Saga for a quick delivery to his/her room. IRA is working out the details now of the "Room Service Plan," and will offer an experimental version of it starting in January.

IRA is a student service organization. We would appreciate it if you could give us more to do. We want to serve; we want the responsibility. Call John Allen at x-309 if you have any job or service to be carried out. After all, what is he there for?

Wanna Have Sex?

We are conducting a study of the effects of sexual intercourse upon students' academic output. The study will be conducted between January 15 and May 1. Applicants will be required to have sex three nights a week for five weeks. Subjects will also undergo up to ten hours of pretesting. Foursomes are preferred.

The study is being conducted by Psychology Department head Dick Dusty to determine if sexual activity detracts from students' academic performance. Students' study habits will also be examined. Prof. Dusty is ultimately looking for a pattern that correlates the increase in sexual activity with undulations in scholastic performance.

Apply in person, as a pair, a threesome or foursome to room 106, John Dewey Hall during the following times: Monday and Thursday from 9–11 p.m. The tryouts take about 20 minutes, please plan accordingly. Photos will not be accepted.

Malarial Dance

The Mary Fletcher Hospital, in coordination with the UVM Tropical Disease Club, will offer an infected malarial patient dance on December 18th. Only those people registered either with the Club or Mary Fletcher will be allowed entrance to Patrick Gymnasium for the festivities. If you have had malaria but have not registered with either of the above organizations, do so by December 9th or you will not be eligible to participate. Pock-mark proof as well as medical records will be required for registration. Playing at the dance will be the new up and coming band Swatignitc.

Gays Take San Francisco

In a bloodless coup the Gay People's Union has taken control over the troubled city of San Francisco after becoming angered by the murder of the city's mayor and first homosexual city supervisor.

Fran Bryant, Gay leader, shouted to the masses outside city hall that "the days of repression are over. San Francisco will become the city of love. We will banish all hatred and replace it with warm compassionate feeling."

The Gays were compelled to take action after San Francisco was plunged into turmoil when 900 People's Temple members committed mass suicide at Jonestown this past weekend. Later, San Francisco mayor George Moscone was shot to death in city hall. The mood of the city was termed as one of "extreme fear and paranoia." City officials remarked "who could live like this for long. We needed a change, and the Gay leadership is a refreshing change."

Bong -a- thon

On Saturday December 2nd, there will be an intense "Bong-A-Thon Blow Out" in the 2nd floor lounge of Wright Hall on Redstone Campus. The second floor will supply more than enough dope to get you totally fried, burned, even scorched. Bring your own tools – pipes, bongs, papers, power-hitters, rolling machines. We really want to blow you away!

Did you catch the date? Saturday, December 2nd at 8:00 p.m. Wright Hall, second floor lounge. Just follow your nose when you enter the building; you won't have any problems finding the place. For a reservation, call Howdy the Bongmaster, at room 214 at x3092.

Assas. Comm.

A Federal Bureau of Investigation Assassination Unit revealed today that it has linked the murders of President John F. Kennedy and Martin Luther King, Jr. to the National Rifle Association.

J. Edward Hoodger, FBI Chief, unveiled the results of a four year investigation at a News Conference outside the NRA's Denver, Colorado headquarters. The FBI has charged that NRA President Jack Neill ordered the slayings to prevent anti-handgun legislation from becoming law. Both Kennedy and King were in favor of strong anti-gun legislation and it is believed that the NRA killed Kennedy and King in order to stop the popular speakers from convincing the nationwide audiences that guns should be banned.

FBI Investigators staked out the NRA headquarters for several months, photographing and identifying all known members. FBI squad then raided the headquarters and arrested all NRA members within. In his immediate confession, NRA mentor Neill admitted that the actual assassinations had been done by 13-year-old Vermont deerhunters, who were told that they had to hit their targets before they could pass their hunter's safety course. FBI Chief Hoodger remarked, "These kids are so gun crazy that they'll shoot at anything that moves, including presidents and black ministers."

The younsters were also arrested, but immediately released after being scolded in juvenile court.

CLASSIFIED ADS

(THEY'RE FREE!)

OUTDOOR EQUIPMENT

For Sale — new men's medium down vest; men's Frye boots 9½D; tire rims for Seat 95-96, Jon 863-2664 eves.

For sale — pair of women's Zodiac tall winter boots, golden brown leather, crepe soles, size 7m, excellent condition (still new). Were $70, will sell for $45. Call Ellen, 862-6545.

For sale — K2 810, 204 cm (used 3x), with marker bindings (Rotomat heel & m4 toe) and brakes, $180.00. Olin Mark II, 190 cm, good condition, $25. Lange ski boots, size 6, good condition, $20.00. VW ski rack fits four pairs, $20.00. 1 pair of snow tires, 5.6 — 15, fits on VW $30.00 and 1 rim same size, $10.00 Call Michelle, x2282.

For sale — Skis, dynastar 203, 207 Rossignol Roc 195, Fischer 203, 207. Ski boots Lange Banshee, caber, Dolomite, Kastinger, all sized 7½—8. Ski poles 48", downhill racing ski poles, 54." Everything top quality racing equipment. Call evenings 899-2364.

For sale — Rossi Strato 207's and Head Master 205's, $35 each or best offer. Call Cindy at 656-2695.

For sale — 160 cm Blizzard skis with Salomon 444 bindings and poles, $45 for set. Call x2545 or 863-4450.

Wanted to sell 1 pair women's hiking boots, vibran sole, size 8-8½ medium. Used only 1 season. If interested call Debbie A. 863-4060.

For sale — ski bindings, Geze Olympic SE w/brakes. Brand new. List price $115... selling for $75. Call 658-4383 after 5:30 p.m. or on weekends.

For sale — Frostline mountain parseen down jacket. 65-35 shell and taffeta lining with down insulation. Men's small to medium or women's large to x-large. Only worn 6 months. Going for $50 (negotiable). Call Betsy 656-3305 evenings or leave message.

Wanted to buy — used English forward seat jumping saddle. 16—16½ inch seat. Fittings need not be complete. Must be in good condition! Please call Bev 656-2192. Leave message if I'm not in, keep trying.

For sale — 1 pair Nordica GT ski boots size 9½, good condition, asking $75. Nikko 7075 stereo receiver, 45 watts per channel power. Immaculate condition, many features. Sells new for over $400, asking $250. Call 863-9881. Ask for Phil Beliveau.

AUTOS

For sale — 1968 Olds Cutlass, 350 Rocket, fair but running condition, brand new carburator, snow tires, excellent for someone who knows his shit. Only $200 or semi-reasonable offer. Call Phil 862-7114.

1968 Chevelle Malibu 307 V-8, good condition, 2 new snow tires, $350 or best offer, 862-3973.

MISCELLANEOUS

Beautiful blue eyed, long hair white mother cat and her kitten need loving home. Take one or both. I will deliver FREE. Please call 425-2384.

Minolta pocket camera, new. Wilson steel frame 2300 tennis racket, new. Tennis bag, new. Price negotiable. Call Wendy days: 863-6323 or nights 863-1119.

Want to find out more about the field of law? Chittenden County Public Defenders need a student to help investigate factual matters for cases and interview clients and witnesses. Credit can be earned for this experience. If interested, call the Center for Service Learning at x2062.

Lost Vivitar instamatic camera in vicinity of Harris-Millis Hall. Reward offered, even for just returning the film. If found please call 656-3897 (Patsy). No questions asked.

Esalen/Swedish Massage with Polarity Pressure Points, 95 Kennedy Drive, Twin Oaks Tennis Ctr. Temporary student rate $10/hr. $6/½hr. Possibilities include (1) polarity "tune-up" to open, release, & balance energy, (2) Esalen massage, (3) foot reflexology, (4) back-neck-shoulder massage, (5) headache treatment. Sauna included. 658-0001 (best calling 10—2 p.m.)

Reward offered, lost pair of antique round Trotsky glasses on or near campus. Senbiwenbal, please call 864-6109, leave number.

MUSIC

12-volt D.C. regulated 3 amp running 4 amp surge, pace power supply. Run your car stereo or CB indoors off 120 V wall current. Was $50, now $25. Call Tom 656-4243.

Time to have some new sound in your room? Most major brands of stereo equipment all at low prices. Call or stop by, Danny. Wilks 214. x3444.

For sale — microphones, two Turner mikes, $100 for pair. New Sure mikes, all models near wholesale prices, call 862-0769.

For sale — Gemeinhardt flutes, near wholesale prices direct from factory. Call 862-0769.

For sale — Kodak pocket instamatic camera, focusing lens, $45. Call 862-0769.

For sale — new stereo equipment, same day delivery on Sony, Sanyo, Craig, Jensen. Near wholesale, call 862-0769.

For sale — stereo receiver, Technics SA-300, 35 watts per channel. Newest model on the line. Factory unpacked, barely used condition. Must sell because I have another one. Price negotiable. Call Ken x2194, 317 Christie.

For sale — used hollow body electric guitar, thin hollow body, two pickups sunburst finish with case, asking $150. Call Dave at 862-2257.

For sale — used FENDER, Coronado II, thin hollow body electric, two pick-up, bright red color, with hard-shell plush lined case. Asking $250. Call Dave at 862-2257.

For sale — used flat-top acoustic Gibson J-50 with hard-shell plush case, new price $710. Make an offer. Call Dave at 862-2257.

SALE — Now until Christmas, special holiday savings on musical accessories: everything from harmonicas to director's batons. Examples: reeds for clarinet and sax 40% Discount, on Rico and Van Doren reeds, metal folding music stands, $5.80 (reg. $7.75), mouthpiece brushes for woodwind and brass 58 cents, many other items guitar strings, straps, pitch pipes, capos, polish at Discount. Polishing/cleaning clothes for silver and lacquer, band instruments and pianos at 30% discount. See our special "music grab bag" music solo and song books at 40% discount. Call or write for our complete list of holiday savings on musical merchandise. Presto Music Company, Guptil Rd., Waterbury, 05676. Or call 864-0767 (this is our Burlington pickup and delivery phone — near Redstone campus).

FREE — yes a FREE case (soft-shell) with every new guitar purchased before Christmas from Presto Music Co. Many models to choose from: Guild, Guild Madeira, Yamaha, Aria. In addition to the FREE case you receive a 30% discount on the guitar. Also, several used electric and acoustic guitars: Gibson, Fender, etc., at bargain prices. Presto Music Company, phone 864-0767.

1 pair Criterion speakers, 12 watts per channel, in excellent condition, $40. Alan Aldag, 323 Christie, x2194.

Guitars and amps for sale — new and used. Consignment sales. Acoustic and electric guitars. Every item a bargain. Shop us before you buy. Stay awhile, play awhile in our unique guitar parlor. All new items carry regular warranties. Green Mountain Guitars, 65 George St. (near Post Office). Phone 864-9232.

Wanted to buy — FM tuner. If you have one you want to sell call Debbie A, 863-4060.

Exciting Selection of Handcrafted Items!

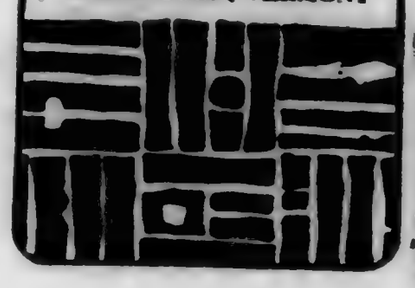
25th Annual

VERMONT HANDICRAFTERS



CRAFT FAIR

NOV. 16 • 17 • 18

Thurs. 12-9 • Fri. 10-9 • Sat. 10-5

MEMORIAL AUDITORIUM

BURLINGTON, VERMONT

Music instruments at 30% discount, guitars, amps, drums, pianos, drum sets, band instruments, music self-teaching books for all instruments. We buy, sell, trade used instruments too. Need an instrument repaired, we have a factory trained repairman convenient to UVM campus. We also carry a complete line of accessories from strings (at discount) to cork grease, mutes, harmonicas, music stands, etc. Presto Music Co. 864-0767.

APARTMENTS/ROOMMATES

Person to share cooperative country house in Charlotte. Own room, collective living. Call 425-2384. Keep trying Efficiency apartment available end of December. One person occupancy, heat & hot water included, off-street parking. Close to downtown and campus. 863-2143.

House for rent in Hinesburg, overlooks Lake Iroquois, two bedroom, wood stove. $225 monthly, 863-1548

CHEESE SPECIALS

Parmesan $3.59/lb.

Mozzarella $1.89/lb.

Ricotta $1.19/lb.

plus many more cheeses, cheesecake "seconds," homemade quiche, yogurt in bulk, wine, crackers and mustards

CHEESE OUTLET

398 PINE ST

Applications are currently being accepted for next semester's Psychology proctoring positions. If you're interested in one, call the Psychology Department soon

A Solid Edge of Performance.

Everyone needs to start with every possible advantage. In equipment. Fit. Choice. Find your solid edge at the Downhill Edge.

65 Main Street · Burlington 862-2282

DOWNHILL EDGE

FREE FREE

VERMONT CYNIC

VOLUME XCV NUMBER 11 "meree krismas, cenatur renolds." DECEMBER 12, 1978

SHALIMAR...
BY GUERLAIN

Shalimar... the incomparable fragrance classic... Inspired by the legendary love of a man for a woman. Truly the gift of Christmas. Perfume – $17.50 to $55.00. Cologne spray – $10.00. Cologne – $10.00 to $15.00. Dusting powder – $9.00. Perfumes on Main.

ROMAN CRAFTSMEN
PERSONALIZED JEWELRY
$6.00 – $10.50

Roman Craftsmen's fine jewelry are keepsakes. Turn a gift into a personal treasure with any of these romantic antiques in the Roman Craftsmen Collection. Each in antiqued gold tone... custom engraved free of charge while you shop. We show just a few pieces from our extensive collection. Personalized Jewelry on Main.

GENUINE
SNAKE HANDBAGS

There is nothing quite like a genuine snake handbag... classic styling... always in good taste. So perfect for Christmas giving. Come in and see our collection. Just for openers, we've got... the classic, zip-top clutch with snap side handle, $78.00, the small barrel bag with zip-top shoulder, $69.00. the detechable shoulder with cut-out handles, $63.00. Colors: black, brown, wine... not every color in every style. Handbags on Main.

OUR "ICELANDIC WOOL"
LUXURY KNITS
$9.50 to $17.00

Our "Icelandic Wool" pattern is the ultimate in luxury knits. 100% wool for warmth... and the soft natural tan and gray colorations are just the perfect fashion touch. Beret, $9.50. Rolled brim – hat, – $11.00. Fringed scarf, $17.00. Legwarmers, $17.00. Boot topper, $13.50. All by Hansen Knits. Accessories on Main.

THE CHRISTMAS LEATHERS!

There are no other handbags quite like our Frye and Cobbler Classics handbags. The Frye carry the official Frye label and are made of the same durable leather as the famous boot.

The Cobblers are treated with deep penetrating tanning oils to give a handcrafted look... and are scratch and scuff-resistant. All in tones of brown and russet. Just to mention four from our collection: the Frye basic hobo with front pocket and braid trim, $38.00. the Frye gadget bag, $49.00. Cobblers double-handle, short shoulder bag; $27.00. Cobblers swag shoulder pouch, $39.00. Handbags on Main.

SPECIAL!
FINE ITALIAN LEATHER GLOVES
$17.50 to $29.00

You'll love them!... And so perfect for gifts! Luxurious... soft, buttery leather gloves to keep your fingers fabulously toasty. Choose from the following styles: (a) the two-button, acrylic-lined, fancy buckle trim glove in tan, $24.00. (b) the fully-lined fur cuff glove in mocha, $29.00. (c) the basic two-button acrylic-lined glove, in black, brown or camel, $17.50. (d) the four-button acrylic-lined glove in black or camel, $19.00.

Gloves on Main.

MAGRAMS JOY MAGRAMS JOY

Open Every Evening til 9:00
until Christmas
Gift Certificates Available on 6th Floor

VERMONT CYNIC

Special Christmas Issue

TABLE OF CONTENTS

News

PAGE 5

Trustees
In their recent meeting the UVM Board of Trustees voted to form a committee to study the morals and ethics of investment decisions. News Editor John Letteri attended the meeting and offers insight into the arguments for and against the divestiture of UVM's investments in South Africa .

Mark Lane Denied Speaking Engagement — 5
The S.A. Speakers Bureau has decided not to hire Mark Lane, the Peoples' Temple lawyer, to speak on the lessons of Guyana for $2750. The decision immediately sparked reaction around the country with the Chicago Tribune and others requesting interviews with Mr. Cassidy.

7 — Leahy Interview
Cynic contributing editor Russell Flannery talked to Democratic Senator Patrick Leahy after his recent return from a trip to China. Flannery gets candid responses on a wide variety of issues from Vermont's liberal Senator.

Tuition — 8
UVM S.A. President Charlie Clark offers in depth analysis on the prospects for higher tuition rates and increased state support to the university.

IRA — We Know You're There... But Where? ..... p. 9

The Palestinians: A Historical Profile ..... p. 10

Cynic Staff Elects New Editorial Board ..... p. 12

Commentary: UVM President Lattie Coor Offers his Views on the Present State of the University ..... p. 17

Op-Ed ..... p. 19

News Briefs ..... p. 23

Features

PAGE 26

Tupelo Mississippi: A Report from the Front
Cynic reporter Nelson Hockert-Lotz traveled to Tupelo, Mississippi over Thanksgiving break to cover the "March for Freedom" of a new anti-racism, anti-poverty organization, the United League. The Ku Klux Klan also attended. His interviews with black leaders, Klan leaders, and townspeople evoked some startling and often unbelievable comments.

Where A Wardrobe Costs a Quarter ..... p. 27

Stepping Down and Out ..... p. 28

Until Labor Day: Lattie F. Coor Short Story Contest Winner .. 30

Counterterror: A New Witch Hunt Comes to Vermont — 34
Burlington free lance writer Greg Guma, a member of the KRISTINA BERSTER DEFENSE COMMITTEE, reviews the arrest, trial, and judgment which has been rendered on the West German refugee ever since she was arrested trying to illegally cross the border in Alburg, Vt. this fall.

Good Health: Eggs and Heart Disease — A Rebuttal by Dr. Carew ..... p. 36

46 — Editorial
Editor Greeff responds to Vanguard Press Editorial accusing the Cynic of unfair competition

Letters ..... p. 46

Arts/Entertainment

Lane Series: Vermont's Largest Arts Organization Faces an Uncertain Future — PAGE 49
Freelance writer Tom Daniels takes a look at the history, present and future of the Lane Series. In an interview with Director Terry Demas, we find that financial problems are causing ticket prices to rise considerably and threaten the future health of the organization. Still, we find that the Series will continue to bring us Burlington's finest entertainment.

51 — Film: The Year in Review
Staff writer Peter Wentworth takes a broad look at the year's best movies including Interiors, Midnight Express, The Last Waltz and many others.

Review of Chris Miller ..... p. 52

Pine Island's Last Waltz at Hunts — 53
Arts reporter Pablo Conrad attended the finale of Burlington's beloved Blue Grass band and had a great time.

Crowned Prince Returns ..... p. 54

55 — Records: The Best and Worst of 1978 by Lori Goodman

The Virtues of Standing Still — 56
Bruce Vielmetti gives an interesting view of what sounds like a very funny book satirizing the running craze being participated in by so many Americans.

57 — Proof: It's Harry Blackstone
One of the world's most renowned magicians, Harry Blackstone, startles the audience with his amazing feats. By Tom Campbell.

Review of a Wedding by Peter Logarf ..... p. 58

Burlington's Answer to Studio 54 ..... p. 59

Noel Perrin: The Ultimate Flatlander, by Tom Daniels 62

Sports

Are You Experiencing Winter Humdrums? — 67
Check out the front page of Sports for a review of the tennis, paddle, squash and racquetball facilities open to students during the cold winter months. Lakeside, Twin Oaks and the Court Club are featured.

68 — Hockey Cats Take Two
In one of the Ice Cats' most impressive weekends in many years, UVM edged Clarkson 5-4 in overtime last Saturday. Read what led up to the grand finale of Louis Cote blasting the puck into the Clarkson net for the winning tally.

Icecats over BC 5-4 ..... p. 70

Women's Track & Men's Track ..... p. 71

Prior and Cullity: A Smooth Transition — 72
When UPenn closed down its hockey program, its hockey stars dispersed across the United States. Gary Prior and Tom Cullity came to UVM and have proven to be a crucial link in the chain of success UVM has been experiencing so far in Division I. This week's sports profile includes an interview with these two power-packed Catamounts.

74 — Money — Athletics
Sports Scene this week deals with the effects of money on professional athletics. Rob Smith's commentary, backed by quotes from leading athletes, supplies an interesting analysis of the seemingly endless and boundless problem.

Random Notes ..... p. 80

Classified ..... p. 82

Christmas Gift Ideas from Sundance

FRYE BOOTS
Give a pair of FRYE boots. They're the best boots made in America, benchcrafted the old time way in premium leathers with rich hand detailing. And the more they're worn, the better they get. FRYE boots for both him and her.

FRYE

OIL LAMPS
The beauty and craftsmanship of fine stoneware . . . this graceful oil lamp reflects simplicity in design and blends beautifully with any decor.

LEATHER GOODS
Choose from handbags, attaches, briefcases, clogs, vests, wallets, belts and much, much more . . . all of the finest quality leathers.

HANDMADE POTTERY
Pottery in all of its unusual and appealing forms chosen from selected local craftsmen. Choose from our many distinctive designs.

JEWELRY
American craftsmen create elegant rings, necklaces, bracelets, earrings, and stickpins of gold and silver.

UNUSUAL CANDLES
These unique candles are created through a very special process and come in a variety of shapes and designs. Whimsical . . . and very collectible.

BELT BUCKLES
Our collection of buckles offers one of the best selection of designs available. In pewter, brass and silver.

HONEY BEAR
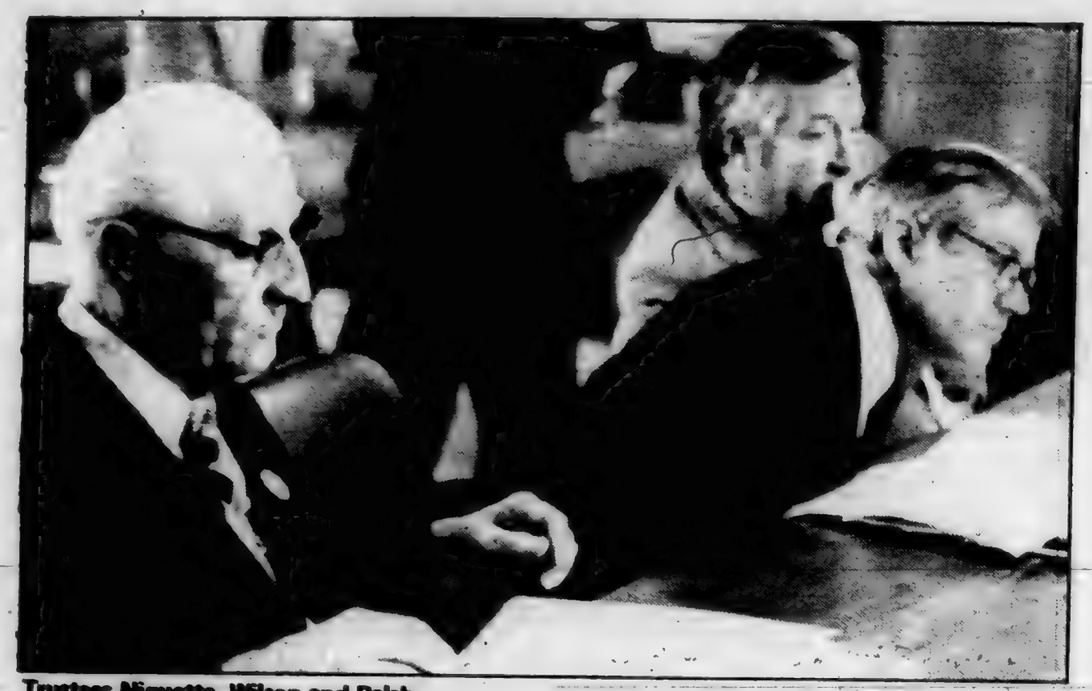
Soft, cuddly . . . real sheepskin teddy bears that know no age limit. A wonderful gift.

SUNDANCE
A Heritage of American Crafts
CHURCH STREET Across from Woolworth's BURLINGTON

Trustees To Study Morals and Ethics of Investment Policy

By John Letteri

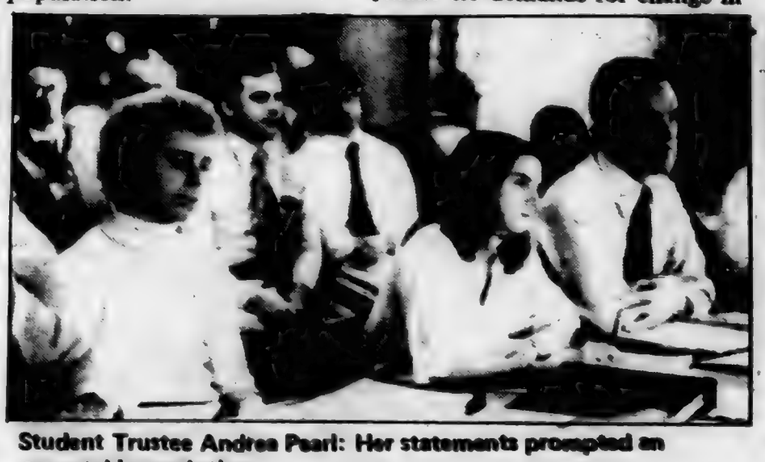
After nearly three hours of debate, the UVM board of trustees passed a resolution to form a committee of administrators, faculty, trustees, and students to "study the moral and ethical issues raised by the university's investment policy."



The committee members will be appointed by President Coor, and will report their findings to the board during their March meetings. The trustees met Dec. 1, specifically to discuss the question of South African investments. Representatives from the Student Committee Against Racism (SCAR), and Student Association President Charlie Clark gave pro-divestiture presentations.

Clark said the SA Senate had passed a resolution 15-13 with three abstentions, in favor of divestiture. He said the Student Association "strongly urged" the board to divest its interests in South Africa, and to "refrain" from investing in the country that legally segregates its population.

Coor responded by saying that a series of significant questions arise when considering a university's investment policy. Although he feels Apartheid is an "unacceptable social policy," he questioned whether it was the right of the board of trustees to take a position on a political situation. "A university is designed to harbor all points of view" and divestiture was not a "simple one-dimensioned issue," he continued.



Phil Fiermonte, one of the four representatives of SCAR, said that UVM owns stock in six out of the seven largest corporations doing business in South Africa. He noted a speech by former Iowa Senator Dick Clark who said that "U.S. corporations have contributed to the maintenance of Apartheid." Further, these corporations employ less than 1% of the black work force.

SCAR representative Eric Kilburn said the Sullivan principles, alleged guidelines set forth to monitor behavior of multinationals in South Africa, make no demands for change in Apartheid. He said that the South African government approved the Sullivan principles, which are supposed to indicate to investors whether a corporation is treating blacks fairly, only after a clause requiring the Apartheid system be changed was deleted. "The Sullivan principles are not viable to justify investment in South Africa," Kilburn said.

Trustees Niquette, Wilson and Balch

Photo by John Deith

Student Trustee Andrea Pearl: Her statements prompted an acceptable resolution.

Sylvia Arthur, another SCAR member, said UVM is "participating" in the Apartheid policies of the white-ruled country by investing in firms operating there. She said the "most forceful, effective, and moral action UVM could take would be to divest."

Alan Marshall, an economics major at UVM, then gave a presentation showing divestment to be economically feasible. Marshall showed that stocks held by UVM in firms operating in South Africa have appreciated only 4.4% since purchase, while stock held in firms not doing business there have appreciated over 28%. Further, the rate of return on stock from investments in South Africa totals 4.5% while other holdings return 5.35%. Marshall said it would be "worthwhile and profitable" for UVM to divest.

Coor said it was the board's responsibility to determine investment practices, and suggested an ad-hoc committee be formed to study the "moral and ethical" issues raised by South African investments.

In response, trustee Everett Bailey said he feared the board was "begging the issue" by forming a committee to study the problem. He said each of the present committees of the trustees concerned with investment should study the issue. He felt the formation of another committee to be "tremendously redundant, confusing, and the cause of a loss of sense of purpose."

Trustee J. T. Morgan, chairman of the investment committee, echoed Bailey's thoughts, and reasserted the question of whether the university should take a political stand.

Yet, the October 23 report from the Investment Responsibility Research Center, (see box) showed 19 other schools had sold some or all of their holdings in firms doing (continued on page 16)

Speakers Bureau Turns Down People's Temple Attorney

Cassidy says UVM "will not be exploited" by Mark Lane

By Jim Oakes

When S.A. Speakers president Robert Cassidy spoke last week, his voice rang around the country.

Suddenly, and not a little sensationalistically, the announced decision not to invite Peoples Temple lawyer Mark Lane to UVM as a speaker was news to the New York Times, The Washington Post and CBS News.

Cassidy's decision that "it would be in bad taste" to invite Lane to speak on the "Horrors of Jonestown" apparently became a panacea for the troubled consciences of Americans stunned by the unexplainable mass suicide in Guyana.

Attorney Mark Lane, the Peoples' Temple lawyer, was in a Jonestown bungalow when Rev. Jim Jones' guards started to gather the members of the Peoples' Temple together to be poisoned. After promising an armed guard that he would live and tell the story of Jonestown, Lane escaped into the jungle, from there to Georgetown, and quickly back to the states. And true to his word, Mark Lane is prepared to tell the story, at $2750 a shot.

"The University of Vermont will not be exploited by Mark Lane," said Cassidy. He pointed out that many people feel Lane may be more closely involved in the "Horrors of Jonestown" than he will ever admit. Lane was responsible for arranging Congressman Ryan's visit to Jonestown after the party was virtually refused permission to come to the settlement. When a Temple member threatened Ryan with a knife, it was Lane who wrestled the assailant to protect the congressman.

Whatever Attorney Lane may or may not know about the tragedy of Jonestown, many people seemed to agree with the Speakers decision to turn down Lane's invitation. Speakers President Cassidy received a call from John Lofton, the president of the American Conservative Union, who said, when he read Cassidy's remarks in the Washington Post, "I jumped up on my living room table and cheered." Lofton said, "I'll come to the university and speak on the horrors of Mark Lane."

Attorney Lane first splashed into the public eye with his book on the Kennedy assassination A Rush to Judgment, which challenged the Warren commission findings. More recently, Lane has been James Earl Ray's defense attorney.

Jonestown remains an absolutely uncomprehensible nightmare to the majority of the American people, but nonetheless, judging from the interest of the New York Times, The Washington Post, The Chicago Tribune and ABC and CBS News, there appears to be a substantial body of people who agree that Mark Lane's $2750 tab is not only expensive, it's outrageous.

> "Cassidy's decision that it would be in bad taste' to invite Lane to speak on the 'Horrors of Jonestown' apparently became a panacea for the troubled consciences of Americans stunned by the unexplainable mass suicide in Guyana."

THE TECH HIFI (JUST IN TIME FOR CHRISTMAS) NIKKO SALE

Nikko 1015 Receiver

Here's your chance to own one of the finest receivers around, and save a hundred dollars, too. The Nikko 1015 gives you 85 watts per channel minimum, with eight ohm loads, 20 Hz to 20,000 Hz, with less than 0.5% distortion. The 1015's tuner section brings in clean, clear FM stereo from distant stations; its performance rivals many separate tuners costing three to four hundred dollars. Our regular price on the 1015 is $570 . . . now you can buy it for just

$470

Nikko NA 550 and NT 550

Separate components for less than the price of comparably powered receivers? It's a fact. The Nikko NA 550 offers you 45 watts per channel, at eight ohms, with less than 0.08% distortion, from 20 Hz to 20,000 Hz . . . and features like power output meters and a tape dubbing switch. The matching NT 550 tuner outperforms many tuners that cost more than its regular price. And you can buy the combination for just $339, a savings of $70 off our regular prices.

$339

Nikko NA 850 and NT 850

These deluxe Nikko separates give you such performance, and such a collection of useful features, that they are an excellent buy at their usual $500 price. At $409, they're unbeatable. The amp provides 60 watts per channel, at eight ohms, with less than 0.08% distortion, for 20 Hz to 20,000 Hz, and features a subsonic filter, a tone defeat switch, a tape dubbing switch, power indicators, and many other useful features. The tuner has switchable IF bandwidth, which allows you to achieve better sound quality on strong, clear stations without giving up the option of superior selectivity and noise rejection on weak ones. There are many other useful features, as well. Hear the 850 separates soon; you'll be glad you did. (cabinet shown is optional)

$409

Nikko 515 Receiver

If you are looking for a good, basic, clean sounding receiver for a modest price, you just found it. The Nikko 515 has enough power to drive most popular speakers to satisfying levels, and a tuner that can bring in weak signals with surprising clarity. It's Nikko's best-selling receiver at $219 . . . now, at Tech HiFi, you can buy it for just

$189

150 Church St. 862-2638

tech hifi

Soundrooms you can play in.

On the Draft, South Africa, and SALT

A Cynic Interview with Senator Patrick Leahy

By Russell Flannery

Cynic: To date, what do you consider your most significant achievements – first, in the interests of the state of Vermont and second, in the international arena?

Leahy: I would think that the Clark–Leahy Rural Health Care Bill would have to rate as being the piece of legislation that would most affect Vermont or other rural areas. It's something when we started out, they told us it would take ten years to get it through the legislative process. We did it in a year and a half. The bill provides medical care with nurse practitioners or position-extenders in rural areas – like Grand Isle, which was one of the models we used.

In international matters, the report that I wrote on resupply for NATO countries in case of a war is largely the basis of a final report. Our whole method of resupplying Europe is in the process of changing, and becoming far more effective. It's going to have very significant implications on this and our NATO allies.

Cynic: Since President Carter reportedly will be reducing aid to urban communities in his apparently stringent budget, the city of Burlington may not receive the level of federal aid it had originally anticipated. If this is so, could you recommend possible alternative sources of funding for the city's proposed underground mall? And in general, would you support the budget cuts?

Leahy: First off, Burlington, like everywhere else in Vermont, is considered rural by federal standards. Anything under 50,000 people, according to the federal government, is considered rural, so Vermont becomes the most rural state in the country. I've been working very closely with a number of different federal agencies on the Burlington Project – partly because I'm a Burlington resident, but partly because I think they have a good project put together. There's no question in my mind that Burlington is solidly behind the project. And there's no question in my mind that the federal government will support it and that there will be funds available. That's one of the reasons I opposed the Pyramid Mall, because I thought that we had a far more viable alternative.

"We'd be far more successful (in South Africa) with a lot more cooperation..."

Now, on the overall cuts in the budget, I serve on the appropriations committee. Last year, the Senate Appropriations Committee appropriated some $12 billion less than the President's budget overall, anyway. I suspect that we'll be making cuts in every area, whether it's in urban or rural spending. Some of them are going to be difficult, but I think that they're absolutely necessary.

Cynic: Since the Tuition Tax Credit bill was killed in the last session, do you foresee this Congress providing any tax relief for middle income parents with students in post-secondary institutions?

Leahy: I think what you are going to see are far more alternative types like the Pell Bill which will increase substantially the availability of student loans and the eligibility of students. Before, there was an unrealistic cutoff at family income. Now that will be increased substantially, and I agree with that. I like the idea of the availability of student loans. I used them myself when I went through college... I think most students are willing to take those and know that they're going to have to pay them back. At a time when there are so many needs in this country, it does not hurt a student to be in a position to pay back loans for an education which is probably going to put them in a higher economic bracket, anyway. It would keep some of that money available for other very pressing social needs in this country. Besides, the first tuition tax bill as it was set up had some very serious constitutional problems with it.

Cynic: Do you support a real 3% increase in the military budget, one President Carter has reportedly pledged to the NATO nations?

Leahy: The details have not come up from the White House yet, and I'd want to see the full details on it. We are going to have to make some real increases in our NATO spending – I'm convinced of that. But on the other hand, one of the things that my study proved was that there are some very significant savings that can be made. We can save in the way that we stockpile our weapons over there. Also, standardization of our weapons systems in NATO could save us billions of dollars and make us more effective. One of the things that will save more money than anything else is to increase substantially the efficiency of some aspects of the military and removing some of those parts that we don't need. We could also save money by not putting our reliance on really unnecessary weapons systems, like the B-1 Bomber or the neutron bomb, things of that nature.

Cynic: Without becoming too technical, what objectives are you looking for in the SALT II accords?

Leahy: Of course, the real objective is that you've got to have something that guarantees the security of the United States and lessens the likelihood of nuclear war. I realize that's a very simple answer to a very complicated question, but I see the very, very real not only possibility, but probability of nuclear war if we continue on the arms races t that we have now. Between the Soviet Union and the United States we have the ability to destroy most of the world's population a dozen or more times over... The question to be raised is why the necessity is so – why such enormous power? We now have the proliferation of weapons into other countries, and that's going to become an ever-increasing thing. The only possibility of even getting a handle on this is successful SALT talks. And it's not going to be SALT II; a lot of people don't realize that SALT II will really have minor effects on the arms race, if any. It's primarily a preliminary to SALT III and IV and V. Those are going to be the difficult ones. But I think that we can make agreements with the Soviets that will protect our national security, and will lessen the possibility of nuclear war. If we don't, I think the possibility of nuclear war within a generation will become a probability.

Cynic: Do you see the possibility of either a draft registration or the renewal of the draft itself within the next two to three years.

Leahy: No.

Cynic: Given the racial situation in South Africa and genocidal conditions in Cambodia –

Leahy: From the intelligence reports I've seen, in Cambodia right now you've got genocide on a level probably unmatched in recorded history.

Cynic: Given this, is the U.S. role with regard to the protection of human rights acceptable?

Leahy: In Cambodia, we really were powerless to act, partly as a result of Vietnam. I think one of the worst results of our mistake in the Vietnam War is that it's removed us as an influence in Cambodia. I don't really feel that we have any ability to get in there. To what extent the Chinese or the Russians might is another very complicated matter, and I don't think anybody has the answer. There is virtually nothing we can do in Cambodia; the United Nations has, as in so many other things, proven just powerless to act.

Cynic: What about the South African situation?

Leahy: Africa – it's a different thing there. We do have influence – primarily economically, and we're trying to use that now, along with our allies. We'd be far more successful with a lot more cooperation from South Africa than what we've received.

Cynic: Along the same idea of the U.S.'s role as 'human rights' protector, do you consider the U.S. interest in the Vietnamese 'boat people' adequate?

Leahy: I don't know. I'd like to know more about the situation there. I do know that we've taken a great number of Vietnamese, but we could have done more in aiding Malasia, I'm not sure. Again, I think that it's a case where the United Nations has not done anywhere near as much as it could and should.

Cynic: This is more of a 'thought' related question. In the most recent elections, 85% of the candidates spending the greatest amount of money were elected. Moreover, an increasing amount of those campaign contributions are gifts from corporations and interest groups. Do you consider this type of funding increasingly good?

Leahy: No, I think it's increasingly bad for the country to see that kind of money being spent. I much prefer a federal campaign spending law. I've strongly backed one where people are allowed to check off on their income tax return, putting money into campaign funds. This was done in the last Presidential year and I think it worked very well. None of the usual 'fat cat' contributors were allowed to put money in. Afterward, we didn't see the lot of people that wanted to be ambassador because 'I contributed one half of a million dollars' or 'I raised a million dollars' or any of the kind of things that were actually involved in Watergate. And I think in Congressional elections a federal campaign law would be

(continued on page 4)

WAIT!

Do you want to live in an $80,000 house for only $135 per month?

Don't miss the OPPORTUNITY of a LIFETIME!!! Call Johnny "Boots" at 656-4254

THE
LAST CHANCE
SALOON

Seasons Greetings from The Chance.

THE
LAST CHANCE
SALOON
147 Main St.

News Analysis

Rising Costs, But Dwindling State Support

By Charles H. Clark

Higher tuition, inflation, state appropriations, alumni gifts, pricing Vermonters out of the university, and VSAC are all terms which arrive on our campus each year as regularly as the freshman class. But unlike the freshman class, these terms have not changed much in the last four years. What does this all mean and what can we as students do about it?

Any approach to a method of keeping tuition down requires an understanding of UVM's complex budget. A simplistic analysis puts our expenses on one side of the equation and our income on the other. Obviously, if income falls short of expenses, someone has to pay the difference. Recently, the burden has been put increasingly on the student.

High expenses for the university's needs combined with a spiraling and unpredictable inflation rate, pose the greatest threat to the ability of a student to attend UVM. Salaries, wages, and fringe benefits of faculty, administration and staff personnel make up 73.8% of the fiscal year 1979 budget expenses. The remaining expenses include 14.7% for operating and equipment, 4.4% for student aid, and 5.2% for utilities. These are the costs necessary to run the university annually. If they could be provided early enough with cuts made in the right places, the budget process would be considerably less difficult. However, there are several other expenses which do not occur on an annual basis and thus cannot be accurately planned for. These are increased expenses unrelated to inflation.

Mandated and deferred expenses constitute a large part of the budget requirements. Mandated expenses are those required by federal or state law. In UVM's case, these include changes in Social Security payments and facility improvements for the handicapped. In addition, there are other requirements that an institution accepts when it receives federal dollars. Deferred expenses are costs for equipment replacement and maintenance which have been set aside previously because of the unavailability of funds. These costs don't go away; they are truly deferred. What we are painfully finding out at UVM is that the longer you defer a particular job, the more expensive the actual repair or replacement will be.

To curb some of these expenses, a number of measures can, and have been, implemented. These cuts include energy conservation programs, cancellation of new programs, a tightening of fiscal management, and personnel cuts. These performance improvements have both short and long-term effects. The performance improvements in fiscal year 1979, for example, total $463,000. This is a substantial reduction from an otherwise lean budget. The new South Campus heating line will provide substantial savings in the future as a more efficient energy program will undoubtedly cut one of the university's major costs.

One of the most devastating effects of inflation at UVM has been on the purchasing power of faculty and staff salaries. This erosion in their buying power has understandably caused faculty and staff to leave UVM for more lucrative jobs elsewhere, or cause prospective faculty eminent in their field to turn down UVM.

Salaries have fallen to a point where a 2% increase over inflation for five years will help repair only some of the past erosion of the purchasing power. The state recently faced a similar crisis and the Legislature wisely passed the Pay Act for fiscal year 1979 to combat the erosion. But UVM employees did not benefit from this action as they are not included in the Pay Act.

UVM income sources include non-resident and Medical tuition, resident tuition, the state appropriation, and annual giving. The most difficult part now is to determine who will bear the increased costs. Non-resident and medical tuitions made up $16,393,000 of the 1979 General Fund Income of $41,815,000. Annual giving as well as indirect cost recovery from grants and contracts make up $5,700,000 in fiscal year 1979.

The state appropriation supports Vermont undergraduate and graduate students, the Extension Service, medical education, and agricultural research. In-state tuition charges defray the costs of education not covered by the state appropriation. These income sources must rise at the rate of inflation and make compensation for past erosion of salaries if UVM is to remain the quality institution that Vermont needs.

Out-of-state tuition must rise with inflation plus its share of the deferred and mandated costs. The state has no obligation to subsidize out-of-state students at all. In addition, annual giving must rise to protect the Endowment Fund. While this source is not directly related to inflation, prudent planning can make this an important source of income for UVM.

If in-state tuition is to remain at the current level, an increase of $2,188 million in-state appropriations is required. The level of state appropriations is directly related to the level of in-state tuition. So, unless the governor's tentative recommendation to the Legislature is raised, Vermont residents can expect a sizeable increase in tuition.

Is it fair to expect the state to increase the UVM appropriation by over $2 million? The evidence indicates that it is. UVM is competing with other agencies of the state for funds who undoubtedly have equally pressing needs and worries as UVM. But these all should be viewed closely on a case by case basis and not by a General Fund increase formula which may look good on paper, but will not meet the needs of Vermonters and their institutions.

The state has increased its support to the university in the last two years. And there are a number of factors which support UVM's current request of $2.188 million for fiscal year 1980, and $2,173 million for fiscal year 1981. While the state's general fund increased by 107% between 1970 – 1979, the university's subsidy increased by only 67% over that same period. In 1966, the state subsidy accounted for 27% of the university's budget; in 1979, it will only account for 18%. This is the lowest percent of support in the nation for state-assisted universities. In addition, UVM attracts more Vermont students than all other four year Vermont institutions combined. UVM is truly Vermont's university.

While there are several other important factors involved in the formulation of a complex university budget, with these thoughts in mind, it becomes increasingly clear that the state should, and is able to, support UVM to a higher degree. The level of appropriation determined by the legislature will have a direct effect on in-state tuition, and Vermonters should make their legislators aware of this. Otherwise, we can only expect yet another unaffordable rise in tuition. We are pricing Vermonters out of an education at their state university. It is time to do something about it. Increased state appropriation, combined with the other income sources, can help to keep UVM a quality institution.

Charlie Clark is President of the UVM Student Association.

IRA—We Know You're There... But Where?

News Analysis

By Ned Andrews

Last spring the UVM board of trustees appropriated $600,000 for the renovation of Coolidge Hall on Redstone Campus. The thirty-three year old residence hall needed a major face lift, to meet the existing building codes. But the UVM administration was disturbed that the renovation cost was higher than estimated because of damage resulting from student vandalism. Coolidge residents boasted of their hall's ability to provide the ideal party environment, a reputation reflected in its high rate of vandalism. Thus, having invested $600,000 in Coolidge, the university had decided to renovate the hall's image as well.

Residential Life, the administrative office that oversees the entire residence hall system, proposed last spring to not allow Coolidge residents to return to Coolidge this year. Instead, Coolidge would become a women's freshman residence hall. The proposal immediately met with opposition from the dorm's residents, who maintained that much of the destruction to their hall had been caused by outsiders attracted by Coolidge's party image. These students voiced their complaints to the Inter-Residence Association (IRA) who brought the complaints to Residential Life. IRA worked out a compromise with Residential Life whereby Coolidge residents could return the following year, but all other vacant spots would be filled with incoming freshmen.

The Coolidge compromise was one instance in which IRA was able to make a visible impact on the UVM residence system. For the most part, however, except for the weekly movies shown by IRA at Southwick Gymnasium, IRA has proven itself ineffective in making itself recognized in the residence community.

John Allen, President of IRA — Photo by Rick Ames

"Much of IRA's impact at UVM goes by unnoticed and unappreciated by much of the student body." —John Allen

WHAT IS IRA?

"IRA is an amalgamation of all the university dormitories," explained the IRA president, John Allen in a recent interview. "The purpose of IRA as stated in its preamble is 'to enhance the quality of residence hall living'." IRA serves the on-campus student in many ways. First, IRA is a student governmental organization that directly affects the residence hall decision-making process. It is comprised of a council of student representatives, at least one from every hall, that convenes every Sunday night in the Harris/Millis complex. Present at the meetings is a representative of Residential Life and Ron Beaulieu, director of SAGA. The Council meetings allow the representatives to air complaints and suggestions of improvement to the people who are in charge of deciding where student money will be spent in the residence halls. IRA also allows a student to develop leadership skills and a better understanding of a governing process by allowing him to sit on various committees, including Constitutional, Judicial, Theatre, Housing, Linen, Refrigerator, Publicity, and Entertainment Committees.

THE STUDENT WATCHDOG

"Residential Life is the administrative body that decides how money is spent in residence halls," said Allen. "IRA is the student watchdog of Residential Life." As head "watchdog," Allen meets regularly with Steve Peterson, director of Residential Life, in order to refine and re-evaluate the process by which residence halls are operated, from the selection of Hall Advisors and Residence Advisors (R.A.'s) to the formation of residential disciplinary procedures. Because Residential Life was designed to provide the student with the best living environment within its budget, it has to work closely with IRA to understand student needs.

Residential Life is composed of a professional staff of six: a director, an assistant director of finance, an assistant director of personnel, three area coordinators. They oversee the custodial crew, the security guards, and the SAGA employees; it is the largest administrative unit at UVM, and it affects a large part of the on-campus student's life at UVM. Therefore, it is important that IRA, the student watchdog of residential life, acts as an effective vehicle for communicating the students' needs.

As the director of Residential Life, Steve Peterson says that UVM offers a unique residential system, one which is nationally recognized for its flexibility. "We don't feel that UVM has dormitories on campus," smiled Peterson during a presentation to the trustees. "We believe our halls offer more than just a place to eat and sleep, and therefore we call them residence halls or centers. And therein lies the difference between a management orient system and one which has something of an educational philosophy behind it."

Residential Life has tried to emphasize freedom of choice and individual preference in its residence system. This is reflected in the options that exist in deciding the right living environment and the most convenient time or place to eat. Because of the flexibility incorporated into the residence halls, it is necessary to have a strong and effective voice to mold the residential system around the wants and needs of the student body.

A SERVICE ORGANIZATION

IRA is not just a government organization, however. It is also a service organization that provides entertainment in the form of contemporary films, all campus dances, the "spring fling" every spring on Redstone campus, and by helping to subsidize Oktoberfest, Winterfest, and the Red Square Affair. IRA runs a refrigerator rental service, is attempting to start a linen service, and distributes recreational equipment to the residence halls.

IRA has been unable to effectively publicize its

(continued on page 12)

Ned Andrews is Managing Editor of the Cynic.

The Earring Place

Coupon Sale!
20% OFF
WITH THIS COUPON
Largest Selection of Earrings in Burlington! Gold Pendants — Chains — Stick Pins. Our Entire Stock at 20% Off.
Just Received in time for Christmas!
Over 1500 pairs of 14 karat gold earrings to choose from!
Monday thru Friday 10 to 9, Sat. 10 to 6
Sundays 1 to 5

A Velvet Suit Is The Perfect Match For The Holiday Season...

ACT TWO
Ninety Seven Church St.
Burlington, Vermont 05401

The Palestinians:

A Historical Profile

By John Endroff
Director, Living/Learning Center
Adjunct Member of the History D Dept.

The remarkable prospect of an Arab and an Israeli sharing a Nobel Peace Prize two days ago punctuates a sequence of events initiated by Anwar Sadat's dramatic journey to Jerusalem on November 19, 1977. From that day until this, except for the macabre mass suicide at Jonestown, the Middle East has dominated world news and consumed much of the energies of policy makers both here and abroad.

Dramatic images and metaphors abound: an isolated Sadat, at great personal risk, criss-crossing the western world in his quest for support against a backdrop of rejectionist Arab heads of state huddling in Bagdad to plot their revenge; Israeli settlers, members of the Gush Emunim, clinging to their hardscrabble Galilean hilltops vowing never to leave the land they believe covenantially theirs; Menahem Begin, architect of the massacre at Deir Yassin, and other terrorist atrocities during the 1948 fighting, self-righteously asserting that he will never negotiate with the murderer Arafat; a politically born-again Jimmy Carter emerging triumphantly from his twelve days' odyssey through the minefield of the Camp David negotiations; the Saudis, enmeshed in their deepening paranoia about Soviet encirclement, weighing the risks of supporting the U.S.-backed, Sadat peace initiative against the wishes of most of the other Arab leaders; diminutive King Hussein, playing reluctant bridegroom to Secretary Vance's entreaties to join the ceremony, dreaming of his own return to the West Bank.

The principal actors in this unfolding drama – Begin, Sadat, Carter, Arafat, Hussein, Dayan – all seem larger than life. Indeed, we live in a time that demands an historian adept at portraiture to reassert the claims of an older historiography that history, after all, is made by people and cannot be reduced solely to numbers, trends or impersonal, inexorable "forces." Such an historian will need an eye for fine detail as well as a broader vision because what is missing from our view of the Arab-Israeli landscape is any clear view of, or appreciation for, those who perhaps have the greatest stake of all in the Camp David accords – the Palestinian people.

That there is a Palestinian "people" still comes as a surprise to many Americans whose ability to distinguish among and between different Arab peoples and countries is roughly on a par with our ability to distinguish between different varieties of communism in the 1950's. Until Sadat appeared on the stage with his western "look" and consummate statesmanship, our stereotypical view of the Arabs was that of a polygamous sheik, several years removed from tending camels in the desert, riding to the bank in a Cadillac to deposit his windfall oil profits. Embellished with an ages-old anti-semitism (the Arabs, too, are semites) in the political cartoons of Oliphant, SZEP, MacNelly and others, the "Sheik" stereotype still dominates many of our fantasies about the Middle East. Rapidly, however, it is being forced to compete for our attention with another more simplistic and dangerous stereotype – that of the Palestinian as terrorist. An unshaven, bandoliered, heavy-lidded Yasir Arafat is in the visual image he projects, the very personification of evil. Worse, he is an affront to our middle-class values of cleanliness and good grooming. As Zonker laconically remarked in a Doonesbury cartoon, "...if Arafat had ever learned to shave, he would have had a country years ago." Castro at least had the decency to grow a full beard and wear starched Army fatigues.

ROOTS

The Palestinians, like the Arabs generally, are a complex and varied people. Their semitic ancestors resided in Palestine and environs for at least three millenia before Christ and probably much longer. Like most semitic tribes of the period, they were at first nomads traversing the area of Palestine and western Syria. During the Canaanite period a number of them settled in cities in the eastern Mediterranean littoral or, alternatively, adopted a settled agricultural life in the surrounding countryside. As Sabatino Moscati notes in his work, Ancient Semitic Civilizations, "When the Hebrews conquered Palestine towards the end of the second millenium before Christ, they were not the first Semitic people in that field; others had been there long before them."

Except for the political union of the Hebrew tribes under a common monarchy during the 10th century B.C., Palestine and its inhabitants remained, for the most part, in thrall to powerful empires including those of the Babylonians, Persians, Greeks and Romans. In 70 A.D. and again in 135 A.D., Jewish revolts were ruthlessly suppressed by the Roman authorities with the result that Judaea was, and remained for 18 centuries, almost totally depopulated of Jews. Although this series of tragic events, known as the Diaspora, dispersed the Jews throughout the Mediterranean Basin and beyond, they survived as a nation not by virtue of political ascendancy but rather because of the enormous cohesive vitality of Judaism.

Following the Jewish Diaspora, the Palestinian Arabs became the major indigenous population group in Palestine and have remained so until the present. Many Palestinians were Islamicized in the 7th century, A.D. when Muhammed's legions issued forth from Mecca and Medina under the banner of the one god, Allah. Incorporated into the new, far-flung Arab Empire, the Palestinians never enjoyed autonomy within it. Rather they have been ruled by a succession of outsiders including Egyptians, Crusaders, Turks of various stripes, the

Maybe the Rolling Stones didn't make it to Gordie's, but you can!

Get your

VERMONT T—SHIRTS for only $ 4.85

RENT A PARKING SPACE FOR $15/Month

Gordie's University Texaco

Williston Rd. practically on campus

British and now, as the Palestinians see it, by the Israelis.

PALESTINIAN NATIONALISM

Fleeing first Czarist pogroms in the 1880's and then Nazi persecution in the 1930's, Russian and European Jews began returning to Palestine in increasing numbers. Political Zionism was sired by Theodor Herzel at the end of the 19th Century and its spokesmen lobbied various European powers, especially Britain, for, first, a homeland in Palestine and, later, a state there. Palestinians, feeling the birth pangs of their own nascent nationalism, viewed with increasing alarm the influx of western Jews into Palestine. Palestinian fears were heightened by Zionist land policies which made land purchased from Arabs exempt from ever being sold back to the Arabs and which forced Palestinian tenant farmers off Jewish-owned land. Other Zionist policies effectively excluded Palestinians from Jewish industries and labor unions.

Clashes between Jews and Palestinians became increasingly severe throughout the British Mandate period (1922-1948) culminating in the Arab general strike and revolt of 1936-37. Though strife between the two groups was muted during the second World War, it broke out even more virulently at the war's end with Britain's announced intention to terminate her mandate over Palestine. It had been a futile 26 year venture for England costing her dearly in lives and treasure and winning her the enmity of Jews and Palestinians alike.

Though the U.N. General Assembly passed a resolution on November 29, 1947, recommending partition of Palestine into a Jewish and an Arab State, events took a different more violent course. Palestinians and Arab states alike opposed partition and fighting between Jews and Palestinians escalated during early 1948. Britain's withdrawal in mid-May and the concurrent proclamation of the state of Israel signalled open warfare between Jews and Arabs. The Israeli army, better organized, trained and led than the invading Arab armies, won the struggle and presented the Arabs with a "fait accompli."

The defeat of the Arabs in 1948 had far-reaching effects as a younger generation of Arabs more realistically assessed the relative political, economic and military backwardness of their countries. In quick succession an army coup ousted (1949) the regime in Syria, King Abdullah was assassinated (1951) by a disaffected Palestinian refugee, and King Farouk was overthrown (1952) by Gamal Abdel Nasser and his associates including Anwar Sadat.

THE PALESTINIAN DIASPORA

The Israeli victory in 1948 was even more devastating for the Palestinian Arabs, hundreds of thousands of whom were uprooted and fled Palestine during the fighting. They were not permitted to return following the ceasefire. As a result, Israeli military authorities came into possession of more than five million acres of Palestinian land amounting to more than three-quarters of Palestine. A series of laws, culminating in the Absentee Property Law of 1950 facilitated the expropriation and transferral of Palestinian lands to Jewish settlers. The magnitude of the disaster for Palestinians is manifest in the reality that approximately one-half of the Palestinian towns and villages that had existed in 1945 have vanished since the inception of Israel. That fortunate 20% of the Palestinian refugees which had marketable skills were able, in time, to build new lives for themselves in other Arab and non-Arab countries. The reality for this minority is that of "a thriving middle class in exile, with the highest levels of literacy and academic achievement in the Arab world, dominating the economy of Jordan, filling key positions in the Syrian bureaucracy, forming the professional backbone of oil states like Kuwait, reporting and editing for a disproportionate number of periodicals that mold Arab opinion."

For the remaining 80% there is a very different reality. They and most of their progeny "live" in scores of refugee camps supported by the U.N. in Gaza, Jordan, Syria and Lebanon. Here, under the most squalid conditions imaginable, the young and old alike, their ranks swollen by a new flood of refugees from the 1967 war, reaffirmed their "Palestinian-ness" in song, dance, poetry and memory awaiting the day they

(continued on page 20)

> "Sadat fears that, once the Egyptian — Israeli agreement is formalized, Begin, still dreaming of incorporating the Biblical Judea and Samaria into Israel proper, will be tempted to let the general framework die stillborn."

Framework For Peace

Ancient I—Ching Coins
Assorted Brasswear
Buck Knives
Bubblebath
Blown Glass
Backgammon

EBENEZER ALLEN GIFT SHOP HAS GOT YOUR CHRISTMAS LIST COVERED!!

Candy
Chess
Copper
Cookware
Cutlery
Cutting Boards
Hand Carved Decoys
Dolls
Dishes
Gloves
Glass Mugs
Jewelry
Kitchen Ware
Music Boxes
Mobiles
Maple Sugar
Lamps
Leather Boxes
Mini Terrariumes
Pottery
Posters
Prints
Quilts
Stocking Stuffers
Scrimshaw
Spiceens

Ebenezer Allen
Gift Shop
Burlington Square Mall 863-4215

The SKI RACK

SKIERS

- For new skiers — let us help you choose from over a dozen packages at every price range. Discover for yourself our fast and efficient service.
- Serious skiers and fitness enthusiasts — look to the Ski Rack for high performance selection.
- We know how important boot fit is — best selection means best fit for you.
- Choose your Cross-Country clothing for function, style, freedom and comfort from our wide variety.

ROSSIGNOL ELAN ASNES tonsic

★ 27 different Cross Country Packages to choose form for adults & children $49.95-$138.95

★ Free Thursday night X-C clinic on waxing, where to ski and what to wear. Also, a Rossignol movie show.

HOURS:
Mon.-Fri. 9-6
Sat. 9-5

SKI RACK

The SKI RACK

Outerwear from CLASS 5

ZAP VEST

65 — 35 cloth shell, Prime Northern Goose Down, Cargo/hand warmer pockets.

CLASS-2 PARKA

Taffeta Nylon Shell, Goose Down, Cargo/hand warmer pockets, Double Snap Cuff, 2-way zipper, drawstring.

HOURS:
Mon.-Wed. 9-6
Sat. 9-5

SKI RACK

John Letteri Photo by Bob Gale

Cynic Elects New Editorial Board

In elections held last week, the Cynic Editorial Board voted in a new board for 1979. John Letteri will assume the position as Editor-in-Chief, which is responsible for overseeing all aspects of the paper.

Under his direction the rest of the editorial staff will be as follows: Steve Larose — Managing Editor; Jim Oakes — Copy; Sarah Bailey — News; Nelson Hockert-Lotz — Features; Tom Campbell — Arts; Nick Witte — Sports; Dinah Minot and Anne Stires — Advertising Managers.

Outgoing Editor Dave Greeff commented on the new staff: "There is a great deal of talent in the new board. With continued interest and support from the student body, the Cynic should continue to grow under John Letteri."

Looking ahead to next semester, Letteri said, "For the Cynic to continue to be effective, we must draw from the talents of the student body. We are hoping that students interested in writing, layout, photography, or art will get involved to further improve the quality of the Cynic."

Any interested students should drop by the Cynic office in Billings Center or attend the organizational meeting at the beginning of the semester. The Cynic offers credit to qualified students who are able to make the commitment, and encourages all interested students to contribute as much as they can.

IRA ...

continued from page eight

objectives and achievements within the residence halls. A random survey of twenty on-campus students revealed that ten people have no idea what IRA is. Four people think it's the distributor of films on campus, three students confused it with Residential Life, while only three students were aware of its function. Fifteen students out of twenty did not know what the initials IRA stand for.

How effective can a student government service organization be if many students are unaware of its existence? "The problem," said Allen, "is that if students want to be informed, they can attend their hall meetings or the IRA council meetings, but otherwise, there's no way that we can make them hear us." IRA has initiated several publicity campaigns distributing posters, running advertisements in the Cynic or on WRUV to publicize its Judicial Committee, its refrigerator rental service, and its movies. "These campaigns have met with success," said Allen. "It is just a matter of people's priorities; do they really care about what's going on on campus?"

IRA was originally founded in 1970 to help introduce co-ed living to UVM, one of the last state universities to offer mixed living. In 1970, Redstone Campus housed only women, and the men resided on East Campus. By 1971, IRA had integrated the men and women into the resident halls. Since its conception, IRA has initiated the presently used housing selection process. The old selection process made it necessary for a student who wanted good housing to camp out in line overnight. The present system is randomized, and every student has an equal chance of getting his first choice. Last spring, IRA introduced a student-governed judicial process in order to give the student a more flexible disciplinary process and a reduction in the fee assessed to on-campus residents for unpaid dormitory damage charges.

Presently, the IRA housing committee is studying the effects of alcohol on resident hall vandalism. "Did you know," said Allen, "that we have found that 90% of damage is alcohol related?" This year alone, students are paying an additional $23.51 for unassigned damage. Last year, over $85,000 worth of unassigned damage occurred within the residence halls which, in fact, is down from the $100,000 figure the year before.

(continued on page 61)

Educational Asylum:
A View on Tenure

By Grant Donovan

Tenure dates back to the days when political and ideological firings were a threat to the security of the academic job. It began as an assurance that radical ideas that distill in the college environments would continue to grow. Fifty years ago professors held a precarious position in their work. The era of Joe McCarthy exemplifies a time when many teachers looked on tenure for asylum because of their progressive ideas. Tenure worked well and toward its purpose; yet like many institutions today, it has become obsolete.

That the world as a whole is a more liberal and open environment for new ideas is a debatable argument; yet this is not the issue here. A few points about the freedom of the university professor need looking into. The first concerns the protection given by tenure. The courts protect the faculty member's right to his personal views. The universities themselves have elaborate due process and grievance procedures protecting the faculty, which combined with the courts, acts as an effective check of reprisals. The negative publicity that results from a firing shies the administrators away from pursuing it.

In addition, the universities increasingly try and rid themselves of new radicals by quietly denying them tenure after they have served their probationary period. Tenure works against the tide of new ideas through its selection process. Typically, a faculty member goes through a seven-year probationary period in which he is scrutinized and analyzed by his peers. Tenure has become the weeding device to selectively pick professors that have few ideas that might shake up the academic field. The professors who make it to tenure have little if not any use for it.

Another point is that not only do professors have little use for academic freedom, but also they have the distinction of being the one of the many groups of individuals that pursue truth and knowledge who justify having tenure. No tenure exists for journalists, lawyers, doctors, or industrial researchers yet in each field radical ideas and methods grow. Karl Marx, Sigmund Freud, and Albert Einstein were supported outside the academy and without tenure. Why is it necessary to protect the freedom for new ideas to grow when that freedom seems to exist in the world on its own?

The world has changed in many ways since the guidelines for tenure were set down in 1940. In business, all industries need new and fresh input to promote change and progress. A healthy industry is characterized by a moderate turn-over rate. Generally 10–15% is considered ideal. The same is true for colleges. Top executives come close to characterizing the thinkers and professors of business and their turnover rate is 15%. In the 1960's, the national turnover rate among tenured faculty was 8%. In 1972 it dropped to 1.4%. James O'Toole of the University of California estimates that the present rate sank even lower to less than 1%. At some colleges 100% of the faculty have tenure. Combined with the average age of the faculty of 45 years at some of these same colleges, this postulates that the same group of colleagues will be working together for the next twenty years or more.

In addition, colleges are no longer expanding. The American Association of University Professors predicts that enrollment will level off in 1981 and begin to decline by 1983. Requirements for tenure must be tightened to allow spaces for young professors of the future. Any group unable to renew itself becomes stagnant. Retirement ages are going up. If mandatory retirement is declared unconstitutional, then more professors will opt to continue teaching. Competent young teachers deserve the spaces occupied by the incompetent tenured professors. Under the present system they will be excluded.

In times of economic uncertainly like the present, universities tighten up and feel the pinch of tenure in two ways. Again there are simply no

(continued on page 16)

THE WAREHOUSE · 77 LOWER COLLEGE ST

NOW OPEN!

GROVER'S RECORDS
THE WAREHOUSE
Classical, Jazz & Folk Music
Open 10-9 until Christmas
Steve Grover Ed Bemis 658-6090

Paul Dannenberg
Studio / Gallery
New England Landscapes

STARBUCK/ASHLEY
Recording Studios, Incorporated
(802) 658-4616

APRIL'S ATTIC

antique clothing & accessories
for ladies, gentlemen, and children

is proud to present
the TWOPENNY CIRCUS

Misfortunes of Signor Pantalone
(or, Bad Day in Bergamo)
FRI DEC 15 8PM. $3.50

Come to Our Open House
Friday Dec 15 4-7pm

Bodybasics

FOR your complete bodycare needs...

SPECIAL

Dec. 9, 11, 12

WHEAT GERM LOTION $1.95 reg. $2.20

features wheat germ oil, vitamin E, natural nutty scent, no artificial color added

WE HAVE GIFT CERTIFICATES TOO!

recycle your bottles, bring them back for refill. 127 COLLEGE ST. BURLINGTON, VT. 05401 upstairs in the Bennington Potters Mart Bldg.

Bear with me!

...and my friends

Come visit and bring one of us home for your Merry Xmas.

A soft and true friend... the best kind.

From $8.00 to $34.00.

bennington potters NORTH
127 college street
downtown burlington

We all wish you a very Merry

UVM's South Africa Connection:

The Economics of Divestiture

By Tim Bates

Colleges and universities throughout the United States are presently engaged in a healthy soul-searching examination of the implications of investing funds in companies doing business in South Africa. Responding largely to expressions of concern from their students, educational institutions are facing (albeit hesitantly) the reality that by doing business in South Africa, American companies may be contributing to – and profiting from – a system that denies rights to the black majority population. For example, the University of Wisconsin voted in 1978 to sell all of its stock in companies that discriminated on the basis of race, religion, color, creed or sex. The university has agreed to sell $8 million in stock that it holds in seven companies doing business in South Africa.

The traditional "stability" of South Africa's economy has drawn over 300 U.S. corporations to this relatively small geographic area. Over 30 percent of all U.S. investment on the African continent is located in South Africa. In terms of exerting a major influence over South Africa's economy, approximately one dozen U.S.-based multinational corporations really constitute the crux of the matter. Indeed, a mere seven U.S. firms (G.M., Mobil, Texaco, Standard Oil of California, Ford, ITT and G.E.) account for nearly two-thirds of all U.S. investment in South Africa. UVM holds investments in six of these seven firms. It is this handful of key firms that provides essential technical know-how to the South African government; in addition, they provide substantial tax revenues to the South African regime and they support continued labor market dualism (see table one).

It is very difficult for corporations located in South Africa to follow their own unilateral policies because they typically enter into partnership with state-owned corporations. Foreign investors must sell shares (under definite partnership agreements) to one of the government corporations before they can begin business operations. This partnership status forces U.S. corporations to obey South African government policies on a range of matters from resource use to profit sharing; a major objective of these policies is the regulation of African labor. Violations of these regulations are tantamount to contract violation, which would enable the South African government to terminate the U.S. corporation's right to do business in South Africa. Despite noble intentions that may motivate U.S. corporations to oppose discriminatory labor market practices, their freedom of action is limited by the policies of the apartheid regime.

WILL DIVESTITURE HURT UVM FINANCIALLY?

I have examined the September 29, 1978 financial statements of the UVM Trust and Consolidated Endowment Funds, whose combined resources total nearly $18 million. The smaller Trust Fund ($3.36 million in assets) held few investments in companies active in South Africa, but the Consolidated Endowment Fund ($14.6 million in assets) held numerous investments in South Africa-related corporations.

The Consolidated Endowment Fund's investments were held predominantly in the form of corporate common stock, and 23.5 percent of these stocks (measured on a cost basis) were held in South African-related firms. These UVM investments in 19 corporations active in South Africa accounted for approximately $2 million of the fund's assets.

One method of attempting to estimate the possible impact of divestiture on UVM's income is to calculate various measures of the earnings of these South African corporations. Dividends paid to UVM by these corporations were $98,462 on the most recent 12-month accounting period which represents a 5.0 percent rate of return relative to the cost of these common stocks. In contrast, dividends paid to UVM by the non-South Africa-related corporations were $336,230, which represents a 5.24 percent rate of return. Considering divident income only, South African-connected corporations were yielding a lower rate of return to UVM relative to the non-South African firms.

Common stocks are a popular investment because, in addition to paying dividends, stocks are normally expected to appreciate in value over the long run. Indeed, the 19 South African-related common stocks held by UVM's Consolidated Endowment Fund had risen from their initial purchase price of $1.968 million to a market value of $2.112 million as of September 29, 1978. Thus, in addition to paying a 5.0 percent rate of return in dividend income, these South African-connected common stocks had appreciated 7.27 percent in value since their purchase by UVM. In contrast, UVM's non-South African-related common stock investments (Consolidated Endowment Fund only) have risen from their initial cost of $6.419 million to a September 29th market value of $8.290 million. Besides paying a higher dividend yield than the South Africa-related stocks, the non-South Africa-connected common stock investments have appreciated 29.14 percent in value since their acquisition by UVM. From a purely financial viewpoint, UVM's investments in South Africa-connected multinational corporations appear to be less profitable than UVM's non-South Africa-related investment. By divesting themselves of these less profitable common stock holdings, UVM will not be hurting itself financially. To date, UVM's South African connection has not been particularly profitable relative to a number of alternative investment opportunities.

If UVM was to sell several million in common stocks, the proceeds could be invested in a variety of extremely safe and high yielding investments. One example of such an investment alternative is the Federal Housing Administration (FHA) guaranteed home mortgage, which is 100 percent guaranteed against default risk by the U.S. government. Investing several million in FHA mortgages could help to stimulate the construction of new housing and the substantial rehabilitation of existing housing. By concentrating these investments in the vicinity of Vermont, positive "multiplier" effects would be generated for the Vermont economy. In addition to yielding approximately a ten percent (risk free) annual rate of return, FHA mortgages could stimulate greater construction of housing and expanded employment, which would generate additional state tax revenues. These positive side effects of UVM investment in mortgages would provide a very real "social" rate of return for Vermonters, in addition to the mortgage interest income that would accrue to UVM. This social rate of return should not

(continued on page 16)

TABLE ONE: Mobil's South African Workforce in 1972

| | Number of African, Asian, Colored | Whites | Percent African Asian, Colored | Percent White |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| Unskilled workers | 861 | 15 | 98.3% | 1.7% |
| Semi-skilled | 163 | 279 | 22.4% | 77.6% |
| Skilled | 16 | 566 | 5.4% | 94.6% |
| Supervisory | 6 | 760 | 0.8% | 99.2% |
| Managerial | 0 | 186 | 0% | 100% |
| Total | 1,046 | 1,806 | 36.7% | 63.3% |

Source: Bethuel Setai, "The Role of International Companies in the Economy of South Africa," The Review of Black Political Economy (Summer 1978), p. 356.

The Hidden Costs of Nuclear Power

By David Epstein

Many reasons prevail why nuclear power may not be the most viable energy alternative. The merits of nuclear power as an environmentally attractive energy source are debatable at best. But the best argument against nuclear power is one which spotlights all of the costs of production as well as the people who assume the financial burden. To do this one need only look as far as a Congressional Report entitled "Nuclear Power Costs." This is report no. 95-1090 which was presented by the Committee on Government Operations on April 26, 1978 and includes many facts which ostensibly "informed" people tend to overlook:

The Federal Government was the sole producer of all types of nuclear power after World War II. Under the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, private companies were given the opportunity to produce nuclear energy. But this Act alone was not enough to convince utilities to begin production of nuclear power. The greatest discouraging factor was a study done by the Brookhaven National Laboratory where worst-case scenarios for a projected nuclear reactor accident were estimated at 3400 deaths, 43,000 radiation injuries, and $7 billion worth of property damage within a 45-mile radius.

The Federal Government realized that utilities needed incentives if they were to begin production of nuclear power on a large scale. The first of these was the Price-Anderson Act of 1957. Under this Act, utilities are insured up to $560 million for any single accident. The Federal Government plays only a small role in the insurance pool, but the Act may have one small drawback: if an accident occurs which results in more than $560 million worth of damage, all other expenses are the responsibility of the injured. Another incentive was continued government subsidization of all research and development, as well as the construction of various facilities to accomplish these tasks. The amount of these subsidies was listed as $3 billion in the 1979 budget, but this is misleading, since much research and development is carried out for military purposes and then passed on to other areas of the industry. To leave out these costs is a serious omission, but calculating them is nearly impossible.

After the Price-Anderson Act had passed and Federal subsidies were promised, costs were low, and the government forecast that between 1200 and 1500 commercial reactors would be supplying most of the nation's power needs by the year 2000. But economically speaking, things turned sour quickly. The price of uranium jumped from between six and eight dollars per pound in 1973 to forty dollars per pound in 1978. Furthermore, known uranium reserves are being depleted quickly and grave problems have arisen concerning the disposal of spent fuel. The Federal Government owns and operates three sites in the United States which store the nation's military waste and is responsible for the commercial reactor waste as well. The Department of Energy estimates that disposal and perpetual care costs of military wastes alone could total anywhere from two to 20 billion dollars, providing their ignorance of disposal costs. To permanently dispose of this waste, the government hopes to complete a military disposal site by 1983, two commercial sites by 1985, and four more sites between 1987 and 1991. Utilities will only pay a one-time storage fee, while the taxpayers will subsidize the bulk of the project. This fee is estimated to cost $200 million per site.

In the meantime utilities are keeping nuclear wastes on site, awaiting permanent disposal. Leaks of radioactive nuclear wastes have occurred at West Valley, New York and Maxey Flats, Kentucky as well as the Federal site at Hanover, Washington where 549,400 gallons of spent fuel have leaked between 1958 – 1975 including a leak in 1973 which went undetected for 50 days. The environmental and health effects of these leaks have yet to be determined.

Various costs of maintaining and constructing plants greatly increase the total costs of nuclear energy. The cost for cleaning the cooling system of a 20-year-old plant is $20 million per reactor (in 1976 dollars). Construction costs have increased at a rate far greater than inflation and 10 times faster than the rate for oil refineries. Cost overruns being common and expected, average out to be about 100 percent of original cost. Some graphic examples of this are the Clinch River Breeder Reactor Project in Tennessee, which had an original estimated cost of seven hundred million dollars but will eventually total two billion dollars. The Fast Flux Test Facility at Hanover, Washington was originally estimated at 86 million dollars while the actual total reached 647 million. Finally, the West Valley, New York project was estimated at four and four-tenths million dollars. It was completed at a total cost of $540 million.

Because the nuclear industry required huge initial capital investment, a major factor in rate structure is the actual energy production as a percentage of the maximum possible energy production. This is known as the capacity factor.

(continued on page 6)

"Leaks of radioactive nuclear wastes have occurred at West Valley, New York and Maxey Flats, Kentucky, as well as the federal site in Hanover, Washington, where 549,000 gallons of spent fuel have leaked..."

The Biggest Burger Buy In Town...

BONANZA-BURGER

$1.19

So much more at Bonanza. When you order your favorite soft drink or coffee we'll give you a free refill. You'll dine on a relaxed atmosphere with your order served on a platter, not in a paper bag. We don't like waiting in long lines so all things are really humming, you can place your order, select your table and we'll serve you. Those who wish may enjoy beer or wine with their meal. You always have options at Bonanza, you may prefer a succulent char-broiled steak for as little as $2.49 and don't forget to visit our famous Chuck Wagon Salad Bar.

Beer and Wine served

Shelburne Rd.
So. Burlington

Discover

BONANZA

Bygone Books

Give Something Old For Christmas

Books on

Old Boston
Early Skiing in VT.
WWI and WWII
Exotic Travel
Cookbooks
(Organic to Fanny Farmer)

Art
Pottery
Vermontiana
Children's Books
- including many
Rowland Robinson titles.

OLD PRINTS TOO

91 College St.
Mon.-Sat. 9:30- 5:30
Friday until 9:00pm.

Chittenden Customer Convenience

ALL OFFICES OF CHITTENDEN TRUST COMPANY WILL REMAIN OPEN UNTIL 8:00 PM ON FRIDAY, DECEMBER 22, 1978

All Chittenden Bank Offices will be closed
On Saturdays, December 23 and December 30
And Mondays, December 25 and January 1

MAY THE BLESSED JOYS OF THIS HOLIDAY SEASON BE A PART OF YOUR LIFE

Chittenden TRUST COMPANY

Member FDIC

Trustees Ketcham, pro-divestiture, and Morgan, against.

Trustees ...
continued from page five

business in South Africa.

Trustee Leonard Wilson offered a resolution that stated the moral and ethical issues concerning South African investments should be studied as Dr. Coor had previously suggested. This was voted down by a 13-6 vote, with Chairwoman Swainbank abstaining. Two-year student trustee Andrea Pearl voted yes, while Butch Crandall, whose term expires in March, voted no.

Ms. Pearl then stated she was disappointed that the board had acted in a "closed-minded way" by not voting the committee in. Clark said the board was avoiding the issue and should take a stand. Trustee Chester Ketcham said he was in favor of the committee and for divestiture.

This prompted a new resolution, calling for the formation of an ad-hoc committee to study all of the "moral and ethical questions raised by the (total) university investment policy." This was passed by the board unanimously, and adopted formally on December 2.

Tenure ...
continued from page 13

openings available for new faculty since they are no funds to expand; and few professors wish to trade the security of tenure for the uncertainty of landing another teaching job. The system operates to the disadvantage of new entrants. Second, the institution loses financially because tenure is inflexible to change in the economy. Tenure commits the institution to the individual but not the individual to the institution. A college may become so loaded with responsibilities to tenured faculty that it may be intolerable.

The situation of the world today warrants that something be done about tenure – before it gets too big to solve or control. Colleges need the young minds to continue the scholarly tradition; the world needs their ideas and research.

Three solutions to the situation have been enacted or considered. Growth contracts are presently used at Goddard College and Hampshire College in New England. These are contracts designed by the faculty members and negotiated with the college. They vary in length of tenure. The faculty must present personal career objectives and institutional goals such as designing a new course. They must then demonstrate significant achievements or they will not be rehired.

Ernst Mayr of Harvard considers tenure review to be the solution. Under the system, each member is reviewed every 5-10 years and is recommended for continued tenure on the basis of the quality of his teaching, the amount of research done, and the number of other achievements that the individual has shown over the previous years. Cases in which serious doubt about tenure results are referred to the administration. The administration appoints an ad-hoc committee of peers which makes a recommendation to the president of the college who takes the final action in the process. Skeptics point out that the cost of reviews will be substantial. In the long run the cost to the students and university of keeping a faculty member who has long ago given up making a contribution is much greater.

The last solution is the simplest. All teachers deserve the right to academic freedom even if they don't have tenure. Why not abolish tenure and give academic freedom to all professors and be done with it? Critics complain that some faculty members will be fired if this occurs. Certainly some will be fired; some should be.

Divestiture ...
continued from page 14

be ignored by UVM when it considers investing in various alternative financial instruments. Indeed, negative side effects of South African-related investments (discussed previously) include indirect support by UVM of the apartheid regime. As a general policy, quasi-public institutions such as UVM have a responsibility to consider the positive and negative side-effects – to consider social rates of return – of their investment decisions. The on-going campus debate on divestiture is important precisely because it is focusing attention on the crucial issue of social responsibility and its inherent interrelationship with investment decisions.

Tim Bates is an associate professor in the Economics Dept.

In the Spotlight

Lattie Coor Talks On UVM

By Lattie F. Coor

I resisted the temptation to submit an entry to the short story contest named in my honor mostly because I did not want to confound the judges. Imagine their dilemma if my piece emerged as a leading contender: it would strain credibility and no small amount of one's imagination to have the victor also be the namesake.

But Editor Greeff has spared us all that dilemma by offering me space in this end-of-the-term blockbuster issue, interestingly one that immediately follows the delayed April Fool's edition.

My instructions are to report on UVM as I see it, with special reference to my two and one-half years as President and with some attention paid to what I see in the period immediately ahead. I shall observe those instructions, but in a slightly different manner than may have been anticipated. I have spent a fair amount of time writing and speaking to the University community on the status of our goals and accomplishments. While I am not reluctant to do so again on this occasion, there is something on my mind that is germane to an assessment of the current state of affairs at the University – something that I have said to some parents and students on a selected basis, and an issue I welcome discussing more widely with the entire student body.

The matter I wish to discuss is my view that UVM today offers one of the most positive, well-balanced and spirited settings for an undergraduate student anywhere in the United States. I constantly ask students and parents how they find the university as a place to live and to study, and the response is almost universally an enthusiastic affirmation of happiness and satisfaction with the university. There are problems obviously that do crop up in conversation. But they are far fewer than I have encountered on other campuses. Instead, I find a response that is overwhelmingly positive.

There are several reasons for the existence of this kind of positive affect: we have a good array of colleges and schools that bring together on one campus students with a variety of interests. These varied academic interests make for a nice balance in types of students and types of activities. We have the good fortune of drawing talented students from all walks of life throughout Vermont, with the values and way of life of their own communities they bring with them. Furthermore, we attract an array of talented students from outside of the State who very much want to be a part of the university and of Vermont. This mixture of in-state and out-of-state students offers a rewarding interaction. We are of moderate size, enabling students to know one another with ease and permitting students to know their faculty members as well. We have a number of campus-based programs, particularly those in the residence halls and in the fraternities and sororities, that offer students multiple opportunities to get acquainted and to relate well with the campus. Moreover, we have an unusually attractive setting for a university. Vermont, with all of its attractions for outdoor activity, summer and winter, offers an array of opportunities that gives the entire student body options for out-of-classroom life that do not exist on many campuses, and Burlington, as a lively, manageable and accessible community, is a good "young people's" town.

In short, there are many organizational, programmatic and environmental factors that make UVM a very attractive setting in which to live and to study.

Some of these factors are the result of our good fortune in being who we are and where we are, and they constitute a good natural set of characteristics that will continue to serve us well in the years ahead. But some of them, particularly the nature and quality of our academic programs, are the direct result of conscious thought and choice and are not features that will be self-actualizing unless we nurture them well for the future and unless we create an atmosphere in which students will take maximum advantage of them. The first part of that equation is the responsibility of the faculty and the administration; the second part is that of the entire student body. I wish to speak to both.

"We, as a university, are thinly financed. Given the nature of the financial base of the university and State of Vermont, that will always be so."

We have a good faculty at UVM and we have a reasonably coherent set of academic programs that organize our faculty talents and abilities in ways that are constructive for student education. Yet, there are some matters that we must tend to if we are to maximize those educational resources. A central one is the level of our financial contributions to the academic programs, and it is here that I have sought to dedicate this administration's most active attention. We, as a university, are thinly financed. Given the nature of the financial base of the university and the State of Vermont, that will always be so. But we have been slipping in recent years, with the result that our faculty and staff members are now paid less than their counterparts in many other institutions, a number of which are not as strong academically, and we have been unable to fund properly some of the facilities and programs at a level consistent with the academic quality of the institution. We have spent a great deal of time trying to construct a financial plan to correct our current financial weaknesses and to put us on a sounder footing, and we shall continue to dedicate a substantial share of our attention to that matter in the future. Since our finances come from a combination of state appropriations, student tuition, and private gifts and grants, we have to pursue each of these areas with care and special attention.

In addition to finance, however, I believe that we have not been as imaginative as we can be in drawing more closely together faculty and programs with common interests for the purpose of research and the advancement of knowledge, as well as for the purpose of teaching. Distributed through our various colleges and schools are many people whose teaching and research could be ever so much more enriched by collaborative work across disciplinary boundaries. We are seeking ways to draw these people and programs into a constructive liaison so that they can maximize their potential in a synergistic model where the whole is greater than the sum of its parts. I believe this can offer greater coherence to the undergraduate curriculum in many more programs than is the case today, in a fashion that will combine the best of a well-integrated general education program with the specialized demands of advanced study or professional training.

All of these are matters to which we are devoting active attention – finance, program coordination, faculty/staff development, and selected new program ventures that can mutually reinforce the teaching and research of the university. The extent to which we are successful in pursuing these matters will determine the extent to which we remain a vital and viable university in the years ahead..

As we tend to these matters of improving the educational features of the institution, there is a concern on my part as to how fully the existing features of the campus are used by UVM students. There are some indicators that suggest to me that student participation in the rich educational and cultural resources of the campus is not what it should be. Student attendance at the various lectures and symposiums on the campus is uneven and occasionally sparse. I find in talking with students across the campus that many of them have not visited some of our significant educational resources, such as the Fleming Museum and the special collections and exhibits that appear from time-to-time throughout the campus. I do see students at lectures and concerts and at various other special functions on the campus, but not in nearly the quantity and variety that I think we would all like to see. A university is an unusual setting with literally hundreds of people doing varied and interesting things. Each of them, in its own way, is accessible for the interested student. And the period of undergraduate study for the full-time traditional college-age student is the most opportune time in one's life to probe, explore and learn new things. The extent to which students are drawn into the varied and interesting educational endeavors on campus, intrigued by new ideas and challenged to reconsider old ones is, in significant measure, the extent to which the student is truly fulfilled as a part of the educational process and that we are truly successful in our University mission.

I would like to urge all students to participate fully in our efforts to improve the educational setting in which we all live but, as well, I would like to encourage everyone on the campus to participate fully in the treasures currently at our disposal. We will all be the better for having done so.

My very best wishes to all on the campus for a joyous holiday. —

Lattie Coor is President of the University of Vermont.

SKI LEVI'S

LEVI'S

Slalom WoW Ski Parka

Style number 85138. Taslan® nylon body with light denim and corduroy trim, needlepunch insulation. Match with denim, corduroy, and Taslan ski bib.

SKI LEVI'S

Corded Yodel Ski Parka

Style number 85113. Taslan® nylon body, tartan and corduroy trim, needlepunch insulation. Coordinates with Taslan or corduroy ski bib.

SKI LEVI'S

Diagonal Corded Vest

Style number 88215. Taslan® body with corduroy trim, down insulated. Match with corduroy ski bib shown here, or Taslan ski bib.

SKI LEVI'S

Handwarmer Ski Parka Corded

Style number 88192. Taslan® nylon body, trimmed in corduroy, with Hi-loft Polarguard® insulation. Match with corduroy or Taslan ski bib.

SKI LEVI'S

Ski Levi's Basic Bib for Men

In denim, corduroy, and Taslan® nylon, with needlepunch insulation. Shown here in denim with coordinated gingham windshirt.

SKI LEVI'S

Ski Levi's Basic Bib for Women

In denim, corduroy and Taslan® nylon, with needlepunch insulation. Shown with gingham windshirt.

SKI LEVI'S

DOWNHILL

EDGE

65 Main St., Burlington. Open Evenings 'til 9, Sat. 9-5. Free Parking in Rear 862-2282

The Decay of the American Morale

By H.H. Chamberlain

For sheer shock value, the Guyana mass suicide achieved an unsurpassed impression among Americans. Why would a group of over nine hundred individuals kill themselves, children included, at the behest of one man? The implications are awesome, the ramifications even more so. Is society becoming more and more unstable as the United States enters a post-industrial decline?

"The 1970's are showing us that American industrial power is eroding. Our workers are not as productive as other nations, nor is our technology leading the world anymore... Industrial development is declining."

The beginning of American moral decay can be traced to events immediately following the Allied victory over the Nazis in 1945. Then, the forces of good, led by the United States, had made the world a safe place, at least in Europe. However, something happened in August of 1945 that shattered American morality – the use of atomic weapons to end war in the Pacific. Hundreds of thousands of people died, were permanently scarred, or genetically altered.

Such mass destruction had a destabilizing effect on the American subconscious. Did we have the right to take life in such an abhorrent manner? Worse, everyone knew that the Soviet Union would develop its own nuclear weapons which could be used against us. By the mid-1950's, people feared a momentary end to the world as they knew it. Civil defense became a way of protecting one's family and relatives from nuclear extermination.

Along with this new potential of Armageddon graphically depicted in the novel On the Beach, was the related political cancer known as communism. The Soviet Union represented the communist menace with its occupation of once sovereign nations in Eastern Europe. Until 1949, communism could be rationalized as a unique Soviet phenomenon.

However, 1949 brought with it a new communist nation led by Mao Tse-tung: the Republic of China. Why didn't people want to be free for self-development. Wasn't Social Darwinism the natural state of affairs? Democracy was on a gradual decline worldwide. In fact, the "free world" had to actively maintain its hold on much of the world.

Joe McCarthy and his communist witch-hunt in America in the early 1950's, confirmed United States fear of communist influence. The U.S. was fortunate that American technology and financing were needed by Third World nations for industrial development. The communist nations simply didn't have the resources to offer, so the free world remained strong.

Another phenomenon prevalent in the 1960's was political assassination. This is not to make assassination into a modern phenomenon, but rather to show it as a sign of social instability. To begin with, President Kennedy was shot in November of 1963. His untimely and violent death was followed by the murders of Martin Luther King, and Senator Robert Kennedy in 1968. Why wasn't our political system satisfying the needs of these men's assassins?

Simultaneously, the United States was directly opposing the spread of communism in Southeast Asia. We found ourselves defending a corrupt, and morally bankrupt regime headed by President Thieu. We were supporting an unwanted ruler against the communists led by the popular Ho Chi Minh. Everyone was wondering how our government could lead the nation so far astray, getting involved in an amoral struggle with so little chance of success.

United States foreign policy was humiliated both at home and abroad by Vietnam. Then, the American government was turned inside out by a man who tried to circumvent all proper political channels and place himself above the law. Richard Nixon was a political robber baron, and as he left office, so did the public's trust in the executive. It became apparent that government officials and politicians were a self-interested, corrupt group.

To add insult to injury, we discovered that while the FBI disregarded American private rights at home, the CIA tampered with foreign governments and staged political assassinations. Was there an internal political crisis which justified FBI violations of personal rights? And wasn't the American political system adaptable to the rest of the world without covert political operations abroad?

Finally, the 1970's are showing us that American industrial power is eroding. Our workers are not as productive as other nations, nor is our technology leading the world anymore. The economy is losing its potency to the tune of a devalued dollar and huge national deficits; industrial development is declining.

Now in 1978, our political system is being closed world-wide, our military might is weakening, and our people have become lethargic. Our population of over two hundred million is waiting for effective leadership which will harness the strength of America and lead the country again in a forward direction. While waiting for this leadership, people are returning at an increasing rate to religion, or joining various sects in pursuit of a meaningful life.

The People's Temple tried to set up a utopia in Guyana. Apparently, their attempt fell victim to today's moral vacuum. Coercion was used to keep the people at the colony, while their money went to Swiss bank accounts. Exposed, the cult committed mass suicide after murdering Congressman Ryan. It is time for a reassessment of American social fabric, time for some direction at the national level. Guyana should be unique, not a trend toward further similar activity.

Are You Being Speculated?

By Ted Kellogg

Do you rent a house or apartment in Burlington? Do you feel that you are being unfairly overcharged on your rent bill? If so, then the Burlington Tenants' Organizing Committee's (BTOC) rent control bill may be of practical interest to you.

A major contributing factor to the large rent increases in the last three years has been widespread speculative buying of Burlington rental property. Large and small investors have exploited the tight housing situation to bid up property values. Investors count on steadily increasing property values to make their profits in the long run. In the short run, however, these speculators must raise rents in order to pay off their creditors (banks and real estate agents). Because of the shortage of housing, tenants have no alternative but to pay these high rents.

Rent control as proposed by the BTOC would make it illegal for landlords to increase their rents higher than 8% of the property's market value for 1977. Landlords would, however, be able to pass on such expenses as: (1) property taxes, (2) water taxes, (3) heating costs if included, (4) electric costs if included, (5) maintenance to a third party, (6) capital improvement (prorated), (7) management fees up to 1% of gross rents, (8) insurance costs, (9) one half of rent control fees on contested rents. Charges that a landlord would not be able to pass on to you would include: (1) depreciation, (2) lawyer's fees, (3) fines, (4) mortgage principal, (5) mortgage interest, (6) maintenance due to landlord negligence and code violations, (7) advertising to rent unit. As such, this bill would not affect landlords that have not substantially raised their rents in recent years.

It should be noted that rents in new buildings (post '78) would not be controlled under the BTOC plan. This was done in order to give investors incentives to invest in new housing projects. Investors' money would be spent on helping to relieve the Burlington housing shortage rather than on bidding up the price of existing buildings.

The bill would also create a rent control and eviction board composed of equal numbers of tenants and non-tenants, this board to serve as a mediator in all landlord-tenant disputes. All rent hikes would have to be passed by this board, as would any eviction disputes.

To get some idea of the way the rent control proposal will be received by local government, I interviewed Mayor Gordon H. Paquette on the subject.

Mayor Paquette is strongly opposed to rent control in any form. The Mayor told me that even the discussion of rent control has caused some owners of low income housing to sell out to speculators. These speculators have in turn raised rents in those buildings by as much as 50%.

The Mayor's fears seem unfounded, however, since if the bill were enacted, speculators would lose interest in these buildings. Further, the entire point of the rent control proposal would be to limit precisely these kinds of rent increases.

The Mayor also felt that rent control would lead to the destruction of some low income housing in the area, because some landlords would find themselves losing money on marginal buildings.

This is a fairly standard argument against rent control as it was first practiced in such cities as New York and Boston. There, strict rent control laws were applied to all buildings new or old, which led to the cutting back of new construction. The strict rent control model also disallowed landlords to pass on maintenance costs to their tenants; this caused the deterioration of some rental housing.

The BTOC plan is a modified form of rent control that compensates for these shortcomings in the strict rent control model. Building maintenance should in fact improve since landlords will be able to pass on the cost of repairs.

When I pointed out these modifications to the Mayor he began telling me of his administration's successes in the development of new public housing projects as an answer. When repeated attempts to bring him back to the issue of rent control failed, I realized just what a hard fight the BTOC are in for in this town.

The BTOC is holding public workshops on Dec. 9 at 1:00 at the College St. Congregational Church. Discussed will be such issues as rent control, eviction, and security deposit rights. For additional information call the BTOC at 656-2917 or PACT at 658-2800.

The Palestinian Dilemma... continued from page 11 can redeem their own pledge of "next year in Jerusalem."

THE P.L.O.

Several facts need to be emphasized about the Palestinian Liberation Organization. First, it was formed in 1964 to meet a very real need of the Palestinians to take control of their own destiny. Throughout the 1950's and early 1960's, the Palestinians had been content passively to let Nasser and other Arab leaders champion their cause for them. They quickly became, thereby, pawns in the complex game of inter-Arab and big power politics. With the complete humiliation of the Arab regular armies in the 1967 war, Palestinian guerillas operating from their bases in Jordan, undertook a series of raids against Israeli settlements. Though insignificant in terms of military success, the Palestinian guerillas fled to southern Lebanon where they continue to play a critical role in Lebanese politics under the wary eye of occupying Syrian forces.

Secondly, the P.L.O. represents the legitimate interests of the vast majority of Palestinians though, often in a manner that many deem illegitimate. Headed by Yasir Arafat, the P.L.O. is, in effect, a Palestinian government-in-exile. Officially headquartered in Damascus but domiciled in Beirut, it is an umbrella organization for eight Palestinian guerilla groups ranging from Al Fatah, the largest and in some respects most moderate, to the Marxist, pro-Soviet Democratic Front for the Liberation of Palestine. A Palestine National Council, comprised of 295 Palestinians from around the world, meets periodically in various Arab capitols. Its members are appointed for three-year terms by the P.L.O.'s 15-member Executive Committee. Roughly one-third of National Council members are from Al Fatah, one-third from the other guerilla groups and one-third are independents. Finally, the Palestine Liberation Army is the P.L.O.'s regular army numbering about 12,000 men with Arafat as commander in chief.

Finally, important recent events have legitimized the P.L.O. in diplomatic circles if not in the western public mind. First, at a 1974 meeting in Rabat, Moracco, Arab heads of state designated the P.L.O. as the only legitimate representative of the Palestinian people. Secondly, in the same year Arafat addressed the United Nations General Assembly on November 13, 1974, thereby winning a large measure of international recognition for the P.L.O. Israel has long hoped that more moderate Palestinian leaders will emerge in the 24 West Bank towns and, seeing the economic advantages of affiliating with Israel, offer a viable alternative to P.L.O. hegemony. These hopes were publicly and humiliatingly dashed when, in the 1976 West Bank municipal elections, avowedly pro-P.L.O. candidates swept every local election. Given the foregoing, it is highly unlikely that any Middle East peace negotiations which don't include the P.L.O. in some context, will ultimately succeed.

CAMP DAVID AND AFTER

The Camp David accords are a remarkable achievement by any measure representing, as they do, an important first step to peace. The accords consist of two agreements, an Egyptian-Israeli peace treaty and a "framework" for an overall Mideast settlement. Under the terms of the former, Israel will withdraw her forces from the Sinai within three years, close Jewish settlements there and turn over four Israeli air bases to the Egyptians for civilian use. The U.S. will build two new Israeli air bases in the Negev. Normalization of relations, diplomatic and other, will be instituted.

> "(The Camp David accords) postpone any ultimate settlement of the West Bank Palestinians."

The second agreement is much more problematic in its implications for the Palestinians. It postpones any ultimate settlement of the status of West Bank Palestinians calling for a three to five year transition period to local autonomy during which some Israeli troops will be removed and the others withdrawn to a few specified defensive enclaves.

Both agreements are as notable for what they omit as for what they include. They do not mention the occupied Golan heights nor the future status of Jerusalem. They are silent about the fate of the hundreds of thousands of Palestinians who were exiled in 1948 and after. As originally drafted, the two agreements were not linked together in any chronological or sequential way — a deficit which Sadat has vigorously been trying to redress over the past several weeks. Sadat fears that, once the Egyptian-Israel agreement is formalized, Begin, still dreaming of incorporating the biblical Judea and Samaria into Israel proper, will be tempted to let the general framework for peace die stillborn. The accusations hurled by many Palestinians and other Arabs at Sadat that he has abandoned them would in that event, become a self-fulfilling prophecy — one that Sadat would never survive.

The Palestinians, both those on the West Bank and those in exile, view the Camp David accords with mixed emotions. They were not a party to them and have remained, in the words of one writer, "voiceless political eunuchs who have never had the chance to express a genuine political view." The P.L.O. leadership itself is ambivalent about the prospect of a West Bank–Gaza Palestinian "entity." Some support it believing that time is slipping away and they should take what they can get. Other Palestinian leaders see it as a step toward their ultimate goal of a democratic, secular state encompassing all of Palestine. The "rejectionists" among the P.L.O. find the Camp David accords unacceptable on a variety of grounds. The Marxists see the Palestine struggle as part of a broader class struggle against the reactionary ruling elites throughout the Arab world. To accept the proposed settlement would betray the larger cause. Others believe, with good reason, that a West Bank–Gaza entity, lacking full political and military autonomy and economically dependent on both Israel and Jordan, would sooner or later be gobbled up by one or the other (or both!).

With all of this having been said, one is left pretty much with an analog of Churchill's view of democracy; to wit, the Camp David accords are the worst possible peace proposals — except for all of the others. What is imperative is that the Palestinians have their own state and that they fully participate in its formulation and implementation. Anything less will condemn them to the same fate the Jews suffered through their 2,000 year exile. Ultimately, that will spell disaster for the Israelis as well as the Arabs — and perhaps for the rest of us as well.

WARMTH

AVAILABLE AT EASTERN MOUNTAIN SPORTS

PARKAS

DOWN FILLED

| | |
|---|---|
| EMS Yeti | $99.50 |
| EMS Fitzroy | $79.50 |
| EMS Monadnock | $69.50 |
| North Face Sierra | $85.00 |
| Sierra Design Sierra | $75.00 |

POLARGUARD FILLED

| | |
|---|---|
| EMS Mansfield | $77.50 |
| EMS Waban | $62.50 |
| Snowlion Palisade | $52.50 |
| Snowlion Rocky Mtn. | $64.00 |

CLOTHING

| | |
|---|---|
| WOOL HATS | $4.50-$13.95 |
| WOOL SOCKS | $1.65-$10.50 |
| WOOL SHIRTS | $19.50-$27.00 |
| WOOL PANTS | $28.00-$37.00 |
| WOOL LONG UNDERWEAR | $10.50-$19.50 |
| WOOL SWEATERS | $16.50-$45.00 |

DON'T FORGET...
THE LARGEST SELECTION OF CROSS COUNTRY SKIS AND ACCESSORIES IN THE AREA.

VESTS

DOWN FILLED

| | |
|---|---|
| EMS Chevron | $29.50 |
| Swan Corduroy | $37.50 |
| EMS Reversible | $38.50 |

Cross Country Packages

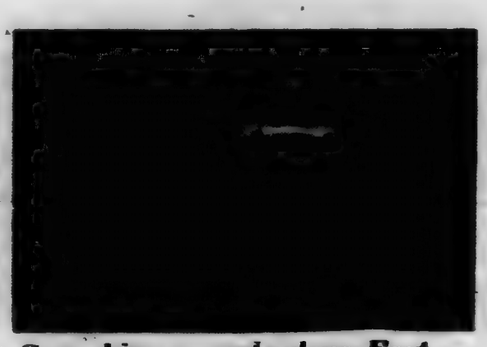
All packages include skis, leather boots, 3-pin bindings and bamboo poles.

| | |
|---|---|
| Karhu Touring 77 Modle component price 122.45 | 72.50 |
| Karhu Picnic component price 127.45 | 94.50 |
| Asnes Homen Kollen component price 122.45 | 99.50 |
| Blizzard Fascination component price 127.45 | 99.50 |
| Lyte Step component price 97.95 | 69.50 |
| Madshus TL 80 component price 122.95 | 79.50 |
| Lovett Running component price 137.95 | 109.00 |
| Kneissl Touring component price 132.95 | 119.00 |

EASTERN MOUNTAIN SPORTS



100 DORSET STREET SOUTH BURLINGTON
864-0473 OPEN 9-9 MON-SAT

Sailing 3 feet up in the air to a 4-point landing–Foyt gives Big A suspension parts a brutal test.

Gunning it on corrugated—a fierce workout for Big A shocks.

Screeching around pylons, Foyt tests Big A steering parts.

Foyt says, "Big A parts. I trust 'em." He wouldn't drive like this if he didn't.

A.J. Foyt put over 100 Big A auto parts on this car and tested it at Riverside.

He wasn't gentle.

Whether you're a professional mechanic or just work on your own car, you can get high-quality Big A parts at Norco Auto Supply.

Gift Certificates also available.

AMERICAN PARTS

• All Parts & Accessories on Display •

NORCO AUTO SUPPLY

FOREIGN & DOMESTIC CAR & TRUCK PARTS — AUTO PAINT • BATTERIES • TIRES

1776 Williston Road, So. Burl., Vt.

OPEN
8 AM to 8 PM
Sat.
8 AM-5 PM

Phone — VT. TOLL FREE — 800-642-3146 LOCAL 864-4283 — 864-7871

Living and Learning Programs Becoming Successful

But, Organization and Commitment Problems Persist

Clockwise from above: The Mime Suite performs for youngsters in Burlington, the Early American Crafts program show off their quilt, and the Pottery suite mushes around in their clay.

Photos by Adrienne Hulitzer

By Sarah Bailey

Since its construction five years ago, the Living and Learning Center has housed an experimental mode of education. Students who live in the apartment-like suites of L/LC are required to participate in programs of study other than their normal class work. These programs range from the modern dance suite, who recently put on a show at the Royall Tyler Theatre, to the pottery suite, where students learn the entire process of using clay.

In the first three years, the Center's programs often faltered because of lack of student commitment and program disorganization. Last year, some improvement was made, and this year, according to Assistant Director Leo Lambert, the programs have been very successful. "There is no comparison between last year and this year, in terms of program success," said Lambert.

The majority of the students currently enrolled in a L/LC program said their classes take precedence over their program work. Although many had positive comments on the programs themselves, they see their classes as more important, and time that should be devoted to the programs are often spent doing class work.

"We have two hours of instruction per week," explained a member of the mime suite, "which we all make it to. But not all of us can take the couple of hours practice per night that is necessary to get really polished."

"People tend to put off their program involvement until after their homework," said a member of Green Mountain design, which involves the designing and construction of outdoor clothes. She said it was a good program in many ways, however, and all of them enjoy it. Her thoughts were echoed by a member of the "Learning about Living" program who said, "Once anyone gets involved, they love it – but there is a problem of laziness." He said he has been in other programs in the Center and "it's always been the same."

Two of the programs researched were simply disorganized. The Journalism program offered the production of a monthly newspaper, workshops concerning all the aspects of journalism, and guest speakers from local press to accent the learning process. To date, one paper has been printed, no speakers have come, and no workshops have taken place. "I have been badly disappointed," said one member.

The Integrated Humanities program is designed to combine the studies of English, history, and philosophy and apply them in a way that they blend with one another. Yet, aside from going to the classes together, the program still is not what the members feel it should be. "The way in which the three courses are supposed to blend is not always clear," said one member.

When asked if there was any group of students for whom, L/LC would not be a good idea, the overwhelming response was that freshmen would have problems here. This was expressed by students at every grade level. "It's great for me, as a junior," said a member of the Green Thumb suite, which is designed for those with an interest in plants. "But I wouldn't recommend it for a freshman, just getting to know the campus." "It's not good for freshmen," said Joanne Carabeau, of the German House. "Freshmen need to get to know people and here you get to know your group really well, but have difficulty getting to know the other columns."

Another feeling that ran closely parallel to that of problems for freshmen was that the Center did not have any sort of unity as a whole. "We need more L/LC functions," said Carabeau. The general feeling was that the way that the building is set up, it's extremely hard to get to know anyone out of your column. "It's too secluded, too sectioned," said a member of the Joy of Cooking suite. "The Fireplace Lounge isn't enough of a meeting place; it's too much like a hallway – very easy to pass by." Members of the Cycling suite echoed this, also adding that more common study areas would be helpful.

Lambert said he would be the first to admit that the architectural set-up of the building was not conducive to meeting many people other than the ones in a student's column. Yet, he said all of their incoming freshmen are interviewed individually by the L/LC staff, and are made aware that such a problem exists. In addition, such things as freshman barbeques and mixers are held to allow the freshmen of the Center to get to know one another. Lambert recognized the need for more Center-wide activities, and said the Thursday night "Sunds and Sadns," along with casino nights, and dances, are alleviating the problem.

The majority of the students, while having some disappointments about priorities and organization, liked the ideas of their programs and thought that they had value. "When we get started on our group discussions," said a member of Living About Learning, "we all become very open – it's a warm, loving atmosphere, where people aren't afraid to show their emotions."

"It's good because everyone in here is from a different scholastic background," explained a member of the mime suite. "We learn a great deal from each other."

Despite the lack of interaction between buildings and suites, people did have a high opinion of the closeness that developed among the members of each program. "There's a real feeling of cohesiveness within the group," said the Cycling suite.

"Although the Center is a bit secluded," said Tony Adams of the Wilderness Sports suite, "the group is very close. Ours is a good environment to trade skills in. We have a real advantage in that we see each other in all instances. We live, work, and play together. We're friends as well as everything else."

"The opportunity is always there," said a member of the Emergency Medicine Suite. "It's up to the student to seek it out, but there's so much more than in other dorms. Suites are often friendlier than other living situations." She also stressed the need for more Center-wide activities, such as the Program Fair where people can get together and see what everyone else is doing.

No one complained of the physical living areas. "They're great!" was the typical comment. The spaciousness and apartment-like atmosphere was one of the assets to any program. "It's just such a nice place to come home to."

"It's just such a nice place to come home to."

World And National News Briefs

Golda Meir Dead at 80

Golda Meir, Israel's leader through some of its toughest periods, died Friday in a Jerusalem hospital. She was being treated for cancer of the lymph system. Although the immediate cause of death was not disclosed, a hospital spokesman said the former prime minister had been suffering for more than a decade from a form of leukemia.

Her illness had been a closely guarded secret during her term as the government head from 1969 to 1974. She resigned in 1974 in the aftermath of the Yom Kippur War against the Arabs, a war that had proved very costly to the Israeli state.

The hospital spokesman disclosed after her death that the cancer had been detected in the late 60's, and had first been treated with radiotherapy and later by chemotherapy.

Americans Escalate Flight From Iran

Hundreds of American citizens in Iran lined up for U.S. Air Force evacuation flights Friday. Many of the Americans said that they had been warned their homes would be firebombed if they did not leave the riot-torn country. There were no reports of injuries in any of the anti-American incidents.

According to diplomats, the threats against American citizens were increasing. Reportedly, a number of families had received telephoned warnings that their homes would be destroyed, and one firebombing attack was made against the home of a British diplomat.

Thousands of demonstrators, shouting anti-American slogans, surrounded the Grumman Aircraft Corp. headquarters and set the three-story building on fire. Grumman employs 400 Americans in Iran. According to one diplomat, several Americans were at work at the time but everyone inside the building escaped without injury.

The Grumman building is located in Isfahan and insults and threats have already initiated about 4000 of the 12,000 member American community to flee Iran. The diplomat predicted more flights would be "going down" soon.

Seabrook Financing Scheme Runs Into Opposition

William Tallman, president of the Public Service Co. of New Hampshire, which is building the Seabrook nuclear power plant, said Friday work on the $2.3 billion project could be halted before Christmas unless the company receives a guarantee of state financial backing sometime this week.

Tallman's ultimatum was promptly rejected by governor-elect Hugh Gallen. Gallen said, "It is not up to the governor to develop the refinancing plans of the Public Service Co. of New Hampshire. The matter is clearly the utility's concern."

Tallman said the firm needs state financial backing on $400 million worth of bonds so that "in the event of default by the company on interest or principal payments the full faith and credit of the state would be behind the company."

The present financing structure has been through the Construction Work in Progress (CWIP) charges. Gallen has said he will work to abolish this nine-percent surcharge on electricity bills when the New Hampshire Legislature convenes in January. Tallman recently said after meeting with Gallen privately that the company no longer considered the surcharge a "viable alternative."

Guyana Survivors Testify

Nine survivors of the Peoples Temple murder-suicide testified Friday behind the closed doors of a federal grand jury room as the panel began probing the murders of Rep. Leo Ryan and four others near the cult's jungle commune at Jonestown.

The survivors and their attorney Charles Garry issued no statements to the press and refused to answer questions.

The 23-member grand jury is investigating whether a conspiracy to murder Ryan was begun in the United States prior to his arrival at the Peoples Temple. The Peoples Temple maintained their headquarters in California while most of the church members lived at the commune in Jonestown.

In addition to the conspiracy theory, law enforcement officials also hoped to confirm the identity of those who fired the fatal shots. One man, Larry Layton, is being held in Georgetown, Guyana, on murder charges in connection with the airstrip slayings of Ryan and four others.

Begin Accepts Nobel Peace Prize

Praising the Israeli people for "their love of peace and the great sacrifices that they have made to attain it," Menachem Begin accepted his half of the 1978 Nobel Peace Prize Friday in Oslo, Norway.

Begin said he was accepting the price "on behalf of the people of Israel."

Egyptian President Anwar Sadat, co-winner of the prize, said he would not attend the ceremonies and instead sent a special assistant, Sayed Marei, to receive his share of the $165,000 prize.

The peace effort, which was negotiated by Begin, Sadat, and President Carter at Camp David in September, has bogged down and the peace talks that were to draw up the peace treaty have been suspended since the middle of November.

Jobless Rate Holds Steady at 5.8%

Although employment of white adult men rose sharply during November, reversing recent job trends favoring women, the overall unemployment rate remained at 5.8 percent, according to recent Labor Department statistics.

Total employment advanced during the month by 540,000 jobs, with white men filling more than three-quarters of them. This is a reverse of a year-long trend that has shown women capturing more than half of the 3.3 million additional jobs created thus far in 1978. Department economists said the overall job picture appears healthy with unemployment remaining near a four-year low.

The unemployment rate increased for non-whites as well as for women in November, however, and economists are predicting higher unemployment next year due to President Carter's efforts to bring inflation under control. Carter's efforts to have the interest rates increased and his plans to restrict federal spending are expected to slow economic expansion. That, in turn, would result in fewer new jobs being created and possibly some layoffs.

Cuban Exiles Meet with Castro

A group of 112 Cuban exiles met with President Fidel Castro Friday to formalize the agreement that would free 3,000 political prisoners and reunite families separated by political differences.

The meeting with Castro and seven members of the Communist Party Central Committee and the widow of Cuban revolutionary hero Che Guevara, took place at Havana's Palace of the Revolution. If all political prisoners were released as a result of these negotiations, as many as 50,000 Cubans could eventually emigrate to the United States.

The first meeting with exiles culminated with Castro announcing that some 3,000 political prisoners in Cuban jails would be freed as rapidly as the United States would accept them. He also provided for an exchange of visits to and from the island by exiles and residents, and he also agreed to permit all family members living apart to be reunited either in Cuba or in other countries.

Blumenthal to Rumania

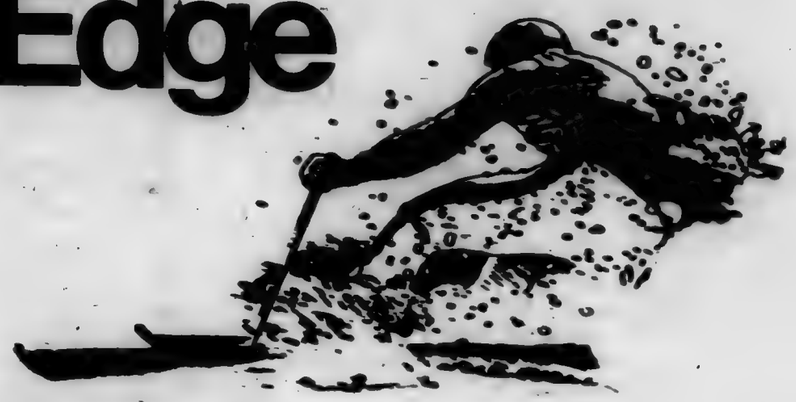
Secretary of the Treasury W. Michael Blumenthal has arrived in Rumania with a message from President Carter to President Nicolae Ceausescu expressing support of Rumania in its dispute with the Soviet Union. It is the first time that an American President had ever intervened so directly in a dispute involving two Warsaw Pact countries.

The present crisis in Rumanian-Soviet relations arose at a meeting of Warsaw Pact leaders in Moscow two weeks ago when Ceaucescu refused to agree to Soviet demands for increases in military spending and further integration of Warsaw Pact military commands. Ceaucescu made public the rift and Leonid Brezhnev, the Soviet leader, condemned the Rumanian action but did not indicate what response the Soviet Union might make.

The United States is concerned that the conflict might be headed toward armed confrontation, similar to the one in 1968 when the Soviet Union and its bloc countries, except for Rumania, sent troops into Czechslovakia.

Chinese Poster Aimed at Carter's Human Rights



A poster calling on President Jimmy Carter to turn his attention to the state of human rights in China appeared on Peking's "democracy wall" for a short time Thursday night. The poster read, "This will be the real test for your promise of human rights, about which you, a representative of America, have said so much in praise."

"In a country which regards Marxism as a new religion and in the name of the proletariat uses oppressive methods, it can happen to any citizen who expresses a different opinion that this will be considered a counterrevolutionary crime and he can be arrested, imprisoned, punished or sent into exile and even executed."

The poster was interpreted in Peking diplomatic circles as a potentially acute embarrassment for the Carter Administration.

A number of controversial posters have stayed up during the past three weeks as a part of an extraordinary public political debate in the capital. But recently there have been signals from Chinese leaders that the debate should not be limited, and some diplomats felt the human rights poster might force the authorities to take sterner action.

A Solid Edge of Performance.

Everyone needs to start with every possible advantage. In equipment. Fit. Choice. Find your solid edge at the Downhill Edge.

65 Main Street · Burlington 862-2282

DOWNHILL EDGE

THE FACTS:

1 HUNDREDS OF THOUSANDS OF WOMEN USE ENCARE OVAL™

Encare Oval™ was introduced to American doctors in November 1977. Almost immediately, it attracted widespread physician and patient attention.

Today, Encare Oval is being used by hundreds of thousands of women, and users surveyed report overwhelming satisfaction. Women using Encare Oval say they find it an answer to their problems with the pill, IUD's, diaphragms, and aerosol foams.

2 EFFECTIVENESS ESTABLISHED IN CLINICAL TESTS.

Encare Oval™ was subjected to one of the most rigorous tests ever conducted for a vaginal contraceptive. Results were excellent—showing that Encare Oval provides consistent and extremely high sperm-killing protection. This recent U.S. report supports earlier studies in European laboratories and clinics.

Each Encare Oval insert contains a precise, premeasured dose of the potent, sperm-killing agent nonoxynol 9. Once properly inserted, Encare Oval melts and gently effervesces, dispersing the sperm-killing agent within the vagina.

The success of any contraceptive method depends on consistent and accurate use. Encare Oval™ is so convenient you won't be tempted to forget it. And so simple to insert, it's hard to make a mistake.

If pregnancy poses a special risk for you, your contraceptive method should be selected after consultation with your doctor.

3 NO HORMONAL SIDE EFFECTS.

Encare Oval™ is free of hormones, so it cannot create hormone-related health problems—like strokes and heart attacks—that have been linked to the pill. And, there is no hormonal disruption of your menstrual cycle.

Most people find Encare Oval completely satisfactory. In a limited number of cases, however, burning or irritation has been experienced by either or both partners. If this occurs, use should be discontinued.

4 EASIER TO INSERT THAN A TAMPON.

The Encare Oval™ is smooth and small, so it inserts quickly and easily—without an applicator. There's none of the bother of aerosol foams and diaphragms. No device inside you. No pill to remember every day. Simply use as directed when you need protection.

You can buy Encare Oval whenever you need it...it's available without a prescription. And each Encare Oval is individually wrapped to fit discreetly into your pocket or purse.

5 BECAUSE ENCARE OVAL IS INSERTED IN ADVANCE, IT WON'T INTERRUPT LOVEMAKING.

Since there's no mess or bother, Encare Oval gives you a measure of freedom many contraceptives can't match.

The hormone-free Encare Oval. Safer for your system than the pill or IUD. Neater and simpler than traditional vaginal contraceptives. So effective and easy to use that hundreds of thousands have already found it—quite simply—the preferred contraceptive.

©1978 Eaton-Merz Laboratories, Inc.
Norwich, New York 13815 EA 1617

The most talked about contraceptive since the pill

A Solid Edge

formance.

Everyone needs to start with every possible advantage. In equipment. Fit. Choice. Find your solid edge at the Downhill Edge.

65 Main Street · Burlington 862 · 2282

DOWNHILL

EDGE

VERMONT CYNIC

THE FACTS:

1 HUNDREDS OF THOUSANDS OF WOMEN USE ENCARE OVAL.

Encare Oval™ was introduced to American doctors in November 1977. Almost immediately, it attracted widespread physician and patient attention.

Today, Encare Oval is being used by hundreds of thousands of women, and users surveyed report overwhelming satisfaction. Women using Encare Oval say they find it an answer to their problems with the pill, IUD's, diaphragms, and aerosol foams.

2 EFFECTIVENESS ESTABLISHED IN CLINICAL TESTS.

Encare Oval™ was subjected to one of the most rigorous tests ever conducted for a vaginal contraceptive. Results were excellent—showing that Encare Oval provides consistent and extremely high sperm-killing protection. This recent U.S. report supports earlier studies in European laboratories and clinics.

Each Encare Oval insert contains a precise, premeasured dose of the potent, sperm-killing agent nonoxynol 9. Once properly inserted, Encare Oval melts and gently effervesces, dispersing the sperm-killing agent within the vagina.

The success of any contraceptive method depends on consistent and accurate use. Encare Oval™ is so convenient you won't be tempted to forget it. And so simple to insert, it's hard to make a mistake.

If pregnancy poses a special risk for you, your contraceptive method should be selected after consultation with your doctor.

3 NO HORMONAL SIDE EFFECTS.

Encare Oval™ is free of hormones, so it cannot create hormone-related health problems—like strokes and heart attacks—that have been linked to the pill. And, there is no hormonal disruption of your menstrual cycle.

Most people find Encare Oval completely satisfactory. In a limited number of cases, however, burning or irritation has been experienced by either or both partners. If this occurs, use should be discontinued.

4 EASIER TO INSERT THAN A TAMPON.

The Encare Oval™ is smooth and small, so it inserts quickly and easily—without an applicator. There's none of the bother of aerosol foams and diaphragms. No device inside you. No pill to remember every day. Simply use as directed when you need protection.

You can buy Encare Oval whenever you need it...it's available without a prescription. And each Encare Oval is individually wrapped to fit discreetly into your pocket or purse.

5 BECAUSE ENCARE OVAL IS INSERTED IN ADVANCE, IT WON'T INTERRUPT LOVEMAKING.

Since there's no mess or bother, Encare Oval gives you a measure of freedom many contraceptives can't match.

The hormone-free Encare Oval. Safer for your system than the pill or IUD. Neater and simpler than traditional vaginal contraceptives. So effective and easy to use that hundreds of thousands have already found it—quite simply—the preferred contraceptive.

©1978 Eaton-Merz Laboratories, Inc.
Norwich, New York 13815 EA 1617

The most talked about contraceptive since the pill.

Features

Tupelo, Mississippi: A Report From the Front

Photos courtesy of The Call

"Over there are enough Negroes to make 15 "Tarzan" movies. We're just armed to protect ourselves."

Doug Cohen, Grand Dragon
Mississippi United
Ku Klux Klans

All-American city, coming into town either direction you see the signs: it's really an all-racist city, that's the point we want to make here."

Skip Robinson, Founder
United League of Mississippi

By Nelson Hockert-Lotz

It's the day after Thanksgiving. There's not much traffic. I stare out the window with glazed eyes, slowly sipping cold beer. The hills of Mississippi are covered with tall grass, thin, like the hair of a young man prematurely balding. The soil is red, and looks red against the green, a striking clash. We'd been twenty-three hours on the road when we rolled past the big billboard proclaiming "Tupelo: All-American City." The honorary title was a recent beneficence of the U.S. Chamber of Commerce. The city is listed on the roap map among the ten largest cities in Mississippi, population 20,000.

Michael and I have driven here from New York City. We came to cover a civil rights march that the United League of Tupelo was holding to protest racism and the Ku Klux Klan.

We were glad to arrive in Tupelo, the end of a long journey. But we were apprehensive too. The Klan has a long history of violence. I wondered after traveling 1500 miles to cover the event, if we could possibly look "neutral." And in a sense we were neutral when we arrived. On the long way down, we talked about determining "just grievances" that the blacks might have, though we didn't doubt that they had some. But the myth of an unbiased press is a peculiar American institution. Our experiences in Tupelo kept us aware of that fact. We were constantly asked in amazement, "You came 1500 miles to cover this? How come?" And indeed no explanation could adequately answer that question, the truth was plain enough. By covering this event in Tupelo, we were making a political statement. By being there, we were making a statement which was essentially the same as the one the demonstrators were making. We were saying: This is an issue, something important is happening here.

The media politics of the situation were plain in the fact that the memorial service the night before the march had drawn press from Baltimore, Milwaukee, and Boston. It was attended by more than two hundred people. But there was not a word of it in the local Tupelo Daily Journal. Instead, on the front page of Friday's paper was an account of a church service which praised the "Christian people" of the city for remaining peaceful in the face of Klan and United League provocation.

We became increasingly aware that what was happening in Tupelo was a media event. The United League staged their march with the avowed purpose of becoming a national organization involved in a national struggle.

The Klan did not come out to actually confront the United League. Douglas Cohen, the Klan leader, claimed that the Klan's protest was aimed strictly at the FBI and the Justice Department. He repeatedly denied that their presence had anything to do with the League.

It became obvious that the Klan was there to project a confrontation through the media. The Klan was not about to meet the United League head-on. Nothing would have put the Klan out of business faster than firing on the marchers. Klan violence is well known, but it depends on moonless nights, surprise and numerical superiority.

The United League leaders and security force are armed. Their experience with Klan violence has included an attempted assassination of a League leader, Dr. Howard Gunn, and six League members. An armed League member returned fire.

In addition, the United League has published a small mimeograph "picture biography" of the movement. It has a page devoted to photos of one Klansman, noting the Klan rallies he's attended, his car and license plate and his address. It says,

TO ALL KKK MEMBERS:

This is to let you know that we know who you are and where you live. If anything happens to a League member, the same will happen to you.

It was a media event, it was staged just for you readers. But the fact it was staged does not mean that the issues are not real. The issues are very real. There was violence, shooting at and beating of demonstrators by Klansmen. But it occurred after the press had departed.

We weren't the only ones to realize the anomaly of our position. A black TVA engineer who was part of the United League security force, told us: "I wouldn't want to be in you guys' position. I don't see what you're out here searching for. You're only isolating yourself. You can't live in my neighborhood. You're not conditioned to live in my neighborhood. And once it gets known that you're out here sympathizing, you can't live in yours either. I've got three-hundred years of conditioning of a hard life. You're not used to it. I don't care how hard your job is, I've had one a little bit worse. No matter where we start, you're gonna get a break a little bit better than I get. You can't live on my side. You can't pat me on the back when you got a little better break than I did. It's not personal. I don't resent you. But we both know it's there."

"I own two Cadillacs. You want to know why? It was, let's see, I think 1949 that the first black man was able to buy a Cadillac. Joe Louis was the first black man to ever buy a Cadillac, and he had to buy it second-hand. He made enough money to buy anything, but he couldn't even buy a new Cadillac. Black men weren't supposed to own Cadillacs."

This is an important part of what the struggle in Tupelo is about, despite the fact that Alfred "Skip" Robinson, the leader of the United League,

(continued on page 39)

...Where a Wardrobe Costs a Quarter

By Jim Brown

North Street and Elmwood Avenue is a busy intersection in a run-down section of Burlington. Bicycles, pedestrians, and cars are all waiting to move. The stores are small but their large windows distinguish them from the houses. Between the awning shaded window displays of Mazel's Shoes and the stark entrance to an upper apartment, is a second-hand clothing shop called "Helping Hands Inc." There is no faded plastic sign in the street. The address and name are neatly painted in blue and gold on the window and the white curtains masking the bottom remind me of a small town diner. This is 196 North Street, the place where they give away clothes for a quarter.

The door is open, but a "closed" sign is strung across the entrance with a piece of electrical wire. "We close at two," says a voice from behind a rack of men's pants. I tell him that I would like to know what they did here, and the voice replies, "come right in."

Two carefully hung rows of suits lead the way into five more rows of pants and assorted shirts, all on homemade racks of metal pipes with unpainted wooden supports. Fred Blair is rehanging men's pants that have been shuffled through many times today. He works in the light from the window with no help from electric bulbs.

Blair was most recently employed as a school custodian. Before that he had a trucking business. He wears a brown visored work cap over slightly greying hair. When he talks he looks right at me through a pair of sturdy metal rimmed glasses. The ease in his speaking overcomes the skeptical lack of expression in his face and I understand tho' it is the face of a man who worked many tiring hours for many years. Blair says of his interests: "I like to fish, I like to hunt. Whenever I can, I'm on the lake, but I enjoy being here with my wife to help out. We take off the last three days of hunting season. Just close right up."

His wife Gladys is the manager but she is not here today. She has worked in "Helping Hands" since it started almost ten years ago by a Mrs. Charbonneau here in the old Social Security office. Gladys took over a few years ago and has operated under the same policy. No profit is made, no salaries are taken and the rent is always difficult to pay. The Blairs and Rose Bullard, who works with them, volunteer their time. The Blairs receive Social Security and a pension because they are now retired.

Money for rent and expenses comes from the 25 cent minimum donation asked of everyone who comes in and a small government subsidy. Local churches also help out from time to time. Still, "Helping Hands" is on a tight budget.

The Salvation Army on Main Street, by comparison, receives funds from charging a small fee for each item of clothing, from individual donations and from the United Community Fund. There are also at least two stores in town which sell used clothing to make a profit.

"Helping Hands" clothes distribution policy is unique. Blair claims that it is unique in the whole country. Where else, he asks, can someone come in and pick out the clothes that he or she needs for a donation of a quarter? Most people give more when they can.

The age of their customers ranges evenly from 20 to 70. Blair is glad to see many older customers because he knows how hard it is to live on a small fixed income with today's prices. He retired two years ago himself and has helped his wife with the shop since then, getting to know many of the people who pass through. Young, single people use the services of "Helping Hands" often, but the greatest proportion of customers are families. And they don't just come from around the block, or even within Burlington. The Blairs get families driving in from Barton to the north and Brandon in the south. Over a third of the people are regulars who show up every week or two. Many are outfitting the whole family and make more trips during the school year to keep their children well dressed. An average day's crowd is about 50 but it has been as high as 125.

Individuals and families aren't the only customers of second hand clothes. The Chittenden County Correctional Center finds outfits for its inmates there regularly. St. Joseph's children's home also depends on "Helping Hands." Many local pre-school programs get old shirts to use as aprons during painting activities. Theatre groups even use these fine vestments for costumes and an occasional undertaker comes in search of low-price formal wear.

The rules for eligibility are simple: you must be over sixteen, or with a parent, and not known to have abused the service in the past. The most common abuses are taking a bag of clothes home to resell in a yard sale, and coming each week to replace clothes that were worn only once and then discarded. Blair says that this doesn't happen very often and that he can usually tell when something suspicious is going on. What about the borderline cases? "I'd rather let 'em have a little too much than have somebody that really needs it go without," Blair answered.

Blair feels that most people put the clothes to good use. Many users are single parent families, some with as many as eight children. He enjoys being able to help when it's obvious that one parent is doing his or her best to work and raise a family. Often they are referred to "Helping Hands" by the Social Welfare Dept. When an individual or family qualified for general assistance, they are first sent to "Helping Hands" or the Salvation Army to find the single change of clothing that they are allowed. Only when they can't find it are they permitted to buy it new.

"Most people are nice, but some of 'em are pigs," says Blair. He adds that although most people who come in have a genuine need, many come back week after week for handouts without making any apparent effort to help themselves by trying to get a job. A few college students are also among the undeserving. They are the ones who could obviously be more generous with their donations and don't really need the low prices as much as others. "It's

(continued on page 48)

THE APPALACHIAN GAP
CLOTHING FOR MEN & WOMEN

VILLAGE SQUARE, WAITSFIELD
25 LANGDON ST., MONTPELIER
199 COLLEGE ST. BURLINGTON

Books For The Season

THE TIMES ATLAS OF WORLD HISTORY, $50.00 HC computer generated maps, events from all eras and civilizations.

THE SNOW LEOPARD, Peter Matthiesen, $12.95 HC superb text of a trek across the Himalayas into Tibet. A perfect complement to...

HIMALAYAN PILGRIMAGE, Ernst Haas, $45.00 HC color photographs of the land and its people by the master, former Life Magazine photographer.

THE STARSHIP AND THE CANOE, David Brower, $8.95 HC a chronicle of a father and son — a physicist father who dreams of colonizing the asteroids and his son who lives 95 feet up in his treehouse in British Columbia.

THE AUDUBON SOCIETY FIELD GUIDE TO NORTH AMERICAN BIRDS, $8.95 a handy size, accurate & clear photos for easy identification.

HOMAGE TO CAVAFY, $9.95 pap.
ten poems by Cavafy, ten photos by Duane Michals — a gem!

ONE MIND'S EYE: THE PORTRAITS AND OTHER PHOTOGRAPHS OF ARNOLD NEWMAN, $12.95 pap.

Holiday Hours:
9AM — 9PM
monday-friday
9AM — 6PM
Sat.

BOOKSTACKS
118 Pine St. 862-8513
between Main & College
Open nights to 8pm

SUPER
Sunday
Brunch
Buffet

$4.95 Seconds on us!
Bloody Marys $1
Every Sunday 11-3

MC-VISA
Open: Mon.-Sat. 11-10 Sun. 11-3
Res: 864-9544

Stuft Shirt Restaurant 135 Pearl St. Burlington

Cynic Classifieds. They Work.

And They're Free.

PLANTS
PLANTS
PLANTS
PLANTS
PLANTS
PLANTS
PLANTS

Tremendous Sale!!!

20-50% Off

1,000's of plants on sale! Tropical, foliage, hanging and house plants. These must go! Also decorative pots, books, plant stands, potting soil and much, much more.

CLAUSSEN'S GREENHOUSES

Route 2A Colchester
878-2361

Fresh Apple Cider

68 Church St.
863-3609

Photos by Bob Gale

Stepping Down And Out

By Randy McMullen

This could potentially have been a literary pool of sentimental muck. Fortunately, I am not all that sentimental. It's not "in" to be sentimental these days, Freud has gone way down in the polls. Journalists especially have to be wary of sentimentality. Ever since All the President's Men, it has become generally accepted that all newspaper people have to be cute, intelligent, and completely indifferent to their personal lives.

Nor will this article be a source of inspiration to other potential Features editors. I have no intentions of superficially frothing at the mouth, or spitting out all sorts of glittering generalities by calling my Cynic experiences "rewarding" or "educational" or even "fun." That would be like telling people that my ego is where it's all happening. Randy McMullen had a good time as Features editor. Big deal! All I can seriously suggest is that if you are interested in journalism, you should start considering the limitations of this school in your particular area. Outside of the Cynic, the educational offerings in journalism here could be measured in an eye dropper.

I was first appointed (not elected, appointed) to Features editor in the fall of my sophomore year. I had previously spent perhaps one hour inside the Cynic office. I took the position blindly and I blindly suffered for it. I didn't know what I was doing. I didn't know what to write about, and I didn't know anyone else who knew what to write about. In my first issue, the pages I had been responsible for were highlighted (sort of) by a story which revolved around my experiences with hallucinogenic mushrooms. I never really knew what people thought about it, the only feedback I received was from friends in Coolidge Hall, where I was residing, who naturally thought it was fine.

I would venture to say that Coolidge Hall was having a substantial impact on my life in those days, because for the next month or so, there was a rash of drug-related articles appearing on my pages of the paper. The reaction to these articles was pretty clearly divided. Those fond of tinkering around with their states of consciousness were generally in support of articles describing in detail the subsequent buzz one receives from ingesting mushrooms, microdots, and marijuana. On the other hand, some people were quite appalled at seeing their campus newspaper, their representative voice in the neighboring community, blatantly condone the use of drugs for social entertainment.

I suppose that I rattled a few tempers in the upper echelons, as well. I mean it doesn't seem likely that members of the UVM faculty, administration, board of trustees, and especially members of the state legislature, could find anything more than slight amusement from seeing articles with names like "The Saturday Evening Blowout" strewn across the pages of the university newspaper week after week.

The excitement peaked when a good friend of mine submitted an article called "What Kind of Bonger Are You?" The article contained a small plug for the Friday Afternoon Smoking Club (FASC). There was a nice little graphic along with it, and for about the next five weeks, the Cynic was receiving letters asking, begging and warning us to discontinue our patterned display of degeneracy.

Although the Cynic doesn't publish an exceptional amount of drug-related material anymore, I would be lying to say that I've lost interest in drugs. I'm fascinated by them. And while some people have criticized me for openly advocating drug-abuse, I will say now that I have never (seriously) suggested to anyone that they take drugs. To quote myself from a previously published article (not that I merit direct attribution, but I've never quoted myself before and this article seems like a good place to do it), "...the best thing about them (drugs) is that the choice is always up to you."

There are obvious exceptions to that, but in the long run, the choice really is up to you. I've known people who can smoke what would probably be considered a large amount of marijuana (getting high, say three or four times a day), and have no problems with their responsibilities. Other people take one toke and act like Mickey Mouse for three weeks. I have studied high, taken tests high, written papers high, and written articles very high. But I would never suggest that someone else try all that, unless they would feel comfortable doing it (the old 60's slogan, "do it if it feels right"). And of course I'll never know if these habits have affected me adversely or for the better, but if I had to do it all again, I wouldn't change a thing.

SOME MISCONCEPTIONS ABOUT COOLIDGE

I lived in Coolidge Hall for two years, which chronologically marked the very twilight of its halycon period. What I'm referring to is Coolidge's brief distinction as the home of the Experimental program, during which its residents enjoyed a large amount of freedom. It quickly became "the dorm" for a lot of things: drugs, destruction, rebellion... things that don't generally appeal to solid members of the establishment. The building took a beating, but its reputation soared (or plummeted, depending on whether or not you lived there).

When I first arrived at UVM, I was told of Coolidge's reputation, and thought that it couldn't be that bad. But on the first day of classes, I witnessed the following ir ident:

About 15 utes into an English class, a guy walked into the room, stumbled lazily over some chairs, and declared, rather inaudibly, that he was "looking for a jacket." His appearance, to be frank, was rather incriminating. He had a disheveled look about him; his long, crackly blonde hair radiating out like micro-waves gone amuck. His eyes were beet red and running. I remember thinking, when I saw him, that I wouldn't mind being buzzed myself. Then the girl to my left whispered to the girl on her left, "I'll bet that guy lives in Coolidge."

Having to respond to the utter absurdity of the comment, I leaned over and said to both of them, "you're right, he's the hall advisor." The two of them giggled innocently, joyously reassuring themselves deep down, that they would certainly turn out to be more productive human beings than the wasted product who had disrupted the class with his druggy antics. Definite Coolidge material.

And to be sure, Coolidge had its characters. Trouble wasn't something new to the dorm. It happened on all floors: from the basement to the roof, onto nearby water towers, the top of Southwick Hall, and then down into the underground tunnels that can be found on Redstone campus, and even onto a runway at the Burlington Airport. It was all Coolidge trouble that manifested itself in misdemeanors, drug experiences, loudness, and overall behavior that showed a general disdain for authority and conformity.

But Coolidge's reputation had it all wrong, it was very distorted. The people there were (are) not losers. They were wild, but productive in their own right. On the whole, it was a very encouraging place to live. The interaction there was amazing. If you had come across some piece of information, while studying or reading, that utterly astounded you, there would always be someone around to hear about it and respond. If you wanted to stop thinking altogether and just listen to the Grateful Dead, you could always find someone who was already doing just that. If you needed $15 immediately, and had already bounced three checks in the same weekend, someone could usually slip you the bills.

Without going any further in this direction (I'm getting a little mushy already), I feel obligated to add that I am in no way implying here, that Coolidge's past was any more glorious than its present. From what I know and hear, there is still a positive, happy atmosphere there, and when this aspect is intact in a dorm, there really isn't a whole lot to bitch about.

*****

There are many things I could go on about in this article, but I can't mention any of them because I'm saving them all for my upcoming novel. Besides, the only real reason I wrote this was to fill up room; and I can see that I'm coming to the end of my allotted space (limitations of journalism). It should be right

about here.

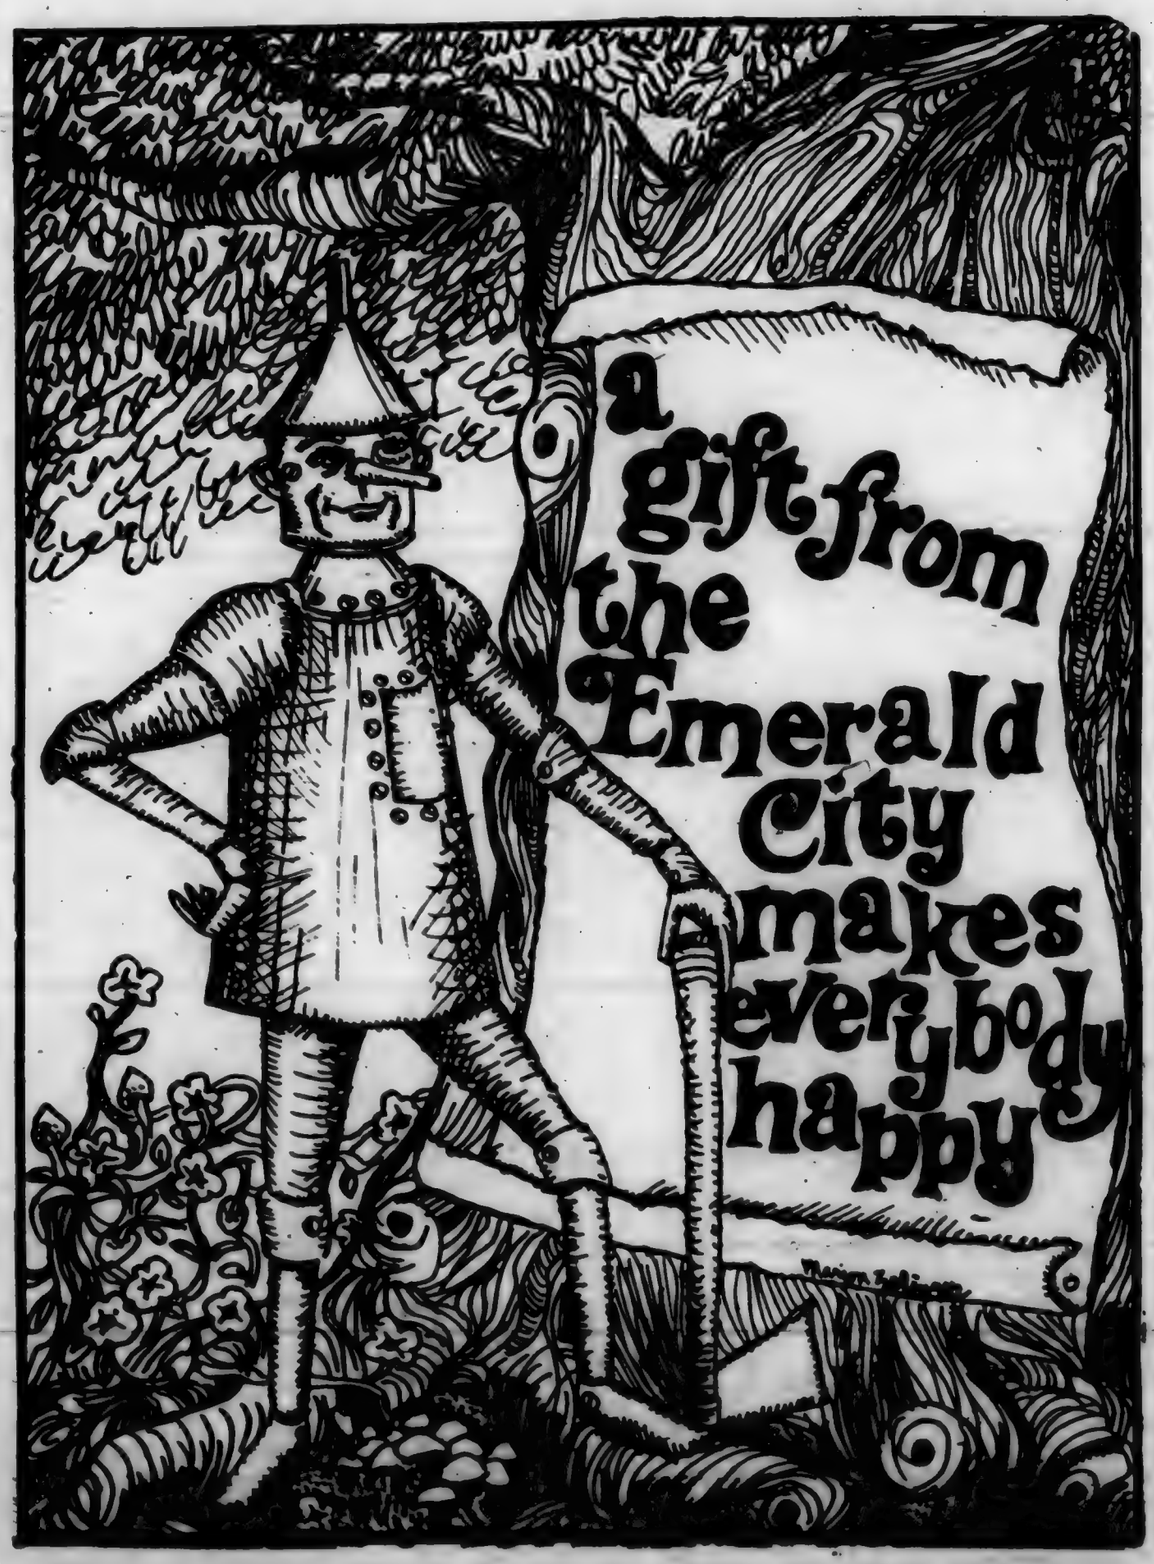
"I have no intentions of superficially frothing at the mouth."

HOMEMADE SOUPS • CLAM CHOWDER • CREPES!

HOT CIDER • HOT CHOCOLATES • UNIQUE HOT CHOCOLATES

I SCREAM, YOU SCREAM, WE ALL SCREAM FOR

VEGETARIAN SANDWICHES

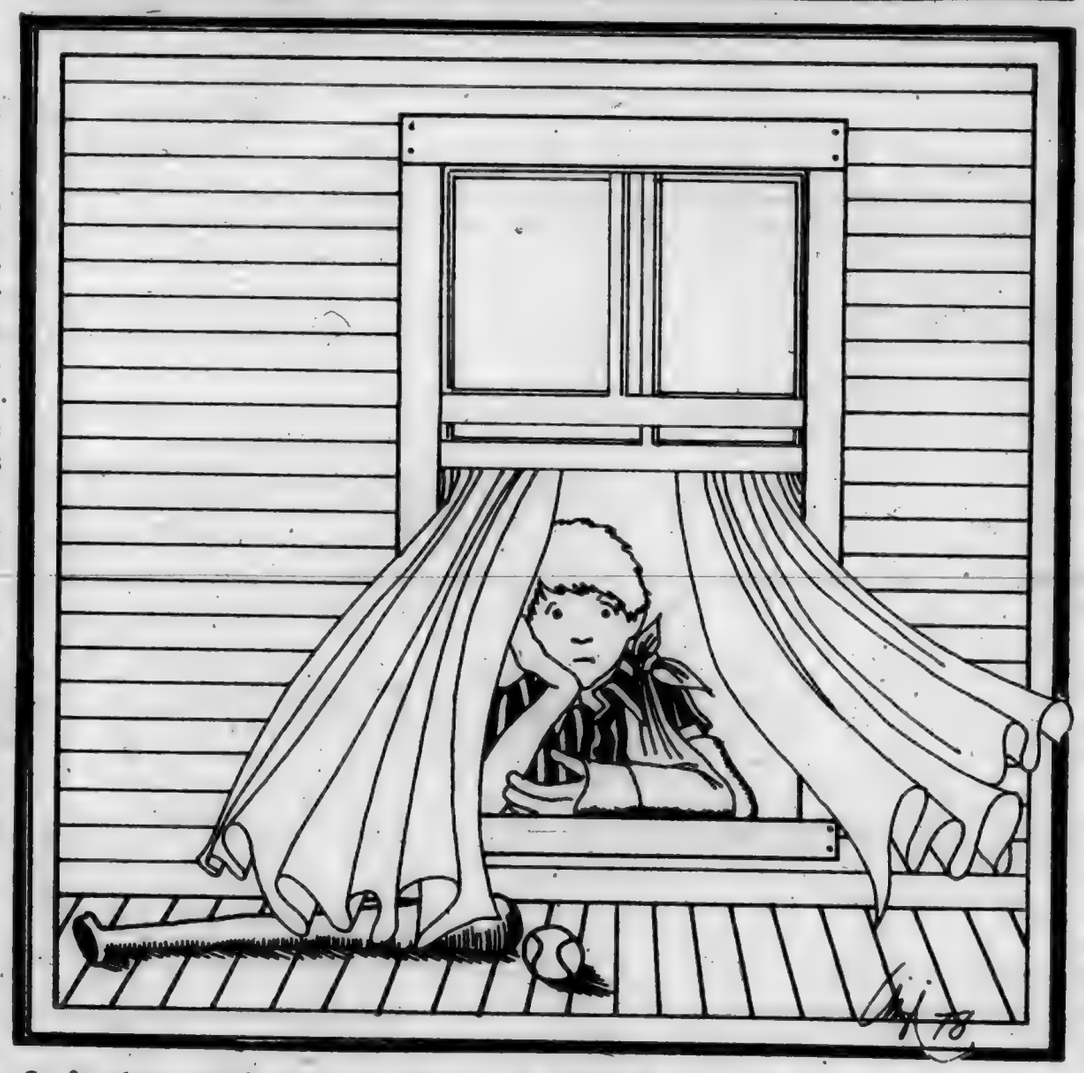


YES, WE HAVE THEM AT:

ben & jerry's homemade

ON THE CORNER OF ST. PAUL & COLLEGE BURLINGTON • 862-9620

HOT LEMONADE • LOTS OF TEA • S



• CAPUCCINO • ESPRESSO • CUSTOM COFFEES

Contest Winner

Until Labor Day

by John T. Scully, Jr.

By John T. Scully, Jr.

When I was eight years old, I fell off a stone wall and broke my arm. I can still see my mother opening the door for me, asking, "What happened?"

As soon as she saw my disjointed arm, she closed her eyes for a moment, as if to make it go away. I came in holding a limp right wrist with my good hand. She got me seated at the kitchen table, then turned and made two phone calls. The first to the police for an ambulance and the second to Anne Fisher, our neighbor and a RN.

Though not compounded, both large bones connecting my wrist and elbow were broken. My forearm resembled a small bridge that had collapsed at mid-stream.

After talking to Anne, my mother came back and made a second closer examination of my arm. "It's going to be okay," she said. "Annie's coming over. Just don't move it."

"Okay."

"Does it hurt?"

I shook my head no. The hardest part at that point was sitting still. Whenever I had to sit quietly, like in church or on my Aunt Peg's couch, my body began to prickle. It followed a pattern. First my scalp and the skin between my shoulder blades became itchy and then the soles of my feet would begin tingling as if tickled by a feather. The only remedy was to scratch my head and massage the spot on my back against something hard while rubbing my feet together. I called this relief. My mother called it fidgeting.

These symptoms appeared almost immediately. What's more, it had been the second hottest day of the summer and humidity hung heavy in the air, the way it does just before rain. My arm stuck like fly paper to the tablecloth. I had to move. Normally, a simple motion from the elbow would have done it. But now the tablecloth rose with me. Not thinking, I wrenched myself free from the shoulder. My arm swung up in a high arc, hung there for a moment, then fell hard onto the table. Quite suddenly it hurt. Badly. A bolt of pain shot up my arm to the socket and back down again. And an invisible vise began squeezing my forearm tighter and tighter. I'll never forget that feeling. I thought my arm was passing through a laundry wringer.

Almost immediately my head lightened the way it does when one gets up too quickly after a short nap, and I saw stars, mostly purple and yellow ones, of all shapes and sizes. A scream started to form in my throat but died there.

"Jackie, Jackie," it was my mother's voice at the end of a bad telephone connection, "I've got you, honey, you're all right."

"Ohhh."

"You're okay now. Don't worry, it's going to be all right."

She had managed to catch me as I fell sideways off the chair, and she was now propping me up, back against the wall. My father was called to come in at once. I could sense her cool, thin fingers running through my hair as I regained consciousness. There was a frightened look on her tan, finely sculptured face, but she managed to give me one of her smiles that always showed confidence.

"Do you feel faint?"

"No." We both stared down at a muscle near my elbow that had begun to twitch, sending tiny pulses down my injured forearm. Each quiver passed just beneath the shiny skin, stretched no thicker than a band-aid, over the misplaced bones. It looked as if one of them could pop through at any moment. So far there hadn't been any blood and neither of us was prepared to see any now.

Just then my father walked in from barbecuing chicken breasts on the grill. He took one look and began screaming, "Goddamn you, Jackie, goddamn you, if it's not one thing it's another."

"Hook, yelling isn't going to help." My mother's face showed signs of strain, but her voice was still warm and soft.

I looked down at the floor waiting for my father to leave. Instead my brother came in with a bang of the door. He looked me over with raised eyeballs as he made his way to the breadbox. When he came back, he stood chewing a slice of bread until it was in disgestible pieces.

"You know what that arm looks like?" he said. "It looks like a broken pigeon wing."

My father pushed him aside and bent down for a closer look. He had specks of orange barbecue sauce on his face and his thinning black hair smelled of Vitalis.

"Is it broken?"

"I think so, Annie's coming over."

"You know what that arm looks like," my brother began again.

"Dennis, go on outside," my mother said, fixing two laser intense eyeballs on his round, freckled face.

"And don't take off."

"It looks like it's going to fall off," he said with a bang of the door.

It was just six o'clock when Anne Fisher shuffled into our kitchen. She was the heaviest lady I'd ever seen outside of the circus. She was also one of the sweetest people in the village. My mother was busy cleaning me up when Anne began to examine me.

My mother had this thing about cleanliness. If I had been hit by a freight train, she'd be out there picking up the pieces and washing them before the undertaker arrived. It was one of the few things we quarreled about. I could never get used to washing my hands and face more than once a day. Right now she was having a time with some cherry popsickle stains on my bare legs. I thought she was going to scrub the skin off.

"You don't want to be dirty when you see the doctor, do you?"

"I don't want to see no doctor."

"Any doctor." The cool water on the washcloth was refreshing on my face and even I could see the futility of pursuing that point.

"Oh my Gawd," Anne Fisher kept saying, "oh my Gawd." She was from Brooklyn and her accent rose dramatically when she grew excited. "You did it now, Jackie, you did it now." She kept talking all the time she was wrapping my arm in a large cotton bunting and securing it with gauze strips. Then she placed a small pillow beneath my arm.

"Now don't move."

"Is it badly broken, Annie?" asked my father.

"It's a clean break and that's good," she said. "Both large bones are broken. These two," she said, pointing to her own ulna and radial bones buried deep in her forearm.

"Another goddam bill," my father said. "That's all it is with you, one freaking bill after another."

"We have hospitalization, Hook."

"Shit. What's it cover? What's it ever covered? Nothing. Nothing." He often answered his own questions.

There was a story my mother told about my father's bad luck with medical expenses, and she later said she thought of it when he had begun screaming at me.

When I turned two, it seems something inside me decided that sleep was no longer needed at night. Morning and afternoon naps were obviously doing the job. My mother would put me down at seven and when she checked me at eleven, I'd still be awake. After a week and a half of experimenting with different feeding and bedtime schedules, my mother began to worry about my health. Dr. Bullen was called in. He examined me but couldn't find a cause for my insomnia; neither could two specialists at Greenwich hospital. Another week passed. By this time, the experts were baffled at their observations and my parents bedraggled by lack of sleep.

Dr. Bullen then convinced my mother that I ought to be brought up to the Yale Medical Center, where a special team was investigating the phenomenon of sleep. So, I spent a week at Yale in a specially rigged bed, wired to all kinds of electrodes, monitored by all kinds of nurses, playing with some of the most fantastic toys a two-year-old has ever seen.

When the experts completed their tests, they concluded there was nothing wrong with me, that I was normal in every way, that I would sleep when I needed sleep. "Don't let it bother you," they told my mother. "He'll outgrow it."

My father had naturally been vehement against the Yale visit from the beginning. My mother, however, dismissed his complaints as symptomatic of his general mistrust of anyone smarter than himself. People who made sense tended to intimidate him.

Meanwhile the Connecticut State Legislature was meeting in Hartford to vote a $300 bonus to all World War II veterans who had served for at least three years. My father got his check on a Tuesday and the Yale bill for $296 and change on Thursday. His downpayment on a new Chevy slipped through his fingers and every time his old Nash failed to start the next winter, he thought of me.

"Will my arm be paralyzed, Annie?"

"No, now hush up."

"Is it gonna shrivel up?"

"Shhhh. It's going to be fine."

I had visions of ending up a little crippled waif, begging for money at the bottom of Greenwich Avenue, where all the bums hung out. I could see it all so clearly: I was going to be a Tiny Tim for life, like one of those kids who caught polio.

You have to remember that polio was still the number one crippler in those days. Most of us were petrified of catching it. Pictures of young mothers in iron lungs, of little girls trying to walk on legs weighted down by heavy iron braces, and of the March of Dimes poster child were everywhere. Jesus, I was going to be one of them.

(continued on next page)

Continued from page 30

"How can they fix it, Annie?" Tears were welling up in my eyes.

"They'll set it."

Dennis was back in the house again and I didn't want to cry in front of him, but I was scared and needed some answers.

"If they don't set it right, what happens?"

"Can I have your baseball glove?" Dennis asked.

"Get him out of here!"

"Out and stay out," my father shouted. Dennis disappeared with a bang.

"Well?"

"Well what?"

"My arm, what if they don't do it right?"

"They will. People break their arms every day."

"It's gotta be perfect. It's got to." You see I needed that right arm for something important. I was going to be a pitcher for the Dodgers. For a few minutes I thought of becoming a lefthander. Southpaws were in heavy demand, especially at Ebbets Field. What could be so difficult about throwing a baseball left-handed? Look at that rubber-armed kid from Nicaragua who had pitched his team to victory last year in the Little League World Series. If they played a double-header, he'd throw one game rightly and the nightcap lefty. There was a precedent, at least. It had been done. But then I began to think about the few times I had actually attempted to throw a ball left-handed. I'd thrown like a girl. Besides, if it were so easy, why weren't the majors full of ambidextrous hurlers? I felt doomed.

Just then a police cruiser pulled to a halt in front of our house. A young officer in a long-sleeve blue shirt came to the door, carrying a clipboard. My mother opened the door for him and said hello.

"Don't I know you?" she asked.

He nodded.

"Yes, aren't you Danny Jensen's little brother?"

He flashed a toothy grin. "Oh yeah, I remember you, you're the girl who used to dive off the tower at Island Beach."

They chatted amiably for a few moments before he came into the kitchen. He winked at me right away and said, "What do we got here?"

"It looks like a double fracture of the right arm," Annie said very professionally.

"Hmmm. How'd you do it, pal?"

"Fell off a w "

He laughed and patted my shoulder. Talk about feeling foolish! Why hadn't I broken my arm chasing a runaway car or tripping a bank robber coming out of the Putnam Trust Company? What great headlines they could have made on the front page of the Greenwich Times: "Local Boy Saves Sleeping Child" or "Riverside Youth Thwarts Stickup." My daydreams ended with a glint of light off his service revolver. He had it tightly strapped in a hip holster. It was the first real gun I'd seen so close; I began thinking about being a cop. Hadn't there been a one-armed detective in some old movie?

"I broke my arm once," the policeman said.

"Oh, I remember that," my mother said.

"Fell off the swings at Bruce Park."

"You and Danny were trying to see who could go the highest."

"The plaster cast, encasing my arm from knuckles to armpit, was hot, itchy, and smelled like a hole in someone's living room."

"I got too high."

"You almost went over."

"Yeah, around the world."

"Did you?"

"No. Jumped off. Hit my arm on one of the bars on the way down."

I guess he noticed I was staring at his arms to see if one of them was withered or shorter than the other because he said, "Look, it's as good as new."

"Really?"

"Sure." He pulled his left sleeve up and snapped his wrist back and forth a few times. It was hairy but looked okay. Maybe there was some hope.

"I need to get some information down," he said, "before we go for a ride."

"Sure."

"Sit here."

"Thanks."

He took a pen out of his breast pocket and jotted words down on a form as my mother answered his questions. She answered quickly and precisely, spelling certain words out for him without being asked. When finished, he stood up and put his hat on.

"Hello there," he said, spotting my father leaning over the sink at the far end of the kitchen.

"Me? Oh, hi."

"You Mr. Lally?"

"Yeah right. How you doing?"

"Fine."

"Good."

My father looked as if he had just been caught stealing cherries at the A & P. My mother called it his guilty look. It was a cross between sheepishness and terror. We'd seen it often. He would show it when my Aunt Peg would ask him in amazement how he could keep her supplied with vacuum cleaner bags and attachments, or when a waitress would stare at him after he'd just snitched all the sugar packets and crackers off the table. My mother said, not entirely facetiously, that all the banks in Greenwich had little chains on their customer pens because of people like my father.

"Do you want to follow us to the ER?"

"Yeah, I'll follow you."

"We're all set to go then." We all got up and headed for the door.

"Where's my keys? I can't find my keys."

"They're on the television, Hook. Right where they always are."

My brother had come in on the policeman's shadow and he realized now that he had to say something if he were to get a ride in the cruiser. "Can I come?"

"No."

"I'll be good."

"Go outside."

"Not again?"

"I'll watch him, Mary," Annie said. She grabbed Dennis' hand and held it tightly as my mother and the policeman helped me into the back seat. Then they got in and we were ready to go.

"You know what that chicken looks like?" Dennis said. "It looks like a marshmellow that fell in the fire. What am I gonna eat?"

"I'll feed him," Annie said. Dennis began to throw a little tantrum, but Annie had a good grip and she shook him a few times as if he were a puppet on a string.

We were living in Mianus Village then. It was a small neighborhood of forty matchbox houses set on postage stamp lots. The government had built the houses for veterans who hadn't qualified for mortgages. The idea was that families would rent until they had saved enough for a downpayment. We moved in when I was two. The village's greatest disadvantage, in my mother's mind, was that everyone knew one another's business. A good fight could be heard five houses away.

Everyone was standing alongside the road, the way they do when a parade comes along, as we sped down Cary Road that evening. My mother sat hunched down on the seat and didn't acknowledge their presence. When we turned onto the Post Road, she breathed a sigh of relief. Later she told me that the first thing she did the next morning was to go down to the Greenwich Times and make sure Charlie Finch had room to put the news of my accident in the evening edition. She didn't want to fuel any innuendo about our presence in the backseat of that police cruiser.

"Don't you wish you'd gone to daycamp now," she said.

"That ain't why I fell."

"Don't say ain't." She winked at me and I could see she wasn't mad.

"Is Daddy behind us?"

"Yes."

"Is he keeping up?"

"I hope not."

"He'll get a ticket."

"Don't worry about him. Let's get this arm fixed, okay?"

"Okay."

"Good boy."

When I came home from Greenwich hospital ten days later, I knew my summer was over. Swimming and baseball were out, as were tree climbing and bicycling. And, worst of all, I was confined to my yard. God, was I miserable. The plaster cast, encasing my arm from knuckles to armpit, was hot, itchy and smelled like a hole in someone's living room wall. Later after people began to sign their names, it assumed the faint fragrance of magic marker.

"And, worst of all, I was confined to my yard. God, was I miserable."

Despite a coming home party with cake, ice cream and presents, no one seemed able to raise my spirits. My Aunt Peg took me shopping and to the museums, but they were short-lived amusements. My mother taught me how to play gin and crazy eights and a half-dozen kinds of solitaire. I liked clock solitaire the best and always kept a deck tucked away in my sling. After the novelty of seeing someone in a cast wore off, most of my friends stopped coming by. There were just too many other things for them to do.

Whenever I think back on that summer, I remember one person in particular. That was our neighbor, Ross MacNamee. It so happened that he too was grounded. But where my condition was temporary, his was far more critical. He had an inoperable cancer and had been sent home to die. At that time though, I had no way of knowing that.

The MacNamee's had been our next-door neighbors for five years. He was Scotch and his wife Katie, second-generation Irish. Ross said she was shanty Irish. They had two little girls whom they loved, but collectively put through hell. Ross spoiled them like a grandfather; Katie either disciplined or ignored them, depending on her state of mind. He had worked at the Lifesaver factory in Portchester. She was an operator at the telephone company. Ross also did a lot of freelance gardening at some of the estates in North Greenwich before he got sick.

Most people thought the MacNamees were always drinking and fighting. That wasn't entirely true. When they first moved in, they were a fairly average family and there was a semblance of togetherness in their lives. Every so often Ross would go off on a little "toot" and Katie would lock him out when he tried to enter the house. Of course the neighborhood knew he was home before that door opened. Katie herself had a fondness for beer, which infuriated Ross. He had a provincial attitude about a woman's place and one of the things that irritated him most was to come home and find Katie drinking "bellywash."

We used to feel sorry for the kids, especially when the fighting got out of hand. Beth, the older one, would go from room to room shutting doors and windows, but brick walls couldn't muffle the noise when Ross and Katie got going.

Ross had left his job the previous winter and been in and out of the hospital until Easter. I remember my parents going up to see him a few times, but they never said anything about it.

Ever since he had come home, Ross had been spending his days sitting behind his house in a lounge chair that afforded a superb view of the Mianus River. The chair always sat in the same spot on the lawn and the grass beneath it had long since yellowed and died. When he first came home, Katie often sat beside him and brought out his meals. That had ended quickly. She'd go off in the morning by taxi and return the same way each evening toting a large brown bag full of quart bottles of Rheingold beer.

They didn't fight anymore. He'd hobble out each morning and sit silently all day long, raising himself only when Beth appeared with his meal on a rattling tray. Everyone said that Katie looked worse than Ross. She was the palest woman in the world.

Katie told my mother that she drank all the time to wash her shame away. "Just think," she said one day, "I couldn't live with him and now I can't live without him. Ain't that nuts?"

(continued on next page)

Labor Day

continued from page 31

One hot, muggy afternoon, I remember sitting on our backstep playing checkers with my mother while Dennis and his friends swam in the river. She had just double jumped my last two kings and I was mad. I slipped the board over and red and black plastic discs twirled like tops on the smooth concrete. It must have made a loud noise because we both saw Ross turning his head toward us. He stared briefly, then slumped back in his chair.

My mother frowned and waited for me to say something.

"You never let me win."

"Should I let you win?"

"No."

"Then what?"

"Give me a break."

"I play to win."

"Well, I don't want to play anymore."

"Suit yourself." She got up and went into the house.

"Goddamn broken arm," I said half under my breath. I was sore but not dumb. Nothing would be gained by getting my mouth washed out with soap for cursing.

I got up slowly and walked into the backyard. Beyond a chain link fence lay the Mianus River, fresh and inviting, as clear as crystal. For a moment I was tempted to lift the latch on our gate and step down the hill to where our pontoon dock sat floating on the water. Dennis, Eddie Cole and Zeke Fairly were down there now, frantically cannon-balling one another.

I began to cry a little, frustrated at that uncaring fate which now stage-managed my summer. The rock wall I'd fallen from appeared in my mind. If dynamite were available, I'm sure I would have blown that malignant wall off the face of the earth. But it wasn't and never would be. In its place stretched the fence. It was a convenient substitute and I expended four weeks of boredom and loneliness on it in a violent volly of kicks. I kicked it until my foot hurt and waves of energy were travelling up and down its length, rattling support poles as they went.

When I turned around, Ross MacNamee was staring at me. He had pulled himself up in his chair and there was a quizzical look on his face. I began to walk up toward the house, feeling his eyes on me. They were unusual eyes – blue-green and watery, wedged in deep sockets. They seemed to click when he shifted their direction. My mother said Ross had bedroom eyes; Katie said she married Ross because of his eyes.

He still frightened me a little then and I kept my gaze pointed downward. It was a hard thing to do. I almost tripped once on a rock chip jutting out of the grass. When I looked up, our eyes met again. This time, he motioned me over. He kept nodding his head and waving me on, like a cop directing traffic on a busy avenue. "Come on, that's right, come on, come on."

It was the first time I'd been in his back yard since his illness. His lawn had once been our outfield, but wiffle ball moved to the street after Ross began sitting out there.

"Would you like a lifesaver?" he asked in his thick brogue.

I wanted to say no and get out of there but his deep eyes held me like a magnet.

I nodded looking down.

He reached across to hand me an evergreen lifesaver. It shook visibly in his hand, but I tried not to notice. "I've got the jim jams today."

I smiled not knowing what he was talking about.

"Sit down, it's hot."

I did so sinking deeply into the folding chair beside him. I remember wondering why he had an afghan covering his legs. They must have been broiling in the heat.

Doesn't the doon look lovely today?"

"The what?"

"The Mianus. When the sun shines just right through the trees, the ripples on the water look like fish scales, don't they?"

I looked out and shrugged. It was the same old river to me.

"It's a peaceful place right enough."

"My mother likes to watch the sun set on the river."

"Ay, naething compares to sunset except perhaps sunrise."

I nodded again and we weathered a few more awkward moments of silence.

"Naething except swimming in the Mianus, eh?" he said at last.

"It's a good place to swim. Cleaner than the Sound."

"Must be hard on a young lad like yourself to sit up here when everyone's romping in the water."

"I'm bored all the time."

"When I get bored I look up and watch the clouds blow across the sky. Pretty soon I fall asleep."

"You get bored?"

"Damn right."

"Do you feel like you're in jail?"

"Indeed."

"I'm grounded till Labor Day."

"That's too bad."

"How long are you grounded?"

"I'm going to be out here about that long, too."

"Oh."

He reached across to a small table and lifted a glass of lemonade to his lips, but he didn't drink. There was another long pause before he spoke again. "I guess it's going to be a long summer for both of us."

"Yeah."

"Perhaps you'd like to come over when you've naething to do?"

"What will we do?"

"Oh, I don't know."

"You play any cards?"

"Ay, I've played a bit."

"That's when it hit me like a kick in the stomach that Ross wasn't going to get better."

"You know gin?"

"Ay, it's a fine game."

I pulled my deck out of the sling. "Would you like to play now?"

"To be sure. Here, help me pull this table over."

"You want to shuffle?"

"Ay." He sorted the cards with ease, but occasionally dropped one when his hands shook. I pretended not to see. "Ten cards, right?"

"Right."

I beat him the first time and felt pretty good for a change. At last I'd found someone on my par in something. He took the next game and then I won two in a row. We played twelve games that afternoon and Ross kept score on a small pad of paper.

In the next couple of days we became regular gin rummy partners. In the weeks that followed we played hundreds of games. When we tired of it, he taught me how to play poker and backgammon and often read me poems from a small, ragged book of Scottish poetry. I learned all about Scotland from him, including why Scottish men wore plaid kilts. "Highlanders call them philabregs," he told me.

Sometimes we'd just sit there and look out across the soft lawn to the water. He liked to watch the puffy white clouds that often sat on the horizon. "Imagine sitting on those clouds. Think of nothing but that," he said. "All your troubles will slip away."

I was amazed at the breadth of his knowledge. Almost every day, he'd have something new and interesting to tell me. I grew to trust the rhythmic patterns of his speech. He knew all about automobiles and airplanes and had travelled all over the world in the British Army.

One day I asked him about the war. He looked down at the buttons on his bathrobe for a long time before he spoke. "There's naething to tell."

"Oh?"

"That's right."

"My father said you were at Normandy."

"He did, eh?"

"Last night D-Day was on 'Victory at Sea'."

"It was naething like that at all."

"Well, what was it like."

"It was like something you should never want to see. Ever. The terror, the horror of it all. I remember Eddie Campbell was saying something to me just as we got near shore. The ramp dropped and we threw our cigarettes in the water. He stood up first and bang, something hit him in the chest, tearing a big hole in him. It happened that fast. Alive and talking, then dead just like that. That's what it was like."

"Pretty bad."

"Ay, it was the 'Slaughter of the Innocents,' when we landed."

We played a couple of games of gin after that, but Ross wasn't too interested in what was happening. I had to keep telling him it was his turn. When my mother called me early to go shopping, I was glad to go.

It rained steadily the next two days. Then I had to go to the doctor's for an X-ray and to the dentist for a check-up. A week passed before I found him in his chair again. He was reading a book as I cut through the hedge separating our yards. He laid it across his lap and gave me a big smile.

"Want some lemonade?"

"Okay."

"What did the doctor say about the arm?"

"Said it's mending nicely."

"Good."

"He's gonna take the cast off the day after Labor Day."

"Just in time for football."

"He's gonna give me a half cast."

"Ay, for how long?"

"Couple of weeks."

"Then you'll be as good as new, eh?"

"That's what he said."

"Good."

"When you gonna get better?"

He laughed and stared off toward the trees. "Soon enough, lad, soon enough."

"That's good."

"Ay, I'm tired of waiting... Waiting's always the hardest part."

"Yeah, I know."

"You know what I'd like to do today?"

"No."

"Go for a drive in the car."

"I thought Katie said you can't drive?"

"It's a lovely day for a drive," he said. "Hand me my metal walker and run up to the house and get the keys. They're on the shelf by the cookie jar."

(continued on next page)

"I know where they are."

"Mind you now, don't say anything to anybody."

"No one's home. My mother went to the library."

Get going now."

It took him almost ten minutes to walk the short distance to his car. There was terrible pain in his face and for the first time I saw how wasted his legs were. Flesh seemed to fall away from his face with each succeeding step.

"Do you need some help, Ross?"

"Almost there now."

"Here's the keys."

"Good boy, now get on your way, Jackie."

"Can I come?"

"No, not today."

"Suppose you need some help?"

"I'll manage."

"What if you get a flat?"

"Go on now, I'll see ye later."

I went around to the far side of the car and got in. I couldn't let him drive off alone. By the time he dropped onto the cushion beside me, he was breathing hard and large drops of perspiration shined on his forehead.

"You've got to get out."

"No."

"Goddamn it, I tauld ye to get out."

"I don't care, I'm staying."

"Can't ye see it's all over for me?"

"No, I can't." I looked across at him; his eyes were glowing like coals. That's when it struck me like a kick in the stomach that Ross wasn't going to get better. I bit my lip and dropped my head, but tears welled up anyway and began running down my cheeks. He put his left hand on my shoulder and I could feel his bony fingers through paper thin skin.

"Wipe ye tears away," he said quietly. "We'll go for a drive together."

I nodded and tried to smile as I dried my face on my sling.

"After a while, we'll go down to the Lifesaver Company to see some people."

The interior of the car was hot as an oven and the air smelled of stale cigarettes. I managed to get some fresh air by rolling the window half down. But it didn't really matter. I was glad to be with him.

We drove slowly down the Post Road and at three o'clock sat in the Lifesaver parking lot, honking the horn as Ross' old co-workers came out for coffee from the Quik-Snak truck. They came right over but seemed embarrassed to see him. Many looked as if they'd seen a ghost, excused themselves and hurried off. Only a few stood around awkwardly until the return whistle blew. Then they too were gone. "Look at them," Ross said, "Look how soon they forget."

We travelled all over Greenwich after that winding up at Mount Calvary Cemetary, where Ross pointed out his mother's grave. We said a little prayer but didn't get out. On the way home the car seemed to creep along. Ross could barely depress the accelerator his leg hurt so much.

When we got home it was suppertime and Katie and my mother were standing in the driveway. "Well we made it," Ross said with a weary grin.

"Never underestimate a Scotsman's stubbornness," he said to Katie as she helped him out of the driver's seat.

After that, I saw Ross less and less. Doctor Murphy came by the next day and gave him some medicine that made him sleep most of the time. Then his legs gave out on him. He couldn't walk anymore. When he did come out, someone had to carry him.

The last time I saw him was Labor Day. The lines on his face seemed to have grown an inch deeper and he didn't have any color. Someone had brought him out early in the afternoon. When I thought he was awake, I went over to see him. His eyes were blinking uncontrollably and white whiskers stuck straight out from his hollow cheeks.

"Did I wake you up, Ross?"

"No, no, how you doing?"

"Good."

We talked for a few minutes and then he began to doze. He was having some trouble catching his breath.

"Are you okay, Ross?"

His eyes opened for a moment and he sighed. But he didn't say anything else. I sat beside him squeezing his hand until he began to breathe easily again. That was the last time I saw him.

He died that Friday. In the eulogy at the Funeral Mass, he was remembered for having landed in the first wave on D-Day, and admired for once having received a certificate from the Lifesaver Company for working five years without missing a day, except for vacation time.

"He was a good man," Katie said, over a glass of beer in our kitchen, the day after he was buried. "It wasn't right what happened to him." She started to cry and wiped her red eyes with a crumpled kleenex.

"Life goes on, Katie," my mother said. She had her hand on Katie's shoulder. "You've got two little girls who need you."

"I know."

"We'll help you, Katie."

"You already done a lot."

"Don't you worry about that."

"Where's Jackie?"

"He's right here, Katie."

She reached out and drew me to her aproned breast. "You was such a comfort to Mac at the end, Jackie."

I nodded, standing embarrassed and looking at my mother for direction.

"He loved you, Jackie," she sobbed. "You was like his ——" and she began to cry hard again.

"It's okay, Katie, get it all out."

"Let me see your arm, Jackie," she said after she stopped crying. "How's it feel?"

"Good."

"Doctor Murphy wants him to keep an ace bandage on it for a few more weeks."

"That's smart."

"He said the place where the bones broke is actually stronger now than before."

"Ain't that something?"

"It is."

She squeezed the air out of me at that and gave me a wet kiss on the cheek.

"You go out now," my mother said. "Don't slam the door."

HANNIBUL'S.
A lot of things...
to a lot of people.

Shooter & Scooter Nights

Tuesday and Sat 8-12

Draft and Choice of Shot
$1.00

HANNIBUL'S
152 CHURCH ST.

Counterterror— A New Witch Hunt Comes to Vermont

Kristina Berster in the land of opportunity

The FBI isn't about to look a gift "terrorist" in the mouth.

Text and Photos Copyrighted 1978; all rights reserved.

By Greg Guma

Kristina Berster's arrest at the Vermont–Canadian border presented the intelligence community with a rare opportunity. Any political case, of course, is bound to lead to some intrusive investigation. But the 28-year-old woman and her supporters received special government handling.

Immediately following her initial detainment, and prior even to her first arraignment, a campaign of public deception, knowing and persistent misinformation, and unwarranted surveillance, orchestrated by the Federal Bureau of Investigation, was unleashed. In addition to these counterintelligence tactics, the Berster case sparked a coordinated "counterterrorist" crusade, mobilizing the resources of local and state police in Vermont, the FBI, the Customs Service, the Border Patrol, the Immigration and Naturalization Service, U.S. Marshalls, and the U.S. Departments of Justice and State.

The goal of the program was to prove – through innuendo, falsehood, and any other means available – that, via a muddy border road one wet July night, an international terrorist conspiracy had finally reached the United States.

HOW THE FBI SPREAD THE TERRORIST SCARE

Almost immediately after West German Kristina Berster's arrest for passport violations at the U.S. Border at Alburg, Vermont, the FBI began a "counterterrorist" campaign against the 28-year-old activist and her supporters. Even while Kristina was being detained for questioning – without access to her lawyer – the Bureau was busy setting the stage for a massive propaganda blitz to convince the public that she and three other people, who had driven her to the border area, were West German terrorists.

Soon after her arrest, the FBI knew there was no evidence to support this claim, and much to disprove it. On July 17, the day after Kristina's detainment, an FBI man was already getting details from Roger Jackson, a border patrol agent who had been at the scene. Jackson and others had checked out the identities of the three people who had been stopped in connection with her border crossing. All were U.S. citizens, between 22 and 33 years old. They had been fingerprinted, photographed, and released.

But the G-men were just getting started. FBI agents interrogated Kristina in Vermont while the three other "suspects" were kept under surveillance in New York and Montreal. Within 12 hours of her arrest, the Canadian Mounties were questioning Kristina, and asked questions indicating that they had prior knowledge about her. Two days later they visited her again while she was incarcerated in South Burlington.

The most the agents could determine was that Kristina was actually a West German citizen wanted for "criminal association" based on a seven-year-old charge. The offense doesn't even exist in U.S. law. She had never been convicted, and the German government's star witness, an informer, had recanted twice. But West German authorities did provide some stale circumstantial evidence: Kristina's membership, in 1971, in a radical therapy group, some of whose members may later have joined the Red Army Faction. That, evidently, was enough to create a massive terrorist scare based on associational guilt.

By July 20, the FBI knew that the three people who had assisted Kristina were just who they said they were – three U.S. citizens with no criminal records. They also knew they had absolutely no evidence of a terrorist conspiracy, and, of course, no valid reason to release information about an ongoing investigation that could easily lead to a dead end.

But FBI Director William Webster was also aware that Kristina's capture could help to buttress his claims that urban terrorism was on the rise. He had been lobbying for more agents and expanded authority to investigate U.S. citizens who were "reasonably believed" to be involved in potential terrorist activities. The staff request had been rejected, and criticisms of the Bureau were mounting as Congress discussed a charter for the FBI.

Webster's press conference had a clear political purpose: to show that, for the first time, a foreign terrorist had been caught in a conspiracy with Americans. He said, "FBI agents today have charged an individual identified as a member of a West German terrorist group with a violation of U.S. passport laws... At the time of her detention she was accompanied by three other individuals who are currently being sought, some of whom may possibly be members of the same terrorist group."

His printed remarks stopped short of calling Kristina a member of the Baader-Meinhof group, but FBI press officers provided reporters with more details over the phone. On July 21, newspapers across the country began a series of stories about the "Baader-Meinhof terrorist" and her three accomplices. The Bureau said a counterterror manhunt was underway throughout the northeast for the three, who agents said were probably a West German doctor and two associates – all wanted as suspects in West German counterterror investigations. That neither the ages nor the nationalities of the suspects matched these reports didn't dissuade either FBI spokesmen or "friendly media." One agent went so far as to speculate that Kristina and her friends could have come to Vermont to assassinate the President of BMW, who was planning a visit to Rutland.

Such a ruse can only be maintained for a limited time. About one week later a Bureau PR man issued a "verbal" retraction. The FBI had no evidence that Kristina was a terrorist or that her alleged accomplices were West Germans.

To some extent, the Bureau was forced to change its stance by statements from West Germany indicating that Kristina was, at best, a "fringe figure" and that they might not even extradite her. But the FBI retraction went unreported for over a month, and in the meantime, writers and announcers called Kristina a "suspected terrorist" in numerous articles.

The labeling had been an effective manipulation of the media, and even the FBI's retraction turned out to be temporary. When pressed for more evidence as Kristina's Vermont trial approached, the Bureau admitted again it had none, but the spokesman said, "We're still calling her a terrorist." Kristina Berster might be innocent until proven otherwise in a court. But in the eyes of the FBI – and as a result of their campaign, the reading and viewing public – she was a terrorist until proven innocent. Even her eventual acquittal on conspiracy charges was not enough to stop the politically motivated smear campaign that had been launched against her.

SELECTIVE PROSECUTION

Kristina Berster's initial arraignment before a magistrate was delayed for four days, more than enough time for the FBI to orchestrate its first media assault. Meanwhile, through the U.S. Attorney's Office, the court, local police and U.S. Marshalls were primed to deal with a dangerous outlaw whose murderous accomplices might even try a violent rescue.

The U.S. Department of Justice, working cooperatively with the West German consulate and speaking initially through an aggressive Assistant U.S. Attorney, Jerome O'Neill, pyramided Kristina's terrorist image at her first and subsequent court appearances. Using West German accusations that Kristina was one of their 34 most wanted terrorists, he asked for extremely high bail. The judge, a Nixon appointee named Albert Coffrin, set it at $500,000, a new record for border charges.

This amounted to holding her without bail, since she knew only three Americans. And they were about to be indicted, pending the expected outcome of a Grand Jury probe.

The indictments were designed to match the bail and the defendants' instantly notorious reputations. Rather than charging the four people involved with misdemeanors, the U.S. put forward felony indictments, including conspiracy. Kristina would face eight counts – use of a false passport (two counts, later dismissed by the judge because they were inapplicable), use of a false name (3), illegal entry (2), and conspiracy. If she was found guilty, the sentences could add up to 26 years.

With a potpourri of charges the prosecutors had given themselves room to maneuver. They shortly accepted a guilty plea to a misdemeanor from one defendant in exchange for testimony, and got a guilty plea to conspiracy from another, a 22-year-old who might otherwise face separate grand jury perjury charges. That left Kristina and one co-defendant. Ironically, they were both acquitted of conspiracy, and Kristina's remaining co-defendant, a New York boutique owner was acquitted of all charges.

Overindicti..., exorbitant bail, delay in arraignment, prejudicial publicity, and restrictive security measures and prohibition on visitors – these were the usual, selective tactics for a political trial. At the same time, though, the U.S. Attorney argued that this was really just a "simple border case." A simple case in which a woman was stopped by a Customs officer without probable cause, interrogated for over 15 hours without access to a lawyer, held for days without knowing the charges she might face, repeatedly denied access to legal counsel until her delayed arraignment, and finally, branded a terrorist by the FBI.

KRISTINA TAKES THE STAND

The security force at the federal building was ready for a seige. U.S. Marshalls, security specialists flown in for the occasion, and agents from several agencies roamed the five floors, in contact via walkie talkies. The limitations were strict: no packages or even handbags in the courtroom, and no speaking with the newly-famous defendant, Kristina Berster.

"After Kristina Berster's arrest for passport violations, the FBI began a 'counterterrorist' campaign against the 28 - year - old activist and her supporters."

Yet still, in his opening statement, after an arduous week of jury selection which revealed the deep impact of the FBI's media campaign, U.S. Attorney William Gray insisted he was pursuing a simple border case. To which defense lawyer William Kunstler replied that the issues were far from simple, and the FBI was much involved.

Kunstler's most fiery oratory usually didn't reach the jurors' ears. They were ushered out, for instance, before he tried to subpoena FBI Director Webster. Kunstler was becoming more aggressive as he watched the judge cut off various avenues of defense. Judge Coffrin had so far denied defense motions for dismissal based on prejudicial publicity, selective prosecution, and a 1967 treaty under which Kristina qualified as a refugee.

Standing at the defense table near Kristina, his co-counsel Dennis Schlenker, Kristina's co-defendant Ray Kajmir, and Ray's lawyer Jesse Berman, the activist attorney made his pitch to question the Bureau chief. The judge, after eight days in court just to get as far as opening arguments, was becoming impatient. He squinted not at Kunstler but at the clock.

"Something happened before July 20," said the lawyer, referring to the media campaign launched with Webster's press conference. "The FBI was up to something. If the jury found that the FBI pursued this case on the basis of an agreement with a foreign government, they could find for selective prosecution and acquit the defendant."

Gray was equally adamant on this point, departing momentarily from his mild, Ivy-League demeanor. Like the judge, his position had been made possible by former President Nixon, and he had held onto it during the Carter administration mainly through the intervention of Vermont's lone Democratic senator, Patrick Leahy. A Vermont native, Gray had local boosters among lawyers and Putney School alumni. His pale face usually remained impassive, his voice a polite sing-song. But two weeks with Kunstler and company had begun to provoke aggression, and flushed out a callous second face.

Kunstler often uses the FBI as his whipping boy, the young prosecutor told Coffrin, but really his request has no relevance. He had made a similar argument concerning a defense request to bring in West German expert witnesses and American lawyers familiar with legal conditions there. They would reveal the basis of Kristina's necessity to flee to the U.S. for asylum, but, according to Gray, should be rejected, since "putting West Germany on trial" had no relevance to the border charges.

"If selective prosecution is tried before this jury," Gray said of Kunstler's subpoena request, "then Assistant U.S. Attorney O'Neill and I would have to testify. Really, the FBI has no significance on the issues involved in these charges."

The judge looked ready to agree, but Kunstler tried another tack. "Mr. Gray says this is like all other cases. He is bound by his oath. He made this a jury issue in his opening statement. We have a right to rebut this issue, and we need to determine what went on. Who did Webster talk to, and what did the Germans want?"

"It was my decision to prosecute," snapped Gray.

"Your honor, it may have been beyond Mr. Gray's control."

But Judge Coffrin wasn't swayed. After the lunch break and just before the first government witnesses took the stand, he denied the subpoena without explanation.

The prosecution case was a series of monotone descriptions of events surrounding the July 16 arrests, punctuated by exhibits – mainly an inch thick pile of 8 x 10 black and white photos of the border road network. They examined Kristina's passport, scraps of paper, government reports; the candy bar, which the original detaining officer suspected of containing hash oil, had evidently been destroyed.

O'Neill, Gray's assistant, rambled through locations, (using a wall size map), dates and times relating to Kristina's trip from Montreal to Noyan, and from there to the border. This was beginning to look remarkably like a simple matter by the time the U.S. rested its case, essentially boring aside from testimony by Maria Amendola, one of the occupants of the car on the night in question.

As a student at the University of Heidelburg, Kristina had been part of the worldwide movement against the War in Vietnam, and had joined an alternative therapy project, funded by the university and led by a doctor, Wolfgang Huber. The purpose of the Socialist Patients' Collective (SPK) was to "find out the reasons why people feel lonely, isolated and depressed and the circumstances which caused these problems."

But in June, 1971, as a political crackdown on dissent began nationwide, members of the SPK, eventually including Kristina, were accused of criminal association. The source of the charges was Hans Bacchus, a police informer who recanted twice during the trial in 1973.

"I have been falsely accused as a terrorist, which I am not," she testified. Despite her innocence, Kristina spent six months in prison detention, three months in solitary confinement. Released in early 72, she worked to change the mistreatment of political prisoners, but a year later, facing the prospect of a rigged trial (there are no juries in the Federal Republic), she left the country.

She spent time in Holland, the Third World, and France. But after the Schleyer kidnapping, which spurred a renewed counterterror manhunt throughout Europe, she knew her safety was in doubt. By spring 1978, in the wake of the Moro kidnapping, she knew flight was once again necessary. A West German lawyer who had defended members of the Baader-Meinhof group, was being extradited from France, opening that prospect to Kristina as well. And in May Stern Magazine, Germany's answer to Life, printed the photographs of 40 most wanted terrorist suspects. Once again Kristina was on the list.

"Everyone arrested as an alleged terrorist is detained for between two and three years in complete isolation," she told her Vermont jurors. Before she got to the details, however, Gray objected. The judge agreed to strike such testimony, prohibiting any statements that might clarify the political dimension of the case.

********

Gray's cross examination covered a full day of court. Yet rather than probing her testimony about her past or West Germany, he hammered mainly at her contacts with Kajmir, using subpoenaed phone records, inquiring about her decision to leave Europe and the origin of her passport. The questions were geared toward support for the government's conspiracy theory, which, in turn, would support the FBI's story of terrorism's subtle arrival in America.

(continued on page 41)

Contributing Staff

NEWS: Sarah Bailey, Stacey Cushner, Mary Dixon, Morris Earle, Jr., Rich Hyland, Brooke Laffan
FEATURES: Barry Gustin, Nelson Hockert-Lotz, Valerie Vier, Jim Brown
SPORTS: Randy Briggs, Rob Smith, Hart VanDerburg, Molly McRoberts, Tom Phillips, Lori Murch, Tom Cianciolo, Josh Reynolds, Dale Gates, Sarah Dougherty, Tony Bates
ARTS: Tom Nuccio, Peter Wentworth, Judie Yuill, Ardith Denzer, Thomas Campbell, Pablo Conrad, Tom Daniels, Lori Goodman, Bruce Vielmetti
ADVERTISING: Nat Foote, Dinah Minot, Anne Stires
PHOTOGRAPHY: Rick Ames, Debbie Wolk. Other photographic work from SPS, Don Cunningham, Bill Menning, Karen Salzman, Jim Otto, Kevin Eaton, Trish McGerald.
LAYOUT & GRAPHICS: Lauren-Glenn Davitian, Jenny Landrey, Rachael Love, Laura Benjamin, Amy Lowry, Mellisa Ionta, Robert Giles, Josh Reynolds, Liz Hemingway, Lorri Toppel, Brett Hughes, April Heitkamp, Janet Saccoccio

TYPIST: Libbet Cox, Karen Salzman
TYPESETTER: Sue Ball
PMT's: Jose Morelli

Vermont Cynic
University of Vermont
Burlington, VT 05401

Printed by Times—Argus
Barre, Vermont

The Vermont Cynic assumes no responsibility for unsolicited materials. All submissions are subject to the Vermont Cynic's right to edit. All unsolicited material becomes the property of the Vermont Cynic.

No part of this publication may be reproduced without the expressed written consent of the Vermont Cynic.

Subscription rate is $12 yearly.
Circulation: 10,000

CYNIC Classifieds...

They're Free!!!

Ask For Student Discounts!

GOOD HEALTH

Eggs and Heart Disease:

A Scrambled Issue

By Lyndon B. Carew, Jr.

I appreciate this invitation by the Cynic to respond to Mr. Barry Gustin's criticisms of my recent articles on eggs in nutrition. I applaud the Cynic staff for recognizing the importance of airing both sides of controversial issues in nutrition and health, and hope they continue to promote this.

My review articles on eggs were published in a feed industry newspaper, and do not serve as a basis for my course at UVM as Mr. Gustin erroneously stated. Few here knew of my review articles until Mr. Gustin publicized them.

My references are many, and the entire list will be available from the Cynic or me. I cannot present all of the interesting data in defense of my position, as the reference list would run into the hundreds.

The role of diet in coronary heart disease (CHD) is at best complex and at worst a totally confused mess. Almost every imaginable component of the diet has been implicated as causing or preventing CHD — excess calories, cholesterol, saturated fat, unsaturated fat, sugar, fructose, all fiber, grain fiber only, alcohol, calcium, magnesium, sodium, potassium, chromium, zinc, copper, fluorine, vitamin C, vitamin E, pyridoxine and niacin, to name a few. Aspects of life style such as stress, lack of exercise, and smoking, are definitely involved.

So that my position won't be misunderstood, my own recommendations at the present (and they could change) for the maintenance of a healthy body are (in brief): follow a prudent diet [per recent suggested modifications—1], which includes a proportioned and varied dietary mixture from such foods as milk and its derivatives, high protein foods, fruits and vegetables, and grains. This includes avoidance of excess, fat, sugar, salt, soda pop, coffee etc., (space doesn't permit full elaboration). Whole fiber grains should be selected. Energy intake should be such to maintain a normal weight. Smoking and excessive intake of alcohol and other recreational drugs should be avoided. High blood pressure, hypercholesteremia and other medical problems, if present, should be controlled. There should be at least ½—1 hour of vigorous exercise per day and emotional stress should be minimized. This seems the best way to keep a healthy heart, but no guarantees.

I feel that Mr. Gustin and I have the same objectives in trying to promote better health through optimum nutrition and lifestyle, and I commend him for putting so much effort into it this early in his career. However, our interpretation of how this can be done differs. For example, some people suggest eliminating "empty calorie" foods, such as sugar, from the diet. I have no great objection (although I don't quite agree with the approach) even though this is somewhat paternalistic and goes beyond the available scientific data. Probably little harm results since overweight is our primary dietary problem in the U.S. and sugar only serves as a source of calories. However, when it comes to eliminating wholesome, natural foods, whether it be eggs, liver, spinach or beets, I object. An egg is a powerhouse of nutrients helping to fulfill a balanced diet, and should not be eliminated unless the scientific evidence fully warrants this. It does not. Some agree with Mr. Gustin and want massive intervention by Federal and State governments, which will then dictate what foods we can eat — sort of a prohibition era on certain foods. But we should have substantial agreement on the scientific issues before embarking on any national food experiment.

That we should not, at present, make any large-scale changes in the American diet is agreed on by many top scientists on both sides of the heart-cholesterol issue. Dr. E. H. Ahrens, Jr., Professor of Medicine at Rockefeller University, and a proponent of increasing polyunsaturated fat intake, told the McGovern Select Committee on Nutrition in March 1977 "Advice to the public on changing its dietary

"However, when it comes to eliminating wholesome, natural foods, whether it be eggs, liver, spinach, or beets, I object."

Dr. Carew is a Professor of Animal Sciences and Human Nutrition and Foods in the Department of Animal Science at UVM.

A REBUTTAL

habits in hope of reducing the rate of new events of coronary disease is premature, hence unwise." (2). Dr. Kritchevski of Wistar Institute says in 1978 (3) ..."the normal person, in view of what we know, should be careful and concerned about his cholesterol level but, in view of what we don't know, should not become hysterical about it." Dr. George Mann, a top researcher in heart disease for many years, in a recent article in the N.E. Journal of Medicine entitled "Diet-Heart, End of an Era," says "no diet therapy has been shown effective for the prevention or treatment of coronary heart disease." (4). The American Academy of Pediatrics states: "There is no scientific evidence that the incidence of atherosclerosis can be reduced by limiting cholesterol intake early in life." (5). The National Heart and Lung Institute, a vigorous proponent of lowering blood cholesterol, writes, "before advocating such a major revolution in diet, the Task Force concluded that convincing evidence should be sought that lowering the levels of lipids in blood reduces morbidity and mortality from arteriosclerosis" (6), and Dr. Frederickson of the same Institute (7) said: "In the light of what is actually known, the injunctions on the consumption of cholesterol and fats seem too radical as they stand." The Canadian Dept. of National Health and Welfare reversed an earlier position and apparently concluded in 1977, "evidence is mounting that dietary cholesterol may not be important to the great majority of people. Thus, a diet restricted in cholesterol would not be necessary for the general population" (8). The American Medical Association recently stated "the evidence for assuming that benefits to be derived from the adoption of such universal dietary goals as set forth (in the McGovern report) is not conclusive and... potential for harmful effects... would occur through adoption of the proposed national goals" (2). Even Linus Pauling was moved to declare "it is regrettable that Senator McGovern's committee should, in 1977, be giving unreliable information and advice to the American people such as to tend to deprive them of a reasonable amount of such good foods as eggs, meat and butter" (9). There are many others that take a similar stance (10-12, and many others).

Now to the scientific evidence. The much quoted Framingham Study (3) which Mr. Gustin uses to support dietary change, although showing a relationship between atherosclerotic heart disease and serum cholesterol, contains the following conclusion: "There is a considerable range of serum cholesterol levels within the Framingham Study Group. Something explains this — but it is not diet."

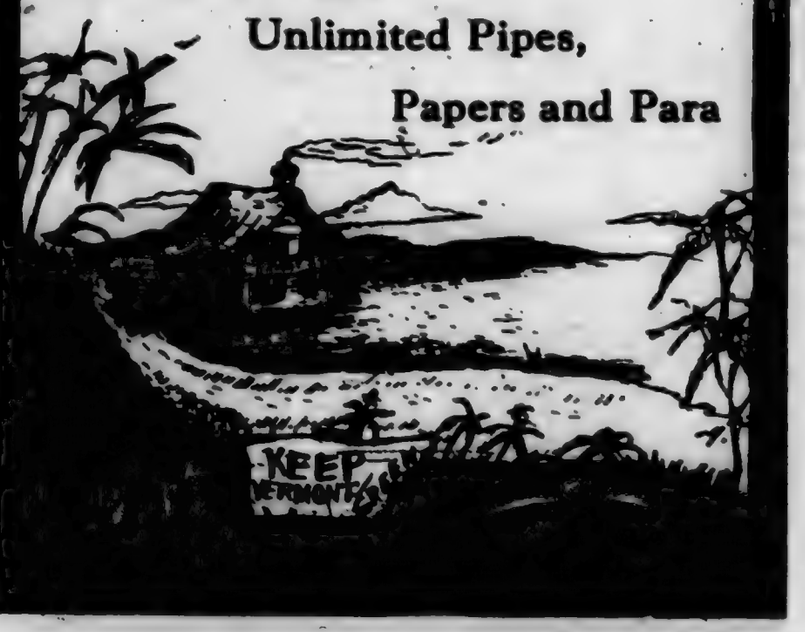
Reiser (14), one of Mr. Gustin's references, in a 1978 article entitled "Oversimplification of Diet: Coronary Heart Disease Relationships and Exaggerated Diet Recommendations," states, "The data from this summary (of the National Cooperative Pooling Project of the American Heart Association, 15) of eight long-term studies of adult cardiovascular disease show no real difference in risk among persons with serum cholesterol below 250 mg/percent." I fully agree with the analysis of this data which shows that about 70% of the population is below this level leaving 30% at higher risk. Thus, only 30% of the population has a potentially dangerous level of serum cholesterol. This should not be interpreted to mean that this 30% will all develop CHD. They won't, and Reiger estimates those not at risk as 70-95% of the population. The current problem is that those who will develop CHD cannot be distinguished based on serum cholesterol levels alone. But this is the best measure currently available. Until a more discriminating test is available, it is currently recommended that those in this higher risk category try to reduce their cholesterol by various means including eating less cholesterol-containing foods. But before worrying too much about eating eggs, everyone should know their blood cholesterol level and act accordingly. "It would be better for each person to know the status of their own blood lipids and adjust their diet as necessary" (Carew 1978:16). Isn't this a better approach than telling everyone they can't eat eggs?

> "The role of diet in coronary heart disease is at best complex..."

In many studies (17-24) reported in the literature, the intake of eggs did not raise the serum cholesterol above 250 mg/percent or even near it. Therefore, if, and where diet primarily influences blood cholesterol below 250 mg/percent, and if, in this range, there is little change in risk of heart disease, then diet as it influences blood cholesterol, has a relatively small effect on CHD.

It is true that much of the earlier work on feeding cholesterol or egg yolks (rarely whole eggs) to people on a cholesterol-free diet raised their blood cholesterol level (18, 19, 25, 26). But the changes were not large — on the order of 10-30%. Even the feeding of cholesterol equivalent to 12 eggs only raised serum cholesterol from 210mg. to 260 mg. On review of these reports, even one of the greatest promoters of a drastic change in American lipid intake, Ancel Keys, concluded "For the purpose of controlling the serum cholesterol, dietary cholesterol should not be completely ignored but attention to this factor alone accomplishes little." (23)

More recently Mattson (20) proposed that changes in cholesterol intake are more important than fat. Data by Hegsted et al (27), however, show a rise in serum cholesterol of only 4-5 mg/100 mg. consumed or about 20-25 mg. if 2 eggs are consumed. Their data point to a greater importance for dietary fat, and a disagreement with Mattson's conclusions.



Mr. Gustin makes a point throughout his article that if cholesterol is below about 175 mg/100 ml. of blood, atherosclerosis is rare. In two of the UCLA experiments I reviewed, this is exactly where the blood level was and eating 2 more eggs did not raise the level. In these situations, at least, using Mr. Gustin's premise, one arrives at the logical conclusion that "eating eggs would not cause heart disease by this mechanism" or "a moderate increase in egg consumption is of no health consequence if changes in blood lipids are used as the index" (Carew, 1978:16). The foregoing are quotes from my articles. I did not conclude "that eggs will not contribute to the development of atherosclerosis" as Mr. Gustin quoted me. This hasn't been shown one way or another in all situations, and harshly oxidized cholesterol or yolk may be a contributor.

Another very important point about the articles I reviewed is that in both the Slater (21) and the Porter (22) articles some of the dietary intakes of cholesterol were about 300 mg. per day. Eating more cholesterol beyond this had no influence on blood levels. The American Heart Association and a couple of other groups have said that dietary cholesterol should be kept at 300 mg. or below to prevent atherosclerosis. The articles in my review, therefore, show that this recommendation often has no meaning. Going beyond 300 mg. cholesterol per day did not increase serum cholesterol.

The research I reviewed had a further advantage in that the eggs were added to normal, everyday diets. In many of the cholesterol-free studies that Mr. Gustin refers to, the diets were highly unnatural, purified ones containing only mixtures of pure protein, pure sugar, pure fat, vitamin and mineral mixtures, and egg yolk. In some cases these "diets" were fed by gastric tube directly into the stomach of the men. While I don't wish

(continued on next page)

ZIGGY'S
101 Church St.
FREE FREE FREE
Come in and register for FREE PIPES to be given away every day between now and Christmas.
Over 600 Bongs,
Unlimited Pipes,
Papers and Para

beer wine
THE ONLY
BEVERAGE WAREHOUSE
IS IN WINOOSKI
Lowest Prices Largest Selection
kegs soda

"Maybe it will go away."
The five most dangerous words in the English language.
American Cancer Society
We want to cure cancer in your lifetime.

Join The Show Biz Greats This Summer

In the Disney College Workshop

★ SINGERS ★ ★ INSTRUMENTALISTS ★

You could find yourself performing on the most famous stage of all . . .

Disneyland. / Walt Disney World.

College Freshmen, Sophomores and Juniors are eligible to audition for this 12 week summer workshop in entertainment. Scholarships, housing grants and stipends will be awarded those selected. Minimum age, 18.

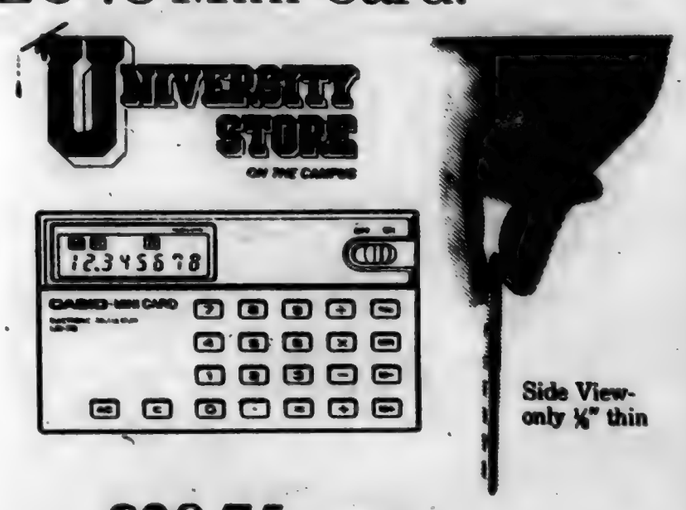
Singers: Prepare vocal piece of your choice. Disney choreographers will provide dance routine—singers must dance.

Instrumentalists: Prepare 3-5 minute performance selection. ALL APPLICANTS BRING MUSIC, INSTRUMENTS (including doubles), PHOTOS AND RESUMES.

FOR ALL INFORMATION REGARDING AUDITIONS CONTACT:

DISNEYLAND
1313 Harbor Blvd.
Anaheim, CA 92803
(714) 533-4456 ext. 701

WALT DISNEY WORLD
P.O. Box 40
Lake Buena Vista, FL 32830
(305) 824-4206 ext. 4206



DO NOT CALL AUDITION LOCATION

Live auditions will be held at the following locations:

Jan. 15, 10AM-6PM
BOSTON UNIVERSITY
855 Commenwealth Ave.
Boston, Mass. 02215

New—Casio's super slim pocket calculator, the LC-78 Mini-Card.

Side View-only ⅛" thin

$28.75 As thin as two quarters!

At first glance, it seems impossible that Casio could have packed so many big functions into such a thin, compact case. But Casio has done it, as you can see:

- 4 function calculator ( +, −, ×, ÷ ) plus constants for ×/÷
- Independent memory (M+, M−, MR)
- Perfect percentage—regular, ratio, add-on, discount, mark-up, profit, increase/decrease.
- Comes in leatherette card-wallet case.
- 8-digit liquid crystal display also shows function command signs to help you operate it easier.
- Super thin horizontal design.
- Only ⅛" H × 3½" W × 2⅛" D and weighs just 1.4 oz.

CASIO®

Eggs

Continued from page 37

to incriminate the experimental design by these very competent researchers, it is clear these diets were artificial and lacked natural components such as fibers, plant sterols, complex proteins and many other natural substances. We now know that natural substances can greatly affect cholesterol absorption and metabolism. After all, an entire scientific area has developed on the concept that dietary fiber is the answer to many of our dietary problems (28). The point here is that "inherent defects in approach" are often in the eye of the beholder not the researcher.

Studying the zero cholesterol situation may be extremely unrealistic. Dr. Gorlin, a prominent expert in CHD, recently wrote, "because of difficulty in dietary adherence this writer is pessimistic about the widespread application of diet therapy regardless of whether or not it is advisable." (29).

A recent report on the Chicago Coronary Prevention Program by Dr. Stamler's group showed that after 2 years of extensive dietary intervention blood cholesterol in men with somewhat high levels was reduced at most by 11% (30).

I'm not sure that epidemiological or population studies can help us reach a conclusion. It is true that vegetarian Seventh-Day Adventists have lower serum cholesterol and lower coronary heart disease. However, many of these vegetarians eat eggs and milk. On the other hand, men in Ireland who ate much more butter, cholesterol and saturated fat than their brothers in Boston (31) had lower serum cholesterol and a lower incidence of heart disease. I could play this game of pros and cons and fill up the Cynic. But playing the correlation game carries grave risks of misinterpretation as exemplified by studies showing that many phenomena can be correlated with sun-spot cycles. Don't the Seventh-Day Adventists change other aspects of their life – alcohol, smoking, obesity, emotional stress – and haven't all of these factors also been implicated in heart-disease and even high serum cholesterol levels? I feel that such comparisons have extremely serious defects. Let me add a correlation of my own. During the last 30-40 years when heart disease has been rapidly increasing, consumption of vegetable oils has also increased dramatically whereas total saturated fat intake has changed little. Shall we then blame all heart disease on vegetable oil? Some people are doing this.

> I don't believe that nutrition in extremis by eliminating wholesome, natural foods is the answer."

Atherosclerosis is seen almost universally in people regardless of diet (33). Whether or not this will turn into coronary heart disease does not necessarily depend on the amount of animal fat or cholesterol in the diet. There are many reports where people eat much fat and other animal products and have little heart disease or low serum cholesterol. The African Masai cattleherders rarely have CHD but live largely on animal products, meat and milk (34). Somali camel herdsmen of E. Africa whose diet is almost exclusively 5 liters of camel's milk per day (250 gm. fat) have little heart disease. Benedictine monks who live on a U.S.-style diet and have higher blood cholesterol (up to 250mg/1%) than Trappist vegetarian monks exhibit the same low incidence of heart disease. Residents of Blatten Switzerland (rural) eat 15% more saturated fat, 8% more cholesterol and 30% more calories but have much lower serum cholesterol than those in Basel (urban) (37). In populations that purport to live over 100 years some are vegetarians, but the Abkhazians of Russia have a diet high in meat and animal fat. The residents of Roseto, Pennsylvania, for about 100 years have had a remarkably lower incidence of heart disease than people in the surrounding towns, although their animal fat intake and serum cholesterol levels have been at least as high (39). However, very recently, as their culture changed from that of a quiet close-knit Italian town to that of an affluent, Cadillac-driving, country club-joining community, so their heart disease increased. Social structure is thought to be the primary factor (39).

A 9-year double-blind study comparing people who ate animal fat with those who ate vegetable fats revealed no difference in death rates or fat content of blood vessels (40). Southern Asiatic Indians eat little fat (3.5%) but have seven times the heart attacks of Northern Indians who eat 23% fat mainly in the form of butter (41). In France, although they eat somewhat more cholesterol than in Finland, death from heart disease is 79% less (42).

There are many more examples too numerous to cover here. The point is that there is ample evidence that the cholesterol-heart disease concept does not hold up in many instances.

Evidence on the regression of plaques in humans with lowered blood cholesterol is hardly convincing. While some reports have led to guarded optimism, several reports have shown continued development of atherosclerosis in people whose serum cholesterol has been markedly reduced by drugs or by surgical intestinal by-pass (43, 44). The most extensive report to date, the 5-year study of the Coronary Drug Project Research Group (45), shows no effect on death rate when serum cholesterol is persistently lowered with drugs. I could write many more pages to show the complexity of this issue, but I think I have made my point. Since the experts working with heart disease are in such disagreement regarding diet, I feel it is improper to take a highly negative stance on eating certain foods. If finally, there is fairly good agreement by them, even to the point of showing eggs are bad for all, I'm prepared to follow recommendations, but that isn't the case now. The principal dietary culprit in coronary heart disease as of now seems to be too much food regardless of source.

Many disagree that dietary cholesterol intake is more important in coronary heart disease than smoking, hypertension, family history, and obesity. This may be Dr. Stamler's pet theory, but that doesn't mean everyone accepts it. As an example, Labuza (46) lists heredity, stress, smoking, saturated fatty acids, no exercise, obesity, fiber and zinc/copper ratios as more likely the cause of heart disease than dietary cholesterol (which he gives a creditability factor of 0.5 or 50/50). Also, recently, in an extensive analysis of three of the world's most important epidemiological studies, Werko (47) indicated that exaggerated emphasis may have been given to serum cholesterol levels in coronary heart disease.

Regarding eggs, I hold to my position that it is improper to scare the entire population out of their egg intake. Those who have problems should be treated individually, but let's not treat the entire population by removing wholesome, unprocessed foods that have been in the diet for thousands of years.

In conclusion, the concept has developed that coronary heart disease is a consequence of the multiple facets of our affluent life style. Long-term implementation of multiple risk intervention programs are showing promising results. We have abundance in the U.S. which is good to a degree. But we get into trouble when we abuse this abundance. I don't believe that nutrition in extremis by eliminating wholesome, natural foods is the answer. Heart disease in part results from a body abused by too much food, too much weight, too much tobacco, too much sitting and too much worry. Let's move these altogether to a moderate position. When a person dies of a heart attack, he doesn't die of a single event, he dies of his entire life.

Klan... Continued from page 26

calls it a "poor people's struggle." Black people can own Cadillacs, now. Black people can participate in the American dream.

It is dignity, self-esteem, which seems to be the most compelling unifying force in the League. The black people in the League are fiercely proud, arrogant even. Unfortunately, self-esteem is hardly an issue which brings people together – a political coalition.

The United League does have a political platform of sorts. It reads like a shopping list, and, depending on who you talk to, you will find a number of variations on the same themes:

—Stop police brutality and Klan terror.

—Implement affirmative action hiring in business, industry and government.

—Rehire two fired sanitation workers with back pay.

—Drop all charges and fines related to the UL boycott of white-owned businesses.

—Stop the investigation of North Mississippi Rural Legal Services.

—Restore land to blacks who have been dispossessed by inequitable assessments, financial discrimination, and corporate buying power.

The march was slated to begin at 11:30 Saturday, Nov. 25, at the Tupelo Community Center. However, the Center was swamped by marchers earlier in the morning. Buses, vans and station wagons bore license plates from a dozen states.

As the march was forming, the marchers chanted "We're fired up, can't take it no more!"

Many people who travelled long distances were affiliated with the Tupelo Support Committees: the Socialist Workers Party, the Communist Party Marxist-Leninist, the Student Brigades, and other communist organizations.

This is hardly a new factor in the civil rights movement, but it was especially evident in Tupelo. The communist parties in this country have been the hard-core supporters of equal treatment for blacks, ever since the Abolition Party folded.

The march progressed slowly. Somewhere in the neighborhood of two thousand people, winding their way through the streets, passed the police department and went on toward city hall.

I spoke to passersby and people along the line of march. What did the people of Tupelo think of this show of force?

Outside a pool hall, pool cue in hand was a young white man smoking a cigarette. I asked him what he thought of the United League.

"You mean the niggers? I think every damn one of them ought to be sh[illegible]"

"Why?" I a[illegible]

"Cause they go marchin' down the street this way."

"What do you think about the Klan?"

"I think they should shoot every damn one of them. They should kill every one of them."

"So you support the Klan?"

"No, I don't support them, but if I had time I would. I'd join 'em."

On the other side of town a middle-aged white lawyer, who declined to give his name ("What would it mean to your readers anyway?"), told the other side of the story. When asked about the Klan's rally across town, he responded heatedly, "If you can call those twenty-five moral degenerates in their monkey suits a rally, you're giving them a lot more credit than they deserve."

I asked him why the Klan was standing on a street corner in his town, armed to the teeth, if they didn't enjoy the town's tacit support?

"Remember Skokie, Illinois? As a lawyer I was outraged that the city council in Skokie thought they could keep the American Nazi Party from exercising their rights under the first amendment. Our Constitution states that this scum must be allowed to demonstrate its scumminess in public. I believe that, and I couldn't understand all the fuss and furor about the American Nazi party until one day, a few months ago. I walked out of my office to get a cup of coffee one Saturday. I walked two blocks to the drug store. This thing (the activities of the United League) had just begun. Some of our friends supported it, and some were against it. The Klan hadn't really gotten involved yet."

"But I walk out of my office, and there on the street corner is this scum in a white sheet, out of Reconstruction, handing out newspapers. I was enraged. I can stand at a distance, and say to the people of Skokie, Illinois, what a misguided people you are for not letting the Nazis march. But right here I believe those sons-of-bitches should be burned at the stake! I know better. But I think that's the way most of us feel, white and black."

Why was there nothing in the local press about the memorial service last night, I asked.

"If they didn't cover it beforehand, maybe they didn't want to bring undesirable elements into the town for the demonstration today. Like you guys... (laughs) not really."

"There are white people here from all over the country: Chicago, New York, Detroit. But there is not one white person from Tupelo in this march. Why?" I asked.

"They're all at the 'Ole Miss' game!"

"No, seriously..."

"Look, we sent a contingent from Greensville, Mississippi, and all over northern Mississippi up to Boston. They were school children, white and black, and they went to tell the students up there that integration works. But they wouldn't even let them speak."

"Okay," I said, "but if the South has come a long way, why aren't they here?"

"Well, number one there's social pressure. Most likely it's social pressure. Second, many of us don't agree with the United League. The city has already given all the United League asked."

It became apparent that the touchiest subject to the whites was how the community looked to the rest of the world. Again and again I heard, "We're better on civil rights than most cities in the North."

(continued on page 42)

SERENDIPITY*

A Talent for making Christmas discoveries by Accident

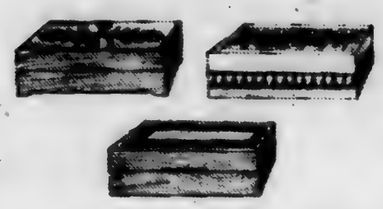
Shown 14" $30.00

A NICE SELECTION OF PLANTERS — INCLUDING A FROG WITH TENNIS SHOES $25.00

NUTCRACKERS FROM GERMANY PRICES START AT $15.00

MUSIC BOXES — CHOOSE FROM OUR LARGE SELECTION OF MUSIC BOXES WITH LOVELY TUNES TO ENJOY THROUGH THE YEARS AHEAD



DECORATIVE, BEADED MIRRORS IN ROUND, SQUARE & OVAL SHAPES PRICES START AT ONLY $6.00

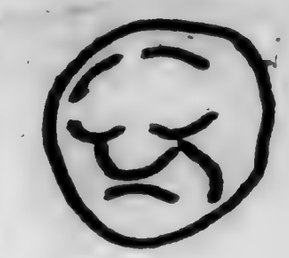
LARGE SELECTION OF FLORAL, HANDCRAFTED PEWTER PENDANTS FROM SWEDEN $6.50 to $9.00

AS ALL LOVERS OF FUN & HISTORY KNOW, THE DRINKING HORN GOES BACK A LONG, LONG WAY. ANXIOUS TO PRESERVE SUCH GOOD THINGS FROM THE PAST, WE BRING YOU THIS NEW VERSION OF AN OLD FAVORITE & WISH YOU HAPPY TIMES.

WOODEN CARVED BOXES FROM POLAND. PRICED FROM $7.75 to $25.00

Large selection of "PAWPRINTS" and Recycled Paper Boxed CHRISTMAS CARDS.

Also, Sterling Silver and 14K Gold Jewelry, stained glass items, prisms, mobiles, stuffed toys, stationery by Eaton, tote bags, Svend Jensen glassware, stoneware — mugs, soup mugs, goblets, tea sets, casseroles, Village Bath products, Truc and Crabtree and Evelyn, soaps, candles.



Make this Christmas a Serendipity* discovery.

SERENDIPITY*

190 College St.,
Downtown Burlington
Across from the Free Press

BROOMBALL '79

wanna be a ref?

Applications will be available at Billings Main Desk starting Dec. 5, 1978.

Applications are due with registration fee no later than Dec. 15, 1978 – 5:00 p.m.

Registration fee is fifteen dollars and will help cover the cost of referees, lights, and equipment. Checks are payable to S.A. Winterfest.

There will be a mandatory meeting for all team captains and referees on January 24, 1978 at 7:00 in Billings North Lounge.

Individual teams must provide their own equipment.

All games will be played between February 1, 1979 – February 17, 1979

Referees are needed for the upcoming Winterfest 79 Broomball Games

Referees will be paid for the games they referee

Applications will be available at Billings Main Desk Dec. 5, 1978

Applications will be due Dec. 15, 1978 at 5:00 p.m.

There will be a mandatory meeting for all team captains and referees on January 24, 1979 at 7:00 in Billings North Lounge.

The Student Association Presents

Student General Assembly No. 3

Wed. Dec. 13th at 7:30 in Harris-Millis Lounge

Student Association Table

Wed. Dec. 13th From 9-3 in Billings

S.A. Hockey Ticket Exchange Service

Call 656-2053

Feel Free To Stop Up Anytime!

Berster...

Continued from page 35

The lawyers spent most of their days either at the bench, crowded around the judge, or in his chambers. Inbetween, the jury filed in and out of court for snatches of approved testimony.

During her second day on the stand, Kristina explained that her instructions on how to enter the U.S. had come from Chilean refugees living in Paris. This interested Gray, but he also wanted to know where she had been between 1973 and 1977. It was just the line of questioning Kristina feared the most, and placed her in the bind of either risking the consequences of her answers or taking the Fifth Amendment, which would damage her credibility with the jury.

Even Judge Coffrin was concerned about the impact of more damaging publicity. "I have, you know, no desire for her to be unnecessarily prejudiced in another country such as West Germany," he said, urging the two sides to work out a "stipulation" which would satisfy Gray without jeopardizing the defendant. The document, which was read to the jury after lunch, satisfied Gray, who had obtained an admission that Kristina felt safe in other countries, and Kristina, who would not have to name countries but simply call them "A" and "B."

Gray finished his first set of questions, and Kunstler started off his re-direct with another aspect of Kristina's decision to leave France. The government had revealed that Kristina had spoken to a French lawyer; Kunstler wanted to know why. But the answer was blocked since obviously it would include remarks about her fear of persecution.

"Mr. Gray opened that door," Kunstler said. But Coffrin, openly upset, shot back. "No, he hasn't." They were drawing closer to the confrontation which had looked inevitable since the opening of the trial. Kunstler had predicted it the day before during the bench conference which led to the "stipulation." When Coffrin said he would let Gray ask about Kristina's underground years, the defense lawyer had said, "All right, Judge. You are opening it." But Coffrin replied, "I am not controlling this." If not him, then who? Kunstler remained firm. "All right," he had said, "as long as you are on notice that now we are going full blast." Voices were rising, and the Judge replied hotly, "You may not be allowed to go full blast."

In court the next afternoon, however, Kunstler wasn't yet ready to set caution aside. Instead he tried another line of questions. Why didn't Kristina think she was wrong to enter the U.S. secretly? It was a direct extension of Gray's previous inquiries. Nevertheless, he objected to any moral statements by the defendant.

Kunstler paced the room, flashing looks at both prosecution and the Judge. He circled the prosecution table, and returned to the podium, pounding on his notes. "I want to get to the state of mind, and why she thought she was not wrong."

The judge could not be budged. No testimony on West Germany would be admitted in his court on this case. Kunstler had finally reached the boiling point. He charged that Coffrin had consistently ruled against the defense, then threw up his hands, shrugged, paced some more, and eventually took his seat.

Had the jury been present Kunstler's outburst would have netted him a contempt citation. But the twelve had previously been ushered out, and the only outcome of the blowup was a conference, in chambers, where the Judge said Kunstler had "impugned" the integrity of his court.

******

By Thursday, the Judge had softened slightly, and Kristina was permitted to say why she felt her actions had not been wrong.

"I had been accused originally unjustly," she said, "of things I had not done. I was wanted for associating with people suspected of terrorism, and I knew that other people suspected, and in jail, had died under mysterious circumstances."

Over the prosecutor's objections, she went on to explain her initial lies about her identity to border officials. "I was afraid of being detained, checked out. If police agents found out, I would be deported right away and I wouldn't get to contact lawyers and ask for asylum."

Why had she chosen the U.S.? asked Kunstler in closing. She replied, "I spoke the language. It has customs and culture similar to Europe. I thought the U.S. was independent of Germany. I thought I could find understanding and support for my situation, since this country has a long tradition of accepting refugees."

The defense team: (from left) Kunstler, Berman, and Schlenker. | One out of six ain't bad.

When the defendant stepped down from the stand the defense immediately rested its case.

DESPERATION MOVES

The only defense witness at Kristina Berster's trial was Kristina Berster. She said enough to raise questions about the prosecution's case, enough, too, to spark a response. Unchallenged, her testimony poked holes in the government's conspiracy case and left the impression that a brave, honest woman had been forced by circumstances to hide her identity for over five years. The U.S. Attorney's job, as he saw it, was therefore to challenge her memory and her honesty.

It worked out quite differently. Two of the government's rebuttal witnesses ended up, under oath, contradicting their own statements. Both had been called in to show that Kristina had had unimpeded and frequent contact with her lawyer during her first 24 hours under guard. Kristina had said she wasn't permitted the necessary calls for over a day.

Donald Peck, the stoic Border Patrol agent who had questioned her until the early morning, at first testified that he allowed Kristina to call a lawyer immediately. But cross examination revealed that his own report on the incident, filed soon after the arrest, showed a delay of more than two hours. The agent was unable to explain the discrepancy.

Next James Aamodt, an Immigration agent on hand the morning after the arrest at the Swanton police HQ, talked about Kristina's calls to and from attorneys. She had denied the calls; Aamodt, who had become case officer for the prosecutors, said there had been three. Once again cross examination revealed a different story. Aamodt eventually admitted that, despite what he'd written in a report to the U.S. Attorney, Kristina could at most have had only one conversation. Several other calls from lawyers had been received, but they hadn't been allowed to speak to the prisoner.

Apparent perjury by government witnesses failed to dampen the ardor of the prosecution. Nor did it lead them to admit there was some special government interest in winning this case. Neither the FBI nor West German authorities had influenced the prosecution strategy, they stated. But conflicting reports had trickled out. Before the trial attorney Gray and his assistant, O'Neill, had spent the better part of a week at Justice Department briefings, including two visits with Attorney General Griffin Bell. During the case they received calls from the West German consulate, whose spokesmen described the New York office as "swamped" with work on the Berster case.

German media had taken an interest from the start, and sent correspondents to cover the trial's opening days. Later one magazine, Stern, hired two German translators from Vermont to collect as much data as possible and bring it personally to their Hamburg office. In fact, the German press still persisted in labeling Kristina a terrorist accomplice, claiming they had obtained a photo of her in a French airport with the sister-in-law of a terrorist. It was either a lie or an indication that perhaps Kristina had been under surveillance even before she arrived in Canada.

If this additional evidence did exist, it was never used, or even alluded to, by the government. Not that they weren't trying to find incriminating evidence and witnesses, using both French and Canadian agents. The last minute investigations just proved fruitless, as did the FBI's continuing conspiracy hunting both in Vermont and elsewhere.

When all the evidence was in, and the lawyers and Judge had finished their final remarks, the jurors went out. That was on a Monday. By the next afternoon it became obvious a verdict wasn't going to be easy. They had become snagged on the question of Kristina's fear and the justification of her actions. She had not denied crossing the border or using a phony name. But her actions were necessary, Kunstler argued, to avoid West German repression. The jurors could not resolve their differences on the issue, and looked to the judge for guidance.

Coffrin responded decisively to the prospect of a hung jury. On the third day of deliberations he read an expanded explanation of the "necessity defense," which outlined that fear of harm could only be a defense if the harm would follow immediately. Having a gun to one's head would be enough, as would facing a tiger. But a tiger in the neighborhood was no excuse to cross a border illegally, nor, by implication, was a counterterrorist witch hunt.

Still, the jurors found it hard to decide. They asked questions about conspiracy, and re-heard excerpts of testimony. By Friday afternoon the group had broken Vermont's record for the length of a jury's deliberations.

The verdict, delivered finally by the mentally exhausted group at sundown Friday, October 27, was a felony and misdemeanor conviction for Kristina. But she and Ray Kajmir had been acquitted of conspiracy charges.

Gray didn't consider the outcome a victory; his circumstantial case had not proven convincing to the jurors, who had, through their questions, given the clear impression they were looking for reasons to acquit. Thwarted in court, he turned to the press. Within hours of the verdict he revealed to a UPI reporter, in defiance of his agreement during the trial, that Kristina had lived in South Yemen during her underground years.

He admitted this fact didn't prove Kristina Berster was a terrorist. But, he argued, it did "tend to disprove" her innocence of terrorist affiliations. Gray had failed to impeach her testimony, and so turned, out of spite or desperation, to that old stand-by, Guilt by Association, using the media to argue his case.

The trial had ended as it had begun, with front page headlines and guilt by association. Kristina was to remain the pawn of governments: imprisoned without reasonable bail, interrogated by agents from two continents, labeled by governments to justify counterterror tactics. In Vermont, the rhetoric had softened substantially. But outside this isolated, rural state the smear campaign rolled on. In New York, a banner headline had trumpeted the day after her conviction: "No Asylum for Terrorist." Despite the absence of proof, or even solid evidence, the FBI's first verdict would be upheld.

Over the wire services word traveled almost instantaneously from Burlington to Bonn. The counterterror crusade against Kristina Berster was far from over. Not as long as nebulous associations served as evidence of guilt. When governments stage a witch hunt, there can be no effective appeal.

"Kristina was to remain the pawn of governments ..."

E&E TIRE

with extra effort
service

152 Riverside Ave. 864-7759

Spillane's

SERVICENTERS

Mobil

• 24 HOUR SERVICE •

811 Williston Road
next to Gaynes

Upper Main Street
Winooski
next to H.S.

1116 Shelburne Road
So. Burlington

Taft Corners
Williston

We offer 24 hour wrecker service

863-2896

For cold starting problems and winter needs see us first

Continued from page 39

In the course of the march we heard that the Klan was up ahead. We walked three blocks ahead to the front of the march. Two blocks away, we saw the Klan. The marchers began chanting slogans, such as "Ku Klux Klan, scum of the land!" and "Death to the Klan!"

We could see that the Klan was heavily armed with shot-guns, semi-automatic rifles, and revolvers. But there was something even more ominous about them in their white sheets. They looked like executioners. When we got to the street corner on which they were standing, they were being filmed by a local TV station. I walked up to the Klansmen. I asked the first one I came to, "What is happening here?" I was greeted by a succession of "no comment" responses. Finally, I found the sole spokesman for the group, Douglas Cohen, Grand Dragon of the Mississippi Klans. He claimed that the Klan was picketing the FBI concerning their grievances. I asked if every picket was so heavily armed.

"No," he said, "but we're never safe with 'this element' in town. I got this scar on my face when I was attacked by communists in Boston last month."

"A young man just told me that if he had the time he'd join you so he could go out and 'shoot niggers.' Does that reflect your attitudes?"

"His is an attitude that the media has given out, that the Klan is a bunch of megalomaniac, church-burning, murderers. This is not the case."

"Would you accept that young man as a member?"

"Yes, certainly, if he was qualified and he conformed to our rules and regulations. We tolerate no independent action. We tolerate violence only if we are physically attacked."

"You're a white supremacist?"

"I certainly am. But they're black supremacists. They think black is supreme; I think white is supreme. They have their opinion, we have ours. We feel all races should expand to their fullest within the limits of the United States without imposing on another race."

"Do you have any comments on the United League boycott of white businesses in Tupelo?"

"Well I feel sorry for the blacks and the United League in Tupelo, because they're being exploited by the communists. The blacks think they're being helped by these people. Actually they're being laughed at, they're being used. They're being made fools of. They should have enough pride in America to refuse to associate with those communist scum. When you talk about this country being decadent and falling down... If our ancestors could see this country now, they'd roll over in their graves."

"What about the 'New South'?"

"The 'New South' is a media myth. The South has not changed. The people of the South are a proud people. But they have been beaten down by the federal bureaucracy for so long. We don't have the numbers that the urban areas have. They can mass the numbers immediately to come out and defend themselves. The South has been pushed down. Their education system has not been the best. And because of this, the federal government has been able to exploit them, push them down and oppress them. The federal government has grinded them under their heel. Our government stinks from the core out."

"Isn't the President from the South?"

"Carter, I heard he qualifies in purging peanut butter and stacking B.B.'s. He's nothing."

"Do you endorse anyone in politics?"

"Well, we've gotta see who's gonna come out and actually run. In the state of Mississippi we have a coalition of all right-wing groups. John Birch, United Klans, State's Rights Party; we're all members of a voting block. Together we'll be interviewing every candidate, with the exception of Charles Evers (a black man), naturally."

Later, the Klan moved to the lawn of the Tupelo Police Department. They had discarded most of their weapons. They stood in a long row, 55 of them, about three quarters in "sheets."

"You've put away most of your guns, now that you're on the lawn of the police station. You said that you are under police protection. Why are your men holding clubs, axe-handles and baseball bats?"

"Well, if you'll look over there," he said, pointing to the marchers, "you'll see enough negroes to make 15 Tarzan movies. If they came over and attacked us, we'd have 80 or 90 men at most. We're just protecting ourselves."

"We say it's time for the poor white to rise up with us; and stop feeling he's better because his skin is a different color."

The Klan claims that its members have been attacked and beaten by "communists" in Boston, and in Plains, Georgia. According to Cohen, they were protesting the fact that the FBI had ignored their pleas to investigate the United League. When I asked why they thought the FBI had ignored them, a spokesman for the Klan said, "I assume someone in the Justice Department is pro-black and anti-white."

Later, I found Skip Robinson, the founder and leader of the United League. The march was headed back to the Center. He strode purposefully ahead. I joined him, leading the ranks. It was the first time in two days I had seen him alone.

A long way from home: The United League's members came from across the country to protest the Klan.

"This seems to be the most active contingent of the Black movement today," I said.

"I don't think this is a black movement. It's a people's movement. There are every race of people in this movement. We have Chinese, and Mexican, white and black people in this movement. The leadership of the movement is black."

"You were riding in a big white Cadillac today. Is this really a poor people's struggle?"

"That wasn't my Cadillac. I own a Honda Civic. We are struggling against the rich people. They're the ones who hire the Klan to do their dirty work for them. They're trying to keep us fighting among ourselves, black and white. They get richer, and both sides (poor whites and blacks) get poorer.

"If the poor white man is ever going to rise up, he's got to rise up with the blacks. Throughout the 1960's, we fought for welfare and food stamps. Who benefitted from it more? The whites, because there are more poor whites in this country than poor blacks. We've been the heroes for the poor whites. We fought the battles for them. So today, we say it's time for the poor whites to rise up with us; and stop feelin' that he's better because his skin is a different color. Times are getting tougher for the poor white. The black can survive better on nothing than the poor white. We are the only race of people who have survived through slavery. When things get tough, the threat is to the poor white. It's time for the poor white to take a stand.

"The Klan, they're telling the poor whites: 'The blacks are taking from you.' We just began to achieve some things in the 1960's. But look at the poor white. He's been poor all his life.

"The rally today was to set off a spark throughout the country. It was to let people know that the conditions we face here are the same all over the country. It is a model. The movement has already been won in Tupelo. I'm not talking about 'won' in the sense that we've had all our demands met, because we haven't. The boycott has been won. The boycott is just something to organize around. When you bring your people together, that's the purpose of the game. I don't give a damn about those few little positions they can give us as cashiers. I never cared anything about the jobs. We're generating unity among the lower-class whites. The crowd today was about 50-50 (black-white)."

"There doesn't seem to be so much animosity toward the Klan among the people from Tupelo..." I continued.

"They know them. They see them every day. Sure, they don't have any fear of the Klan. When we first started to march, black people did have that fear. Now, we walk by a Klansman with a robe on, and we never look back. We've won, 'cause we've eliminated the fear. We've won knowledge and understanding among the people."

"I've got 100 men," he added, "some of them spent 20 years in the service as M.P.'s. I've got men here better trained than the Klan."

"Did you make any arrangements with the Tupelo police?"

"Hey, look, we've got 60 policemen and half of them had to take a day off today. 60% of the Klan out there today are policemen. There's no secret about it. We've gotta be realistic. The mayor is using the Klan, hoping they'll make us over-react. We've been too well organized for that. We've got 100 men who never march. They were at the courthouse, and all along the way. No one ever knows who they are. They just stand around. When I call for the 3702's, that's the core group that comes. They're the deacons, trained security."

"From All-American city, to all racist city, coming into town in either direction you see the signs: that's the point we want to make here. We're following up what was started in the 60's. We're non-violent, but we protect ourselves. The non-violent thing was at its peak in 1963. Dr. King knew that. It's in the last book he wrote."

"Do you think the oppression of blacks is the same thing as the oppression of women or gay people?" I asked.

"No. Not with homosexuals. We want to deal with the system that creates them, it's their environment. It's a weakness. I know that it is sinful. I don't have anything against them. But remember Sodom and Gomorrah? When men share the beds of men, that's when God destroyed the cities. If

(continued on page 48)

Christmas and the New Year are almost upon us. This is the season to give thanks, and the Alumni Office of the University of Vermont has a lot of students to say thank you to. You know who you are, and how you've come into contact with the Alumni Office over the past year, through Reunion, Freshmen Send-Offs, Homecoming, The Class Officer System, Career Spectrums, the Student Alumni Committee or just coming into the Alumni House to say hello. We'd like everyone else to know who you are, too. So...

MERRY CHRISTMAS!

Henry Chamberlain
Steve Kellem
Kathy McKenna
Lisa Witmer
Charlie Clark
Tom Andrea
Carolyn Adams
Vince MacAndrew
John McConville
Christine O'Donnell
Christopher Denny
Robin Beach
Glen Turner
Melissa Denny
Missy Burke
Lisa Tucker
Debbie Kershaw
Walter Brown
Ed Neville
Tom Enright
Rich Davis
Steve Marsh
Harold Augenstein
Susan Vigue
Jean Butler
Richard Barron
Butch Crandall
Lisa Nystrom
Bill Barbor
Klaus Deutscher
Mary Catrone
Ellen Chartrand
Sue Clark
Eric Silverman
Brian Zeccheneli
Mary Loomis
Sam Sylvestsky
Jeanne Auerbach
Laurie Caswell
Linda Perkins
Andrea Pearl
Corlene Coates
Pat Titus
Peter Valine
Eileen Hennessey
Ron Weiner
Sharon Phillips
Greg Boardman
Peter Wentworth
Laura Gump
Jim Harding
Joanne Wall
Linda Jeffries
Lisa Zimmerman
Bonnie Hunt
Jim Shanley
Deborah Sears
Mike Hoyt
Kathy Walsh
Peter Bryant
Peter Murphy
Peter Osborne
David Ullman
Andith Dentzer
Laurie Willste
Lisa Rosen
Andrew Brown
Mark Socinski
Michelle Blais
Mark Donahue
Dana DeGizi
Dave Rosenthal
Judith Maynard
Doug Fletcher
Debbie Medeiros
Peg Wilson
Rebecca Floyd
Mitch Seliger
Kim Tomlinson
Joan Sheldon
Jeff Karolius
Nancy Just Doug Mahon
Cheryl Guccinelli

SEE YOU NEXT YEAR!

Alumni

UNIVERSITY OF VERMONT ALUMNI OFFICE

CR
DUCATI

CRISPIN
Leather

160 College St. Mon.—Fri. till 9:00 Sat. till 5:30 Sun. 12:30 — 5:30 863—2216

Editorial

The Vanguard Press:

On the Issue of Fairness

In light of a recent Vanguard Press editorial, we now feel compelled to comment on the current investigation of the Cynic being conducted by that newspaper. Two weeks ago, a Cynic article reported that the Vanguard, an eleven-month-old Burlington news and arts weekly, had hired a lawyer to determine whether the Cynic is competing unfairly in the marketplace.

Their basic contention is that the Cynic, because of its public, tax-exempt status, suffers few of the overhead costs that a private business does. And, because the Cynic competes for advertising with private businesses who don't enjoy these benefits, it has an unfair advantage. Further, since we are or should be, according to the Vanguard, a strictly university paper, distribution should be restricted to the campus only.

It should be noted that the issues in contention here are hardly limited to UVM and the Cynic. For if the Cynic is competing unfairly, so is every other state supported university newspaper in the country; or for that matter any activity that might be considered commercial by any state institution. We might also add that, at least on the surface of it, there seems little room to compromise. Either the Cynic is allowed to advertise or it isn't.

On the issue of fairness, what could be more unfair than to deny local merchants the main medium through which they can reach the student population. Student patronage constitutes a significant part of the livelihood of store owners downtown. If they were not allowed to communicate with this potential group of customers, their sales would suffer.

With regard to distribution, it is for the very reason that the Cynic is state supported that it should be distributed downtown. UVM is both the intellectual and cultural hub of the state. Throughout the year, UVM offers a wide variety of lectures, drama, sporting events and other activities which are open to the public as well as the students. Don't they have an inherent right to be informed of what's happening at the university? Isn't the Cynic the most effective way they can find out? And if so, should they be forced to come up to the campus and pick one up? We think not. Moreover, one could push this issue to unlimited proportions. Should SA Films be allowed to show movies on campus, the bookstore to sell books, the Royall Tyler allowed to perform plays? The list is endless.

In the December 12 issue of the Vanguard, an editorial written by Publisher Steve Brown, says what he desires since "there is more than enough room for both papers, is a student newspaper with proper educational value for its student employees and student readership – rather than the financial bonanza which the Cynic has become." He also contends that the university's "purpose is to educate, not turn profits."

> "A paper that properly assessed the desires of the readership could do quite well. Unfortunately, the Vanguard has not done so."

We're not quite sure what a financial bonanza is, but if the Cynic is Mr. Brown's idea of one, that may well be part of the Vanguard's problem. Where he gets the information that the Cynic is making windfall profits we don't know, but it simply isn't true. Besides, any extra money that we do make goes into a fund to replace outdated machinery. Also, regardless of what Mr. Brown has been led to believe, the Cynic has a large amount of overhead. The Cynic has a typesetter, printing expenses, supplies, telephone bills and capital depreciation just like any other private newspaper. True, we don't pay rent; but with the size of our office we'd be surprised if it would be more than $100 a month. And on the issue of taxes, if we did pay them, we would be in such a low bracket that we doubt the IRS would even bother to collect.

In addition, it is a bit presumptuous of Mr. Brown to say that the Cynic isn't providing proper "educational value," considering that to our knowledge he has never observed us during office hours.

Furthermore, there are other extra-legal considerations. It is somewhat irritating that Mr. Brown, himself once on the Cynic advertising staff, is now back in town initiating legal action against the paper. He speaks quite proudly of his job in the growth of the Cynic, but seems to have little respect for those trying to continue it. Also, it seems like poor sportsmanship that a publisher whose goal of going first state-wide and then regional failed, is now focusing his market at UVM and trying to limit the activities of a university newspaper which has been here for over 100 years. If the Cynic, with its naturally limited constituency, is such a threat, it must be commentary to the Vanguard's marketability or lack thereof.

We agree wholeheartedly with Mr. Brown when he says there is room for both papers in town. Burlington and the state are hardly glutted with weekly publications. A paper that properly assessed the desires of the readership could do quite well. Unfortunately, the Vanguard has not done so.

Right out of Boston and employment at the Boston Phoenix, Brown tried, it appears, to publish a Burlington version of that paper. Unfortunately, the reader from rural-oriented Vermont and the one from Boston are two people of a different breed. Articles and editorials have a distinctly leftist leaning that, quite understandably, don't appeal to the average Burlington person. Speak your mind, but if the people don't want to hear it, don't expect to make money on it.

We like the Vanguard and wish it great success. But if it is having problems, a bit of critical introspection might be more productive than venting out frustrations on the Cynic.

Dave Greeff

Farewell Editorial

Rambling Away into the Past

In the past, it has been customary for Cynic editors to write what has euphemistically been referred to as a "farewell editorial." And indeed, it is a nostalgic goodbye of sorts. For having spent the greater part of last year in Billings was unquestionably a memorable experience. Surviving on "Den specials" and sleeping in the North Lounge were not particularly enjoyable experiences, but will always be special in their own bizarre way.

I, along with a talented and congenial staff, have worked long hours trying to provide the UVM community with the best newspaper coverage we were capable of. To some degree we have succeeded, but are acutely aware that there still remains much room for improvement. Working so closely in a small and underequipped office can be trying and often irritating. We often experienced disagreement, argument, animosity and at times were at each other's throats. In the end, however, someone would always temper their emotions and compromise for the sake of the paper as a whole. It is only because of this unselfishness and willingness to place someone else's needs above their own, that the staff has maintained an amiable and respectful attitude towards each other. As both Editor and friend, I would like to sincerely thank all the people who have worked at the Cynic over the last two semesters and were victims of my changing and unpredictable moods. Together, we have known both success and failure, and I believe that everybody would agree with me when I say that we're all the better for it. Now, we can all go back to school again.

At this time, I feel it is appropriate to try and analyze the state of the Cynic and where it's going. But to adequately do this, for myself as well as the reader, a little background information is necessary.

When I assumed the Editorship nearly a year ago today, the Cynic had recently undergone a major transformation under the able direction of my predecessor Scott Sartorius. The logo was changed, the format was switched from broadsheet to tabloid, and for the first time in the Cynic's recent history, a conscious effort was made to make the paper aesthetically attractive. Coverage was expanded to a wider range of local and state activities while the paper generally assumed a greater professionalism.

With expanded coverage and circulation, costs naturally rose and the need for more advertising revenue to meet costs on a weekly basis became imperative. The S.A. still provided critically important working capital in the beginning of the year, but this was continuously becoming a smaller percentage of the total operating budget. As a result of increased income, the paper was for the first time able to minimally compensate the editorial board for their hard work and commitment. In short, the Cynic was growing and becoming a respected paper, not only on campus but in the Burlington community as well.

I was lucky and greatly appreciated the opportunity to work for the paper in a period of prosperity. I was somewhat disturbed, however; for while I felt that the paper had come a long way, I still believed the editorial content to be poor and inadequate. There seemed to be a prevailing attitude that appearance was more important than content. Many believed that as long as a paper looked appealing, how the copy read was unimportant. My primary goal was to redirect priorities and improve the writing. Without a journalism department, this was no small task. To this day, I still find it incredulous that a major state university offers no journalism and only a minimal amount of other mass communication-related courses. As the world becomes growingly interdependent, even a myopic observer can see that communications is one of the most promising and innovative fields of the future. Budget realities indicate that now is an inappropriate time for new programs, but this serious vacuum at UVM should not remain unfilled.

In specific relation to the Cynic, the absence of a journalism department deprives us of the natural bed of writers who would be aspiring career reporters majoring in that field. Further, we are deprived of the constant and constructive criticism which we would welcome from faculty trained in the field.

Given these realities, we must rely solely on interested students willing to give effort far exceeding the benefits they receive. On this note, however, on behalf of the entire staff I would like to thank Mr. Hazen Wood and the education dept. for understanding our needs and awarding us credit that we believe is commensurate with the time we spend. Without credit, the Cynic would undeniably diminish in quality.

With these thoughts in mind, it has been my goal to attract the best writers in the university to contribute to the Cynic on a regular basis. And while that goal has yet to be achieved, I can say that we've come a long way. Interest in the paper has never been higher. Good writers are coming in larger numbers and heightening the intellectual content of the paper. People have responded positively, if one can judge by a vastly expanded "Letters to the Editor" section.

The other fundamental problem was that the paper lacked a clearly defined purpose. What are the objectives of the Cynic? Who is the paper being written for? What

(Continued on next page)

VERMONT CYNIC

EDITORIAL BOARD

Editor-in-Chief: David C. Greeff
Managing Editor: Jerome E. Andrews
Copy Editor: James Oakes

News: John Letteri
Arts: Vaune Davis
Features: Randy McMullen
Sports: Rich Chalmers
Steve Larose

Advertising Manager: Peter Voll
Business Manager: Julie Voll
Photo Editor: Robert Gale
Contributing Editors: Eric Kilburn
Henry Chamberlain

The Vermont Cynic is published weekly during the school year except vacations by students at UVM. Opinions expressed herein do not necessarily reflect those of the University administration, faculty, staff, or the State of Vermont.

Farewell

Continued from preceding page

do those people want to read?

It is my belief, and will always continue to be, that the Cynic's primary obligation is to UVM students. Accordingly, coverage of events and developments relating to the university and its students has been the paper's intended focus. But only the most narrow-minded perspective would interpret this to mean reporting only on university events. All students — even if transitory, are active and eligible voting members of the Burlington community. They deserve to be well informed of all happenings affecting their lives whether they be on campus or anywhere around the state. Only from a campus newspaper can a student read relevant issues with a lean intended towards young people between the ages of 18 — 25. Local and state papers have too broad a constituency to offer the same perspective.

I will be the first to admit that this mixed coverage poses somewhat of a dilemma. Where do you draw the line between campus, state and local news? Which is more important in a given week? This is a very difficult question to answer and one that I, and other editors, have often answered wrongly. But I can assure you that we never omitted an article because of personal prejudice but only because we felt it didn't have a broad readership potential.

In general terms, I can happily say that the state of the Cynic is good. Both editorially and aesthetically we are much improved over where we were a year ago, and hopefully should improve further in the future. I have the utmost confidence in my successor, John Letteri. He has been active with the paper for well over a year and News Editor this semester. He has fresh and creative ideas which should keep the Cynic moving in a positive direction.

I would like to take a moment, for his sake, to urge anybody interested in working for the paper to stop by the Cynic office and get involved. For some unknown reason, many people fear that it is impossible to work for the paper. Just stop by; you'd be surprised how happy we are to see you.

At this point, I have much more to say but very little energy to write. And it's obvious that I'm rambling anyway. Alas, my last sentence as Editor. It's been fun. I'll miss it!

Dave Greeff

We'll See You in '79.
Have a Good Vacation!

DON'T SMOKE

AUTO PARTS PLACE
THE SUPERMARKET OF AUTO PARTS FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC

Don't Miss these Christmas Specials

FM CONVERTER AUDIOVOX $16.95

INDESTRO TOOLS 20% DISCOUNT
Special orders in time for Christmas if you hurry.
Many tools in stock.

Heavy-duty JUMPER CABLES all copper $9.97

PYROIL WINDSHIELD DE-ICER 14 oz. 99¢

ZERO START TANK HEATERS OR THERMO PUMPS 850 to 1500 watt $17.77

Electronic rear window Defroster Defogger $9.97

Check our low prices on Motor Craft Batteries

MONARCH DRY GAS 3 for $1.00

Mechanics Hi-quality CREEPER 50% OFF NOW 7.47

Heavy-Duty one piece construction CAR RAMPS 6500 lb. capacity $35.95/pr.

AUTO PARTS PLACE

SAVINGS UP TO 40% on most every part your car will need

Rain Checks available on all these great sale items
Route 7, Shelburne Rd.
Next to Green Mountain Hardware
8-7 daily
8-9 Friday
8-5 Saturday
9-3 Sunday

Tupelo...

continued from page 27

homosexuality starts to rise, we're headed for the end. Homosexuality don't make children, so where could we be headed?

But what we're here to fight is racism. Poverty and racism. There is no plan in this country to eliminate poverty. As long as the same people control the government, there never will be. This system does not work for us."

"Is capitalism viable?"

"Let me put it this way: capitalism is not working. I'm not gonna get into socialism and communism. Our job is to go out and waken the people. You can't go putting something in their heads before you wake them up. Your plans are no good then, it's a defeat. We're just waking them now."

Finally, the march was over.

We left Tupelo, knowing that the march was a big success for the United League. It was the largest civil rights march, organized on local issues, to take place in the deep South in many years.

The United League may well be making history in Mississippi, or the movement may be a flash in the pan. Skip Robinson is an intensely charismatic man, and his leadership is the crucial link. But that only points up the problems, that one man holds the movement together through all its diverse goals. Sooner or later, the United League is going to be forced to choose between black middle-class from which it draws its leadership, and the poor irrespective of their race.

That point is a long way down the road. Today the United League is a rapidly growing organization. It is barely a year old. The incident which had set Robinson in motion, the beating of a black man during interrogation in jail, was settled favorably. Neither of the two police officers involved is any longer on the force. The United League boycott of stores which they felt hired too few blacks was an avowed failure. Yet, the United League march not only brought us to Tupelo, it brought Ed Bradley of CBS.

Many people from all across the country united for a few hours in a common goal, and perhaps the United League of Tupelo will be able to withstand the apathy of the seventies. Perhaps of equal importance is the fact that no one left Tupelo without seeing a common enemy.

A week after returning, we learned that two white marchers from Alabama were forced off the road by a carload of Klansmen shooting at their vehicle. They had been driving home from the march. They were beaten by the Klansmen and left dazed and bleeding, in the middle of Route 78 near Guin, Alabama.

Nelson Hockert-Lotz will be Features Editor of the Cynic next semester.

Helping Hands

continued from page 43

really a shame," he says.

Blair explains that the Vermont District Court in Burlington occasionally gives a young person brought to court the choice of working in "Helping Hands" as a part of probation or in lieu of a fine. The amount of work required is usually 40 hours and this option is only given on the first offense for minor crimes like shoplifting or malicious mischief.

All kinds of people donate clothes. When asked if the largest source was wealthy people Blair emphasizes that no. the majority of clothes come from "regular" people who worked at places like .General Electric and Grandway. Walking through the narrow aisle I see a selection that equals the variety of styles of a crowded line at a movie theatre: Penny's, Harris, Made-in-Taiwan, Pendleton.

The faded yellow walls and homemade display racks do not make a very stylish decor. But when imagining the crowd of people who have been clothed by the contents of the shop it's easier to understand Blair's satisfied look as he sits down calmly behind a worn black desk. "Come on back sometime," he says as he picks up the day's paper.

Leahy ...

continued from page seven

very good. It's been opposed by an awful lot of people in Congress because it gives a distinct advantage to a challenger. Well, that's good because it keeps those of us who are in Congress on our toes. In my own race, I ran in a situation where I knew that Vermont was the only state in the Union that never elected a democrat (to the Senate) and I don't think had ever elected anybody under 50. When I announced, I was 33 and a democrat, so I had a couple of things going against me. I spent certainly less than any contested Senate race in the country that year – obviously, as Vermont is a small state. But I think I spent less per capita than any really co ted race in the country. But even so, it became a difficult thing just to constantly have to do fundraising. And for me and my opponent, it diverted us from the time that should be spent campaigning, talking to people about the issues and so on. I think that there's an unhealthy amount of influence that's being gained by special interest groups that they can funnel into any kind of a campaign.

Cynic: Have you made any definite plans to run in 1980?

Leahy: I'll announce my plans in 1980. But with the various committee assignments I have and everything else, I feel a lot of the things I've started on could be – would be finished in the second term in the Senate.

LETTERS

On Behalf Of Back-Packs

To the Editor:

I am writing this letter to protest SAGA's policy of not allowing backpacks into the dining halls. Why should helpless satchels have to suffer because SAGA personnel don't trust UVM students not to steal food, silverware, or dishes from the cafeterias? Left outside the dining hall in an unguarded heap, backpacks are defenseless against thieves and/or careless students who may grab the wrong pack. When a student pays his meal tickets, his poor backpack is then humiliated and told, "sorry, we can't let you in." He then regretfully abandons his pack along with all the others.

SAGA is a food business selling a product, and like other businesses, should accept not only the money but also the risks that customers bring. If you went downtown to a restaurant, how would you feel if they made you leave your backpack or pocketbook outside on the sidewalk?

If bags, backpacks and such are not going to be allowed into the dining rooms, then lockers should be provided for the protection of the students' belongings. Someone to "guard over" the backpacks will do no good – how can one person remember who owns which of a hundred backpacks?

The people sitting by the exits in the dining rooms doing their homework are there to make sure that you don't steal from the cafeteria. Their job is to check inside your backpacks before you leave. True, this is a bother and can be humiliating, but if you don't steal anything, you have nothing to fear.

I believe that SAGA should act so the students who want to bring their belongings into the dining hall can do so!

Sincerely,
Jody DeBernardi

For Divestiture

To the Editor:

We, the Minority Student Organization of UVM, have unanimously voted to support the adoption of divestment of all university holdings in South Africa. We urge the board of trustees to consider divestment for the following reasons:

UVM is a public institution with the responsibility to reflect the morals and beliefs of its students, staff, and faculty. Since the board of trustees have recognized the students as consumers of education, we as students feel we have a right and the responsibility to state our preferences as to where the university dollars are being invested.

The U.S. Senate as of January, 1978, felt that even though many corporations have adopted the Sullivan Principles, they have neither individually, nor collectively made any impact on the oppressive apartheid regime. Instead, the Senate feels that the situation has worsened. It is ironic in the sense that the Sullivan Principles had to be approved by the South African Government before they were adopted by the corporations. In reality, there has been no threat to the South African government in terms of actual change.

It is for the above reasons we firmly believe that UVM bears a moral responsibility to help combat racism. It is our belief that as an American university, UVM needs to stand up for what is right, the freedom of all people.

Respectfully submitted,
The Minority Student Organization of UVM

Helping The Off-Campus Students

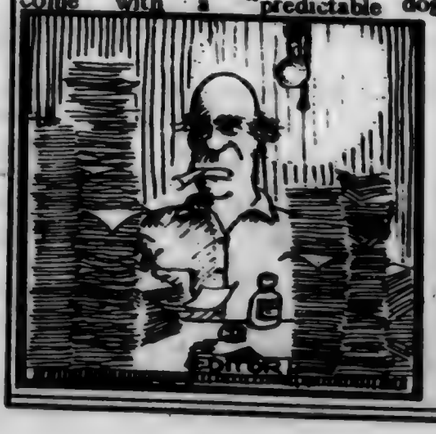
To the Editor:

By now, students are aware of the housing shortage that plagues UVM. Off-campus apartments are scarce, distant, rundown and expensive. However, by taking certain positive steps, the university can solve the problem.

The demand for low income housing in Burlington has increased tremendously in recent years due both to UVM's expansion and to Burlington's accelerated economic growth. In the last ten years, UVM's enrollment has skyrocketed. Concurrently, the county's economic growth, highlighted by the appearance of IBM and Digital, has brought an insatiable demand for housing in the city. Meanwhile, Burlington's redevelopment projects have been destroying low income housing without replacement. This lack of planning has resulted in more people with fewer places to live.

Despite the housing trends in Burlington, UVM has evaded the issue, claiming that the solution to the problem will come with a "predictable decrease in enrollment." The administration has done little to study the possibility of building, buying or renting apartments. In a recent survey conducted by the Student Committee on Off-Campus Housing, 93% of the responding off-campus students felt that "if the university provided apartment type housing, it would be a viable option to the present housing shortage." In addition, 85% responded favorably to living in UVM-run apartments.



If the university was to become a landlord, high rents and other landlord/tenant problems would disappear. The difficulty of finding apartments lessens as these units are provided exclusively for students. For UVM, apartments become investments where income can be realized. Many other schools such as Stony Brook and Ithaca have done this with unqualified success.

If we examine the housing squeeze, it is obvious that it occurs only during UVM's two major semesters. The dog-eat-dog world of housing in Burlington disappears over the summer. Thus, it is feasible that if UVM would switch to a trimester schedule, the dorms would be utilized continually and less students would be in Burlington at any one time.

In addition to solving the crisis created through over-enrollment, the administration should make it their goal to provide necessary services for the off-campus student. They should include accommodations for apartment-hunting weekends, landlord/tenant/roommate grievance counseling and mediation, and a model lease designed through negotiations between landlord and student associations. Information should be made available in both published and workshop form. Students must be familiarized with the laws and their rights before they get into a bad situation.

The time for action at UVM is long overdue. The administration must take the initiative to act now in order to halt the needless worry and inconvenience that they've too long helped to perpetrate.

Douglas Greenhaus
Lewis Heyman

Letter Policy

The Cynic welcomes letters to the Editor from all its readers. The deadline for letters is the Monday at noon prior to Thursday's publication.

All letters should be signed and accompanied by your local address and telephone number. The Cynic reserves the right to edit any letter for precision and clarity.

Shorter letters will be given preference.

The Lane Series

Vermont's Largest Arts Organization Faces An Uncertain Future

By Tom Daniels

Why over the years have so many great performers come to Burlington?

"Money," answered Lane Series Director Terry Demas, seated amid a swamp of paper as he surveyed the half-way mark of the Series' 24th season. "There really aren't all that many concert series that can pay the fees we do." And the Lane Series has laid out as much as $25,000 a show to bring the world's best entertainment to this out of the way city of 40,000.

It's no secret that Burlington has an abundance of drama and classical music for a city its size. Starting in 1955, the George Bishop Lane Series pioneered the performing arts in Burlington and has since sold over one million tickets for over 600 concerts and stage productions, over 100 films, and dozens of children's events. Demas credits the Series with "educating the taste of the Burlington community" and cites as proof a change in the make-up of the audiences. In the 1950s, the Lane Series catered to UVM students and faculty, but since 1968, more than two-thirds of tickets sold have been purchased by the general public.

The focus of the Lane Series has evolved into a public relations extension of UVM in addition to being the largest performing arts group in the state. For many in the local community, Lane Series and hockey games are the most visible UVM events.

"We get a good audience, people who are responsive to UVM," Demas said. "UVM should be responsible for some cultural activity and Lane Series is one of the best quality things UVM offers."

But in recent years problems have mounted. Artists' fees, printing costs, crew wages, and hall rentals have all skyrocketed while ticket prices have only doubled to $7.50 and $5.50. The original Lane bequest now provides less than 10% of the operating budget, and the reserve fund has been depleted. 65 to 70% of the Lane's budget comes from ticket sales, which means each event has to come close to selling out, a feat not expected even in New York City. Financial considerations were one reason why 10 of 16 shows this season feature classical music, which has always sold well in Burlington. Student attendance has been noticeably low this year, in part because of little student interest in classical music. "We have to be sensitive to community interests," Demas contends. But he acknowledged that Lane Series has faced growing competition from the Vermont Mozart Festival, S.A. Concerts, the Champlain Shakespeare Festival, Lyric Theatre, and even the Vermont Symphony Orchestra which is producing four concerts with the Series.

The Lane Series built up a solid reputation throughout Vermont and the nation under Dr. Jack Trevithick who directed the Series for the first 21 years. An English professor at UVM, Dr. Trevithick "defined" the Lane Series tradition of presenting the best contemporary artists. The George Bishop Lane Series was made possible by a bequest from Mrs. Lane in memory of her husband, a UVM alumnus. Mrs. Lane was not clear in describing what the Series should be and it was Dr. Trevithick who shaped a sentiment into season after season of memorable entertainment. Trevithick established the policy of variety as a key to success, and with his deft ability for handling high pressure situations, artists remembered this stop on their tour and often sent Dr. Trevithick special notes of thanks.

The list of past performers is nothing short of spectacular: Benny Goodman, Isaac Stern, Harry Belafonte, Robert Frost, Joan Baez, Maurice Chevalier, Simon and Garfunkel, Ray Charles, Marcel Marceau, and many more.

"We're constantly re-evaluating what Lane Series means to the community," said Demas. "I don't believe in an elitist attitude toward arts. We have to grow and reach new constituencies."

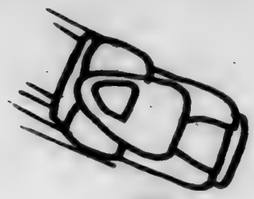
Last year's jazz series was one such experiment. Although the jazz did not sell as well as expected, the big names still came to town: Dizzy Gillespie, Ella Fitzgerald, Roland Kirk, and Oscar Peterson. The posters in Demas' Grassemount office betray a preference for theatre and classical music, and it was the six student members on the Lane Committee who were directly responsible for taking on the jazz series. Nonetheless, Demas hinted that there would be more jazz this summer.

******

Lack of a good performance center is "the most critical problem" looming in the Lane Series' future. Memorial Auditorium has hard seats, limited visibility, and poor acoustics — all of which detract from the crowd's enjoyment, and don't exactly please performers either. However, Burlington's civic center committee has not met for six months and plans for a new performance center have taken a back seat to the Church St. mall, two expressways, waterfront development, and the construction of three electrical generating plants. Meanwhile, city officials have been less than co-operative with efforts to make some improvements to Memorial Auditorium. Lane Series wanted to purchase some cushions and elevate the ground floor seats in six inch increments to increase the visual and acoustical quality.

Demas would like to see a 2500-seat theatre within the next few years. Otherwise, he warned, the Lane Series might have to sharply raise ticket prices or reduce the quality of acts. Even the purchase and renovation of the Flynn Theatre would not solve the Lane Series' needs.

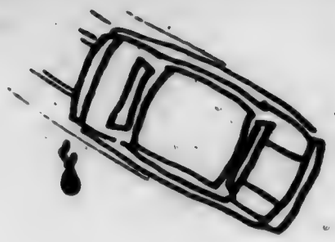
Arts management and directing a $280,000 budget is a full-time professional job. "You have to be planning two, five, even ten years from now," said Demas, whose credentials include membership in arts administration societies, local arts councils, and experience in acting and directing. And lining up shows always carries an uncertainty as to how well tickets will sell. "Audiences go in five year cycles and we're in a rebuilding period. You have to be scrupulously honest and accurate in this business. Reputation counts for a lot," Demas emphasized. "We meet our obligations like any other business. If we schedule a show, it goes on even if we've sold only 20 tickets!"



But if the Lane Series runs a deficit, UVM supplies the back-up funds. The Series also raises about $20,000 annually from local patrons and sponsors.

******

The arts are rapidly gaining a widespread following in Vermont. To meet this growth, Demas wants the Lane Series to become "more involved in community and statewide arts planning." He envisions a Lane leadership role to create a consortium of arts groups which would allow better co-ordination of events and bring in artists at a reduced cost.



So whatever your artistic persuasions, chances are that if you stick around Burlington long enough, the Lane Series will have you watching one of its outstanding shows. (P.S. Students get $1 off all tickets.)

A Gift For Your Car

Custom Installed Stereo Systems by:

CRAIG | SANYO

JENSEN | PIONEER

maxell TAPES

...and for You.

BUY 12 AND RECEIVE A FREE TAPE CASE

VALUE $5.95

2.99 SPECIAL

maxell.

Great Northern STEREO WAREHOUSE

Mon-Sat. 9 to 5:30 Fri. 'til 9 p.m.

32 Green Mtn. Drive (Behind Hardy Ford) So. Burlington (at Shelburne Rd.) 863-4417

FILM: The Year in Review

(Above) Scene from "Jaws 2"
(Left) Alan Bates and Jill Clayburgh in "An Unmarried Woman."

By Pete Wentworth

There is little doubt that the best film of the year award will not go to The Swarm, whose only outstanding feature is how they ever got 1,000,000,000 stunt men into bee suits and then taught them how to fly. Seriously, I would hate to stick my neck out so far as to say there is one outstanding film at this time. But there are many well-done films that deserve merit.

1978 was an excellent year for films in two categories: musical biographies and comedies. There were a handful of adequate dramatic productions and one might say that Interiors, Midnight Express, Coming Home or An Unmarried Woman are prime candidates for the best picture of all time. Each had their faults, but they did accomplish a mixed critical response.

FILMS ON MUSICIANS

In this corner, weighing in as two of the greatest films ever made depicting musicians, are The Last Waltz and The Buddy Holly Story. The Last Waltz was the filming of one of the greatest events in rock history, the Band's final concert. Staged in Billy Graham's Winterland, The Last Waltz was both a cinematic and musical landmark. Never before has such a high level of camera and filmmaking expertise been implemented into a live concert performance. The film was highlighted with such musicians as Neil Young, Joni Mitchell, Muddy Waters, Eric Clapton, Ringo Starr, Ronnie Wood, and Bob Dylan. Intercut between the concert itself were interviews with each of the five members of the band that placed a background to the final concert. If you like the soundtrack, you'll love the movie.

The Buddy Holly Story also did an excellent job of covering a major musical event – the life of Buddy Holly, Mr. Rock himself. Gary Busby played the lead brilliantly as he led the viewer through the life of one of music's rebels. Based on the real life of Holly, the film shows his dedication as Holly is rejected first for being a rock and roller and then for being a producer of his own work. The story ends when Holly is killed in a plane crash at the highlight of his career leaving behind a pregnant wife and a legend in his music.

LAUGHING ALL THE WAY HOME

1978 will be best known as the year America left the theatre with a good laugh. With films like Animal House, Heaven Can Wait, High Anxiety, and Jaws Two, there is no doubt that Hollywood can create an outrageous movie.

High Anxiety is the sixth Mel Brooks film and once again his unique humor created a box office success. Following a tough act of Blazing Saddles and Young Frankenstein, it was doubtful that anyone could have lived up to such high expectations. In High Anxiety Brooks stuck his neck out and focused his film on the Auteur director Alfred Hitchcock. For this reason, the film was not as widely appealing as his previous movies which spoofed film genres but nevertheless showed the creativity of America's funniest director.

Heaven Can Wait was the film that brought the filmgoers to the theatres during the summer. It is one of the few successful remakes during the entire history of film. Warren Beatty plays a football player who dies before his time and is compensated with the reincarnated life of a multimillionaire. In this screwball comedy there is an interesting combination of two personalities for one body. We find the football player trying to attain the glory he was about to achieve before death, and the business world atmosphere that he was expected to be familiar with. Heaven Can Wait was also the directing debut of Beatty and a successful one at that.

National Lampoon's Animal House was the second outstanding comedy of the year. Written with their outrageous sense of humor, Lampoon's Animal House was geared more to the college aged film goer. Based on a Dartmouth fraternity in the 1950's, the film exposed college as more than a goodnight handshake and singing school songs. The film can be broken down into individual experiences that were tied together by two freshmen pledges who reflect back to the days of beer and mischief. The casting was superb. Besides the fact that Animal House cast eighteen stuntmen, it also featured John Belushi and Tim Matherson. Matherson played the chief head man in the house and created a character that one often hears upstairs while the party's still going strong downstairs. Belushi was amazing. His facial expressions told as much about the story as the wisecracks he used to fill the dead spots. His role was clearly oriented towards a slapstick performance. The only criticism I can find in Animal House is that since it ended up so outrageous, it gave a certain air of superficiality to the actual members of the house.

Jaws Two was a joke.

DRAMA

Woody's Interiors was good, but it was overboard. The characters were so repulsively obsessed with creating a miserable atmosphere because of mom's neurosis that one can't wait for her to get knocked out of the film. Also dad's replacement is so far to the other extreme that it is rather difficult to believe that he could have ever married his first wife. Those that haven't seen Interiors don't expect a punchline as it never happens, but it is an adequate attempt by Allen to create a "totally serious film."

Coming Home would have been an excellent film if it hadn't cast Bruce Dern as Jane Fonda's husband. The story about an army officer's wife falling in love with a paraplegic (Jon Voight) is intense, while Dern is away, but the story falls apart when he returns. Once again, there is such a contrast between Fonda's lovers that one can't imagine how she would become involved with Dern in the first place.

An Unmarried Woman also had faults of going to extremes. Jill Clayburn portrays a recently divorced woman who scapegoats the male species for her unfaithful husband. The clique of friends she socializes with all hate men so that the only people who are allowed any satisfaction are the hard-core women's libbers. She does have one outstanding sequence of wandering around New York in a daze of disbelief after her separation and manages to accent it with vomiting in a trash can.

Finally, we come to Midnight Express. Express is the actual account of Billy Hayes as he was sentenced to thirty years in a Turkish prison for attempted drug smuggling. The biggest drawback of this escape film is that it is not representative of what really happened. For openers, the film would not allow their hero to take on a homosexual relationship and thus created a script that had a dab too much triteness. Hayes, after going into an almost vegetable state, is revived when he gets a surprise visit from his girlfriend. With her inspiration, however, he pulls his grossly defigured physical and mental state back together and manages to free himself.

In summary, it would seem that Hollywood fell victim to over-dramatization and shaky scripts. The result to this point is a year of films that please a small majority of the critics.

What's to come? Superman has been released in the major cities. This high budget blockbuster has been advertised for two years now as the greatest thing to ever hit the movies. In a recent essay in Time magazine, the entire success of the film will be based on the effectiveness of Superman's ability to create the illusion of flying.

And taking a recent trend to an extreme, remakes being planned include Godfather III, Star Wars II, Rocky II and Superman II. More than ever the film industry seems to be drawn into sapping a successful movie until it is drained.

Brad Davis as Billy Hayes in "Midnight Express" is held back by prison inmates.

ROWE SHOW

FRANCIS COLBURN GALLERY
WILLIAMS HALL
UNIVERSITY OF VERMONT
BURLINGTON VERMONT

DEC 11-15 DAILY 9-5PM

RECEPTION FOR THE ARTIST
MON DEC 11 4-6PM

Mother Natures Natural Foods

Grains Cosmetics
Flours Vitamins
Beans Teas
Nuts Honeys
Fruits Pasta
Herbs Books
Spices Dairy Products
Breads Ice Creams
Snacks Meats & Fish

at the shopping center, Williston and Hinesburg Roads convenient hours-seven days 862-5934

THINKING ABOUT YOUR CHRISTMAS

LEVI'S JEANS AND CORDS

$12.90

ARE THE PERFECT GIFT FOR EVERYONE!!

Pants Plus

12 N. WINOOSKI AVE.
BURLINGTON, VT.
802-864-0181

Chris Miller, co-author of "Animal House", elaborates on his story "Boxed In." Photo by Karen Salzman

Dirty Jokes at Ira Allen

By Bruce Vielmetti

"We used to take road trips up here," said former Dartmouth student Chris Miller as he greeted a full house last Wednesday at Ira Allen Chapel. Miller, co-author of Animal House, writer of sex-humor short stories, and creator of the "Cuckoo for Cocoa Puffs" ad, was at UVM to deliver "Chris Miller's Bedtime Story: Is Sex Funny?" After the evening's performance, most of the audience could only answer "yes."

Most of the crowd only knew that Miller had helped write Animal House and therefore must be a little crazy, but they really didn't know what to expect from his show. As he began, Miller warned that his act was "very X rated" and that males in the audience should beware of "reitneys" – ultra erections that stretch the skin of the whole body so you can't move. That remark gave rise to a few ideas concerning what was to follow.

Miller began and ended his appearance with readings of two of his short stories. His opener, "Boxed In," involves college freshman Benny returning home for Christmas and seeing his old high school girlfriend for the first time in several months. Waiting for her parents to go upstairs for the evening, so he and Suzette can hit the trusty old sofa, Benny notices an odd, almost incestuous "goodnight" between Mr. Cornfelt and his daughter. And before he leaves, Pops tricks Benny into a Chinese finger trap, with the laughing warning, "Never get yourself into something you can't get out of!" Of course, Benny later does, when he gets past second base for the first time with Suzette only to have her die as he slides into home plate. "She's stiff as a board, I poisoned her at dinner," says Mr. Cornfelt to a stuck and startled Benny, who turns to find Suzette's father standing behind him nude, smiling, and holding a meat cleaver. "You should have listened to my advice," says Mr. Cornfelt, playing with the meat cleaver. "And he just kept smiling," grinned Miller as he ended "Boxed In."

The second story, entitled "Conversation Piece," features Bernie Boom-Boom and his telephone. Bernie answers his phone one day to hear the sexy voice of Miss Morgan "reminding" him about his four month debt, instead of the persistent Mr. Diereimer threatening to pay up or else. Pretty soon Bernie and Miss Morgan are getting all hot and antsy over the phone and at the phone's insistence, Bernie unscrews the earpiece and finds a mouth. One thing leads to the next and the mouth, Bernie, and another surprise underneath the phone's baseplate work themselves into an outrageous erotic tangle that has the phone voice hearing beepers. But as Bernie's crotch and the phone are really making the long-distance connection, he feels the base plate of the phone slide back and latch onto his straining dialer. He then hears a "click," a dial tone, and finally the voice of Mr. Diereimer of the phone co. "Now, Mr. Boom-Boom, about that bill..."

Whether with lusty ecstasy – "AahhauaughaghHH!" said Suzette" – or dropping his porno-metaphors – "He sank his soupspoon into her boiling bouillabaisse," Chris Miller proved there's no limit to how much you can elaborate on the basic "funny kid telling a dirty joke" mode of entertainment. Miller's description and detail amused most and offended some. During "Boxed In," he got his most grossed-out response of the evening when he referred to the "musk" wafting out at Benny as he lifted away Suzette's skirt. But after the audience's cringing and groaning disapproval, Miller simply cut in with a grinning aside: "Been there, huh?"

Miller lectured briefly between stories about why some people do find satire disgusting, un-American, atheistic and sick. He read three "hate-mail" letters received by National Lampoon in regards to particular pieces they had run in the magazine. The letters detailed the contempt held by the readers for the minds that would be capable of creating the satire that offended the readers so much.

Miller had a theory about the procedures these outraged people go through when they react to certain satire. Borrowing from psychology, Miller describes their experience as a "Paranoid Episode: not what happens when you fart in an elevator, although similar." When confronted with satire that really dumps on something they hold sacred, people briefly consider that maybe everyone who doesn't think like they do is right. They suffer an instantaneous change of perceptions, and the illusions they live by disappear momentarily. Miller illustrated this with the situation of a baby the first time he plays with a jack-in-the-box. At first it's just a nice, happy box, then WHAM – this head pops out and scares the little baby half to death. But after several times, the kid laughs when the jack-in-the-box springs open. Miller hopes more people would learn to respond similarly to satire after repeated exposure. But those first times are tough; people get "...zoned out... one half turn into weirdsville."

Miller also discussed the creation of Animal House, the enormously popular film that began as a book by Miller in 1974. After three chapters, he ran out of money and sold what he had to National Lampoon as short stories. Eventually, the idea was selected for Lampoon's movie project in 1975, and after eight drafts, the screenplay was ready in late 1976. The movie was shot "on time and on budget" (in 6 weeks for $2.7 million) at the University of Oregon, because no other college they asked would let them film it on their campus. Released this past summer, the film has already grossed over $85 million. The audience saw a short film, or trailer, that featured many highlights narrated by Otter. However, all the scenes were from the final movie, not the

(continued on page 62)

Photo by Rick Ames

Pine Island's Last Waltz at Hunt's

By Pablo Conrad

Taking their final bow at R.W. Hunt's last Thursday night, Pine Island joined with several hundred friends, fans, and fellow musicians to mark the end of a five-year career as Vermont's best-loved bluegrass band.

For Pine Island fans and Vermont bluegrass lovers it was an event not to be missed, even the WCAX-TV cameras made the scene, and long after the club was filled, people lined up at the door waiting to get in.

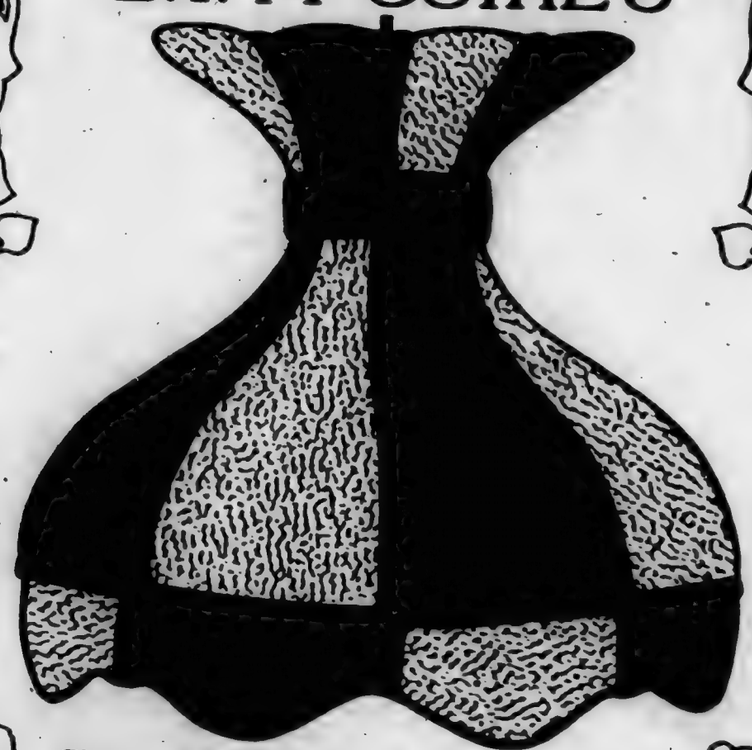
Inside, despite the overwhelming crowd and occasional near-hysteria, Pine Island played easily, moving from cool ballads to sizzling fiddle tunes, all with the same skill and warmth that has always been their trademark.

Vermont bluegrass has always had a fairly close knit community of musicians and it's not unusual to see members of different bands sitting in at each other's shows. At Pine Island's "Last Waltz" (as the farewell engagement was billed) the group was joined by some of Vermont's best, including ex-Pine Islanders Dan Mahoney, Danny Cohen, and Gordon Stone. Off to the right of the stage, banjo players, fiddlers and mandolin players from Dealer's Choice and the Midnight Plowboys, to name a few, stood about, swapping tales and waiting to sit in.

Onstage, the resulting bluegrass summit was impressive, especially on the banjo and fiddle duets shared with Pine Island's Chris Lee on banjo and fiddler David Gusakov. Dan Mahoney shared some dobro work and his fine bluegrass vocals on "Home Sweet Home Revisited."

But the best of it was when Pine Island played the last few songs of the evening on their own, joined only by Gordon Stone on pedal steel. There was only a slight air of melancholy as though the desire to play well on their last songs prevented them from getting totally loose and swinging. Jim McGuiness's wistful "Gin And Moxie" was a treat, as was a heartfelt version of "Water's Edge" written by mandolin player Jim Ryan.

There was a nice feeling on Thursday night, that no matter how overblown the event might have become, it was still Pine Island, playing and singing with the same steadiness and straight-ahead faultless rhythm they've always had. In many ways Thursday night served to reinforce all the fond memories that Vermont fans share from dances and club and festival appearances of the last five years.



doolin's

COME RELAX IN AN INTIMATE ATMOSPHERE

Friday 5-7 Complimentary Cheese & Crackers

159 Main St. — Next to the Flynn

B.T. McGUIRE'S

Sunday Night Special

Lasagna, Salad and Wine or Draft

ONLY $2.75

Mon-Sat 11-2 Sun 7-2

McGUIRE'S

152 Church Street

CHRISTMAS RICHES...

. The luxury of SILK. The feel of satin. Fashioned into superb coordinates... to touch her heart with soft delight.

By Body English... The short cropped blazer. Pleated pants and reversible vest. All in richest shaded aquamarine in SILK... the new poly-cotton-silk blend. She'll love the nubby texture of this fine fabric... reminiscent of the linen of kings.

Add to it: the Tuxedo Blouse. In satin acetate, in glowing pewter gray. Accessorize: the brocade disco bag... comes with the skirt. All sizes 5–13.

Her pleasure this Christmas... Raiments befitting a queen. From Magrams Colony... Joy. Shown: Blazer, $50.00; Pants, $34.00; Reversible vest, $25.00; Skirt (not shown), $28.00. All in aquamarine. Blouse, $35.00. In pewter. All coordinates by Body English. Colony on Main.

JOY MAGRAMS JOY MAGRAMS JOY MAGRAMS

OPEN EVERY EVENING TIL 9:00
UNTIL CHRISTMAS
MAGRAMS GIFT CERTIFICATES
AVAILABLE ON 6TH FLOOR

Gil Scott-Heron

The Crowned Prince Returns

By Tom Naccio

Gil Scott-Heron, Brian Jackson and the Midnight Band marked their third Burlington appearance with an emotion-packed, high-energy performance November 29 at the Flynn Theatre. Touring with probably his finest group to date, Heron dazzled a semi-full house by supplying a generous onslaught of narrative vocals, keyboardic cleverness and an awesome force of "stage-presence."

Southworth (formerly Bongo Moon of Nector's fame) opened the evening in somewhat mediocre fashion. Displaying a front-line of vocalist Debby Sheward, a Grace Slick protege, and lead guitarist Jeff Southworth – the group's namesake – this local band did, however, show the potential to shine on occasion – namely during their rendition of the Patti Smith/Bruce Springsteen composition, "Because the Night." Regardless, it was not to be their evening; the night belonged to the beat of a different drum.

Adorned in black from head to toe, Gil Scott-Heron commenced his spectacular performance with a three minute dissertation on Bridges. This philosophical oration flowed into "Hello Sunday, Hello Road" – a tune concerning the stresses of his band's tour. Extensive P.A. problems partially marred the following tune, "Racetrack in France." However, after the elimination of all feedback, the song opened up featuring Carl Cornwell's screeching tenor and Brian Jackson's "Tynerish" Fender Rhodes.

Heron then abandoned the "Bridges" theme in favor of a balladic transition, "Winter in America." His emotional voice highlighted this tune, echoing with a resounding fullness above the peaceful frolick of duet flutes.

The Doctor, Barnett Williams, then slapped a bongo intro to "Angola Louisiana" – the first of five consecutive tunes from the Secrets album. "Three Miles Down" dictated the emergence of two Female vocalists into the exclusively male Midnight Band. These two pleasant additions harmonized magnificently with Heron and provided a unique dimension to the overall group sound. After performing "Madison Avenue," complete with an auctioneer call introduction and Angel Dust, including the Doctor's humorous portrayal of taking the drug, Heron marched the group to its emotional and socio-political climax.

Johannesburg, Heron's South African National Anthem, featured an opening oration regarding UVM meetings concerning South African Support. In addition, a banner, hanging from the upper level of seats, proclaimed "Solidarity, with South African Liberation Pact" – reinforcing the political atmosphere. Musically, Johannesburg included an uproarious question-answer sequence between Heron asking "What's the word" and the audience responding with the song's title. Thus ended the regular act.

Physically exhausted due to a recent flight from Milwaukee, Heron nevertheless returned emotionally exhilarated to perform his most popular song, "The Bottle." The Doctor dominated this tune by pounding his congas with rhythmic rapidity and ultimately dancing around the stage. Unfortunately, jet-lag physically overcame Scott-Heron at this point, deeming him unfit for a second encore. Although short in actual duration (90 minutes), the Midnight Band's third Burlington performance easily exceeded the feats of its previous two. One reason lies within versatility. This new band possesses a multiplicity of instrumental talent as exhibited by Heron (vocals, percussion keyboard), Jackson (flute, keyboards), and Cornwell (tenor sax, flute, keyboard, percussion).

An established Burlington hero, Gil Scott-Heron consistently overwhelms this local audience with a massive barrage of vocals, percussion and high energy music. As a result of this stunning November 29th performance, Burlingtonians will once again await the inevitable return of their self-proclaimed Crowned Prince.

RECORDS: The Best and Worst of 1978

Rock

By Lori Goodman

The Best

No. 1 — Blondie Parallel Lines (Crysalis)

Produced by Mike Chapman, who's got Nick Glider's number one "Hot Child in the City," as well as other credits of sound expertise to his name, Blondie's third album Parallel Lines is an unparalleled smash. Ranking as one of the top LP's this season, Parallel Lines is an achievement. Blondie displays a solid line-up of power pop hits, each cut a single in its own right. On this effort, Blondie's music cannot be labeled simply "punk" or "new wave," — the band leaps in and out of musical idioms, from the frenzied disco beat of "Heart of Glass," to the 60's crafted, dreamy vocals of "Sunday Girl," and then on to Buddy Holly's hopping call-and-response rocker, "I'm Gonna Love You To."

As well as a total array of relevant and powerful pop tunes, James Destri contributes nostalgic rushes through his 60's keyboard stylings. Ripping off progressive rock processionals, Destri could be likened to Genesis' keyboard virtuoso Tony Banks. Also present are solid bass and rhythm guitar by new members Nigel Harrison and Frank Infante, who also contribute sophisticated literature to Clement Burke's strong drumming. The fast, magnetic "Will Anything Happen?" is an unequivocated gem, and Deborah Harry's vocals on "Pretty Baby," patterned from Brooke Shield's performance in the film, are absolutely engaging. Harry demonstrates her ever-broadening stylistic range, belting out downright nasty vocals on "One Way or Another." The futuristic "Fade Away and Radiate," is galvanized by guest guitarist Robert Tripp, adding complexity to Chris Stein's finger-picked passions. This is exciting new music, sustained by a rare textural consistency that Blondie can skillfully provide. Pick up a copy — you'll get hooked.

No. 2 — R. Crumb & the Cheap Suit Serenaders, *Blue Goose

Back again is this new supergroup taking the country by storm. With their third album, R. Crumb and the Cheap Suit Serenaders is a band with a rich variety of musical approaches — something old, something new.

On this new album, you've got plenty of red-hot dance tunes for shaking the leg, some romantic, sophisticated ballads, innovative and artistic instrumentals, lilting waltzes, low-down gutsy blues and lots of the new Hawaiian chic. Of course, R. Crumb has well-established fame as a cartoonist and the cover-art on this LP is great, but did you know he could sing, play the banjo and guitar too? Along with the usual gang of Robert Armstrong (on musical saw), Bob Brozman on steel, Allan Dodge on harmonica and viola, and Tom Marion on six-string banjo, he's added the mello 'cello stylings of Terry "the Zord" Turigoff, Gizmo Ellmore on trombone and Paul Woltz on mx leading superb musicianship and an air of sophistication to several cutz. These guys are serious!

Some inspirational verses on that old standard, "Singing in the Bathtub:" "Singing in the bathtub, sitting all alone, tearing out a tonsil, just like a better tone... you can yodel opera, even while you scrub (yes, Pagliacci) everybody's happy while singing in the tub." There are some original tunes, and on one of them "Suitz Crybaby Blues" you hear R. Crumb telling his audience, "We're sensitive guys, and we play our daily tunes, this record ain't gonna sell, cause the girls all think we're goons." This however, is not prophetic.

Lori Goodman is Music Director of WRUV-FM.

The Cheap Suit Serenaders are not just a crackpot troupe, even if their threadz come from Lampston's. This is tuneful, happy music, covering most idioms from jazz, folk, cajun and blues. Crumb is a true eclectic who will make you tap your feet with lots of nostalgic good-time razz-ma-tazz. Watch out for great flourishes on the steel Hawaiian on this Number three, and for a special 78 RPM 10-inch pressing on red vinyl — it's a porno with Crumb art, a real collector's item called "My Girl's P(usy)" which will not be played on WRUV.

No. 3 — Dire Straits

An English band produced by Steve Winwood's brother, the first thing that you'll notice once you slap it on your turntable is that they sound incredibly non-English. This is not a detriment — for you wouldn't know they're English without seeing the jacket. You might guess they came from the Southeast... like the Carolinas. Their sound is, however, original and electric; reminiscent of J. J. Cale, Eric Clapton, and one song especially of Lou Reed. "Sultans of Swing," their up-front hit, is like Dylan in its lyrical phrasing. Dire Straits is enjoying rising cult status and consistent airplay nationwide. It's no wonder.

(continued on page 63)

Jazz

By Tom Nuccio

The Best

No. 1 — Chick Corea *Friends

At long last the wizard of electric jazz piano has abandoned huge orchestral productions. Armando "Chick" Corea's Friends album, recorded by a multi-talented quartet, provides ample room for creative improvisations with eight Latinesque compositions. Liberated from the overwhelming brass sections of previous albums (My Spanish Heart, Musicmagic and Mad Hatter) Corea capitalizes by soloing through progressive musical directions.

A key to this album's overall success lies within song diversity. "The One Step" lightly states a dancing theme, then suddenly breaks into a double-time piano solo. In contrast, the title track is a lyrical tune predominated by Joe Farrell's gently frollicking flute. "Sicily" exhibits a strong rhythmic impact highlighted by a smoothly constructed Eddie Gomez bass solo, while "Cappucino" appears a semi-avant garde composition propelled by the flexation of Steve Gadd's percussive muscles and a rapidly paced Corea solo introduction.

Chick Corea indeed has "returned from forever" displaying probably his finest ensemble. Finally divorced from former co-leader bassist Stanley Clarke, Corea and his new friends can now continue to explore creatively aesthetic musics rather than the commercially oriented genres. Friends appears an influential milestone — a giant leap in the right direction for a fine jazz keyboardist.

Chick Corea

No. 2 (tie) — Weather Report *Mr. Gone

As a result of Heavy Weather's commercial success, many people felt that Weather Report's 1978 sequel would be geared to even wider sales. Their assumption proved incorrect as Mr. Gone emerged on the scene as a highly innovative creation much akin to their 1976 album, Black Market.

Due to the disposal of percussionist Manolo Vadrena, Mr. Gone reveals Weather Report performing for the first time in the context of a quartet. A more tightly knit group — this renovated ensemble features the improvisational talents of keyboardist Josef Zawinul and bassist Jaco Pastorius. Consequently, saxophonist Wayne Shorter has been cast off into a "musical limbo" — the only negative aspect of the disc.

Consisting of semi-commercialized tunes constructed with detailed complexity, Mr. Gone has scored well on both monetary and aesthetic levels — making it one of the finer albums of 1978.

No. 2 (tie) — Oregon *Out of the Woods

Oregon, an acoustic counterpart of Weather Report, exhibits the most unique music and instrumentation on the contemporary scene. Ranging from classical and avant-garde to progressive, their compositions are performed by a quartet of Collin Walcott (sitar, tabla, percussion and guitar), Paul McCandless (oboe, English horn, and bass clarinet), Ralph Towner (classical and 12-string guitars, piano, flugelhorn and percussion), and Glen Moore (bass).

In the past, Oregon's music was predominantly abstract — innovative but extremely free-form. However, via their latest release, they have come "out of the woods" and made a grand arrival on the modern jazz scene. Out of the Woods musically varies from Fall '77, a western type theme highlighted by twangy effects to "Dance to the Morning Star" (the potential "hit single"!) an interesting melodic combination of Indian and Latin influences.

As evidenced by a recent Carnegie Hall concert, Oregon is finally receiving the recognition it so rightfully deserves. Having risen from the depths of obscurity, this acoustic ensemble appears an up-and-coming force on the contemporary jazz scene.

Tom Nuccio is a disc jockey at WRUV and the Cynic's main jazzman.

The Worst

No. 1 — Herbie Hancock *Sunlight

Despite his 1976-77 return to the legendary VSOP Quintet, despite their subsequent tours, and despite the optimistic anticipation of hopeful critics, Herbie Hancock's latest solo LP Sunlight appears a worthless two sides of virgin vinyl. To complicate matters further, he even sings on this date — mixing his voice with keyboards via a vocoder (vocal synthesizer). Once a tremendous jazz pianist, Hancock presently appears as the latest R&B phenomenon since Stevie Wonder. Sunlight makes his previous low-class funk albums look like priceless collectors' items.

After listening to the title track (a repetitive vocal

(continued on page 63)

The Non-Runner's Book:
The Virtues of Standing Still

By Bruce Violmette

You must have seen or heard of at least one of the hundreds of running books that monopolize the best-seller lists and crowd the health sections in bookstores. They explain equipment, technique, diet, and most importantly, the psychological, emotional and spiritual enlightenment supposedly gained from running. Millions caught in the jogstream of the running boom buy up these manuals and spread the culture of a moving America.

Well, the non-enlightened have responded to the avalanche of running bibles with their own trend-exploiting piece called The Non-Runner's Book (Macmillian, 1978, 114 pp.) by Vic Ziegel and Lewis Grossberger. This total guide to standing still offers advice on "Staying Out of Shape," "Avoiding the Boston Marathon," "How to Talk to a Runner," and "The Zen of Sitting." Throughout this counter-culture work, the authors rebel against all aspects of the running craze, from shoe ratings to senior citizen involvement. The Non-Runner's Book speaks out in a satirical sneer for all the lazy or non-conformist folks who could just puke at the suggestion "you ought to try running!"

To clarify the difference between the two philosophies, the introduction compares these two summaries: "(Runners) never understand. Competitive, compulsive, indigestive, they become obsessed with crossing finish lines and counting laps. They wallow in linear thought. They begin to see life as a race. They have become running addicts, lured by the powerful metaphor of the race, with its false promise of getting someplace."

"Non-runners do not have these problems. They truly understand the beauty and power of slow... They know that wisdom can't be rushed... Theirs is the way of the turtle and the snail. Theirs is the spirit of the glacier."

Calvin Coolidge identified with snails. The book's dedication features a picture of our 30th President with a famous quote below him: "I do not choose to run." Pluto also seems to have endorsed non-running when he said, "Attention to health is the greatest hindrance to life." Nonetheless, millions of people run every day and could well benefit from The Non-Runner's Book.

Chapter one, entitled "NON-Running for Beginners," cautions novice non-runners not to overindulge right away. "Remember what happened to R.V. Winkle of upstate New York who tried for a marathon nap without working up to it gradually." The chapter also stresses using your own style, and recommends proper "warming down." "To prepare your mind for non-running, let your head down slowly to the floor, rub your forehead against the rug until static electricity builds up. Touch metal to discharge it. Repeat ten times or until you begin to smoke."

"Stuff," non-running slang for clothing and equipment, headlines chapter three and discusses pants, socks, underwear, hats, couches, chairs, and stopwatches ("Stopwatches are totally unnecessary.") The biggest discussion centers on the main preoccupation of runners' magazines, shoes. To help a non-runner select the proper non-running shoe for their needs, the authors have compiled — after extensive study, analysis and personal testing — a "Practical Guide to Non-Running Shoes."

The table lists popular non-running shoes, their primary use, and six other utilization categories including soaking, sitting, smoking, waiting, falling and despair. The top three shoes are the Azusa XL 1200s, "the all-purpose shoe," the Pima Coloda, for Sunday drinking, and the Nuke Waffle Trainer, the top shoe for eating breakfast. The New Ballast Hangaround rates tops for loitering and the Ah-Doo-Dah Clopper is the shoe for a day at the races.

Sitting receives special attention in The Non-Runner's Book as one of the most developed and satisfying forms of non-running. Whereas many runners speak of the transcendental awareness and increased consciousness they experience from extended trips around the park, non-runners apparently experience similar metaphysical revelations from simply sitting around. In chapter eight, "The Zen of Sitting," one testimonial reveals that "sitting

(continued on page 63)

The Foot (life-sized)

THE SHY PHOTOGRAPHER

WE WISH YOU A HAPPY HOLIDAY !

Poof! It's Harry Blackstone Jr.

By Tom Campbell

I can still remember buying Blackstone Magic tricks when I was a lot younger. My infatuation was short-lived, however. The fact that all my friends made fun of me when I screwed up wasn't the sort of encouragement that I needed to make my way to the top. Having at least a vague sense of what the magic trade was about, it was with more than a casual interest that I awaited the performance of Harry Blackstone Jr. in Memorial Auditorium last Thursday night.

Considered by most in the trade to be "the foremost magician of all time," Blackstone appeared from behind the stage curtain with a small plastic bird cage in his hand. Dressed completely in black, a little paunchy, and sporting a neat black mustache and goatee, he spoke to the audience in a low, clear, authoritative voice [illegible] Suddenly, while [illegible] the act, the cage, and the bird inside disappeared. After a moderate round of applause, he asked for some audience participation and called up six or seven small children. After having them all place their hands on another cage that he was holding, he suddenly made that one disappear also. This time he won the audience over and they gave him a resounding ovation.

Surprisingly enough, much of the program was taken up by theatrical numbers which were fairly well performed but at times too drawn out, especially in relation to the magic. In an effort to bring the magic profession up to date, Blackstone carries an entourage who did things that included "Interplanetary Prestidigitation," a levitation routine which, in itself, was superb, performed to the theme of Star Wars and something called "Whatever happened to Disco Duck?" In this one they did a "disco/farm" dance around Blackstone as he made ducks appear from a large bucket of water and then disappear after going into a little collapsible duck house. The magic here got bogged down a little bit but the scene was more than saved by a stunning blonde dancer (she bore a close resemblance to Suzanne Sommers) who, dressed in short-shorts like the rest of the girls, shook her booty, as well as other parts of her supple anatomy, so effectively that Blackstone could probably have gotten away without producing a single duck.

Before the night was through, Blackstone sawed a lady in half with a circular buzz saw, made a tiger appear from an empty cage with a green glowing glove in her hand. Slowly dragging an electric cord that hung from the lamp behind her, she walked across the stage until she stood in front of Blackstone; he removed the glove, turned the neon glowing lightbulb until it went off and then vice versa. He then fully removed the bulb from the base and it flashed on as she held it in his hand. After a moment he removed his hands and it remained suspended in mid-air.

(continued on page 59)

TPI EXPRESS
24 MAIN ST. WINOOSKI
655-3005 655-0977

We help you get through those Long Studying hours

In-House Beer Special $.50 pitcher with any ordered pizza

Thick, Thin, White or Whole Wheat Crust

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| $1 off any large one or more item pizza valid 12/12-12/21 | .$50 off any one or more item small pizza valid 12/12-12/21 | FREE quart of coke with a one or more item pizza. valid 12/12-12/21 | With every large pizza ordered, get a small pizza free. valid 12/12-12/21 |

Specify which coupon when ordering

The Airmaster

INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT
SOUTH BURLINGTON, VERMONT 05401
PHONE (802) 862-2247
(802) 862-4186

DISCOVER YOURSELF IN THE SKY--

LEARN TO FLY !

DON'T MISS THESE OPPO[illegible]ITIES:

[illegible] Lesson ONLY $10

Scenic Flights [illegible] Flights - Charter Flights

Aircraft Rentals

SMORGASBURGER

AFTER THE GAME or
ANYTIME . . !!

More and more hamburger lovers are coming to Lums for the big line-up of pure ground beefburgers. Gourmet burgers. Bacon burgers. Italian burgers. Barbequed burgers and the king of all the burgers, the magnificent Ollieburger. Every one is grilled exactly to your order and delivered to your table with a smile. That's one reason why . . .

There's nothing like being in

LUMS

Williston Rd.
Near Airport

'A Wedding' Devastates Middle Class Society

By Peter Logan

A Wedding begins with what else but a wedding, traditional in every sense except that the bride has a spot on her dress apparently from a squashed fly, and a documentary film crew keeps poking cameras and audio equipment through the plants and family members lining the aisles. One may not even notice the senile clergyman as he babbles his way through the ceremony.

Then, just as the ceremony ends, A Wedding begins exposing the base disorders of middle-class existence in typically chaotic Altman fashion. Nettie Sloan, grandmother of the groom, dies in her upstairs bedroom as the reception begins. Her death, however, remains a secret until the party is over. Since no guests arrive, members of both families are recycled through the reception line. Each family has more than its share of typically atypical middle class problems; the groom's mother is an addict, the bride's sister is pregnant, either by the groom or any number of his military academy buddies, and the bride's mother likens herself to Carrie but for the fact that she became a woman in algebra class and not in the gym.

Altman uses A Wedding to devastate one of our most sacred institutions, the family. The attack is humorous to an extent but leans heavily towards the caustic rather than the comic. Through his characterizations, Altman destroys every familial cliche and hangup associated with either marriage or the family. If any character is to escape Altman's assault, it is Randolph, the black butler, who seems to retain the slightest shred of dignity throughout the film.

Regardless of the film's subversive intent, Altman is brilliant in its direction. He has brought together a cast of well-knowns like Howard Duff, Paul Dooley, Lauren Hutton, Carol Burnett, Mia Farrow, and Desi Arnez Jr. in such a way through staging, camera placement and the efficient use of unobtrusive lines, each character is able to rise above the absurdly chaotic scenes that dominate the movie. Altman's camera scans each sequence grabbing bits and pieces of action and conversation that solidify each character's role in his theme. Geraldine Chaplin's portrayal of the uppity perfectionist Miss Billingsley is especially excellent as she tastelessly organizes and explains every detail of the reception. However, it is she alone with whom we sympathize as the compassionate Miss Billingsley emerges when the bride prepares to start out on her new life.

If the film has an obvious flaw, it is that Altman has gone too far in his devastation of the middle class when the tone changes from one of satiric comedy to one of flaming tragedy near the end of the film. Altman's point had already been well made.

Still, if your craving for comic but brutal satire wasn't satisfied in *M*A*S*H*, it will be in A Wedding.

Producer/director Robert Altman on the set.

Burlington's Answer to Studio 54?

The Williston Road's only hot spot. Photo by Rick Ames

By Dan Lucier

"The Hot Spot," previously Joe Barry's, is Burlington's version of Studio 54 and perhaps the greatest find this year in the way of entertainment. The name itself merely intimates the kind of heat generated there. With a live band, dancing girls, and plush decor, "The Hot Spot" is hands above any other entertainment establishment in the area.

"The Hot Spot's" extravagant light show makes the dancing truly exciting. In the Christmas spirit, the dance floor had been strung with tinsel and red plastic Christmas bells pulsating to the beat of the music. What a light show! And the dancers were simply dazzling. One finds it hard to comprehend just how they got all their hardware into those little outfits. It seemed like the perfect place to take Dad on parents' weekend.

Probably the nicest part of the "Hot Spot" is its unusual atmosphere. You immediately feel it upon walking through the front door. For us, everything seemed to pause momentarily as we entered the room, like a scene out of an E.F. Hutton commercial. And the standard practice at this place is to hoot and whistle in appreciation of a good dancer, or even another's date. It really made for a pleasant evening.

One thing that merits warning is the style of dancing. It is strongly recommended that you take a quick dance course before trying to keep up with any of the regulars. They can perform dances that even a good dancer would never attempt: the "Hot Spot hustle" or the "lethargic two-step" are the current rage. In these dances almost anything goes including performing on tables and chairs, falling off tables and chairs, and spraying people with beer. They are all quite unique dances and ones that require some skill.

As a pick-up joint, "The Hot Spot" has to be at the top of the list. It has some of the prettiest women that I have ever seen and they all seem to come alone. There is such a variety to choose from. As far as the men go, they are about as impressive as the women. Most of them can be classified as the outdoor type: teeth missing, unshaven, and "casually" clothed. As a matter of fact, you will feel overdressed in blue jeans and a clean t-shirt.

As far as the band goes, they also keep within the guidelines of the clientele. A rumor had even started that they had just finished a long tour in New York (Pottsdam) and this was quite easy to believe judging from their sharp appearance. They wore silk shirts and tight, black, double knit pants. The lead guitarist, in order to stand out, wore a bright orange sweatshirt along with his double knits. Perhaps the most inspiring part of this group was their backdrop, which consisted of an artificial Christmas tree with flashing lights. Just to give you an idea of their ability, their big number was "shake your body" which the band played six times.

As hot spots go, Burlington's is definitely among the best. If not just for its dancing girls or warm atmosphere, then at least for its great location ten miles down Williston Road. In any event, one can be guaranteed an unusual experience at "The Hot Spot" and who knows, you may even meet that special person.

Blackstone

Continued From Page 57

Passing a hoop over and around it to show that there were no strings, he motioned it with his hands and it moved to the left and the right of the stage with him. But the real clincher occurred when he went into the audience and allowed a number of people to examine the light before performing the feat once more.

Although Blackstone seemed at times a bit condescending, and even a little rude, his show was definitely a professional production. Once one was willing to try to peel away or at least ignore some of the excess theatrics, it was an entertaining and unusual evening.

WINDJAMMER
Steaks · Seafood · Prime Rib

DINNER MENU

Soups
Baked Onion Soup 1.50 (with cooked cheese)
Clam Chowder 1.00
Soup of the Day .9

Beef
Sirloin (top sirloin steak, cut from choice) 6.95
Petite Sirloin (small top sirloin steak) 5.45
Steak Teriyaki (marinated top sirloin steak) 7.25
Beef Kabob (served on bed of rice pilaf) 5.95
Prime Rib (while it lasts) 7.95
Extra Hearty Cut (extra dollar extra) 4.25
Chopped Steak

Seafood
Crab Alaska (steamed King Crab legs) 8.95
Broiled Scallops (tender and delicately seasoned) 5.95
Baked Stuffed Shrimp (three shrimp with seafood stuffing) 6.95
Broiled Boston Scrod (small cod or haddock) 5.75
Swordfish Steak (seasonal when available)
Seafood Newburg (served on bed of rice pilaf) 5.95
Broiled Seafood Platter (scrod, scallops, shrimp) 6.95

Chicken and Combinations
Chicken Teriyaki (two skewered boneless breasts) 5.85
Sirloin n' Shrimp (small sirloin and three shrimp) 7.95
Chicken n' Sirloin (boneless chicken and small sirloin) 6.85
Crab n' Sirloin (King Crab legs and small sirloin) 8.75
Mixed Grill (shrimp, chicken, small steak kabob) 6.95

Our Salad Bar, Baked Potato or Rice Pilaf, and fresh warm Breads Included

Extras
Fresh Steamed Mushrooms (serves 2) 1.50
Coffee, Tea, Milk, Soda .60

Desserts
Cheesecake (plain or with strawberries) 1.25
Carrot Cake (try a piece 'I like it) .95
Dutch Apple Cream Pie .95
Lemon Sherbet .75
Chocolate Chip Ice Cream .75
Irish or Jamaican Coffee 1.50

Beer
Old fashioned draft beer, kept cold from cellar to spigot.

Bread
French and pumpernickel, kept warm at the salad bar

Salad Bar
Create a salad to suit your taste. As much as you care to eat.

1076 Williston Road, next to Econo Lodge
Entrance across from Ramada Inn

Dinner Served Daily
5-10 P.M.

Cocktail Lounge
4-closing
862-6585

Raw Bar — Thurs. & Fri. 4-7
Shrimp, Cherrystones, Oysters
25¢ each

Happy Holidays!

Baileys would like to extend its thanks to you for another great semester. Good Luck on your exams and we hope to see you all next year.

Remember Baileys for each of your musical needs. If your tastes run from Classical to Disco or Country/Western to Punk, we have what you need. Records make a great gift and we have something for everyone on your Christmas list. So stop into Baileys before you head home and save yourself from the headaches of last minute Christmas shopping. A gift from Baileys is music to your ears.

Bailey's
88 CHURCH ST.
BURLINGTON

WRUV

90.1 FM

Vermont's Jazz Authority

THERE'S ALWAYS SO MUCH TO GET DONE AT CHRISTMAS TIME...

IT'S CHRISTMAS

American Greetings Corporation

GREETING CARDS
GIFT WRAP
BOWS AND RIBBON
TREE TRIMMINGS

UNIVERSITY STORE
ON THE CAMPUS

WE HAVE A LARGE ASSORTMENT OF GIFTS, COME IN AND SEE!!!

Christmas Seal Greetings from the children of America.

Kids want sparkling, bright Christmases. Not polluted snowflakes and lung disease.

Children who care are speaking up. For lung associations. In the fight against smoking and pollution. Against asthma, emphysema, and other lung diseases.

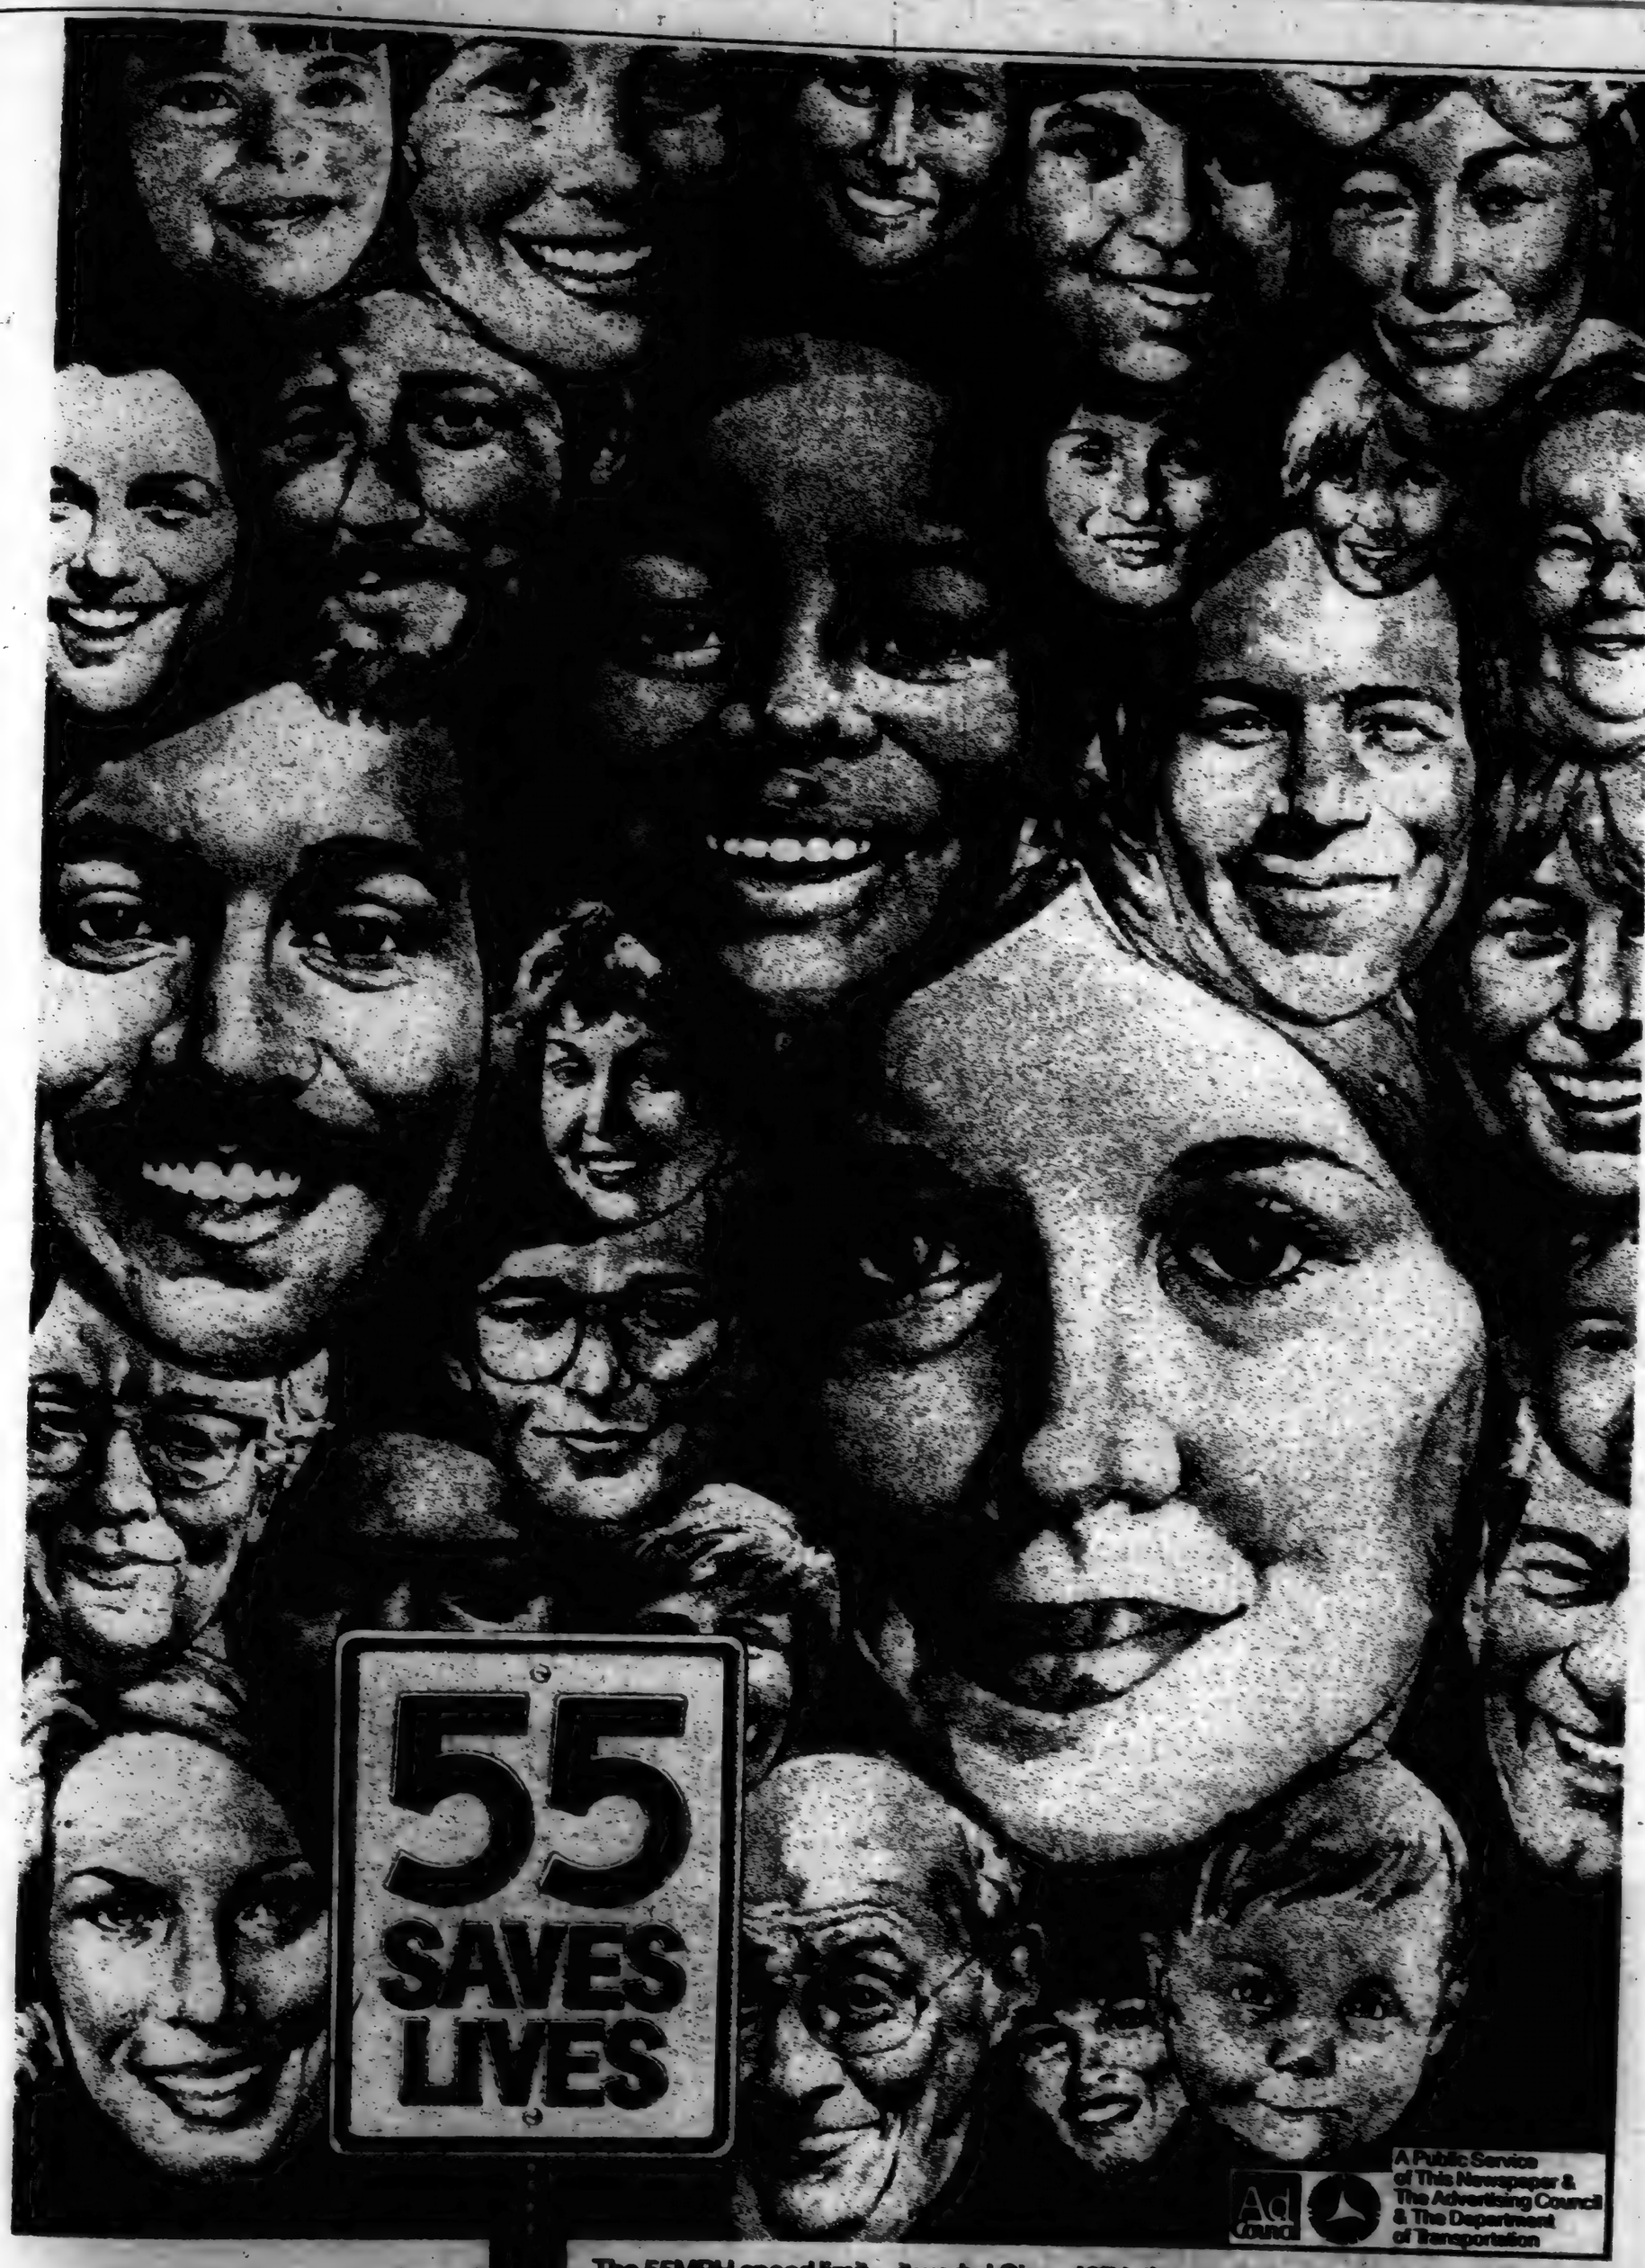
Christmas Seals protect everyone's lungs. Including little lungs. Which need extra protection to stay healthy.

The children of America created the 1978 Christmas Seals. When you use these seals you help create the kind of disease-free world kids want. And deserve.

Give to Christmas Seals. Because your lung association cares about every breath you take. They really do.

AMERICAN LUNG ASSOCIATION

The "Christmas Seal" People
We care about every breath you take



Space contributed by the publisher as a public service

Your next smoke could cost you $100,000.

A cigarette butt carelessly tossed out a car window can start a forest fire. If it's your cigarette butt, you're liable for the damages. You could end up paying them: Every payday for the rest of your life.

A Public Service of This Newspaper & The Advertising Council

It works!

The 55MPH speed limit... it works! Since 1974, the year the speed limit began, it's been the single biggest factor in reducing highway deaths... by more than 36,000. And don't forget. 55 saves gas. Driving at 55 rather than 70 can improve gas mileage up to 39%. So keep up the good work. Keep your speed at 55. It works – for all of us...

We're looking for new advertising ideas–and paying $50,000 for them

The newspapers of the U.S. and Canada are holding a contest for fresh, creative ideas about how to advertise in newspapers.

The contest is called AdConcepts 79...and there is $50,000 in cash for the winners.

You can be one of the winners.

First prize is $25,000; second prize, $10,000; third, $5,000... and there are 10 honorable mentions worth $1,000 each.

You don't have to be a professional advertising copywriter or artist to compete (although you certainly can be). You don't have to be able to draw a straight line.

Here's how to enter. Pick a product or a service. It can be real or one you make up. Figure out how you would use this newspaper to advertise it in a fresh, different way. Your idea may involve a catchy headline, a dramatic kind of illustration, an unusual offer—give your imagination free rein. You can simply describe your idea, or if you are handy with a pencil, do a sketch or "layout." But remember, it's the idea that counts, not how well you draw.

Fill out the entry blank, attach it to your work and mail it to the Newspaper Advertising Bureau in New York. Closing date is Feb. 1, 1979, so mail in plenty of time. Winners will be announced and cash prizes presented at the convention of the American Newspaper Publishers Association in New York on April 24, 1979.

> Special note to advertising professionals: We hope you'll enter AdConcepts 79 and compete for the $50,000 prizes for fresh ideas. We'd also like to point out that a special provision in the rules allows you to enter any real ads you have created that actually ran in a daily newspaper between Sept. 5, 1978 and Feb. 1, 1979, the closing date.

Winners will be showcased with credits in The Creative Newspaper, a collection of the best current newspaper advertising ideas. The Creative Newspaper will be published in April and 100,000 copies distributed throughout the advertising world.

In thinking about your AdConcepts entry, keep in mind some of the reasons the newspaper is the number one advertising medium—bigger than TV, or radio, or magazines. For example, almost everybody reads a newspaper every day. They enjoy the ads as much as any feature. The printed message is permanent and can be clipped and shopped from. And the newspaper offers a wide range of creative opportunities—sizes, shapes, color, black and white.

Don't delay! You may have an idea that can win top money in this big $50,000 contest. Enter now, and let's have an AdConcepts winner in our town.

"Play, oh play, your sweet creative song."

A

ENTRY FORM

Send to the Newspaper Advertising Bureau, Inc. 485 Lexington Ave.
New York, New York 10017

NAME(S) _____

COMPANY _____

ADDRESS _____

CITY _____ STATE _____ ZIP _____

TELEPHONE _____

ATTACH TO BACK OF ENTRY

Hidden Costs...

Continued from page 15

If a reactor operates for a shorter period of time (a lower capacity factor), then there is less of a base from which the industry can extract income. This is a simple supply–demand analysis: when a large amount of a good is produced, the price is low. But when only a small amount is produced, the price rises. Consequently, if a reactor operates for a shorter period of time during its lifetime, customers will pay a higher price for their electricity.

The nuclear industry claims a capacity factor of 65-80%, but according to a study presented to 6 states, the capacity factor for the industry was only 59% in 1975 and 57% in 1976. These same customers, after paying the fixed rate, may be forced to pay for replacement fuel in the event that a nuclear power plant is shut down. An example of this occurred in 1976 when Con Edison attached a 23 million dollar surcharge onto the bills of its New York customers for the six month period in which its nuclear generator was shut down.

The costs previously mentioned are known or can be reasonably estimated and therefore are paid by customers and taxpayers during years of current consumption. But the cost of dismantling a nuclear power plant is completely unknown. Nuclear reactors have a production lifetime of 35-40 years. By the time they have ceased producing energy, many sections of the structure have become contaminated with radiation and will remain so for many thousands of years. To prevent hazards to human health and environment these plants must be decommissioned.

Of the 67 commercial reactors now operating, only sixteen have begun planning for decommissioning. But how can plans be made? Estimates today place the cost at from three to ten percent of original capital cost in 1977 dollars. These estimates could be very low and they do not include the cost of perpetual care for the radioactive rubble (nickel) which may remain hazardous for over one million years. An even greater cost could be inflation which, if estimated at an annual rate of five percent, could quadruple the costs within the 34-year lifetime of the reactor. Aside from the 67 commercial reactors, the Department of Energy has in excess of 400 nuclear facilities, which will need decommissioning at an estimated cost to taxpayers of from two and a half to three billion dollars. Since most current utility rates do not reflect decommissioning costs, future generations will be forced to pay for the facilities which we are using today.

The nuclear industry is very capital intensive in relation to the labor intensive solar industry. With equal amounts being spent on both nuclear and solar facilities, solar facilities can produce more jobs as well as a greater saving of energy than the maximum possible production of energy from a nuclear facility of equivalent cost. To illustrate this, a study was done for the Department of Environmental Control in Suffolk County, New York. The results showed that two proposed 1150 megawatt nuclear units at Jamesport, Long Island would result in sixteen thousand man-years of employment at a total estimated cost of two billion dollars. If the two billion dollars were to be spent on solar energy and conservation facilities, 64 thousand man-years of labor as well as three times as much potential energy production would result.

Nuclear reactors are becoming less popular with utilities as evidenced by only four orders for new plants in 1977 as compared to 41 orders in 1973 and 283 plants deferred or cancelled since 1974. But the Federal Government continues to advocate new construction through devices such as Construction Work in Progress (CWIP), which offers utilities the chance to include new construction in the rate base of producing facilities. CWIP amounted to only $3.6 billion in 1966 but has risen to $26.3 billion in 1975. Through this device, current ratepayers are subsidizing the construction of new power plants by offsetting some of the large initial capital costs. Utilities also receive tax incentives to build new plants, but they do not have to pass these savings on to consumers. This is known as a "phantom tax" and amounted to $2.1 billion in 1977 alone.

No conclusion can be drawn about the economic future of nuclear power until all facts are considered. The utilities which own nuclear reactors are private corporations. All research and development is provided at no charge, courtesy of the taxpayers. Utilities are liable for only a tiny percentage of the damage which they could conceivably cause. Initial investments are huge but can be offset by CWIP and phantom taxes. There is no solution to the permanent disposal problem of nuclear waste in the near future, yet leaks are occurring and utilities are not responsible. Capacity factors throughout the industry are low, forcing higher electrical rates upon consumers. Consumers often pay exorbitant replacement power costs when the reactor is down. Nuclear reactors cannot compete with various other energy forms in terms of jobs produced, efficiency, capital costs, or energy produced per dollar invested. Finally, most utilities have not begun to plan for what could ultimately be the largest cost: decommissioning.

Advocates of nuclear power claim that the economic burden (and a small one at that!) is on ratepayers. But taxpayers and future generations contribute and will continue to contribute very heavily. Until we realize all of the tremendous costs involved in nuclear production and who is paying for them, we will continue to deceive ourselves into believing that nuclear power is a viable and economical energy alternative.

SEE THE SNOWMASTERS

WOMENS HIGH LEATHER BOOTS $38.95

SNOWMASTER $24.95

Other Boots from $29.95

Available for Men and Women:

Work Boots, Hiking Boots, and Pile-Lined Slippers

dunham FACTORY OUTLET

161 Church St. Burlington 862-6089 Open Daily 9:30-9:00, Sunday Noon-6

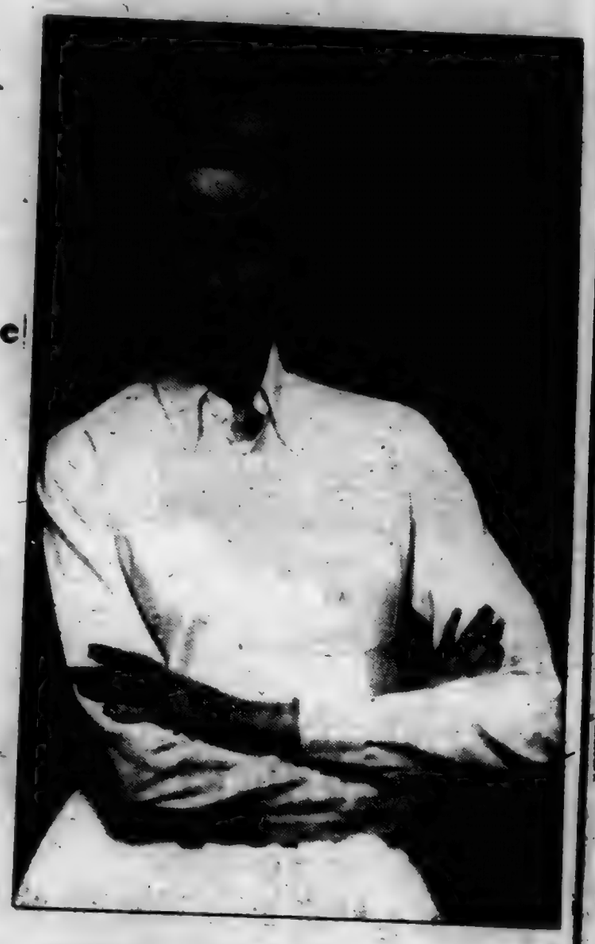
EYE GLASSES

10% OFF WITH STUDENT I.D.

CHRISTMAS GIFTS
- Sunglasses
- Eyeglass Cases
- Chains, Cords
- Screwdriver Kits
- Contact Supplies
- Eyeglass Cleaner

GIFT CERTIFICATES

OPTICAL CENTER



107 Church Street Burlington 864-7146

Hathaway Floral Pattern
80% Cotton Factory Price
20% Wool
Retail 42.50 $18.50

Liberty of London
Floral Pattern Factory Price
Ret. 40.00 $20.00

Button-down Oxfords solid colors Factory Price
Ret. $22.00 $13.00

Hathaway for Her

Hathaway Shirts
Factory Outlet

153 Cherry St.
Downtown Burlington
mon.-fri. 9:30 - 9:00 sat. 9:30 - 5:30

Merry Christmas From Hathaway's

Books

Noel Perrin: The Ultimate Flatlander

By Tom Daniels

First Person Rural: Essays of a Sometime Farmer by Noel Perrin. Godine Publisher, Boston, $7.95 illustrated.

Country living is a dream for many Americans. The thought of returning to the land to subsist as our forefathers did makes the urban-suburbanite's juices flow: fresh air, clean air, no crime, no traffic jams, honest neighbors...

Noel Perrin is by no means an authentic Vermont farmer. He moved up from New York fifteen years ago, teaches English at Dartmouth, owns a few animals and makes maple sugar on 100 acres. But, Mr. Perrin lucidly understands that when you live in Vermont, you either inherit a tradition or you ignore it. To his credit and his readers' delight, Mr. Perrin has made the first choice. Though First Person Rural is permeated with wry Yankee humor, the book doesn't present the parochial ravings of someone who hasn't been south of Rutland in 30 years. Instead, this book is witty, worldly, and closely reasoned in a style reminiscent of Mark Twain.

First Person Rural is a collection of works published in Vermont Life, Country Journal, and The New Yorker which offer sound practical advice and common sense on fence building, maple sugaring, buying a chainsaw, and other rural endeavors. Mr. Perrin writes from the point of view of a flatlander who has adapted well, and his stories are full of "if at first you don't succeed" lessons. The theme of Emerson's essay "On Self-Reliance" runs strong throughout this book, as if to say "rural life isn't the easy life, but it is the good life and I wouldn't trade it for anything!"

Mr. Perrin is well aware of the fragility of Vermont's quaintly backward 19th century lifestyle. In "Two Faces of Vermont," he compares the myth of Vermont as rural Paradise to the reality of people eking out a living in making a last stand for a slower, saner, more human way of life.

How much longer will oxen be used on farms? How rapidly will stone walls be torn down to widen roads? Will Vermont become one large resort?

The book closes with a warning that the "Highway culture" has already been felt in as remote a spot as Thetford, Vermont. Perrin is torn between the country existence he enjoys and the spectre of imminent commercial development. How to preserve and adapt is the key to the rural future, and he offers no solutions.

Perrin's prose is clear, straightforward, and refreshing; and the imaginative illustrations by Stephen Harvard add extra humorous touches. My only complaint is that this book is too short – 120 pages. Mr. Perrin obviously has many more stories and observations to offer and I hope he keeps writing. After reading First Person Rural, you will be convinced that Noel Perrin is fast becoming a Vermont treasure to be shared for years to come.

Dirty Jokes

Continued From Page 52

extra scenes that many were expecting to see.

Afterwards, Miller fielded questions ranging from "When did you graduate from Dartmouth?" ('64), to "What's John Belushi like offstage?" (any normal guy) to "Who gets the money from Animal House?" (the owners of National Lampoon Corp., mostly). Miller also said he plans to write another movie in a couple years, but hopes to get back to prose writing in the near future. He confessed he's doing colleges now not so much for the money, but because he loves performing in front of an audience.

"Remember," said Miller at the close of his Bedtime Story, "It's better to be an animal than a vegetable, and I hope everybody here gets laid tonight!"

Rock

Continued From Page 55

The Worst

No. 1 — No Slack (Mercury)

No slack, yes slick, these guys sound like they are sliding through rock riffs on a sled going two feet every five days. Some stuff is O.K., like "Pressure Point" and "Hold Me," but that is pushing it even a little. There is some bare competency perceptible here; they can play rock, but the overproduced vocal enhancers and cliche chord changes are downright nauseating. On "Come Home with Me" and "Man Enough," you might expect some form of real current macho, even borderline virility. I tried to like this record, but these guys sound like they're on hormones.

No. 2 — Captain Kool and the Kongs (Epic)

Disco-oriented, this album is an offense to Euro-chic, and just about any other kind of mechanical vibration extant. Perhaps the only other piece of "music" it ranks with is the Dr. Pepper Jingle. Made for pre-pubescent non-discriminants, "You Put Some Life in My Love" sounds like staccato Punch and Judy. You may have seen the Kongs as hosts of a Saturday morning cartoon show. You may also wonder if they take themselves seriously. Nevertheless, the Kongs on the cover of their album look like they are genuinely enjoying themselves. Although mere cosmetics can help you make it, their costumes look like Cosmic King Family Cast-offs. "True Love is On Its Way" is such an uplifting, refreshing heart-breaker. Bubblegum is back, insipid as ever. Lord save us.

Jazz

Continued From Page 55

interlude stating "walk into the sunlight") I could hardly believe that it was written by the composer of jazz standards such as "Maiden Voyage" and "Toys."

In brief, my primary reaction to this album is conveniently verbalized by its first cut "I Thought It Was You." Unfortunately Herbie, it is you!!

Go

George Duke, funkmaster of the 70's, continues his tradition for repetitively meaningless music with Don't Let Go. Including sales inducing devices such as extensive lyrics, total electrification, and vocal screams, groans and shouts, this album's intention is to draw attention from younger markets. Granted, a musician must eat to survive, but if George Duke continues to regress in this manner he will eventually produce albums geared to an "un-born" audience! (Although I'm sure some infants might get off on his funk).

The title track, the most respectable composition, resembles a serious waste of time. Complete with tritely scatted lyrics ("I mo hug you" etc...) this tune merely gains the distinction of being "the best of the worst." Several instrumental tracks provide synthesized science fiction falling far short of musical classifications.

At this point, the world has given up on George Duke. Funk has enveloped his inner being to such an extent that not even mass dosages of Keith Jarrett could resurrect him from the menial level he occupies on today's jazz scene.

Non-Running

Continued From Page 56

gives me a sense of controlling my own life. I like the finiteness of a good sit, the fact that it has a clear beginning and end. I like the strong sense of place that comes from being well-seated. It makes me feel firmly rooted and in touch with the planet." Another sitter says the act is "not just a means of relaxing, it's life itself. It defines me. I sit — therefore I am."

The book includes insights to some famous non-runners like Walt Torpo, one of the world's slowest humans, Elmo Brack, Canadian Marathon non-running champ, and Dr. George Shoeshine, the runner's philosopher. In addition, several celebrity non-runners talk about where they non-run.

The idea and many sections of the Non-Runner's Book are extremely funny and satirical, to runners and non-runners alike. Except for an occasional non-funny chapter, like "The Rape of the Foot" and "A Nap with a Champion" that were probably added just to make the whole parody book-length, the authors write with a quick wit and intellectualism that leads a reader to speculate that they might have written for Monty Python or Saturday Night Live. However, "About the Authors" reveals what they really do: "Vic Ziegel and Lewis Grossberger are the pseudonyms of a pair of fabulously rich and successful sneaker manufacturers from West Germany who frankly are ashamed of the social and physical ills they have caused by conspiring to make running fashionable as a means of boosting world sneaker sales. Writing this book was their way of atoning for the damage they've done of preventing further harm from coming to future generations."

Give her a strawberry for Christmas.

"For your Strawberry pleasure"

...a love gift for Christmas.

A sparkling new kit of sybaritic luxuries for your Strawberry pleasure. Includes four heavenly products in subdued shades of red.

Body Lather
Body Massage
Body Soft Moisturizer
Boby Gloss

Entire Kit $16.50

i natural cosmetics

where the beautiful people meet — naturally.

Burlington Square Mall

complete center for your body needs. —the natural way.

practically on campus

GAYNES SHOPPERS WORLD

open daily til 9 pm

gaynes pharmacy

★★ call us or stop by and check our discount prescription prices

★★ within easy walking distance of the university campus and infirmary

★★ fast, friendly prescription service

Williston Rd. So. Burlington

phone us: 863-1597

Bluegrass and Country

Entertainment Wed. & Thurs. Nights

Monday – $.25 draft + $.75 pitchers
Tuesday – $.50 Molsons
Sunday – Ladies night $.25 off drinks

Happy Hour 3–7 daily
Football Specials – Sunday
Pitch Tournaments

sullivan's
4 NO. WINOOSKI AVENUE

Next to Domino's Pizza

BASS 100'S

THE HEIGHT OF COMFORT

Women's BASS 100's

BASS is number one on campus and here are three reasons why. Get your wardrobe off the ground with shoes you can really live in. BASS 100's are comfortable and put together to last. BASS 100's! Just what you need to get up in the world.

Reject prices from $26.95 — $28.95

SAVE OVER $10.00

Bass®

Shoe Factory Outlet

Williston Road, So. Burl., Vt.
OPEN DAILY 9 A.M.-9 P.M.

Calendar

12 Tuesday

EXHIBITIONS

Francis Colburn Gallery – William Rowe: drawings. 9 a.m. – 5 p.m.

Fleming Museum – "Tools & Technology," "Holiday Craft Show & Fair."

LECTURES

"The Politics of Age in China," George T. Little, 3:15 p.m. John Dewey Lounge, Old Mill.

"Grand Rounds," Rollin M. Gallagher, M.D., 4 p.m., 103 Rowell.

FILMS

SA Film "Le Boucher," 7:30 p.m. B106 Angell, free/ID, 50 cents/general.

SPECIAL EVENTS

Scottish Country Dancing: beginners, 7:30 p.m., advanced, 8 p.m., 104 & 109 Old Mill. Info. 862-2428 or 863-4107.

MEETINGS

Staff Council Meeting: 12 noon, Memorial Lounge, Waterman.

Christian Science College Organization, 4:30 p.m., B102 L/L.

OTHER

Ceramics Department Christmas Pot Sale, 10 a.m. – 3 p.m., Marsh Lounge, Billings.

VPIRG table, 11–1 p.m., Billings lobby.

13 Wednesday

EXHIBITIONS

Francis Colburn Gallery – William Rowe: drawings, 9 a.m. – 5 p.m.

Fleming Museum – "Tools & Technology," "Holiday Craft Show & Fair."

LECTURES

"Cash budgeting – Special Topics in Business," Walt Deverall, 7:30 p.m., Church St. Center. Pre-register, cost $8. 656-4221.

Student Legal Services "Landlord-Tenant & Consumer Protection Seminar," 6:30–10:15 p.m., North Lounge, Billings.

PERFORMING ARTS

"Christmas Music & Madrigals," by UVM Madrigal singers. Music Building, 8 p.m.

MEETINGS

SA Finance Committee, 5–6:30 p.m., Conference Room C, Billings.

Outing Club, 7:30 p.m., North Lounge, Billings.

CCC Leadership Training Class, 7:30 p.m., 115, 118 Rowell.

OTHER

Ceramics Department Christmas Pot Sale, 10 a.m. – 3 p.m., Marsh Lounge, Billings.

Undergraduate Business Society faculty-student Christmas Party, 216 Commons L/L from 7–9 p.m.

Open House at Dharmadhatu, 31 Elmwood Avenue, the Burlington center for Buddhist meditation and study. 7:30 p.m. Meditation instruction and talks on Buddhist practice as taught by the Ven. Chogyam Trungpa, Rinpoche. For more information call 658-6795.

14 Thursday

EXHIBITIONS

Francis Colburn Gallery – William Rowe: drawings, 9 a.m. – 5 p.m.

LECTURES

"Finding & Getting Money for Energy Conservation," 10 a.m., Church St. Center.

"The Glory That Was Greece: The 1896 Athens Olympics & the World's First Marathon Race," James Overfield, 4 p.m., Wheeler House. Refreshments at 3:30 p.m.

(Continued on next page)

IRA ...

continued from page 12

IRA's Housing Committee is planning on publicizing the university's financial responsibility in the event of fire, theft, or vandalism, a question that arose following the Davis fire last month. In addition, the Housing Committee is evaluating the present state of Coolidge Hall to determine a strategy for preventing a return to its vandalized state. Finally, IRA is trying to improve relations between the university and the community by starting campus-wide blood drives and by supporting the United Way. It is evident that IRA makes an impact on the residential life at UVM; yet John Allen says that much of IRA's impact goes by unnoticed and unappreciated by much of the student body.

CAN IRA BE RECOGNIZED?

Although IRA provides many services and has been able to affect Residential Life's decision-making process, it is still in need of recognition. It must have recognition if it is to represent the student body. "It is hard to make the students aware of what we're doing," said Allen. "It seems that a lot of the things we do get done in spite of the students. For example, many students have scoffed at our attempts to examine the correlation of alcohol and vandalism. Yet while they laugh, they are being held accountable for a very impressive figure in unassigned damages."

It may be true that IRA is hindered in its ability to enhance the quality of life by a low budget and widespread student apathy, but some feel that IRA is not making enough of an effort to publicize its current objectives and agendas. When asked what IRA is, a Wright Hall sophomore said, "IRA is a student government organization, but what it discusses and what it accomplishes is a secret to me."

IRA exists; it serves; and now it should examine ways to be heard. What could be more important than recognition for a student governmental, service organization?

Wanna share an $80,000 house with three wild and crazy guys?

We need two roomates !

Call x-4254 and ask for John if interested. $110 per mo.

continued from p. 64

FILMS

SA Film "The Men" 7:30 p.m., B106 Angell, free/ID, 50 cents/general.

SPORTS

Men's Hockey vs. Harvard, 7:30 p.m., Gutterson.

LAST DAY OF CLASSES!!!!

15 Friday

PERFORMING ARTS

Open Readings – poetry, prose, plays in an informal setting. Pot Luck come at 7:30 p.m. FREE! At The Learning Tree, Mt. Philo Rd., Shelburne, 985-2950.

FILMS

"With Babes and Banners:" a 45-minute documentary of the women's emergency brigade during the 1937 General Motors sit-down strike in Flint, Michigan. Produced by the Women's Labor History Film Project. 7 and 8:30 p.m., Methodist Church, So. Winooski Ave. Also on Saturday, Dec. 16 at 8 and 9 p.m. at Angell Lecture Hall, Cook B112, UVM. Admission $1.00.

17 Sunday

SPECIAL EVENTS

Sonorous Sunday 1–5 p.m. An open forum for music, poetry, songs and stories. Refreshments 75 cents. At the Learning Tree, Mt. Philo Rd., Shelburne, 985-2950.

To find out further information (for the remainder of the semester) call 656-2068 for daily events or call 656-2060 for future events.

REDWOOD IN THE ROUND

HOT TUBS

YOU CAN ENJOY A HOT TUB SPA FOR $1395 COMPLETE

THE COUPE 4' x 3'

At $1,395.00, our Cooper's Coupe is an excellent value with no sacrifice in quality. Like all our Hot Tubs, the Coupe is precisely milled from aged clear heart redwood. Three feet in height and four feet wide, this Hot Tub is ideally suited for contemporary living spaces. Every tub kit comes complete with one Spa Ultra Jet®; one pre-plumbed filter, heater, and pump assembly; and all the necessary fittings and special tools. The Coupe may not come with all the options, but it does come with all the fun.

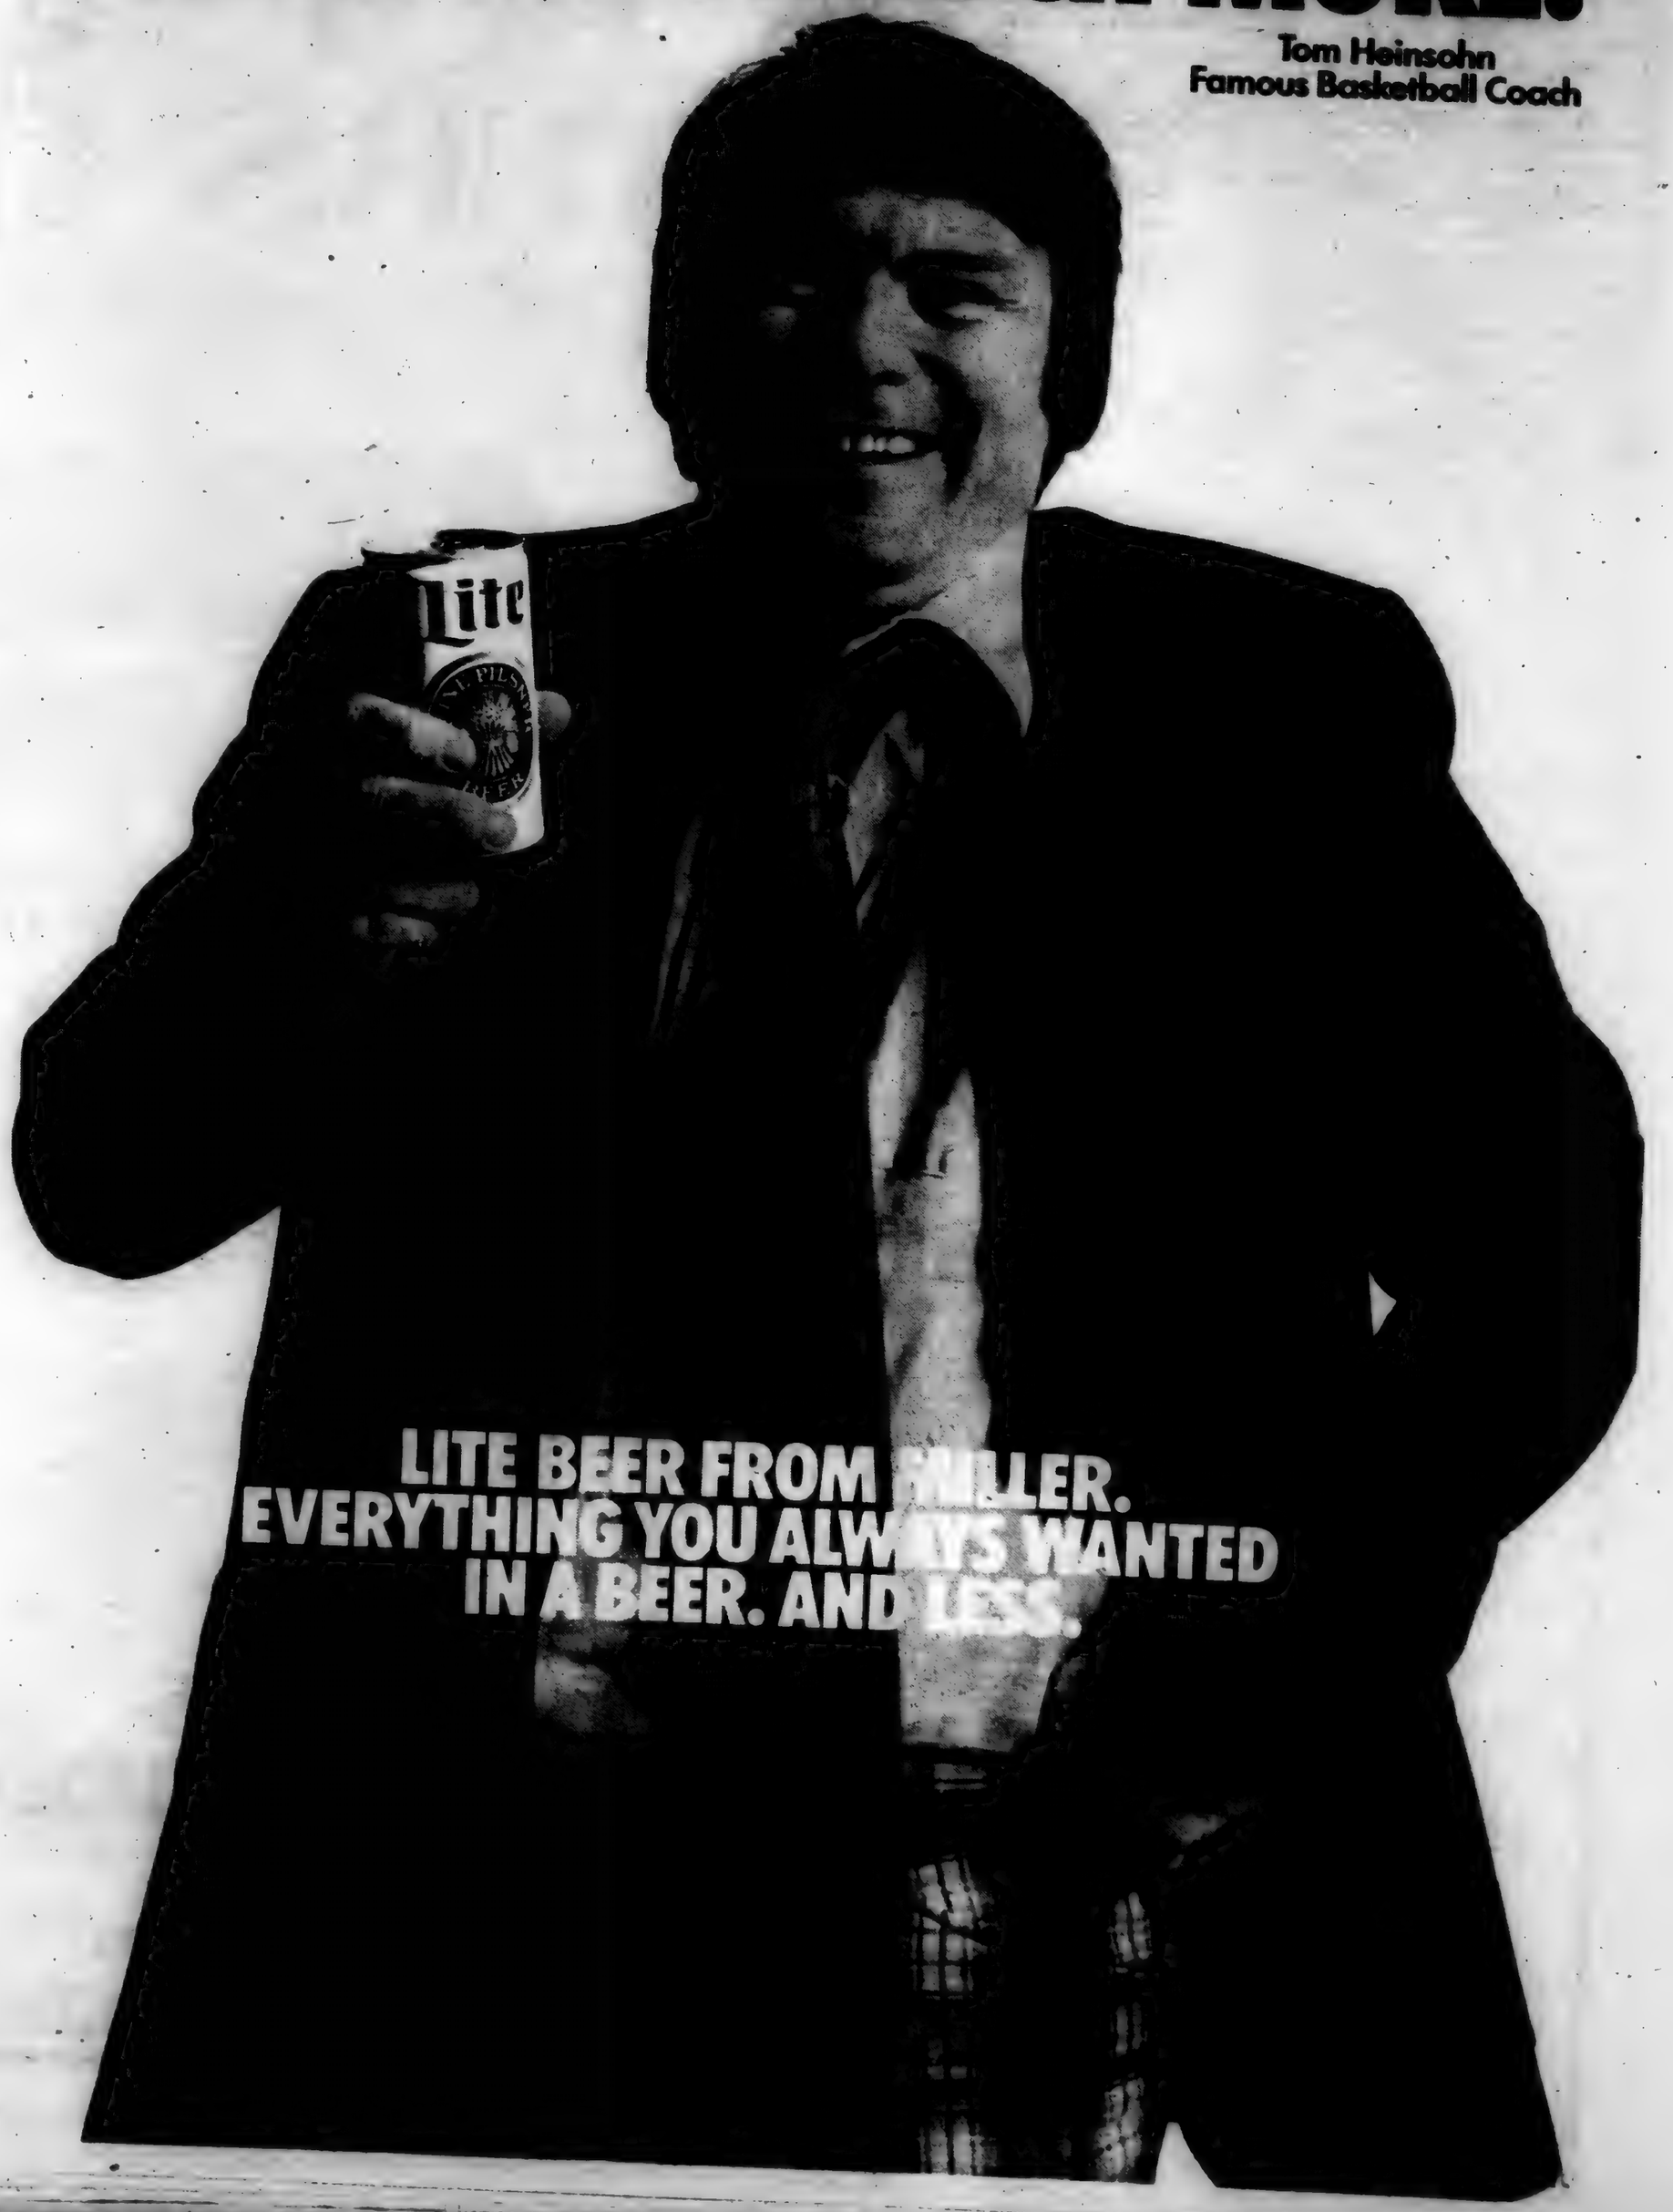
ACCESSORIES

A complete line of accessories is available for every Hot Tub: ladders; shelves and benches; additional jets; blowers; both vinyl and redwood covers; lights; thermometers; etc.

THE HOT TUB EXPERIENCE

Redwood in the Round offers quality Hot Tubs made from natural materials as an alternative to synthetic spas. Our tubs are designed to provide many years of reliable service with minimal maintenance. Hot Tubs are not only fun and relaxing, they are also tax deductible if prescribed for their therapeutic value. For further information, give us a call.

HOT TUBS BREAK THE ICE



OTHER SIZES AND CUSTOM-DESIGNED MODELS AVAILABLE. CALL FOR SPECIFICATIONS AND PRICING.

REDWOOD IN THE ROUND

Jim Oakes 75 Grant St. Burlington Vt.
Tel: 802 863-1478 and 802 862-4745

"I LIKE LITE MORE THAN I LIKE REFS. MUCH MORE."

Tom Heinsohn
Famous Basketball Coach

LITE BEER FROM MILLER.
EVERYTHING YOU ALWAYS WANTED
IN A BEER. AND LESS.

Winter Humdrums?

... Burlington's Indoor Tennis Courts Provide Snowbound Summer Relaxation

By Steven Larose

Tennis is a sport common to most UVM students during the summer, but once the first snow flakes fly, UVM's courts are iced over and students usually hang up their racquets until warmer days. However, Burlington boasts two exceptional indoor tennis facilities, Twin Oaks and Lakeside Tennis Centers, where tennis enthusiasts may continue their games through Burlington's bleak winter months.

Indoor tennis is relatively foreign to Vermont, but Twin Oaks and Lakeside offer a combined total of 12 courts, plus saunas, exercise rooms, pro shops and a full slate of other features. Sherry Daniels, manager of Twin Oaks, summed up the indoor tennis picture in Vermont when she remarked, "Tennis has really exploded in the past few years. When I first moved to Burlington 10 years ago there weren't any facilities in Vermont at all. I had to go to Hanover, N.H. But now with two centers in Burlington, I think we certainly have enough facilities to handle the interest."

TWIN OAKS

Twin Oaks Tennis and Swim Center, located at 95 Kennedy Drive in South Burlington, includes six indoor and four outdoor courts, an outdoor pool, saunas and showers, exercise room, masseuse, lounge, tennis and racquet shop, and snack bar.

Twin Oaks offers a full schedule of round robin tournaments, including a Wednesday college student round robin from 9:30 to 11. Participation in the round robins costs $4 to $6 per person and is billed as "a great way to get to meet new people." The center also runs an Open Singles Handicap tournament, and is starting an exercise program on Wednesday.

A full compliment of holiday gift packages are also being offered. A $35 student play rate

continued on page 69

Photo by Adrienne Helitzer

Photo by Karen Salzman

... Racketball & Squash at the Court Club Offer A Change of Pace

By Rich Chalmers

Racketball is the fastest growing racket sport in America and the Burlington Court Club and Physical Fitness Center across from Lakeside Tennis is an excellent facility for both racketball and squash, yet it is almost unknown to the UVM community.

Upon entering the club, one is impressed with the more than adequate facilities and artistic design. The atmosphere is warm and friendly. "This is more of a luxury facility – lots of glass, skylights, woodwork, the whole bit," commented head pro Peter Hawks. "There's too much extra for an investor to consider seriously, but the members benefit from that."

In fact, the Court Club has a great deal to offer. Its seven racketball and two squash courts are clean, well-lit and in excellent condition. The full gamut of physical fitness equipment including saunas and a whirlpool are at the members' fingertips.

"It's no longer in to be out," explained Hawks, referring to America's sudden surge toward common man athletics. "What it means is that this nation is slowly going to get itself in shape."

Hawks and his organization have been keeping abreast of this surge in popularity and offering programs and special events that appeal to the all-around athlete as well as just squash and racketball players. "We take a broad approach to athletics," he explained. "Physical fitness is important. It sort of cleans out the tubes, so you think and operate better. I realize a lot of our members don't stick just to squash or racketball, so we also offer running, discounts at Smuggler's, etc. We took a whole bunch of people skiing all day and then brought them back to a nice hot whirlpool. They loved it." The club also offers an exercise program at 5:45 p.m. on Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays which has turned out to be quite a success. "We work them pretty hard," said Hawks, "because that's what they're here for – exercise. It's probably the most arduous public workout program in the area."

Hawks has also found that leagues have been very popular

continued on page 69

Photo by Steve Larose

Top to Bottom: Tennis at Twin Oaks, The Pro Shop & Night Paddle Tennis at Lakeside

CHRISTMAS IDEAS

DAKIN'S HAS:

DUOFOLD
LONG UNDERWEAR
&
TURTLENECKS

MEN'S & LADIES'

- WOOL FLANNEL CHAMOIS SHIRTS
- SOREL BOOTS
- WOOL SOCKS

DAKIN'S HAS:

DOWN & SYNTHETIC JACKETS

THE LARGEST SELECTION OF VESTS IN TOWN

WOOL HATS & MITTS

DAKIN'S HAS:

- CROSS COUNTRY SKI PACKAGES from '80
- CHILDREN'S X-C PACKAGES
- CHILDREN'S TRADE-IN PROGRAM
- X-C RENTAL
- X-C WAXING CLINICS

HOURS:
Mon.-Fri.
9-9
SAT. 9-6
SUN. 10-4

DAKIN'S MOUNTAIN SHOP

863-5581

227 MAIN ST.
BURLINGTON

Hockey Cats Win Third Straight

Cote's Blistering OT Goal Lifts Cats Over Clarkson

By Rich Casner

Defenseman Louis Cote tallied the game-winning goal 4:44 into sudden-death overtime as the UVM hockey Catamounts defeated perennial powerhouse Clarkson 5-4 at Gutterson Field House.

Vermont extended its winning streak to three and remains the only other unbeaten team (3-0) besides Boston University (5-0) in Division I hockey.

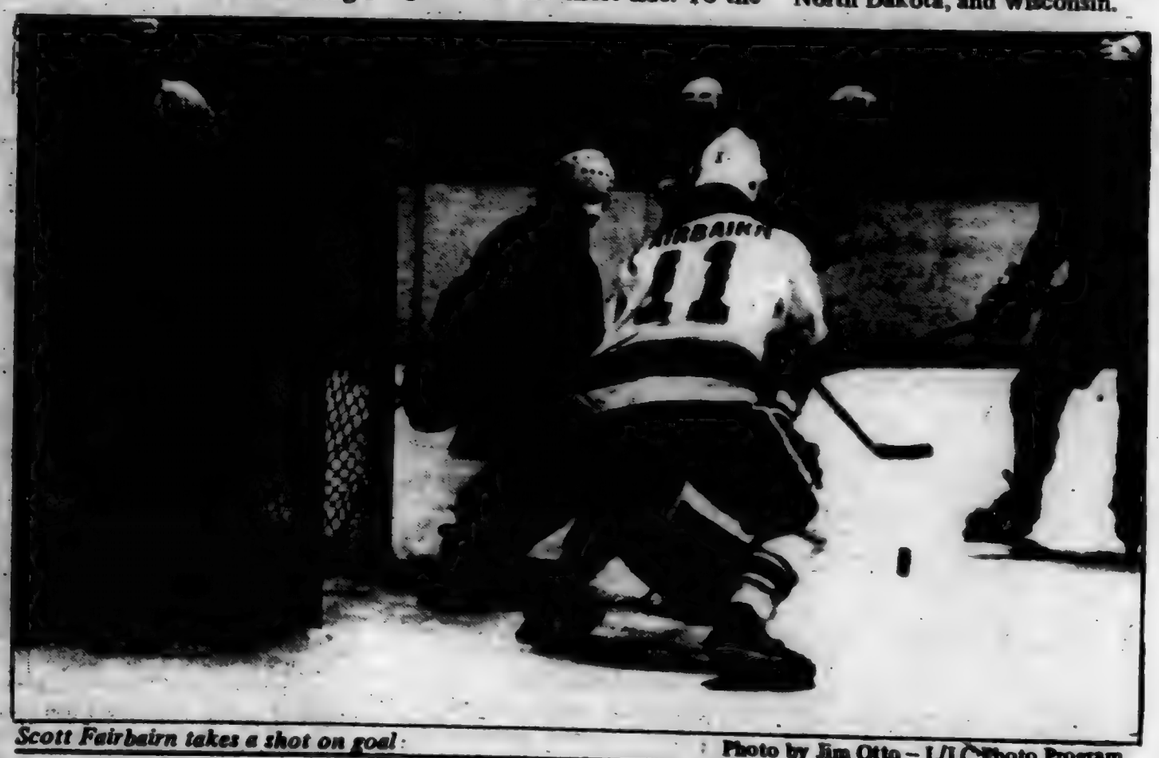
Cheered on by a typical enthusiastic Saturday night crowd, the Catamounts controlled the game's opening ten minutes. The powerplay line of Craig Homola, Tom Cullity and Gary Prior started things off for Vermont as Cullity slapped in his own rebound from a Homola pass at 2:45. Minutes later Vermont had its second goal. This time it was freshman Michel Vincent who took a pass from Homola and flipped it over Clarkson goalie Ken Moore.

The later half of the first period belonged to Clarkson as the UVM offense slowed up. The Golden Knights came back to make it 2-1 on a slap shot by Bryan Cleaver that UVM goalie Sylvain Turcotte stopped, but the puck trickled in behind him.

Freshman sensation Mike Prestidge tied the game for Clarkson at 14:41 on a powerplay goal by sweeping the puck into the open side of the net past Turcotte.

The second period opened with Clarkson's Ed Small firing a low hard slap shot toward Turcotte. Kevin Owen deflected the shot past a helpless Turcotte and Clarkson had a 3-2 lead just 40 seconds into the period.

The second period saw four penalties assessed to the Clarkson team including a five-minute major penalty to Chick Sharlow for cutting Prior. Vermont could only manage one goal, however, as many shots went wide. The two teams played evenly for most of the period until the Catamounts had a two-man advantage late in the period. Cote stickhandled through two Clarkson defenders to keep the puck in the zone. He then passed to Chris Zimmerman on the other point who then worked it around to Prior behind the net. Prior then fed Cullity who was standing in front of the goal. Cullity blasted it past Moore to even the game at three goals apiece.



UVM dominated the third period of play by forechecking their opponents and hustling all over the ice. Freshman Bill Kangas played outstanding defense for the Cats by blocking the Clarkson front line at the Vermont blue line. The persistent forechecking of Bill Ford and Jim Murphy paid off when Murphy poked the puck away from a Clarkson player inside the zone. The loose puck was picked up by Ford who fired and beat the Clarkson goalie on the short side. To the tune of thousands of cheering fans, the score became 4-3 in favor of UVM.

The score remained the same until Clarkson's Sid Tanchak took a pass from Dan Makuch and slammed it home at 9:43. The game remained deadlocked until the final buzzer.

The climax of the game came when Cote got the puck at center ice just four minutes into the final overtime period. Cote thrilled the fans with his dazzling speed and stickhandling abilities as he beat two Clarkson defenders, faked a shot, then drove a low wrist shot that beat Moore to the far side to win the game. "LOUIE, LOUIE" echoed off the rafters, as the crowd stood and cheered for a tremendous performance.

Nevertheless, the game was not a one-man show, as Coach Jim Cross said afterwards, "It was a team effort. I'm just really happy for the kids. They're the ones that did it – the whole team."

Vermont is now 3-4 overall, with RPI invading Gutterson on December 11th. Vermont challenges Harvard on Dec. 14th to wind up the current homestand. UVM is currently ranked second in New England behind Boston University. In a poll released Tuesday, UVM was voted eighth in the nation by a board of college coaches, behind BU, Notre Dame, Minnesota, Bowling Green, Michigan, Tech, North Dakota, and Wisconsin.

Scott Fairbairn takes a shot on goal. Photo by Jim Otto – L/LC Photo Program

St. Hilaire & Raymond Excel At Nationals

By Tom Phillips

Often, in the world of journalism, one hears bromides like "no news is good news" and "late news is no news." But in the case of two UVM women cross-country runners who traveled to Boulder, Colorado to compete in the National AIAW Meet, those two maxims must be fused to read "Late news is good news."

On Noyember 18th Cat runners Judi St. Hilaire and Donna Raymond raced around a 5000-meter course with the 234 fastest collegiate women runners in the United States. Though hindered somewhat by the 5000+ foot altitude, Judi and Donna still managed to record astonishing 20th and 73rd places, respectively. Judi's time of 17:54.4 was just 55 seconds behind the winning time of Colorado's Mary Decker and fast enough to make her one of the East's top finishers. Donna's time of 18:34.6 was slightly off her previous best 5000-meter time, but good enough to place her two seconds ahead of Middlebury College's only qualified entrant, Karin Von Berg.

Vermont Coach Perry Bland, still tickled some three weeks after the meet by the Vermont girls' efforts, offered his analysis: "It was a great performance by Judi. We figured she could finish among the top 20. The altitude had some effect, but she did very well. I'm really proud of them both."

Racketball and Squash

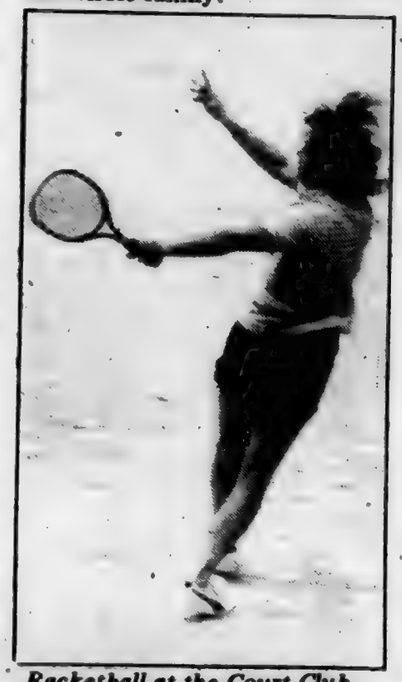
Continued from page 67

in the Burlington area, so the club offers a developed inter-league competition system. "People like the teams and having structured schedules," remarked Hawks. The competitors have handicaps, so everyone gets a fair shake.



The club offers men's round robin tournaments on Tuesday nights and mixed beginners and novice round robins on Saturday mornings.

College student membership in the Court Club costs 45 dollars per year. Without a membership, a person can pay a $3.00 guest fee and then the court fee. Court fees are $6.00/hr during the day and $8.00/hr. at night.

Hawks took over the struggling organization two years ago and has been slowly bringing it up by its bootstraps. He has been surprised by the lack of response from UVM students & Burlington residents as a whole. "We have been totally ineffective at getting the word out to Burlington residents," Hawks said. "Probably three out of four people in Burlington have never heard of us." But there is little doubt that what the club offers is impressive and available for a reasonable price. "We can't afford a massive publicity drive," he added, "so we're growing from the inside out. We're treating our members very well, hoping the word will spread through them."

Hawks went on to say that he was surprised none of the bargain rates brought in any more student members, who number around 30 to 40 from neighboring colleges. "We would be very interested in forming some sort of league with UVM. It could be on a night-owl basis and membership fee could be waived," he suggested. "The economics are subtle but definitely positive."

There are a number of reasons why racketball has grown in popularity so tremendously over the past few years. One of the main ones is that it's easy to get the hang of. The levels of ability aren't as distinct, and it provides an excellent form of exercise for the whole family.

Racketball at the Court Club
Photo by Rick Ames

When asked if the current racketball surge would equal or surpass that of tennis, Mike Gamache, president of the Vermont chapter of the USRA and member of the court club, responded negatively, "I think it may peak off sooner than tennis. It's not going to go that far unless it becomes nationally acclaimed. But it should, because it's easy to learn and the challenge is still there as you improve."

Many people have found, however, that they peak in racketball after playing a few years. It is often these people who then go on to play squash, which is harder to master.

Although squash is currently less popular than racketball in the Burlington area, the club has been enjoying a 200% increase in playing time on the squash courts this year over last. "We are on the fringes of squash territory," explained Hawks. "Many of our squash players came to Vermont and brought squash with them."

When asked why squash hasn't caught on more, Hawks stressed the importance of the stereotypical image of the Ivy League passtime which the sport has acquired. "The game is not actively trying to merchandize itself, and the players are very happy to keep it that way," he added.

UVM has two squash courts and eight racketball courts to offer the students as well. The main problem with the UVM courts is overuse, and it is here that the court club fits in. It constitutes an excellent source of all around athletics specializing in all levels of squash and racketball competition. There is little doubt that once UVM and Burlington residents become aware of what the court club has to offer, a great number of them will probably join.

Tennis and Paddle

Continued from page 67

membership enables one to play at reduced rates of $3 per player per hour during off-peak hours. Twin Oaks also offers a $30 Night Owl membership which allows court use during the late evening and is very popular with students whose schedules are flexible. The Night Owl also is priced at $3 per person per hour.

"A lot of UVM students put their tennis game on hold during the winter, but with the indoor courts they can play a little during the winter and it won't take as long for them to get back into shape when spring rolls around," observed Daniels. "Not many students play during the winter, but with our low rates for off-peak hours, students can come out and use the summer game of tennis as a release from winter tension or just to keep in shape."

Daniels characterized Twin Oaks as busy, but students usually can get a court between two and four in the afternoon or late at night. Daniels added, "We have a lot of students coming over, plus the UVM tennis team plays here during the winter. Twin Oaks is a good place to meet other tennis enthusiasts and mainly to relax."

If you're just learning tennis, the center offers lessons with Pro Deedie Kiley, plus reduced rates on practice times.

LAKESIDE TENNIS AND RACQUET CLUB

Although Lakeside Tennis and Racquet Club, located at 75 Farrell Drive behind the Old Board Restaurant, offers a similar slate of features as Twin Oaks, Lakeside also owns the only Paddle Tennis courts in Vermont easily accessible to the public. Paddle Tennis is just beginning to take hold in Vermont but according to Manager Allyson Bolduc, "it doesn't take too long before you learn the rudiments. There certainly is a lot of enthusiasm in Burlington."

While Lakeside offers no Night Owl prices, they do have a special student membership of $40 that allows anyone 22 or under to play at the reduced rate of $3 per hour during off-peak hours. Lakeside has the same number of courts as does Twin Oaks, plus all the standard features such as sauna, lounge, pro shop, snack bar, etc. Lakeside currently has no leagues, but plans to offer a full schedule of tournaments in January. Bolduc also hopes to work something up with a UVM league that combines instruction and play.

Lessons and clinics can be arranged at Lakeside, with prices running from $18/hr. for private lessons to very low clinic rates. The center also offers reduced rates for practice times.

PADDLE TENNIS

Paddle Tennis at Lakeside has attracted many students who are taking advantage of paddle's unique outdoor winter game combining cool temperatures and warm players. Bolduc stated that more people are turning to paddle tennis as an alternative to tennis, while at the same time people are turning to indoor tennis as a release of winter humdrums, a way to stay fit, or just as a method of relaxation.

The UVM physical education department offers a paddle tennis course in conjunction with Lakeside. Thursday nights are UVM paddle tennis nights at the Lakeside facility. Rates are $9.00 per hour, with a $65 student paddle pass being offered as well. Courts are usually available and paddles are for rent.

Lakeside Head Pro Dave Robison remarked that tennis is a good business that lets you see people when they're happy. Bolduc added, "Even though Twin Oaks and Lakeside are competitive and cooperate quite a lot, I think we have a really friendly, relaxed atmosphere among the staff and players. What sets us apart is that we are more informal and relaxed than Twin Oaks. I feel we try to make

continued on page 78

ONE YEAR
Membership
50% OFF
Only $27.50 Regularly $55
Limited Offer 24 Hours Only!
Wed. Dec 13 7am-11pm

Take advantage of The Court Club's Christmas present to you. Only $27.50 gives you 7 racquetball courts, 2 squash courts, circuit-training equipment, sauna, whirlpool, steamroom and more – FOR ONE YEAR.

The Court Clubs offer is good for one day only so...

ACT NOW!!

THE COURT CLUB & PHYSICAL FITNESS CENTER
70 FARRELL ROAD • SOUTH BURLINGTON, VERMONT 05401

Join the Action!
Play Tennis,
Racquetball,
Squash
and Paddle Tennis.

Cynic Cynic Cynic Cynic Cynic

Next semester the Cynic will be looking for writers, photographers, artists interested in contributing to the University's dynamic news & arts weekly

If you are interested drop by the Cynic office in lower Billings or come to the organizational meeting next semester

VERMONT CYNIC

Three Third Period Goals Spur IceCats Over BC

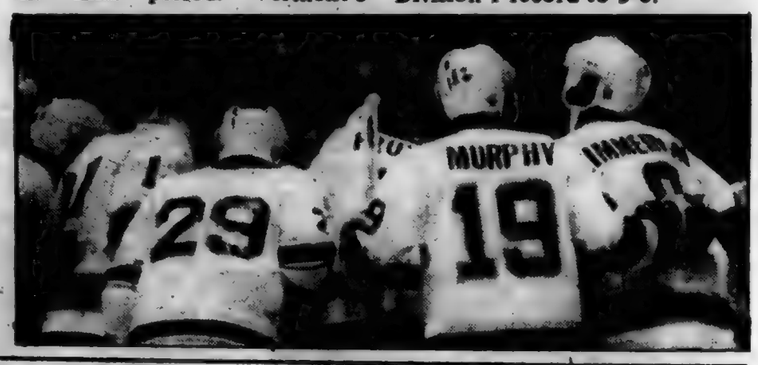
By Nick Witte

The UVM hockey team rallied with three goals in the final period to shock Boston College 5-4 Friday night in the first game of what turned out to be the best week-end for the Cats at the Gutterson Rink in recent memory.

Freshman Garry Herbert rapped home the game-winning goal with 3:26 remaining, his first for UVM. "Can you believe it?" said an ecstatic Herbert. "Oh God, it happened so fast and then it was in the net." Other Vermont goals in the third period were scored by high-scorer Craig Homola, his second of the night, and Tom Cullity. Goalie Sylvain Turcotte silenced the BC attackers in the final period to allow the Catamounts to rack up their second straight ECAC Division 1 victory.

The BC Eagles were skating without the talents of captain Joe Mullen, goalie Paul Skidmore and defenseman Joe Augustine, all on six-game probation. Still, they led UVM 1-0 at the end of an exciting first period.

The Cats took the ice to a thundrous ovation and got the first break in the game with a power play opportunity four minutes into the period. They set up well but couldn't score. The action was fast and wild with both teams unable to cash in on fine chances.



The lone score of the period was a power-play goal with Gary Prior of Vermont in the penalty box. Eagles star, Billy Army, won the face-off and Mike Ewanouski put the loose puck past Turcotte at 9:04. UVM had another excellent opportunity at the end of the period with a BC skater doing time in the penalty box. The Cats showed increased poise and perhaps passed the puck too often, not taking the quick shot. Eagles goalie Doug Ellis made some key saves to protect the slim margin.

Scott Fairbairn evened the score for the Cats one minute into the second period. Fairbairn took a pass from Jim Duffy and beat Ellis on the right side. Less than three minutes later, Louis Cote and Craig Homola combined to put the Cats ahead 2-1.

The lead didn't last long as the Vermont defense got signals crossed and Brian Burns tied the game. After successfully licking a penalty, the Cats fell behind 3-2 on an Eagle goal by Bobby Hehir. BC had the momentum, and the Cats squandered a power-play opportunity on poor passing. Mark Switaj's goal at 15:24 gave BC a two-goal lead over a tired UVM team at the end of two periods.

The Cats got a big lift when Craig Homola scored at 2:50 of the final period. Vermont's power play produced a scramble in front of the Eagle goal and Homola finally rammed the puck into the net for his second goal of the night and his eighth of the season. The Cats skated with renewed hustle and it paid off with a goal by Tom Cullity at 11:25. Duffy fed Cullity from behind the Eagle goal, who knocked it in to tie the game at 4-4.

Vermont almost fell behind twice late in the third period on sloppy play but Turcotte came up with big saves each time. Then, at 16:34, Garry Herbert rapped home the deciding goal. Chris Zimmerman had turned past his man and whipped the puck to Herbert streaking down the middle. Herbert rifled a shot into the open corner to give UVM the lead. BC pulled their goalie for the last minute and mounted a six-man attack. Turcotte and his crew blocked the strong offensive with excellent hustle. A final face-off was won by Cullity, and the Cats escaped with a 5-4 victory in the first of two unprecedented back to back wins for the Cats, which saw Vermont trip Cornell in overtime and boost their Division 1 record to 3-0.

Sports Calendar

| SPORT | DATE | OPPONENT | PLACE – TIME |
|---|---|---|---|
| Hockey – M | 11 (Mon.) | RPI | Gutterson Field House – 7:30 p.m. |
| Basketball – M | 12 (Tues.) | at Boston College | Chestnut Hill, MA – 7:30 p.m. |
| Hockey – M | 14 (Thur.) | HARVARD | Gutterson Field House – 7:30 p.m. |
| Indoor Track – M&W | 15-16(F-Sat) | CHRISTMAS INVITATION | Gutterson Field House – 9 a.m. |
| Basketball – M | 16 (Sat.) | OREGON | Patrick Gym – 7:30 p.m. |
| Basketball – M | 28-29(Th-Fr) | VERMONT CLASSIC | Patrick Gym – 7 p.m. |
| | 28 (Thur) | Texas A&M vs. Air Force | Patrick Gym – 7 p.m. |
| | | Vermont vs. Cornell | Patrick Gym – 9 p.m. |
| | 29 (Fri) | Consolation | Patrick Gym – 7 p.m. |
| | | Championship | Patrick Gym – 9 p.m. |
| Hockey – M | 28-30 (Th-Sa) | at Brown Holiday Tourney | Providence, RI – 5 p.m. |
| | 28 (Thur) | Vermont vs. Bowling Green | Providence, RI – 5 p.m. |
| | | Brown vs. McGill | Providence, RI – 8 p.m. |
| | 29 (Fri) | Bowling Green vs. McGill | Providence, RI – 5 p.m. |
| | | Vermont vs. Brown | Providence, RI – 8 p.m. |
| | 30 (Sat) | Vermont vs. McGill | Providence, RI – 5 p.m. |
| | | Brown vs. Bowling Green | Providence, RI – 8 p.m. |
| Basketball – M | Jan 3(Wed.) | NIAGARA | Patrick Gym – 7:30 p.m. |
| Basketball – M | 6 (Sat.) | ST. JOSEPH'S | Gym – 3 p.m. |
| Hockey – M | | NORTHEASTERN | Gutterson Field House – 7:30 p.m. |
| Hockey – M | 9 (Tues) | at Dartmouth | Hanover, NH – 7:30 p.m. |
| Basketball – M | 10 (Wed.) | DELAWARE | Patrick Gym – 7:30 p.m. |
| Hockey – M | 12 (Fri) | YALE | Gutterson Field House – 7:30 p.m. |
| Basketball – M | 13 (Sat.) | at Fordham | Bronx, NY – 8 p.m. |
| Indoor Track – M&W | | at Dartmouth Relays | Hanover, NH – 9 a.m. |
| Basketball – M | 15 (Mon.) | at Boston University | Boston, MA – 7:30 p.m. |
| Hockey – W | 19-20(Fr-Sat) | UNH Tournament (Providence & B.C.) | |
| Hockey – W | 24 (Wed) | Middlebury | Gutterson Field House – 4:30 p.m. |
| Hockey – W | 27 (Sat.) | Boston University | Boston, MA – 5:30 p.m. |

Indoor Track:

Vermont Women Expect Top Five Finish in New England

By Tony Bates

"It looks like UVM will be among the top five indoor field and track teams in New England again this year. Unlike the men's team, the UVM women possess outstanding depth, as well as prominent individuals," remarked Coach Ed Kusiak, head track coach of both the men's and women's track teams at UVM.

Although the women's track team had to chalk one up to experience in the recent Can-Am Track Meet at Plattsburgh State, their 55-31 loss to the Canadians was not indicative of things to come. UVM received no help from Plattsburgh's team in their effort against a tough Montreal Vikings Club.

"This was a good opportunity to see where we stand," reflected Kusiak, "and as far as I'm concerned, we're sitting pretty." That has to be the understatement of the month.

The core of the Vermont women's team consists of the distance crew. Led by a one, two, three sweep of both the 1500 and 3000 meter events, Vermont made their presence known. Judi St. Hilaire, Amy Bouchard, and Anne Shiavone lithely legged their way to the top three spots in the endurance events. Bouchard, the defending New England Two-Mile Champion, didn't allow much daylight between her and the winner, St. Hilaire, as only six and 11 seconds separated them in the 1500 and 3000 meter dashes respectively. Smooth striding Shiavone, a Vermont High School standout and marathoner, is making a successful transition to the indoor circuit, taking third in both events.

The track is not the only place where Vermont will be heard from this season. Kaja Thornton and Barb Luneau will also provide a one–two punch in the shot put. Their heaves of 38' 5½" and 38' 1" respectively placed second and third at the Plattsburgh Can-Am Meet.

Tracksters race over the hurdles

Janet Terp, defending Eastern Pentathlon Champion, competently demonstrated a couple of her many talents by winning the long jump with a 17'11" leap, and preventing a Canadian sweep of the high jump with a 5'2" flight, good for a second place finish.

The female Cats should also prove strong in the 440 meter run this season. Sue Dacey, Grace Emmert, Deb O'Connor, and Christie Watson fill out a formidable foursome. Watson placed third in the New England Championship Race last year.

Freshman Sue Kelly and sophomore Lori Dane, along with Terp, are hungry for points in the hurdles event. Also, Winsome Jackson, who placed third in the Can-Ams with a 17'2¾" long jump, looks to complete a solid trio of long jumpers which includes Dane and Terp.

Vermont's men's and women's track and field teams will next see action in the Christmas Invitational, Friday and Saturday, December 15 and 16 at 9 a.m. in the Gutterson Field House.

Judi St. Hilaire and Amy Bouchard pause after a race

Tracksters Stop Canadiens

By Tony Bates

Aided by some strong competitors from Plattsburgh State University, the UVM men's track team turned away the Canadian National team 63-41 at the First Annual Can-Am track and Field meet at Plattsburgh last Friday.

Although many Vermont competitors turned in good performances, Vermont Coach Ed Kusiak was only guardedly optimistic about his team's chances for the rest of the season: "The situation with the men's team is similar to the women's squad in that exceptional individuals abound." Unfortunately, they seem to be spread thinly over the team. "We lack depth," Kusiak lamented. Indeed, those all-important third and fourth place finishers are what make the difference between winhing and losing in the big meets. However, there is light at the end of the tunnel: "The key to winning those dual and tri-meets this season will be found in the distance runners," Kusiak predicted. "They have to break through in the 880, mile, and two mile." That contention carries much weight when one considers that those events alone are worth 27 points in a dual meet. Kusiak noted that "we'll need to gather some of those points to be successful."

One distance "gatherer" reaped a few points at the Can-Am meet. Vermont's Ron Stankevich sped to a 2:02.3 fourth place finish in the 800. Only a freshman, he is one to be watched as the season progresses. Other half-milers include Jim Hamilton, Terry Gilmore, and Randy Sightler, who set a personal record in the same race while finishing fifth.

Moving up to the longer events, this year's milers and two-milers will come from among Mike Landman, John Novak, Tony Bates, Mike Myers, Kevin Martell, and Dave Elliot. The latter two impressed Kusiak at the Can-Am meet in the 3000 meter run. "They both moved well," said Kusiak.

In the field events, Eric Benson and Dean Flanders are Kusiak's favorites. According to Kusiak, "Eric is the best we've ever had." Benson lived up to the compliment as he won the pole vault with a leap of 13 feet. Flanders, in his first year of collegiate competition, finished second at 12 feet. This year features a trio of long jumpers with Dick Emberly, Joe McClallen, and Charlie Claudio, who completed a near-sweep of

continued on page 77

X—MAS SPECIALS

SWEATERS

&

STUFT ANIMALS

"We have all those warm and cozy clothes you'll need this christmas"

the Ski shop INC.

388 Shelburne Rd., S. Burlington

Open 9-6 — Mon.-Fri.
Open 9-5 — Sat.

862-5488

Sun. 1-5 !

Artists Materials

They're All Here.

Oil Sets
Easels
Brushes Paints and More.
Gifts for the Gifted.

Boutilier's

Art Center
112 Church St.

Sports Profile:

Prior & Cullity-A Smooth Transition

Gary Prior--- Former Penn Power Molding Catamount Hockey's Success

Gary Prior

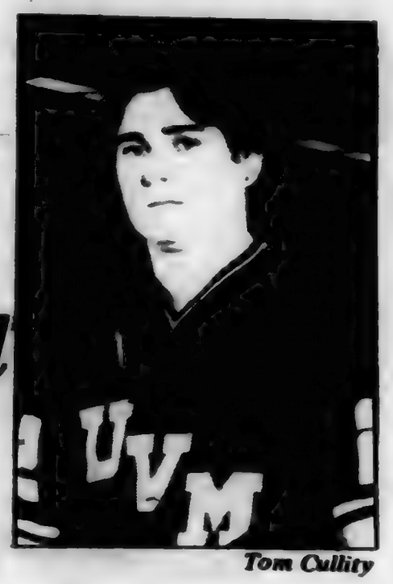
By Nick Witte

Imagine that you are a successful varsity hockey player for a major hockey power. But the university suddenly discontinues its hockey program and you are left stranded, looking for another school to transfer to. Will you be happy somewhere else, with a new team? For Gary Prior, UVM's transfer sensation, this horror story has a happy ending.

Citing financial reasons, the University of Pennsylvania, where Prior was attending school, scrapped its hockey program last year. Prior, along with teammate Tom Cullity, chose to come to Vermont. Because of the nature of his transfer, Prior was immediately eligible for intercolliegiate play.

Originally from Dorval, Quebec, Prior majored in business administration last year at Penn, while racking up 13 goals and 32 points, second only to Cullity. This year, Prior is already proving himself to be the fast, aggressive wing that everyone hoped he would be. With two years of Division I play behind him, Prior is a seasoned veteran of ECAC hockey. Two years ago, he helped Penn beat UVM with a goal in a game in Burlington. But now Prior is a Catamount and, ironically, he had wanted to come to Vermont before Penn.

"I've always wanted to come to Vermont to play hockey. When I was back in Dorval I knew UVM was a good place and I had my hopes up. But no one from Vermont ever came to Dorval to see us play. With no recruitment, I had to give up on the idea. So I ended up at Penn," remarked Prior. "And then after two years there, I decided that I wanted to be in Burlington. So far, so good."



Prior came to Vermont knowing only Cullity and teammate Dave Hungerford. "Sure, that part of it is a little rough. I'd finally found some good friends and made a name for myself at Penn and then I had to pack up. But there's a great bunch of guys here, so it's not bad at all."

Prior holds a high opinion of his teammates in another regard as well. Asked if the adjustment to hockey program here was difficult, Gary had nothing but praise for his fellow players. "I thought about the transition a lot over the summer, how it would be in a new place. I'm a known quantity instead of a freshman who can mold to the present system. And I was worried about it, wondering if I might have to take someone's job away or if I couldn't adapt to the system. But the guys on the team have really helped me a lot, they're just great."

The saga of Prior and Cullity does have a happy ending, with both of the linesmen making major contributions that, if Vermont's Division I opening sweep is indicative of future performances, will lead the Cats to their best season ever.

Cullity takes a shot against Ohio State with Prior on wing. Photo by Ron McNeil

Tom Cullity--- Family Man, and Hockey Star

Tom Cullity

By Rich Casner

Quiet and soft-spoken, Tom Cullity, the UVM hockey team's high-scoring center, never envisioned himself playing for the Cats. Yet last spring, the University of Pennsylvania announced their difficult decision to drop their hockey program and Penn's leading scorer was out of a job. "Yes, it was sad that day they announced it. We were going to have a good team too, but nobody will know now."

Vermont Coach Jim Cross was the first to call last spring and told Cullity that there was a place for him on the team. But more importantly, Cross included Tom's wife, Kathy. The two will be married one year this January and are parents of a daughter, Kerri. Vermont is quite a change from the living situation at Penn. "It (Vermont) is unlike Penn in that you must get in your car and drive a long distance. Whereas at Penn you just step out your door and walk across the street to get to class."

Cullity and his wife are starting to feel the financial bind of being married while in college. Between classes and hockey, Tom finds little time to support the rest of his family. Cullity realizes how hard it is to mix the three separate facets of his life: hockey, school, and a family, yet he is not willing to give up any one of them.

At Penn, Cullity majored in economics and was their leading scorer last year with 18 goals and 21 assists. "I loved the school, it's one of the finest in the East, yet there was no hockey atmosphere, which was one of the reasons for dropping the program." Cullity hesitated to leave Penn, but he wasn't willing to sacrifice his hockey career the way Penn did. Cullity has no regrets about his choice to come to Vermont, yet he points out that, "I really miss the guys at Penn and it's hard getting used to it. But there are a great bunch of guys on the team here and I'm happy with what I did." The fans? "Well, what can I say. They're excellent."

With the season only seven games old, Cullity already has four goals and three assists and is well on his way toward a repeat of last season. When asked of his plans for the future Cullity remarked: "I just hope to finish out here as a winner and do what's best for my family. If the opportunity arises to play pro, I might give it a shot, but I don't want to spend a lot of years in the minors – that's hard on the family."

Cullity, with four goals and three assists for Vermont, is on his way to a repeat of last season's excellence as UPenn's highest scorer.

Did you know we can find a breast cancer as small as the head of a pin?

Such a tiny cancer can almost always be cured. A cancer of this size can best be found by mammography – a technique of low-dose breast x-rays. Using far less radiation than ever before, mammography can detect a cancer long before a lump can be felt. While the cancer is still highly curable.

Not every woman needs mammography. But for those women over 50 or with special reasons to be concerned, like those with symptoms or a strong family history of breast cancer, mammography can find a tiny cancer before it has spread. Ask your doctor about mammography.

American Cancer Society

When you work up an appetite . . . Come to Finast!

Finast has all your favorite snacks ready . . . we knew you would be hungry!

- Potato Chips
- Snack Crackers
- Fresh Fruits
- Your favorite cold beverages

and just about everything you can think of!

Finast SUPERMARKETS

825 WILLISTON ST. BURLINGTON, VERMONT

Visit

Mr. Deli

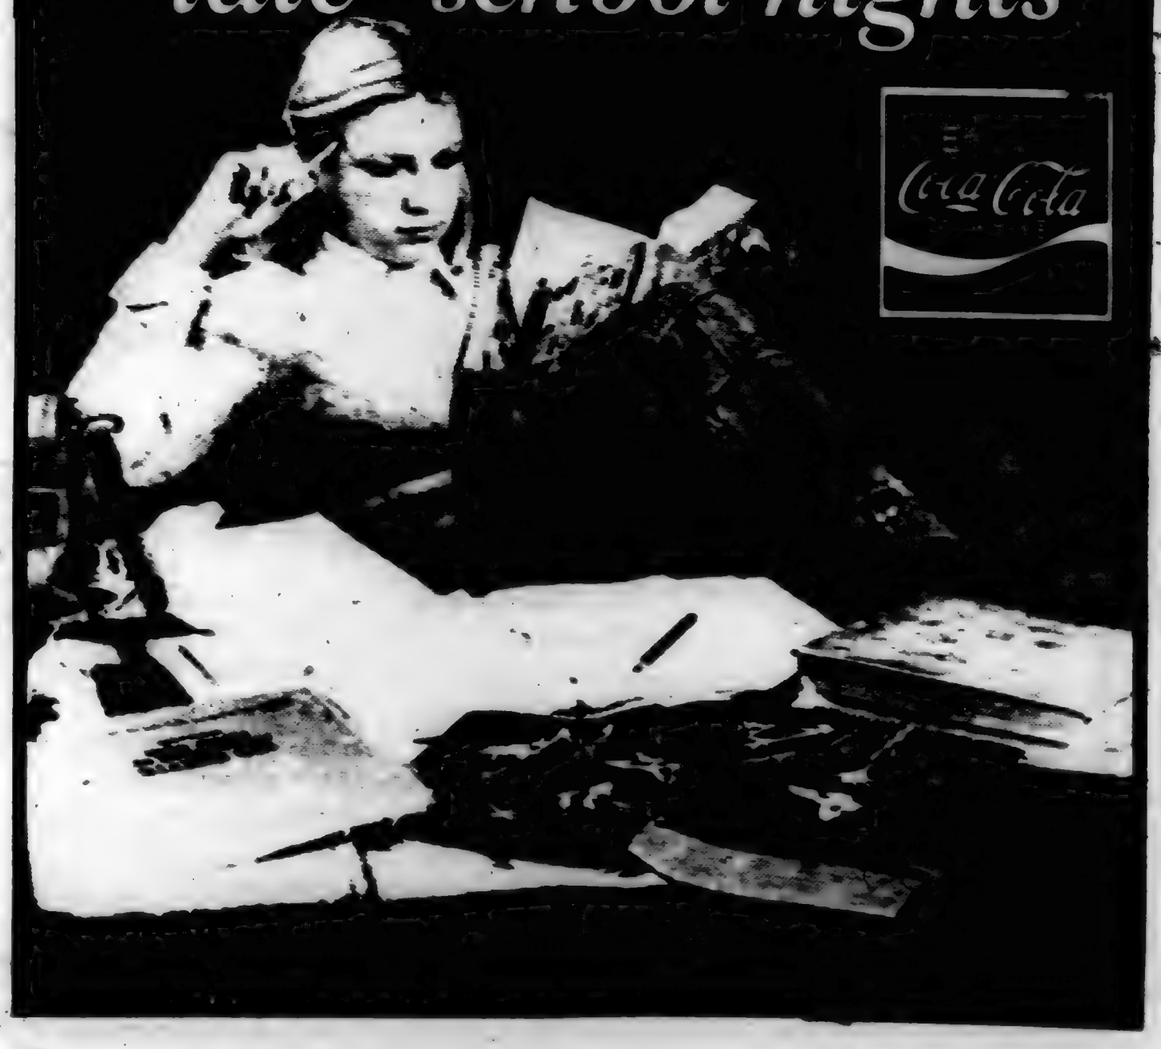
You'll find a world of Eating Pleasure at our own Mr. Deli Counter. You'll find Fresh Cold Cuts, Domestic and Imported Cheeses, Fresh Made Salads and Baked Goods. Our Mr. Deli experts are Ready to Serve you. Ask about our Delicious Party Platters available for your next get-together.

foto expres

COLOR PRINTING AND PROCESSING

With The Focus On Same Day Professional



Hours:
8:30-5:30 Mon.- Fri.
9:00-4:00 Sat.
862-3444

IN BY 10— OUT BY 4!!

127 St. Paul ST

Coke adds life to...

"late" school nights

Coca-Cola

Sports Scene

The Dollar Versus Professional Athletics

By Rob Smith

"I need a strong hit, from the money machine, Sitting on top, on top of the world,"

James Taylor

Money. In professional sports, money is as much of a conversation piece as next year's pro football draft. The fans think the players are overpaid, while the players say they're just getting what the market will bear. In the middle of this argument are the owners of sports franchises, who blame inflated player salaries for sky-high ticket prices and for causing many superstars to not give one hundred percent of themselves. Yet the owners keep on offering the players more.

As of this week, baseball's Pete Rose (who at 37 years of age is past his prime) has had offers from seven teams in excess of $2 million for a three-year contract. One owner from the Pittsburgh Pirates offered Rose $20 million worth of thoroughbred race horses along with a salary. This same owner has reportedly offered another superstar, Dave Parker, a ten-year contract for a staggering $7 million.

As with everything else, the power of the almighty dollar has become the most influential factor in the future of professional sports. Gone are the days when athletes played baseball or basketball for the love of the game. As Julius Erving of the Philadelphia 76ers puts it, "The foundation of professional sports is no longer loyalty and trust. It is now business and adjustment." It is this business attitude that many feel is ruining pro sports.

How did sports business blossom into such a booming enterprise? Basically, the success of professional sports is based on three factors: (1) a sports hungry America, (2) the monopolistic nature of pro sports and (3) the ability of professional franchises to avoid paying income taxes.

Calling itself "too much of a sport to be a business and too much of a business to be a sport," the professional world of sports has become its own self-regulating monopoly. Owners agree on such things as schedules, rules, and types of promotion as a collective cartel. In any other industry this collusion and price-fixing would be illegal. But thanks to a 1922 blunder by the U.S. Supreme Court, pro baseball was exempted from antitrust laws because of the court's opinion that baseball was a "giving of local exhibitions and not interstate commerce." As a consequence of this decision, baseball and all other professional sports teams have been able to avoid government regulation. Thus, team owners working in collusion control the distribution of franchises, broadcast rights, ticket prices, the number of games, quality of participants, and a host of factors which insulate the monopoly.

Because of this monopoly, the fans who support the pro teams in America are left with little choice when it comes to what they must pay to see the teams they support. Owners who lure big money players to improve their gate receipts just pass on the additional expense of a multi-million dollar salary to the fans, knowing that the demand for a team that wins consistently is such that ticket prices can be exorbitant. The stars come to town, the insatiable appetite of sports fans becomes whetted, and the owners raise ticket prices knowing that the inelasticity present in the sports business demand will prevail, and their profits will swell. But are all these high salaries and subsequent ticket increases necessary? It is this question which really brings out the stinging rhetoric from both players and fans alike.

(continued on page 75)

Athletics and Money

Continued from page 74

Concerning the necessity of million dollar salaries, most players are not about to say they don't deserve the money, though they will admit that the high salaries often detract from their game. Derek Sanderson, the former flamboyant center ice-man for the Boston Bruins, once stated that after he made his million he "...rolled over and went to sleep." Other players, most notably basketball star Rick Barry who recently signed a multi-million dollar contract with the Houston Rockets, have pointed out that the quality of sports has diminished with the advent of high salaries. This feeling is also expressed by former basketball player and executive Wayne Embry: "Many players are now more concerned about protecting their earning power than performing. So the quality of basketball is not what it used to be. The fans pay an inflated price for a tarnished product – all because of greed."

Even though high salaries are probably here to stay in pro sports, the fact is that most teams can pay these salaries without raising ticket prices. The monopolistic structure guaranteeing each team a captive market when added to the income from T.V. revenues and other means of promotion, are more than enough to pay today's superstars. Commenting on this, Reggie Jackson stated in a recent Sports Illustrated article on money in sports that "most owners also own $100 million corporations, and the salaries are no money at all to them. Radio and T.V. are paying the tab – the money the fans put in is all gravy."

Thus, the owners' argument that higher salaries necessitate higher ticket prices falls apart when one realizes that it is the profit motive alone which has caused ticket prices to more than double in the last 30 years in a sport such as baseball, where attendance has increased 200%, TV revenues are booming and salaries as a percentage of revenues have gone down. The lack of competitive pressure to keep prices down when combined with the greed of pro sport entrepreneurs and an ever-increasing demand, has meant that ticket prices are now affordable to only the upper middle class or those willing to remortgage their house.

"The foundation of professional sports is no longer loyalty and trust. It is now business and adjustment."

—Julius Erving

Another factor which reinforces this idea that money – and lots of it – can be made in pro sports without raising ticket prices is evidenced by a unique accounting feature which all teams employ to ensire profitability. All pro teams today are allowed to designate the salaries they pay to their players as a large portion of the asset base of the franchise. Under this set-up, the owners can actually depreciate the players' salaries (which are the owners' expenses) in three to five years, and thus show a book loss when in reality they are making profits from gate sales. Thus, by showing a book loss, owners can avoid paying virtually any income taxes. This practice, though it may seem illegal, has been routinely practiced by all professional teams over the past 20 years without question.

Thus, even though big salaries and even bigger stadiums appear to be the main cause of increased ticket prices, one can see that in actuality it is the owners' greed which threatens the ability of many lower and middle class fans to attend pro sport events.

Unquestionably, the inflated salaries, which the owners support, add to the money mania picture painted by sports businessmen today; but in the end, it is the competitive monopoly and owners who are intent on squeezing every last drop of revenue out of a seemingly inelastic demand for sports that is hurting professional athletics.

It is upsetting to one's sense of value when you learn that the average NBA basketball salary is $143,000 annually or that O.J. Simpson is earning $733,358 yearly, but it is even more disturbing to think that the average football tickets in 77 and 78 cost between $6.76 and $7.87. It can only be hoped that the owners of professional sports franchises across the country will realize that while profits are obviously needed to stay in existence, they are still in business to entertain the public, and it was the fans that supported them through both the good years and the bad.

TWIN OAKS

Tennis and Swim Center wishes you
MANY HAPPY RETURNS!

★Special Holiday Rates★
Christmas Day 2 PM. midnight $6/per hour
New Years Day 6AM midnight $6/per hour
95 Kennedy Drive South Burlington Vermont
Phone 658-0001

Christmas Specials

Cross Country Packages

Starting at $89

Rossignol and Trak Skis
Wax and No Wax
Trak Leather Boots
Nylon or Aluminum 3 Pin Bindings
Bamboo Poles

Alpine Rossignol Challenges
A&T Poles
Solomon Bindings
Installation and Engraving

Total Value $192
For $139

Odd Steen Ski Shop

Open Mon.-Fri. 9-9; Sat. 9-5; Sunday 12-4 862-5552
Downstairs in The Ski Shop, 388 Shelburne Rd., Burlington

STUDENT LEGAL SERVICE
-Student Seminars-

LANDLORD & TENNANT RELATIONS & CONSUMER PROTECTION

WHEN: Wednesday – December 13th

WHERE: North Lounge – Billings Center

TIME: 6:30–8:15 Landlord-Tenant Relations
8:15–10:15 Consumer Protection

WHY: To provide Legal Information
To Answer Questions

FORMAT:

LANDLORD–TENANT RELATIONS
a) Leases
b) Eviction
c) Deposits
d) Housing Codes
e) Rent Witholding

CONSUMER PROTECTION
a) False Advertising
b) Guarantees
c) Mail Orders
d) Sources of Repayment

IF YOU HAVE ANY QUESTIONS, PLEASE CALL THE STUDENT LEGAL SERVICE: 656-4379.

National Sports Briefs

Red Sox Can Space Program

The Boston Red Sox traded pitcher Bill Lee to the Montreal Expos last week for utility infielder Stan Papi. The Red Sox management feels Lee's usefulness is over and that Papi could be the cure to the problem of Rick Burleson's backup at third base.

"I'll always be a Red Sox," said Lee. "It's just that now I'm in a different league. They traded me to a National League club so they wouldn't have to take beatings like they did from (Rick) Wise, (Ferguson) Jenkins, and now (Luis) Tiant.

Rose signs with Phillies

Pete Rose ended a long and controversial period of team-choosing as he finally picked the Philadelphia Phillies who offered him $800,000 a year for three years. People accused Rose of everything from being greedy to just making a mess of the whole situation.

"I didn't mean for this to be a circus. But I'd given my word that I'd take the whole tour of Japan with the Reds, so I had to cram a month's work into a week."

Other teams offered Rose more money and benefits than the Phillies, but Rose chose Philadelphia for the team and the money, rather than just the money. "I really got to thinking about where I'd be happiest playing. I've got enough money now, enough so that if I stacked it up, a show dog couldn't jump over it. I worked a long time to be at the top of my profession. It took a lot of work to be number one, and I want to be paid like it." Rose's salary ranks the highest of any professional baseball player in the world.

Meadowlands to Host Expansion Team

The chances are becoming increasingly favorable that the Meadowlands in East Rutherford, N.J. will be the home of an expansion NHL team in 1980. A three-quarters vote of team owners is needed for the plans for the expansion team to pass. "It's very viable, very likely to happen," commented Paul Mooney, president of the Boston Bruins.

Leg Injury Sidelines Pats' Nelson

The New England Patriots' inside linebacker and Defensive Captain Steve Nelson injured his right leg against Dallas last Monday and will be sidelined for at least the next two games against Buffalo and Miami. It is unknown whether he will be ready for action again by playoff time. His leg has been placed in a cast for eight or nine days with internal bleeding, fluid buildup, and possibly some torn knee ligaments.

The patriots will be weak at the linebacker spot, with Steve Zabel, who is sidelined for a knee injury. Ray Costict, a second year Patriot, will replace Nelson.

Sabres Dump GM and Coach

The Buffalo Sabres fired general manager Punch Imlach and coach Marcel Pronovost Monday in a surprise move taken by the team's president and chairman of the board Seymour H. Knox III. Knox did not name any replacements but said he would do so soon.

"I'm still stunned. I can't believe it," said wing Richard Mortain. "We came in this morning and they just announced he (Imlach) was gone. At first we thought he resigned, then we learned he was fired."

The firing followed a weekend of two straight losses to the Montreal Canadiens.

"I was shocked," said center Don Luce. "Pronovost was a good coach."

Rams Clinch NFC West

The Los Angeles Rams clinched the western division of the National Football Conference as Pat Thomas intercepted a N.Y. Giant pass and returned it for a touchdown in a 20-17 Ram victory over the Giants. Thomas broke the 10-10 tie in the fourth quarter, giving the Rams a record-tying sixth straight NFC western title. Frank Corral added a 35-yard field goal for the winning margin.

Seahawks Clobber Browns

The Seattle Seahawks crushed the Cleveland Browns 47-24 Sunday as fullback David Sims connected for three touchdowns. The Seahawks, tallying their third game in a row in the win column, are keeping their playoff hopes alive with a record of 8-6, behind Oakland and Denver at 8-5.

Bill Gregory recovered two fumbles by Cleveland's Brian Sipe which later turned into touchdowns.

Runningmen

Continued from page 71

the Can-Am event with first, second and fourth place finishes. Co-Captain Emberly led all comers with a jump of 22'3". Claudio, a decathlete, also placed third in the high jump at 6'2". Kusiak has high hopes for this athlete, who performs such dubious double events as the shot put and the high jump. "He'll be our big point-getter in those two events." Bobby Frank garnered second, behind Emberly in the 50 meter hurdles, an event in which he hopes to have his best year.

UVM in the longjump

Senior Co-Captains Gagnon and Emberly constitute the core of the quarter-mile runners. Gagnon, whose specialty is the 600-yard run, took fourth at Plattsburgh in 52.9 for 400 meters.

When Kusiak and his assistant coach Peter Gustafsen speak of their "outstanding individuals" of the men's team, they mean the big three of McClallen, Claudio, and Emberly: "Joe McClallen was a New England 220 finalist last year, an accomplishment which speaks for itself. He can also jump well and should help us in the relays." Kusiak saves most of his praise for last though: "Emberly is our single best all-around performer. He can realistically place in four events in this year's Yankee Conference Meet." Emberly competes in the long and triple jumps, hurdles, 440, and relay events.

Although the men's team must climb a hill or two to reach the lofty status that the women's track and field team has attained, it looks to be a promising year.

Friday and Saturday, December 15th and 16th, UVM is hosting the Christmas Invitational Track Meet. This prestigious event traditionally has been the first big meet of the New England indoor season. It will feature Olympic athletes and hopefuls from the U.S. and Canada, and UVM's top performers as well.

Vermont Women Pucksters Stomp on Colgate 9-0

By Sarah Dougherty

The UVM women's Ice Hockey Club extended their undefeated streak to four games this week with a 4-2 win over Clarkson and an easy 9-0 romp over Colgate.

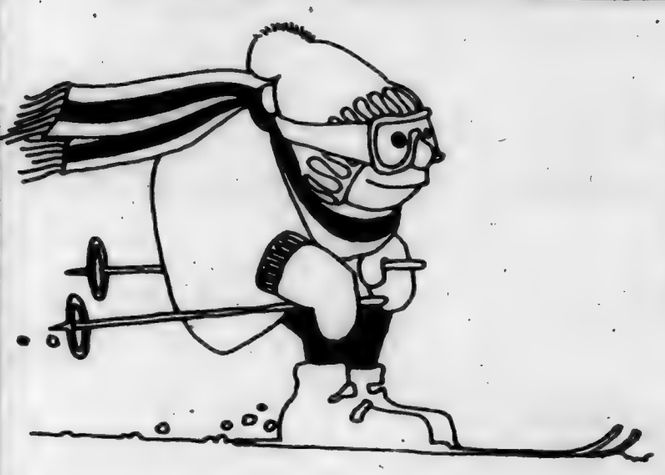
Having just returned from the Thanksgiving break, UVM started off slowly against Clarkson. Sloppy forechecking leading to quick breakouts and breakaways allowed Clarkson to score the opening goal and dominate the first period. But fine goal-tending by UVM's Ann Bartlett kept UVM in contention.

Clarkson's Mary Beth Williams extended her team's lead to two goals at 11:31 of the second period. The Cats bounced back with their first goal of the game on a point shot by defenseman Amy Tutwiler to make it 2-1.

This last goal seemed to spark the UVM squad and they came out hustling for the final 20 minutes. Both teams applied pressure but UVM's first line of Jeanne Gaudreau, Carmen Gaudreau and Sarah Dougherty netted three goals to lead UVM to a hard-fought 4-2 win.

In a Sunday game against Colgate, UVM racked up nine goals and forty-one shots on goal while skating to an easy 9-0 victory.

Vermont's defense played a solid game at both ends of the ice. Defensemen Casey Nolan and Joy Veronneau each scored while Margot Huber added three assists. Clean breakouts and passing kept Colgate tied up in their own zone. Center Jeanne Gaudreau played an outstanding game scoring three goals and assisting on another.



The UVM women's Ice Hockey Club will be facing two tough teams this coming week when they travel to Montreal on Tuesday, December 3rd to meet Concordia, and then host the University of New Hampshire on Saturday.

WE WANT YOUR OLD SKIS AND BOOTS

We will give you top trade in dollar towards new equipment!

Both Alpine Shops Open 9-9

Skis
$21 to $278

Ski Boots
$37 to $235

Ski Poles
$5 to $42

Ski Parkas
$35 to $175

Ski Sweaters
$20 to $86

Turtlenecks
$11 to $16

DOWNHILL SKI PACKAGES
$149.95
Includes skis, bindings, poles, mounting, engraving

CROSS COUNTRY SKI PACKAGES
$99.95
Includes skis, boots, bindings, poles, mounting

FREE Gift Wrapping at Both Alpine Shops

ALPINE SHOP

Williston Road So. Burlington

OPEN DAILY 9 A.M. — 9 P.M.

Corner of So. Winooski and Cherry Downtown Burlington

Mon. Sat 8:30-5
Tues.-Fri. 8:30-7

HAIRCRAFTERS

Stop in and compare
HAIRCRAFTERS with the most expensive shops in town.
We think you'll agree the only difference is the price.

1340 Williston Rd. So. Burlington, Vt. Phone 863-4871

UVM Women Gymnasts Place Third at Cornell

After defeating Plymouth on Wednesday by a score of 113.85 to 84.85, the UVM women gymnasts pulled into a third place finish in the Cornell Invitational on Saturday with a score of 113.50.

Cornell edged Cortland with a score of 124.4 to 122.05. Trailing behind the Catamount women were five other teams with our closest competitor being Ithaca, scoring 110.45, followed by Canisus, Brockport, Army, and New Paltz.

In the big sweep on Wednesday, Vermont took the top two places in vaulting with Anne Berry first with 7.9 and Kris Costello second with 7.8. These same two finished a commendable second and third respectively in vaulting in the Cornell Invitational with Anne Berry 8.45 and Kris Costello 8.25.

In Balance Beam, Lisa Duff took top honors on Wednesday with a score of 7.2, and tied for fifth on Saturday with 7.45. At Plymouth also on beam, Nancy Horowitz was second with a score of 6.85 while Kris Costello placed third with 6.25. Costello also tied for fifth with Gorielle Forgays at Cornell with a 7.45. In floor exercise at Plymouth, Costello was first with 7.8, Berry was second with 7.6 and Denis D'Orsi was third with 7.3. In the same event at Plymouth, Anne Berry placed fifth with 7.45. Uneven bars were not up to par at Cornell but we swung to victory at Plymouth as Gabrielle Forgays took first with 7.55, Anne Berry second with 7.3, and Kris Costello third with 7.05.

In the all-around at Plymouth, Anne Berry was first with 29.3, Kris Costello close behind in second with 28.9, and Lisa Duff in third with 24.3. Kris Costello placed fourth all around in the Cornell Invitational in a field of very fine experienced gymnasts.

"Overall, our team performed well in both meets, although some individuals were below par on some events," said Coach Debbie Kosciusko.

"The scoring at Cornell was very inconsistent to say the least, but we are primarily concerned with doing the best we can in the situation we are in as we keep good mental attitudes and high spirits," Kosciusko concluded. "The conditioning we have been doing is paying off, as is the discipline it takes to practice routine after routine in the gym." Kosciusko closed by stating, "We'll be taking things apart and rebuilding some routines with greater difficulty between now and January when we swing into full season."

St. Law Dunks Aquamen

By Hart VanDenburg

The St. Lawrence men's varsity swim team used two stunning performances by Dave Malach to crush the UVM Aquacats 64-49 last Tuesday at Forbush pool.

UVM began the meet by winning the 4 x 100 yard medley relay, but it was one of the few firsts that the Cats could chalk up in their favor. Despite being on top in total points, Vermont only had one other first place finish, and their points were accumulated through many second and third place groupings.

The AquaCats managed to maintain their lead until the end of the first period at which time Vermont Coach Les Leggett seemed pleased with his team's performance. "You'll never see so many close finishes in a long time," he commented, and went on to say the "SLU are always a tough team for us and were holding up well."

As the second period competition resumed, things took on a different perspective and SLU started to tally up the points in their favor. The next two distance events – the 1000 yard freestyle and the 500 yard freestyle – were SLU's two most convincing wins. In both events SLU swimmer Dave Malach finished well ahead of the nearest UVM competition. In fact, in the 1000 he lapped the two best UVM competitors.

By the final event SLU was guaranteed the win, and after the 4 x 100 yards freestyle they secured the victory with a score of 64-49.

Vermont's only two breaks in the meet came in the men's diving competition, which UVM won in both the one meter and three meter events. Vermont now faces Williams on Saturday, January 20th.

Tennis Facilities

Cont. from p. 69

things more social here, so that people can meet others and relax."

UVM women's tennis team co-captain Becky Rich offered a different view on the two tennis clubs: "Twin Oaks caters more to the younger set. The layout of Twin Oaks is better, you can watch everyone play; it's more fun socially and for tournaments. You might feel some ritziness when you first enter, but the people at Twin Oaks make up for your first impressions. Both Twin Oaks and Lakeside are excellent clubs with competitive prices and features, so you have to judge them on atmosphere when trying to make the decision on where to go."

Obviously we have presented you with a conflict. And while we can't suggest one club over another due to the compatability in prices, quality and atmosphere, we do suggest that you do blow the dust off your racquet, go out to each club and play. Both clubs present an excellent opportunity to keep up on your game, get into shape, and use the long, humdrum hours of winter to learn a new sport or just get out and chase your winter blues away.

ARIEL

Billings Center, University of Vermont
Burlington, Vermont 05405

Dear Students,

We, the Ariel staff, are in the process of creating the 1979 Ariel, the UVM yearbook.

We're taking this opportunity to offer you a chance to order the yearbook, scheduled to arrive some time in early May.

With over 200 pages and loads of color, the 1979 book will include all aspects of student life, from studies to activities to parties.

As you well know, a year at UVM is extremely expensive, and probably the only tangible results of that year are a large bill and a report card. Saving that entire year's activities through the purchase of an Ariel is well worth the fifteen dollar publishing cost, but we are able to sell the book for only six dollars through partial funding by the Student Association.

We feel that you will agree with us, therefore we have enclosed an order form for you to reserve a copy of the 1979 Ariel.

Sincerely,

John T. Puma

John Puma
Editor

P.S. We will only be receiving the number of books that we get orders for, and this will be your only opportunity to order a book. Unlike previous years, we will have no extra copies available for sale, and we will not be mailing books.

---

Yes, I would like to order a 1979 Ariel yearbook. Enclosed is $6.00 for each 1979 yearbook to be picked up at Billings Center the first part of May 1979.

NAME:
ADDRESS:

Books should be received in early May, 1979.
Make checks or money orders payable to Ariel, and send to: Ariel
Billings Center, UVM
Burlington, Vt. 05405

or drop form off at Billings main desk.

Deadline to reserve your copies December 12, 1978.

Mountaineering #6.

LORE & LEGEND

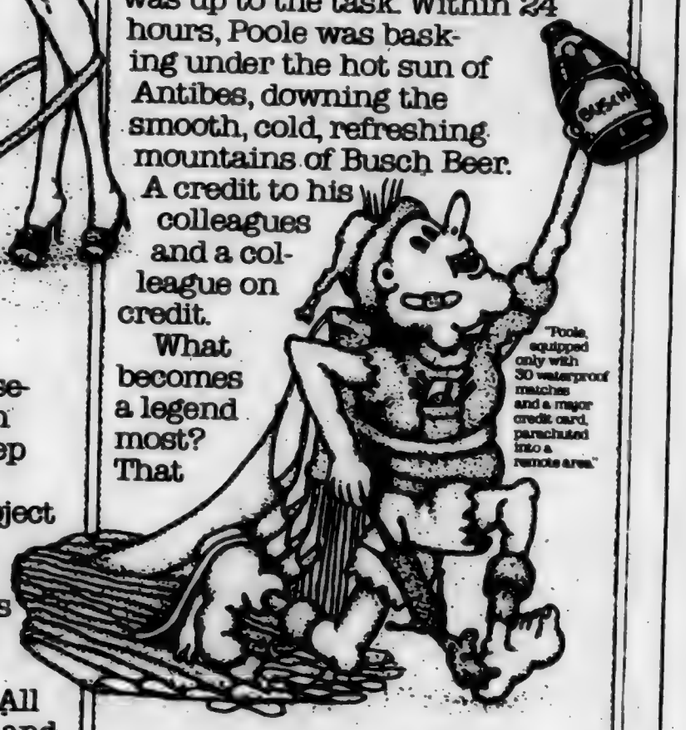
Mountaineering[1] is an oral tradition. Over the years, it has been passed down from teacher to pupil, father to son, package store owner to customer. As a result, a folklore – a mythology, if you will – has formed around the mountains of Busch. You, being a student of mountaineering, no doubt wish to acquaint yourself with these truths and half-truths, these stories both accurate and apocryphal. A wise decision. And, as luck would have it, this ad is just the ticket.

One of mountaineering's earliest legends is Bennington Baxter-Bennington. Adventurer, international bon vivant and inventor of the phrase "your check is in the mail," it was he who perfected the finer points of expedition financing. While other mountaineers resorted to such bizarre extremes as gainful employment, Bennington subsidized assaults on the Busch mountaintop with creative economics. An amalgam of paper schemes, franchised dreams, dummy corporations and corporate dummies kept him in clover for nigh on 20 fiscal years. Asked at the culmination of his career to reflect upon the secret of success, Bennington revealed his first rule: "Keep all your assets liquid."



Another frequent subject of mountaineering lore is the wildlife. Numerous tales abound, but perhaps the most famous story is that of the 1973 Muncie Mathematics Convention. All 75 prodigies, whiz kids and befuddled geniuses initiated an after hours expedition. It began harmlessly enough. But soon, the Busch mountaineers reached the Mobius Strip, a racy nightspot catering to highbrow hijinks. Before the evening was over, several of them were bending the slide rules. Others were smoking big cigars and telling every woman in sight they were agents with an eye for figures, claiming, "I can make you a mathematical model, baby." Talk about your wildlife!

But when looking for sheer courage, W. Dexter Poole must rank in lore among the top mountaineers. Fond of saying "The road to truth goes through bad neighborhoods," Poole enjoyed skirting with danger and approached mountaineering as a test of survival skills. In his most famous challenge, Poole, equipped only with 30 waterproof matches and a major credit card, parachuted into a remote area known as Cleveland. He was up to the task. Within 24 hours, Poole was basking under the hot sun of Antibes, downing the smooth, cold, refreshing mountains of Busch Beer. A credit to his colleagues and a colleague on credit.

What becomes a legend most? That is (one) a matter of subjective judgment and (two) in a constant state of flux. Keep in mind legends are created every day. So when you flex your mountaineering muscles, be true to the tradition. At best, you'll be part of history. At least, you'll be a near-myth.

[1] Mountaineering is the science and art of drinking Busch. The term originates due to the snowy, icy peaks sported by the label outside and perpetuates due to the cold, naturally refreshing taste inside. The above mountaineers and these scenes of their exploits are legendary, any similarity to actual people, living or dead is purely coincidental.

Don't just reach for a beer. BUSCH® Head for the mountains.

© Anheuser-Busch, Inc St. Louis, Mo

RANDOM NOTES

Dancing Free

Dancing Free, a chance to dance however you like to all different kinds of music, will be held Saturday, December 16th from 8 until 11 p.m. at Mountain Greenery, 77 College St., Burlington. Music is on tape. You are welcome to bring your own favorite records also. Come alone or with friends – we ask $1.50 donation to cover hall costs.

Links Offers...

Links brings the services of the Advising Referral Center, Center for Service Learning, Continuing Education, Counseling and Testing, Living/Learning Center, and Project S.T.A.Y. to students during the evening hours. The office is located in the Advising Referral Center, 337 Waterman, or call 656-4174. Office hours are Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursdays from 5:00 – 9:00 p.m. Stop by to talk or ask a question.

Comm. Colloquium

The Communication Department will hold a Colloquium presentation on Wednesday, December 15, in Room 216 Commons, Living/Learning.

Professor Lawrence Suid of the Communication Department and author of Guts and Glory, will present: Hollywood and the Pentagon: A Study in Mutual Exploitation, his personal experiences with film clips of popular war movies.

Refreshments will be served.

Mortar Board?

According to the University of Vermont catalogue, "Mortar Board is a national honorary society for senior women and men. Although membership in Mortar Board comes as a high honor for a University of Vermont student in recognition of outstanding service, scholarship, and leadership, it is also a challenge for continued sound and honest scholarship and for unselfish service in the best interests of the college campus."

That is a very accurate and concise definition, but doesn't give anyone insight into who or what we are actually serving. Some of the activities we have been involved in this year are co-sponsoring the Senior Class Dance and working with the Alumni House on activities over Oktoberfest weekend. Currently, Mortar Board is working towards raising funds for scholarships which will be given to an eligible sophomore in each school or college.

Besides being known solely as an honor society, Mortar Board is making efforts to gain recognition as an organization that contributes to the development of UVM.

Letters will be sent out to all juniors with a 3.2 cum or above sometime after winter break. But having that cum isn't the only qualification, so if you think you are eligible and would like to talk to someone about getting an application, call Bonnie Hunt, 658-1045, Lisa Wittner, 863-2315, or David Ullman, 864-4865.

All Bio Majors, Enlist!

Malden, MA – The U.S. Air Force Surgeon General announces the Air Force Biomedical Science Corps is now accepting applications for "Direct Appointment" positions in the Bioenvironmental Engineering Career Field. Interested individuals must possess a bachelor's degree or be a senior student in one of the following engineering specialties: Civil, Chemical, Sanitary, Electrical, Mechanical, Industrial Hygiene or Bioenvironmental. For further details contact Frank R. Luchart, USAF, Government Center, 200 Pleasant Street, Suite 415, Malden, MA 02148 or call collect 617-324-1223.

Math/ Soc. / Science

You might be interested in a new, interdisciplinary course that will be offered in the spring semester as Math 281 – Special Topics in Applied Mathematics. Survey of Mathematical Modeling Techniques Used in the Social and Natural Sciences.

You will investigate five mathematical modeling techniques used extensively in the construction and analysis of social, economic, and ecological systems. These are linear programming, input-output analysis, stochastic processes, econometrics, and system dynamics. The methodology and underlying premises of each technique will be discussed and compared. You will study some applications of each method in a variety of disciplines. You will learn to use some simple, pre-written computer models to solve problems and make policy decisions.

This survey course is designed for juniors, seniors, or graduate students interested in the social and natural sciences. No prior experience in computer programming will be necessary. The only prerequisite would be one semester of calculus. The course will be team taught by faculty members from the mathematics, economics, natural resources, and statistics departments.

The course will meet on MWF at 1:10 p.m. For further information please contact Lance Polya in the Mathematics Department, ext. 2940.

Attention-Ski Instructors

All students interested in teaching Alpine Skiing in the UVM Ski Program next semester should meet in Southwick, Room 206, from 5:30 to 6:30 p.m. on Monday, December 11, 1978. The Criterion-Referenced--Instruction method, which will be used in the program, will be explained, and applications will be taken. Students who intend to teach should have one afternoon per week free from noon until 6:00 p.m. Preference in hiring will be given to certified instructors, previous UVM instructors, registered instructors and students who have taken the UVM Instructors' Course.

If there are any questions, please call Miss Lange, Extension 3240 on Monday, December 11.

Self-Hypnosis

In the Spring semester 1979, a six-week course (3 hours per week) in the art and discipline of Self-Hypnosis will be offered. It has been said that "Self-Hypnosis is one of the purest forms of relaxation (meditation)." This subject and its aspects are not easily learned, let alone mastered by just anyone! The pupil must enter with a strong desire to accomplish and an openness to discover. Only having this state of mind/soul will they be able to discover the full dimensions of this discipline.

Tuition for this course will be $80.00. For further information call Andrew Schwartz at 658-4168 after December 8th.

Service Learning Jobs

SLIP, the one-semester Service-Learning Internship Program, has an opportunity for a student to work full-time as a Legislative Intern for VPIRG (Vermont Public Interest Research Group). For more information, contact the Center for Service Learning x2062.

A Breath of Fresh Air

Try an alternative to the classroom! University Year for Action (UYA) positions are opening for those students interested in working full-time, on the job towards academic credit and a monthly stipend. UYA positions are available in: Vermont Dept. of Social Welfare, Visiting Nurses Association, Howard Mental Health–EASE program, Sarah Holbrook Center.

Call or drop by the Center for Service Learning at Mansfield House, 656-2062.

An experience, University Year for Action (UYA)... "It gave me a chance to test out a career idea..." "I could still earn credit but get out of the classroom for a year..." "I am experiencing people on the job – something I couldn't get from a textbook..." To find out more on UYA internships, call or stop by the Center for Service Learning, Mansfield House, x2062.

Vermont Dept. of Social Welfare is providing an exciting chance for a UYA intern to help in design and implementation of management training programs. Information available at the Center for Service Learning, x2062.

VNA Day Care Center, operated by the Visiting Nurse Association, is looking for a UYA intern to assist in identifying special needs of 2 and 3 year old children and develop and implement programs to meet those needs. Information available at the Center for Service Learning, x2062.

Howard Mental Health Services' EASE program, a 24-hour emergency alcohol service, has openings for 3 UYA interns to counsel and deal with emergency needs of clients. For more details, call the Center for Service Learning, x2062.

Get involved in Burlington! Sarah Holbrook Center needs a UYA intern as a recreation director to expand, direct and develop programs for local children and adults. For more information, contact the Center for Service Learning, x2062.

Consumer Protection Division in Montpelier needs a UYA intern to serve as a consumer complaint specialist who will deal directly with consumers, assist in investigations and supervise part-time volunteer complaint specialist. For more information, contact the Center for Service Learning at x2062.

Spectrum, Inc., a Burlington agency that provides support services to adolescents and families in crisis, has an opening for 1 UYA intern as an aftercare worker to be involved with the follow-up programs for youth who leave their residence care. More information available through the Center for Service Learning, x2062.

NEREP

Are you in computer programming and have background in economics, statistics, engineering or energy studies? The NEREP (New England Regional Energy Project) needs you to volunteer to assist in the development of their programs. Possibility open for future full-time employment. Call the Center for Service Learning x2062.

NEREP (New England Regional Energy Project) has a position open in legal researching for a student volunteer who is interested in investigating and preparing research for utility cases and other legal actions. The student will work closely with the NEREP attorney. For more information, call the Center for Service Learning, x2062.

Hypnosis

Grade Improvement Study: Students who have already participated in this study are invited to attend a booster session in the Counseling and Testing Center at one of the following hours:

Monday, Dec. 11th, 1:00–2:00, 2:00–3:00

Tuesday, Dec. 12th, 1:00–2:00, 2:00–3:00, 3:00–4:00, 4:00–5:00

Wednesday, Dec. 13th, 2:00–3:00, 3:00–4:00

Thursday, Dec. 14th, 1:00–2:00

We are offering this additional session in response to students' interest and requests.

UPSTAIRS RECORDS

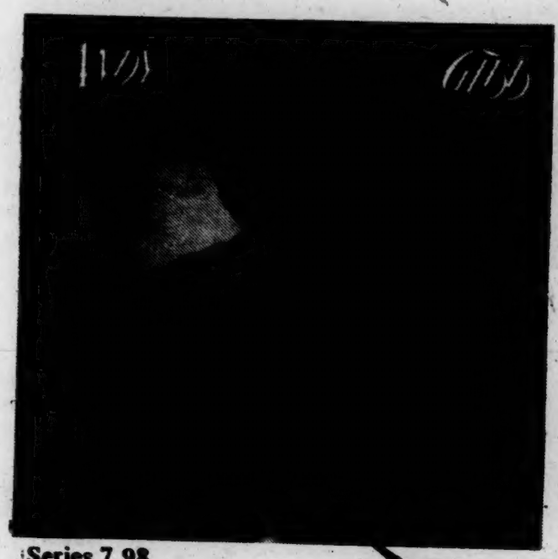
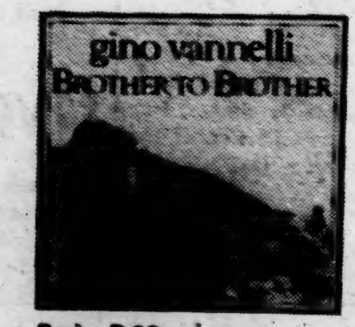
OPPOSITE PENNEY'S DOWNTOWN BURLINGTON



Series 12.98
$8.49 Special LP
$8.69 Tape

Series 12.98
$8.49 Special LP
$8.69 Tape



Series 15.98
$10.39 Special LP
$10.99 Tape

Series 7.98
$4.99 Special LP
$5.19 Tape

Series 12.98
$8.49 Special LP
$8.69 Tape

Series 7.98
$4.99 Special LP
$5.19 Tape

Series 7.98
$4.99 special LP
$5.19 Tape

Series 7.98
$4.99 Special LP
$5.19 Tape

Series 7.98
$4.99 Special LP
$5.19 Tape

CLASSIFIED ADS

(THEY'RE FREE!)

WHEELS

1972 Chevy Luv, good condition, 4 speed transmission, AM-FM radio, $900 or best reasonable offer. Call 862-3051 during day only.

For sale: 1974 Pinto runabout, good condition, great gas mileage, new snow tires, starts well, 70,000 miles. $700 or best offer. Call 862-0964 evenings.

For sale — 1973 Toyota Landcruiser, 48,000 miles, 3 speed, 4-wheel drive, excellent condition, winterized, tune-up, $2500 or best offer. Call 864-4234 anytime. Keep trying.

1975 VW Rabbit. AM-FM, sunroof, rustproofed, excellent condition, 10,000 miles on new engine. Call 863-5829.

CHEESE SPECIALS

Cheese makes a great gift — see us.

plus many more cheeses, cheesecake "seconds;" homemade quiche, yogurt in bulk, wine, crackers and mustards

CHEESE OUTLET
398 PINE ST

WHEELS

1972 Renault 12 wagon automatic front-wheel drive, 7-wheels, studded snows. Best offer. Larry Shelton, x4050 or 899-3855.

For sale — 1974 Pinto runabout. Starts well, 2 new snow tires, great gas mileage. Asking $800. Call evenings 862-0964. Ask for Jane.

1973 VW 412 wagon, 50,000 miles, no rust, good winter car. Call Mike at 863-2978.

For sale — 1977 Toyota Hatchback, standard transmission, 7 radial tires, AM-FM radio, and rustproofed. Low mileage. $3750. Call Michelle, x2282.

For sale — 1972 100LS, 61,000 miles. Front wheel drive. Running and inspected. Needs work. $400. Call Deb, days 658-1120.

OUTDOOR EQUIPMENT

For sale — 1 pair of Fritzmeier Joker skis 180s with Salomon 404 bindings. 2 years old. Excellent condition, 95 dollars. Must sell or won't graduate. Call Dave 863-4060.

Scuba gear for sale: tank with 'J' valve and back harness; also Dart regulator single hose. Both excellent condition. All for $190 or best offer for tank alone. 879-7080.

For sale — The Ski, 190 cm. new, never mounted or used. Guaranteed — $175. Call Ken x3877.

For sale — Frye boots, size 5½, hardly worn. Call 862-2446, days only $30 or best offer.

For sale — Suveren cross-country ski boots size 40 (about a 9). Used only one season, $25. Call Michelle x2282.

For sale — Nordica ski boots girls size seven, excellent condition, worn one season only, $30. Call Amy x3490.

Great pair of hiking boots, Vibram soles, broken in but too large. Boys size 6 (about a girls 7). Call Adrienne x3490.

For sale — K2 five (comps) skis, 195 cm w/Marker Rotomat DL-FD bindings, $60. Caber pro-boots, size 9, $15. Also: Racers! Yamaha Paramount Custom GS racing skis (serial 676) medium flex, 210 cm w/Marker M4-Rotomat HS bindings, $120. (used only for 3 races) negotiable. Two Silvy Tricot racing sweaters (1 lined Italian Team Issue and 1 unlined red & white 4 pad arms) never used, prices negotiable, size medium. 1 pr. Ellesse Red & white paded pants (knee pads only), size 32 waist med. length, price also negotiable. Call either Tim O'Toole or John Heinel at 862-7532 or 863-9173 anytime.

Hot waxing for Alpine skis: done with professional hot-waxing gun; wax, scrape, and corking (for any specified conditions), only $2.00. Done here on campus. Call Tom, 656-4243.

For sale — 1 pair Rossignol strato 105's 190 cm. Brand new, never been used! Only $150. 1 pair women's dolomite racing boots. Size 6M, never been worn. Price is negotiable. Call Sally or Jaye at 656-3306, 411 Simpson.

Ski boots for sale — ladies Nordica G.T. size 5 narrow, the best they make, worn only 1 season. Fits 6-6½, $120. Call Cricket. 862-5669.

For sale — Demetre Ski sweater, mens (M) new, Bl. & Gr. $25, Tecnica size 6n used one season, $50. 434-3847 after 6 p.m.

Hot waxing: done with professional waxing gun on alpine skis (at my room on campus), will hot wax, scrape and corksmooth — for any desired snow temperatures. $2.00 Call Tom 656-4243, leave name and number if I'm out.

For sale — Nordica ski boots buckle model, never used. Cheap! Call 862-0490 evenings. Ask for David.

Brand new skis! Lange phantom 205's never been used, no holes. $80. Call Phil x3869.

1 pr. ladies Nordicas size 7½ narrow, exc. cond. 1 pr. Head 360/175 cm. w/Marker bindings good rock skis (cheap). 1 pr. Fischer C4 competition 190 cm. w/Salomon bindings, cheap. 1 pr. Rossi Prestige 185 cm. w/bindings (cheap), good rock skis. 1 pr. ROC comps, 195 cm. w/o bindings, good rock skis — cheap! Call Art or Bill, 864-6865. Keep trying.

One pair woman's x-country ski boots size 5. Used one season, $12. Ruth, 482-2151.

For sale — ladies 7, teepee sorels, w/chain-tread bottoms; high-top. Excellent condition. Call Jana x3306, $18 negotiable.

Beige corduroy Levis size 31-31 straight leg for sale, great condition. Call Jana, x3306. $7.00.

For sale: Lange Banshee ski boots size 9, used 10 times, excellent condition. Asking $110. John, 863-3092.

For sale — one pair Fritzmier joker skis, 180's with Solomon 404 bindings, 2 years old. Excellent condition $90. One pair size 8 San Marco ski boots $20. Must sell. Call 863-4060, Dave.

Skis and bindings 170 cm. Hexcel Firelite with Salomon 444. 3 years old, very good condition. Ready for immediate sale. Whole package $115 or best offer. Call Dana 656-2698 anytime.

For sale — 1 Gerry down liftcoat men's M, red, $85. 1 REI down expedition parka men's S/ladies L, blue, $75. 1 ladies M-L suede knee length coat, raglan sleeves, $25. 1 maple bedstead, $40. Call 862-2278 after 5.

ROOMS/ROOMMATES

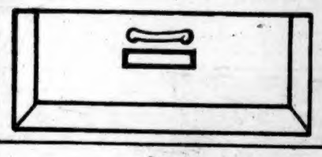
Room available on Brooks Ave. for next semester. Contact Ruth or Jeanie, 863-3306.

Are you looking for a place to live next semester? We are looking for 2 roommates to share in a cooperative living situation with 3 females in a beautiful 5-bedroom house. Lots of room — study, den, kitchen, dining room, living room & even lake view and yard. Call 863-5020. Available Jan. 1.



Female roommate wanted to share apartment on Spear St., Horizon Heights. Own room, $85 + utilities. Call 863-6108.

1 room in 5-bedroom apartment available January 1st. 5 minutes from campus. $74/mo. + utilities. Call 658-4325, Rob or Peter.

One room available in 3 bedroom apt. starting Jan. 1, 1979. Call Lynne or Nancy at 863-1298.

Female roommate wanted to share apartment on Spear St. Horizon Heights — $85 plus utilities — own room. Call Bonnie at 863-6108.

STARS & STRIPES
ARMY & NAVY GOODS
CAMPING, GOVT. SURPLUS, SPORT & WORK CLOTHING

Jeans
By LEE, LEVY
WRANGLER & SEDGEFIELD

Save time,
save money,
save gas,
Shop Mail Order

Send for a FREE Catalog

STARS & STRIPES
ARMY & NAVY GOODS
30 South Union Avenue
Cranford, N. J. 07016
(201) 276-0880

ROOMS/ROOMMATES

Quiet woman roommate to share home in beautiful country location. 20 minute drive from UVM by interstate. Own room, $100 per month, plus share utilities. Call 434-2617 after 5.

Young German writer needs room or share rental somewhere with trees. Up to 100 dollars. Detlef Hammann, Burlington, 862-4841.

Person to share cooperative country house in Charlotte. Own room, collective living. Call 425-2384. Keep trying.

Robinson Hall, the environmental house, is looking for a few friendly folks. Please submit a concise letter giving your name, address, and phone number. Also give your reasons and motivations for wanting to be in the house. Drop the letter off at Robinson in the designated box. We are looking forward to hearing from you.

Wanted — a place to live second semester. Would like own room, easy to live with. Call Betsy 863-6152.

Young man 25 years old seeks suitable housing within reasonable walking distance of campus. Prefer to share apt. or house. Call 863-2603.

Non-smoking vegetarian student looking for housing in Burlington. Open to either co-operative living or renting apartment. Call anytime 863-2664, Jon.

Free room in exchange for work around a country home near Burlington and the University. Should either have experience in or like the following: chopping wood, some carpentry work, work in a garden, or some greenhouse experience. Should be male, older student or graduate student age due to living conditions. Call during the day at 864-7537 or evenings 862-8796.

Want to find out more about the field of law? Chittenden County Public Defenders need a student to help investigate factual matters for cases and interview clients and witnesses. Credit can be earned for this experience. If interested, call the Center for Service Learning at x2062.

Lost Vivitar instamatic camera in vicinity of Harris-Millis Hall. Reward offered, even for just returning the film. If found please call 656-3897 (Patsy). No questions asked.

Two roommates (preferably male) needed to fill cooperative 5-bedroom house on Cliff St. For information call Sue 863-2864.

MUSIC

Wanted — guitar case for 12-string hard shell or fiber glass. Any condition. 879-7080.

8 track recorder and player with 50 pre-recorded tapes $75. Yamaha Classical guitar, never played, with case, $50. Albums for sale, most only played once to record $1-3. Call Kathee, 864-6481.

For sale — reel to reel tapedeck, Akai M-10, three motor automatic reverse, very good condition, $140. 862-9590 evenings.

For sale '74 SX-525 Pioneer Receiver, 18 watts/channel, 30 RMS, $390 new, $209 now, available and negotiable. '76 Jensen 5 speakers, low resistance formidable sounding, $150 new, $105 now, available and negotiable. Contact Andrew at 863-5414.

Holiday sale. Bargain prices on musical instruments and accessories. Examples: Electric guitar, Les Paul copy, with case only $119, complete. Double pickup electric bass, sunburst finish with case, only $133. Accessories: valve and slide oil reg. 90 cents for only 58 cents. Holton professional trumpet regular $500, for $250. LeBlanc professional clarinet regular $750, for $350. Phone 864-0767 for other bargains. Would you like to receive our "specials" list of musical bargains throughout 1978-79, just call 864-0767.

Holiday specials, 40 — 50% discounts on new musical instruments at Presto Music Co., only 1 mile off I-80, Guptil Rd. Waterbury, Vt. Pianos, guitars, amps, band instruments, drums, violins, cellos. Also bargains on used instruments and accessories. See our Burlington phone book yellow page ad page 151. Call 864-0767 or 244-8455.

For sale — Hamon Kardon integrated amp (A401), Sansui SR 222 turntable, Jensen speakers, $200 or best offer. Call Craig, 310 Christie, x2195.

Must sell — Lafayette model 9090, practically brand new. Pushes 90 watts per channel. Check it out. Asking $400, worth $750. Call 862-4782.

40-50% off Presto Music Co., only 1 mile off I-89 Guptil Rd., Waterbury, Vt. Discounts, a complete music store. 40—50% off on most new band instruments, guitars, amps, pianos, violins, cellos (30% on drums and drum sets). Accessories and music books, instrument repair. Convenient to UVM campus. Call 864-0767.

Guitars and amps for sale. Both acoustic and electric guitars. Find out why all our customers are so happy — shop us before you buy. Stay awhile, play awhile. Name brand. Free gifts, no purchase needed. Open 10 a.m. to 9 p.m., Monday to Saturday. Green Mountain Guitars, 65 George St. (near the Post Office). 864-9232.

PEOPLE

Looking for student with license and preferably own vehicle to help out with 2 children ages 3 & 6. Interested in someone athletic with the possibility of vacationing in Maine during the summer. $75 week & room and board. Call 985-2473.

Part-time work on campus, distributing advertising materials. Choose your own schedule, 4-25 hours weekly. No selling, your pay is based on the amount of material distributed. Of our 310 current campus reps, median earning is $4:65 hourly. No special skills required, just the ability to work consistently and energetically without supervision. For further information contact American Passage Corporation at 708 Warren Ave. North, Seattle, Washington 98109 — (206) 282-8111.

Part-time programmers physiological data acquisition (bio-feedback). No special knowledge in this area required. Familiar with one or more of the following: KIM-1 assembler, apple-basic and graphics, TRS-80 basic, SWTPC assembler and basic, Sorcerer basic and graphics. Call MED Associates, Inc. 827-3848. Karl Zurn.

The Church Street Center seeks work-study students for the next semester. Contact the Financial Aid Office for job listing. Eligibility for Financial Aid (work study) is required.

Academic research — all fields, professional writing & editing. Send $2 for listing of over 7,000 topics. Authors' Research, Suite 600, Dept. 4, 407 S. Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill. 60605. (312) 922-0300.

MISCELLANEOUS

Found — item left behind at 12/2 Sigma Nu post-game party by short woman with long red hair who left about 12:30 with some friends. To claim, call Mark 862-4515 (keep trying, leave message).

Snow, snow, snow. Winter parking, reasonable. We plow. Grant St. 863-5595, 985-3405.

SUNASU — vitamins, minerals and herbs... all in one exclusive formula. They work! Call Steven Sulzer at 862-1951.

Scarf found near Lafayette. Identify and it's yours. Call Max x3845.

Lost — Pair of prescription eyeglasses in brown case outside of Gutterson exit — South side following Clarkson hockey game December 2. If found please call John Carpenter, 658-4000, ext. 218.

For sale — good used electric LC Smith Corona portable typewriter with interchangeable key. Five additional keys and two typewriter ribbons included. $100 or best offer. Call x2661 or 862-4937 after 5 p.m.

I came to UVM on Monday Dec. 4 to do a survey from Goddard College. My purse was lost or stolen and I would really appreciate having it back. There was $5.00 in it — you can have it. I need my ID's and everything else of no value to anyone but me. Please return to the Cynic or any school office and I will contact them or call 454-8311 ext 274 and ask for Jaime Cloud. I really need my purse.

Lost one sterling silver earring about 1½ inches long with turquoise hearts, sentimental value, please contact Sue at x3851.

Do you want to export your crafts to Europe? Any interesting product or art might sell well and we make contacts in W. Germany, Holland, Switzerland. Erhard Mahnke 862-4841.

For sale — plants, 6 ft. by 3 ft. umbrella tree, ferns, hanging plants, call 2603 for details.

Lost — one pair gold wire aviator glasses. On main campus. Reward. Call 863-3063.

Need a vacation... winter break or spring recess fly and sun to Bermuda, Fort Lauderdale, even England, good prices, will make arrangements. Call Theresa M. Valla at 864-5051 or 864-1717.

Full coupon book for sale — I will never use it before the semester's end. Please help me get rid of it! Call Mary Landon, x4228.

Beautiful blue eyed, long hair white mother cat and her kitten need loving home. Take one or both. I will deliver FREE, please. Call 425-2384.

Photography equipment (slightly used) Vivitar Enlarger, Premier 4 in 1 easel, Paterson trays 8 x 10, Graf Developing tank, Brownie darkroom lamp, chemicals and more. Best offer accepted. Call 425-2644 after 5 p.m.

TRAVEL ... EARN MONEY
... EARN A FREE TRIP ...

Bermuda

Ft. Lauderdale-Daytona Beach
during the Spring

Be a Campus Representative for New England's largest and highest Commission Paying Agency. Interested students, write GARBER TRAVEL, 1495 Beacon Street, Brookline, MA 02146 or call (617) 734-2160 collect person-to-person to Stuart J. Chason. Evenings call (617) 232-3322.

Dining Hall

WEEK #3

| December 12, 1978 TUESDAY | December 13, 1978 WEDNESDAY | December 14, 1978 THURSDAY | December 15, 1978 FRIDAY | December 16, 1978 SATURDAY | December 17, 1978 SUNDAY | December 18, 1978 MONDAY | December 19, 1978 TUESDAY | December 20, 1978 WEDNESDAY |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| | | | | | BREAKFAST | | | |
| 1)Pancakes2)Fried Eggs3)Soft Boiled EggsHome FriesCottage CheesePastry or Muffins | 1)Fritters B-272)Scrambled Eggs3)Hard Boiled EggsHash BrownsCottage CheesePastry or Muffins | 1)Pancakes2)Poached Eggs3)Soft Boiled EggsHome FriesCottage CheesePastry or Muffins | 1)Griddle Cakes2)Easy Riser3)Hard Boiled EggsHash BrownsCottage CheesePastry or Muffins | 1)Waffles2)Omelets L-483)Soft Boiled EggsHome FriesCottage CheesePastry or Muffins | 1)Pancakes2)Scrambled Eggs3)Hard Boiled EggsHash BrownsCottage CheesePastry or Muffins | 1)Texas Style French Toast F-22)Baked Shirred Eggs F-233)Soft Boiled EggsHome FriesCottage CheesePastry or Muffins | 1)Waffles2)Scrambled Eggs3)Hard Boiled EggsHash BrownsCottage CheesePastry or Muffins | 1)Griddle Cakes2)Fried Eggs3)Soft Boiled EggsHome FriesCottage CheesePastry or Muffins |
| | | | | | LUNCH | | | |
| 1)Hot Dog w/Sauerkraut Baked Beans2)Corned Beef and Potato Pie3)Carrot Nut Bran Loaf C-13Assort Teas Salad bar in dining room | 1)Chili & Grilled Cheese S-402)Turkey ala King on Toast Points3)Apple Fritters with Sausage4)Hungarian Noodle Bake X-10 | 1)Pizza2)Beef Noodle Casserole L-93)Julienne Salad Plate P-264)Cheese Veggie Medley L-121 | 1)Hoagies2)Chef's Choice3)Eggburger S-22 | -BRUNCH-1)Scrambled Eggs2)Waffles3)Tuna Salad SandwichHam | -BRUNCH-1)Scrambled Eggs2)Pancakes3)HoagiesSausage Links | 1)Hamburgers2)Creamed Chipped Beef L-43)Fruit Plate P-47 | 1)Beef Biscuit Roll2)Bar-B-Q Ham Sandwich3)Spinach Quiche | 1)Hot Dogs & Homemade Beans2)Turkey Croquettes3)Chef's Salad Plate |
| | | | | | DINNER | | | |
| 1)Ham Steaks2)Meatballs and Sausage Grinder w/Sauteed Onions and Peppers3)Cheese/Vegetable Bake X-3 | CHRISTMASBUFFETSPECIAL | 1)Pork Chops2)Meatloaf3)Turkey Pot Pie | 1)Chop Steak on a Hard Roll2)Fried Fish3)Vegetarian Stuffed Green Peppers | 1)Roast Beef sujus (sliced to order on the line)2)Seafood Plate - clams, shrimps3)Egg Foo Yong with Oriental Sauce | 1)Open Faced Steak Sandwich2)Brown Rice and Cheese Bake3)Liver & Onions | 1)Spaghetti with meat & meatless sauce*2)Corned Beef and Cabbage3)Deep Dish Veggie Pie X-4 | 1)Baked Chicken2)Hot Pastrami Sandwich3)Hot Vegetable Plate L-61 | 1)Roast Beef with Gravy2)Baked Fish3)Potato Pancakes w/Sour Cream and Applesauce |

*) Different Sauces
Tomato
Sausage
Ground Beef

SAGA

Rasputins Does It Up!

Pre-Exam Buzz Night

Tues Dec 12

—35 cent Drafts
—75 cent Shots Specials
—All Night
—We know you're broke so mini Hoonie

Study Breaks

Exam Week

—Throughout exam week
—11:30 to 1:00 AM every night
—shot and a draft for $1.00

First Annual Christmas Party

Wed Dec 20

—Happy Hour Prices 4 PM to 11 PM
—Shot Specials 75 cents

giles

Rasputins will be sponsoring an open New Year's Eve Party with many special attractions.